is not like, that after one had opened his sacke, and found his money, but that the rest, wondering at it, would trie whether they had theirs also. 2. To say that the rest of their money was not in the sacks mouth, but in the midst as some Hebrewes, and that therefore they opened their sacks againe at home, is against the text before alleaged, every man found his mony in his sacks mouth. 3. Beside as one opened his sacke to give his asse provender, so it is like the other did so also: for that one asse carried provender for all the rest, as Mercerus conjectureth, was neither likely nor possible. 2. Wherefore I thinke rather, that they all opened their sacks, and found their money in the Inne, and knit up their sacks againe, till they came at home, and then in the presence of their father emptied their sacks, that he might see also where the money was put.

QUEST. XIV. Of Rubens inconsiderate speech.

Vers. 37. SLay my two sonnes, if I bring him not to thee. 1. This was but a foolish offer of Ruben, for what satisfaction had it beene to Iacob, if Benjamin had miscarried, to kill two of his nephewes? and indeed it seemeth that Ruben, though the eldest, was not the wisest, as it is evident, by that his folly, in lying with his fathers concubine, for the which fact he lost his birthright, and it was given to Ioseph, 1 Chron. 5.1. 2. Yet because Iacob had them in jealousie, for making away of Ioseph, Ruben by this speech would take all suspicion from his father, of any hard measure to bee offered to Benjamin, Calvin, Ruben speaketh here but of two sons, whereas he had foure in all, Gen. 46.9. either because two of them were but little ones, and the other therefore more deare unto him, Mercer: or because these two only were now in sight and present, when Ruben uttered this inconsiderate speech, Iunius.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. How the Iewes should be intreated at the hands of Christian Princes.

Vers. 17. SO he put them in ward, three daies. Rupertus would have this proceeding of Ioseph against his brethren, to be a pattern for Christian Princes, how they should intreat the Iewes: that as Ioseph doth only imprison them, and handle them roughly, to bring them to knowledge and confession of their treachery against him: so Christian governors should not put the Iewes to death, but use them hardly, by laying taxes and impositions upon them, that at the length they may be brought to repentance for their blasphemies against Christ: as it is in the Psalmes, Slay them not lest my people forget it, but scatter them abroad by thy power; Psal. 59.12. Rupert. lib. 9. comment. in Gen. cap. 4.

2. Doct. Where the feare of God is not, there can be no true vertue.

Vers. 18. THis doe and live, for I feare God, &c. Ioseph biddeth them bee secure of his sincere and true dealing with him, because he feared God: so that true religion is the fountaine of vertue and honest dealing: they therefore that feare not God may for a while make a semblance and shew of honestie, but it cannot be in truth, where the ground of true religion is wanting: where therefore the feare of God is not, we cannot expect any vertuous action, as Abraham reasoned with himselfe when he sojourned in Gerar, The feare of God is not in this place, and they will slay me for my wives sake, Gen. 20.12.

3. Doct. The guilt of sinne remaineth when the act is past.

Vers. 21. THEy said one to another; we have verily sinned against our brother. By this wee learne, that although the act of sinne be done and past, yet the guilt and conscience of sinne may continue, as here the sinne which they had committed against Ioseph 23. yeares before, is revived, Muscul. As the Lord said to Cain, If thou doest not well, sinne lieth at the doore, Gen.4.7. It lieth lurking in the doore of the conscience, ready upon every occasion to assault us.

4. Doct. The author of affliction, it commeth not by chance.

Vers. 28. What is this that God hath done unto us? These men having a guilty conscience, thinke that God meeteth with them in every corner: yet this good perswasion they have, that nothing hapned to them by chance, as this, the finding of their mony in their sacks mouth, but they ascribe all to Gods providence, they make him the authour of their crosses and affliction, Calvin. As David in like manner saith, that the Lord bid Shemei curse him, 2 Sam. 16.11.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Saint Pauls prophecie of some that should give eare to the doctrine of devils, fulfilled in the Synagogue of Rome.

Vers. 6. They bowed their face to the ground before him. Here Iosephs brethren unwittingly doe fulfill Io/sephs prophecie, that they should fall downe unto him and doe him reverence: like as the Jewes did ignorantly accomplish many things in the passion of Christ, which were foretold by the Prophets: So also they which in these dayes give eare to the doctrines of devils in the Romish and Antichristian Synagogue, doe fulfill the prophecie of the Apostle, 1 Tim. 4.1. some of them of ignorance and simplicity, but their blinde guides of malice and obstinacie against the truth, Muscul.

2. Confut. Against Purgatory.

Vers. 8. Ioseph knew his brethren, but they knew not him. Augustine propounding this question, how it came to passe that all this time of Iosephs prosperity he sent no word to Iacob, but he continued still mourning for his sonne, giveth this reason, Quoniam sine istis minutis peccatis Iacob esse non potuit, volens Deus illa parva peccata in hoc seculo igne tribulationis consumere, &c. Because Iacob could not be without some small sinnes, God would by this meanes purge them with the fire of tribulation in this world, serm. 82. de tempor. If small sinnes then (which they call veniall) bee purged in this world, then there is nothing remaining to be cleansed in purgatory fire afterward, which they say serveth to the purging, not of mortall, but veniall sinnes: and indeed Iob well sheweth that our purgatory fire is in the affliction and sorrow of this life, where he saith, Exibo ut aurum, I shall come forth like gold, Iob 23.10. And the Prophet saith, That the Lords fire is in Sion, and his furnace at Ierusalem, Isa. 31.9. it is not then in hell or Purgatory. I much muse that Pererius alleaging this sentence of Augustine, could not perceive how strongly it maketh against Purgatory.

3. Confut. Against the swearing by Saints.

Vers. 15. BY the life of Pharaoh ye shall not goe hence, &c. Thomas Aquinas justifieth this fact of Io/seph, in swearing by the life of Pharaoh, and would warrant thereby the swearing by creatures, as namely by Saints: for an oath, saith he, is made two wayes, by execration, when some creature is produced, that God should shew his judgement upon if one sweare falsly, as when one sweareth by his head, or such like: the other way is by contestation, either directly, when the name of God is mentioned, or indirectly, when some creature is named in whom the truth should be manifested: so we sweare by the Gospell, wherein Gods truth is expressed: by Saints, that beleaved in the truth: so Ioseph sware by Pharaoh, a minister of Gods truth and justice, Thom. 2.2. qu. 89. ar. 6.

Con•ra. 1. This subtill disputer doth justifie that kinde of oath, which is directly forbidden by our Saviour himselfe, as to sweare by the head, Matth. 5.36. Neither shalt thou sweare by thine head: wee may justly suspect him in the rest, when at the first he dare controll the holy doctrine of the

Gospell. 2. Men use not to sweare by the Gospell, but upon it, when they lay their hands upon the book: for so we reade, that the Saints have used some visible ceremonie and rite in taking an oath: as Abrahams servant layed his hand upon his masters thigh, Gen. 24.3. Iacob did sweare unto Laban upon an heape of stones, but neither did the one sweare by his masters thigh, nor the other by the stones, but by the name of God, *Gen. 24.3. Gen. 31.53. Iacob*sware by the feare of his father Isaack: after the same manner is a booke used as a visible object for further evidence, in the ministring of an oath: but Saints are neither visible,* nor pre|sent, and therefore the case is not alike. 3. It is also directly forbidden to sweare by any but by the Lord, Deut. 6.13. Thou shalt feare the Lord thy God, and serve him, and sweare by his name:and though [onely] be not here found, yet our Saviour so interpreteth, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him onely shalt thou serve, Matth. 4.10. and so consequently, by him onely shalt thou sweare. 4. Concerning Iosephs act, I have shewed before, quest. 9. that although it may be somewhat qualified and extenuated, yet it cannot be justified: but it savoureth somewhat of the Egyptian manners, and seemeth to be against that place, Zephan. 1.5. where the Prophet reproveth those that sweare by the Lord, and sweare by Malcham, that is, their King: whether they made the idoll, or a mortall man their King; both abuses are here reprovved.

6. Places of Exhortation.

1. Observ. The righteous not exempted from publike calamity.

Vers. 1. Iacob saw that there was food in Egypt, &c. Iacob among the rest of the Canaanites tasted of the famine: whereby we see that the righteous are not exempted from publike calamities: as Abraham was pinched in like manner with famine, and constrained to goe into Egypt, Gen. 13. for the •ingdome which the righteous looke for is not of this world, Muscul.

2. Observ. God at the first seemeth to deale hardly with his children, as Ioseph did with his brethren.

Vers. 7. HE spake to them roughly. Like as Ioseph at the first seemed to handle his brethren hardly, yet inwardly he yearned in compassion toward them, and in the end shewed them great kindnesse: so the Lord dealeth with his children. When he humbleth them by affliction he seemeth unto them as anemie, as Iob complaineth, that God counteth him as one of his enemies, cap. 19.11. but in the end he sheweth his gracious favour, and fatherly affection, Mercer.

3. Observ. Against the custome of swearing.

Vers. 19. OR else by the life of Pharaoh, &c. Ioseph sweareth twice together: such a thing it is to have an evill custome: many that use to sweare are so accustomed to it that they cannot doe otherwise but sweare, Calvin. therefore we must take heed that sinne be not confirmed by custome: but as the Apostle saith, Be not overcome of evill, but overcome evill with goodnesse, Rom. 12.21.

4. Observ. As men measure to others it shall be mete to them againe.

Vers. 21. WE would not heare him, therefore this trouble is come upon us. As they hardned their hearts against the pitifull complaint of their brother Ioseph, so they confesse it to bee just that now their suit is not heard. Thus it is just with God to pay men home in their owne measure: therefore let men take heed how they use their poore brethren hardly; the time may come that they may finde as hard measure at other mens hands: therefore let every man remember that saying of our Saviour, That which yee would that men should doe to you, doe you unto them: this is the Law and the Prophets, Matth. 7.12.

5. Observ. Affliction bringeth a man to repentance.

Vers. 21. AND they said one to another; we have verily sinned, &c. We see the wonderfull and admirable effect of affliction, which bringeth a man to the knowledge of his sinne: it is the Lords plow wherewith we are made fruitfull: like to the helve which Elizeus cast into the water, which fetched up the iron in the bottome: so affliction raiseth up a sinner that lay drowned and mudded in his sinne.

* Affliction hath three notable effects: it maketh us to know God, our selves, and the world: first it stirreth us up to thinke of God whom wee have offended, and to turne us to him by true repentance: as the Scripture testifieth of Manasses, that after the Lord had humbled him by affliction, then he knew that the Lord was God, 2 Chron. 33.13. We are called to the knowledge of God three wayes; 1. By inspira|tion and inward motion wrought in us by God himselfe.* 2. By the ministry of man, as either by their examples, or admonitions and instructions. 3. We are forced by the necessity of affliction, Perer. ex Cas/sian. And as the profiting by affliction is a signe of spirituall health: so the hardning of the heart under the crosse is a signe of desperate state, as the Prophet Ieremie saith, Thou hast smitten them but they have not sorrowed, Ierem. 5.3.

* Secondly, affliction causeth us to know our selves: 1. Our mortall and corruptible state, our vile and fraile nature, that weareth and wasteth away with trouble, anguish, and sicknesse: as the Prophet David saith, When thou with rebukes doest chastice man for iniquity, thou as a moth makest his beauty to consume, Psal. 39.7. 2. Beside, man by his affliction seeth his faults as in a glasse, and calleth to minde his former errors: as David saith, Before I was afflicted I went wrong, Psal. 119.67.

Thirdly, affliction learneth us to know the world: 1. How vaine it is, as the Preacher saith, *Vanity of vanities, * all is but vanity, Eccles. 1.2.* 2. It sheweth the instability and mutability of the world, how sud|denly men fall from riches to poverty, from health to sicknesse, from honour to misery: as the Apostle saith, The world passeth away and the lust thereof, 1 Ioh. 2.17. 3. Affliction layeth open the misery and trouble that is in the world: for man is borne to sorrow, as the sparks flie upward, Iob 5.7. that a man may say of the world and the pleasures thereof, with Moses in his song, Their vine is the vine of Sodome, and as the vines of Gomorrha, their grapes are as the grapes of gall, their clusters be bitter, their wine is the poyson of Dragons, Deut. 32.32. 4. The deceitfulnesse of the world appeareth by affliction: how it deceiveth the hope of those that trust to it: like as Lot made choise of the pleasant fruitfull vale of Sodome, which was soone turned into a filthy lake and poole of brimstone. 5. Lastly, By affliction and tribulation wee know the world to be evill, wretched, and wicked, that there is no goodnesse in it; as the Apostle saith, The whole world lieth in wickednesse, 1 Ioh. 5.29. ex Perer.

CHAP. XLIII.

1. The Method or Argument.

First in this Chapter is declared the manner of Iacobs condescending to send Benjamin into Egypt with his brethren: where we have, 1. Iudahs absolute deniall to goe without him, vers. 3, 4, 5. 2. Iacobs expostulating with his sonnes for confessing they had another brother, and their answer, vers. 6, 7. 3. Iudahs undertaking for Benjamin, vers. 8, 9, 10. 4. Iacobs condescending, with his advice to take a present with them, and double mony, and his blessing of them, vers. 11. to 15.

Secondly, this Chapter sheweth how they were entertained at Iosephs hand, 1. The preparation to their entertainment is set downe: to the which belongeth, 1. Their inviting to dinner, vers. 16, 17. 2. Their conference with Iosephs Steward concerning their money, and his satisfying of them, vers. 18. to 23. 3. The delivering of Simeon, vers. 23. 4. They addresse themselves, and their present, vers. 24.25.

2. The entertainment it selfe is declared in Iosephs friendly communication with them, vers. 27. to 30. his tender affection, vers. 30. bountifull feast, with the manner of it, vers. 32. to the end.

2. The divers readings.

v. 2. The man did charge us with an oath. H.G. did testifie unto us with a witsesse or testimonie. * S. did solemnly protest unto us. C.B.T.P. gunah, to protest, to witsesse. heb.

v. 5. The man, as we have often said, did denounce unto us, saying. H. the man said unto us. caet. *

v. 7. We answered him, consequenter, accordingly. H. we shewed him according to his question. S. according to the tenour of these words. S. according to the order of his words. C. the meaning of his words. T. according to these words. G. according to the mouth or face of these words. heb.

v. 8. We and our little ones. H. we and you, and our substance. S. we and you, and our family. B.C. we and you, * and our little ones. T.G. heb. taph, a little one.

v. 9. I will receive the childe. H.S. I will be surety, or undertake for him. caet.

v. 11. Turpentine and almonds. H.C. turpentine and nuts. S. nuts and almonds. B.G. pineapples and almonds. P. nuts of the turpentine tree and almonds. T. boten, the turpentine tree with the fruit. heb.

v. 14. That he deliver your brother that is in bonds. H. Your other brother. caet. * I shall be as one robbed of my children. H.B.I. as I have beene robbed of my children, shall be robbed. C.G. I, as I have beene robbed of my children, am robbed of my children. S.I. if I be robbed of my children, I am robbed. T. that is, he securely committeth the successe to God, being prepared to beare whatsoever hap/meth: the like phrase is used, Esther. 4.16.

v. 16. Benjamin his brother by the mothers side. S. Benjamin. caet. without any addition.

v. 18. They being terrified there. H. the men seeing they were brought into Iosephs house, were afraid. caet. *

v. 18. That he may cast some cavill upon us, and violently bring us into servitude. H. that he may cavill with us, and lay to our charge. S. that he may be Lord over us▪ and seeke occasion against us. C. that he may seeke oc|casion against us, and violently lay hands on us. B. that he may picke a quarrell against us, and lay somewhat to our charge. G. that he may beare us downe, and runne upon us. T. that he may roll himselfe upon us, and cast himselfe upon us. heb.

v. 25. They heard that he must dine there. S. that they should eat bread there. caet. *

v. 30. His bowels were moved. H. enflamed. caet. camar, to wax hot.

v. 31. They count such a feast prophane. H. because the cattell which the Egyptians worship, the Hebrewes eat. C. for that is an abomination to the Egyptians. caet. *

v. 35. And were drunken with him. B. drunke plentifully with him. T. shacar, to be drunken, or drinke freely. heb.*

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. Whether all Iacobs family lived of the provision out of Egypt.

Vers. 2. TVrne againe and buy us a little food, &c. 1. Iacob stayeth not till all the bread was eaten up, for whereof should they then have lived till they went and came, but the provision was very neare spent, Mercer. 2. Neither is it to be thought that Iacobs whole family, which had some 200. or 300. persons (for there were 70. males which came out of Iacobs loynes, beside their wives, nieces, and ser|vants) lived together of the wheat brought out of Egypt, but that in such great necessity there was a sup|ply made with herbs, roots, acornes, and such like, Calvin. 3. Iacob speaketh of buying a little food, not as though he thought the famine to be at an end, but because in time of famine great parsimony is used, and a little made to goe a great way, Muscul.

QUEST. II. Why Iudah prevai|leth more with Iacob than all the rest.

Vers. 11. Then Iacob said, if it must be so now, &c. Iudah perswadeth more than the rest to have Benja|min goe with them, not in respect of the punishment which hee undertaketh, as though it were greater, to beare the blame for ever; which some make a type of everlasting punishment, whereas

Page 358

Ruben offered the present death of his two children, which was but temporary: but Iacob rather re|jected that speech of Ruben as foolish and inconsiderate. 2. Neither doth Iudah perswade in respect of his age, because Ruben being not heard, and Simeon absent, and Levi indisgrace because of the massacre of the Sichemites, Iudah was the next borne, Muscul. 3. But Ruben was refused Iacob conceived evill of him for his incest with his fathers concubine: Iudah was respected for his wisdom and gravity, of whom Iacob did foresee that the Messiah should be borne, Mercer. 4. As also Iudah watcheth hi• <◇> when the provision was spent: so that Iacob was forced in respect of that present necessity to <...> them, Perer.

QUEST. III. Of Iacobs present.

Vers. 11. Take of the best fruits of the land, &c. 1. For three causes Iacob doth counsell them <...> a present with them: 1. To finde grace with the Lord of the Countrey. 2. To redeeme their brother Simeon. 3. To cleare themselves of the suspition of being taken for spies, Philo. 2. Though these gifts were not of any great price, yet Iacob hopeth that the good will of the giver should be accep|ted,* Calvin. 3. But the Hebrewes here are very ridiculous in their superstitious toyes, who prescribe this verse thrice to be said in the City gates where any pestilence or other deadly danger rageth, when one en|treth, and so he shall be preserved, Mercer: as though Gods wrath were appeased with balme, turpentine, almonds, such as Iacob sent for a present.

QUEST. IV. Of the double money which they are bidden to carry with them.

Vers. 12. Take double money in your hand. 1. Some thinke that they carried double money with them to buy corne with; for Iacob might conjecture that the price of corne by reason of the ex|ceeding dearth was enhaunced: and that beside this double money they carried the other money which was found in their sacks mouth, Rasi, Bahai, whom Iunius and Musculus follow. 2. But I rather thinke with Mercerus, that the money which they were to restore, was part of this double money, and the other halfe was to buy corne: for so vers. 15. it is said they tooke twice so much money with Benjamin: there is mention made onely of double money.

QUEST. V. Of Iacobs prayer.

Vers. 14. GOd almighty give you mercy, &c. 1. The word is rachamim, which signifieth bowels, and consequently compassion: and so indeed God heard Iacobs prayer, for afterward, vers. 30. Iosephs bowels yearned, and his affection was moved at the sight of Benjamin, Muscul. 2. Where Iacob saith, that he may deliver your other brother, he meaneth not Ioseph, as some thinke, but Simeon that was kept in bonds.* 3. Some of the Hebrewes by these two, the captivity of Simeon, and the sending away of Benjamin, doe mystically understand the two captivities of the ten tribes, and of the two tribes, after the which there should be no other: but they are deceived, for the Jewes are in captivity to this day.

QUEST. VI. The meaning of Iacobs words, if I am robbed, I am robbed.

Vers. 14. IF I be robbed of my children, I am robbed. 1. Not as though hee counted himselfe robbed in a manner of all, when he lost Ioseph, as some Hebrewes expound. 2. Neither yet is this spoken in respect of all his sons in generall, whom he now sent away, as Calvin. 3. Nor yet doth Iacob thus com|plaine, either as despairing, or to make his sonnes more sollicitous and carefull, Muscul. 4. Nor yet is this his meaning, that I shall be deprived of Benjamin, as I am already of Ioseph and Simeon, and that Iacob did prophesie of Benjamins trouble about the cup, Mercer. 5. But this is the speech of a resolute man, that doth cast the worst: as if he should have said, well Benjamin shall goe, and if I be robbed, I am rob|bed, Gods will be done: as Esther saith in the like manner, If I perish, I perish, Esther 4.16. Iunius.

QUEST. VII. Who Iosephs steward was, and of the divining time.

Vers. 16. WHen he saw Benjamin, he said to his steward. 1. Ioseph knew not Benjamin (who was now 24. or 25. yeares old) otherwise than by seeing him with the rest of his brethren, Mercer. 2. This steward could not be Manasses Iosephs eldest sonne, as some Hebrewes imagine, for he was not above six or seuen yeare old, and he could not at that age understand languages, as this man did; neil|ther was he fit to manage the houshold affaires. 3. The men shall eat with me at noone: it seemeth that they spent the morning in the weighty affaires, and at noone tooke their dinner: both for that the morning was the fittest time to dispatch serious businesse, and for that in those hot Countreyes they used in the heat of the day to keepe their houses, Mercer. Muscul.

QUEST. VIII. Of the manner of the feast which Ioseph prepared for his brethren.

Vers. 32. AFter they prepared for him by himselfe, &c. 1. Ioseph made his brethren a feast, to shew his good will toward them, and to insinuate, that the former proceedings with them was not of hatred: the Romans used such kinde of feasts, which they call charistia, to the which were invited none but kinsfolke, to continue love among them, and seeke reconciliation, if there had beene any breach of friendship, Valer. Maxim. lib. 2. cap. 1. 2. It seemeth that there were three tables provided, the first for Ioseph, who sate alone according to his state, another for the Egyptians, the third for Iosephs brethren, Muscul. 3. The Egyptians refused to eat with the Hebrewes, not onely because they were a proud peo|ple,* and despised all other nations beside themselves; but there was a more specia|l reason, because the Hebrewes were keepers of sheep, Gen. 46.34. and so did eat of sheepe and other cattell which the Egypti|ans worshipped: and therefore Moses saith to Pharaoh, that they could not offer in the land of Egypt that which was an abomination to the Egyptians: that is, to kill and sacrifice such cattell as they worshipped, and to eat part thereof:* thus the Chalde paraphrast also expoundeth. 4. In that it is said, they sate before him, we see how ancient an use it is to sit downe at the table, as before it is said of Iosephs brethren, Gen. 37. that they sate downe to eat bread. 5. Likewise, where it is added, they tooke messes from before him, it seemeth it was a custome for great persons to send messes of meat from their table to such as they favou|red: as Xenophon writeth of Cyrus, lib. 8. that he never used to eat his meat alone, but imparted it to those which were present, sometime sent part to his friends absent. 6. Where it is said, they drunke, and in|ebri•• sunt, and were drunken, as the vulgar Latine and Septuagint reade: we must not thinke that they were indeed drunken, but here the word Shacar is taken for more liberall or plentifull drinking, as Au|gustine well noteth; *inebriandi vocabulum saepe pro satietate solere poni, &c. this word is often taken in Scripture for satiety, fulnesse, as Hagg. 1.6. Ye drinke but are not filled: where the same word Shacar is used, and in the same sense it is taken here.

QUEST. IX. Of their order of their sitting downe at the table.

Vers. 33. THEy sate before him, the eldest according to his age, &c. 1. The Hebrewes are deceived that thinke Iudah as the chiefe to have sate downe in the first place, and that the sonnes of Leah had their places before the sonnes of Iacobs concubines, and Benjamin they say was placed next to Io|seph: but the text is plaine, that they sate according to their age, Ruben first, and Benjamin last, Muscul. Mercer. 2. Neither did they thus place themselves according to their wonted use, as thinketh Mercer: but as Ioseph appointed them; for so the text is, They sate before him, or in his presence, as it were by his direction, Iun. 3. But we refuse that fable of the Hebrewes, as though Ioseph by his divining cup should know every ones age, and so call him by his name to sit down: Ioseph was far from using any such superstition. 4. The cause then why Iosephs brethren marvelled, was not because Benjamin had five parts to their one, as Cajetane, or because they had such great entertainment, Mercer: but they mused how Ioseph, being as they supposed an Egyptian, did know how to place them in order, Iun. Muscul.

QUEST. X. How Benjamins messe was five times more than his brethrens.

Vers. 34. BEnjamins messe was five times so much as any of theirs. 1. It is not like as some imagine, that the rest of the brethren, who were ten, were two to a messe, and Benjamin had five messes, for so he should have as much as all the other ten, which is not like. 2. Some conjecture that the other bre|thren might have three messes a peece, and Ioseph five more than any, that is, eight in all, Perer: but then Iosephs messe was not five times greater than the rest, as the text is. 3. Tostatus thinketh that every one had five messes, and that Benjamin had five messes, but as big againe as theirs: but this cannot be, for Benjamins messes exceed rather in number than in quantity: the word is rabah, he multiplied. 4. Iosephus also differeth from the Scripture, in making Benjamins part but twice so much. 5. Wherefore it is more pro|bable that Benjamins messe was five times so much to any of his brethrens, not comparing them all to|gether, but sunderly and apart, that for every one of their messes Benjamin had five. But that beside Benjamins common part among his brethren, Ioseph should send him one, Asenath his wife another, Manasses and Ephraim each of them one to make up five, is but a curious observation of the Hebrewes, Mercer.

QUEST. XI. Why Ioseph gave to Benjamin a greater portion than the rest.

NOW Ioseph thus preferred Benjamin before his brethren, though he were in the last place. 1. Not to make the portions of Rachels children (in giving five parts to Benjamin, and keeping two to him|selfe) equall to the portions of Leahs seven children, six sons and a daughter, as Alexander Polyhistor. ex Euseb. for Dinah Leahs daughter was not present to have a share among them. 2. Neither as Lyranus, was it to feele the minde of the brethren how they were affected toward Benjamin: for after they had testified their love sufficiently in the next chapter, to Benjamin, when hee should have stayed for Iosephs cup, yet Ioseph keepeth the same proportion in giving to Benjamin five suits of raiment, Gen. 45.22. 3. Neither with Ambrose, need we make this a type and figure of Pauls excellencie in gifts, (who was of the tribe of Benjamin) before the rest of the Apostles. 4. But Ioseph did this to shew his love to Benjamin, being his onely brother by the mothers side, as Elkanah gave unto Anna his best beloved wife, a more worthy por|tion, 1 Sam. 1.5. Iun. Mercer.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. God the disposer of mens hearts.

Vers. 14. GOd give you mercie in the sight of the man. Iacob acknowledgeth that God is the disposer of mens hearts and affections: as the Wise man saith, The Kings heart is in the hand of the Lord, &c. he turneth it whethersoever it pleaseth him, Prov. 21.1.

2. Doct. We must rest in Gods providence, and carefully use the meanes.

Vers. 11. TAke of the best fruits, &c. Iacob, though his trust were in God, that he would incline the rulers heart toward his sonnes: yet he refuseth not to use all meanes whereby they might insinuate themselves: as he adviseth them to take double money with them, and to carry a present. Wee are therefore so to depend upon Gods providence, as that we use all meanes which God hath appointed, Calvin. Like as though the Lord gave to Paul all the soules in the ship, yet by swimming and using the boords and broken peeces of the ship they came to land, Act. 27.24, 44.

3. Doct. Restitution is to be made where any error or oversight is committed.

Vers. 12. LEst it were some oversight. Iacob would have the money restored which they found in their sacks moutnes thinking that the seller might forget himselfe: Iacobs justice herein sheweth, that in buying and selling where any oversight is committed, restitution and satisfaction should be made, Muscul. Not like as now a dayes, the buyer and seller thinke it well gained when they can one deceive another: which abuse the Wise man reproveth, It is naught, it is naught saith the buyer, but when he is gone apart he boasteth, Prov. 20.4.

4. Doct. The creatures of God may be used not onely for necessity but delight.

Vers. 34. THEy were made merry, or drunke their fill with him. That is, they did eat and drinke libe|rally and plentifully: so that it is not onely lawfull to use the creatures of God for necessi|tie onely, but we may goe further, to receive them with delight and chearefullnesse, so that we <◇> of surfetting and drunkennesse. As we reade of Abraham, that made a great feast when Isaack was wealned, Gen. 21.8. that is, a plentifull and liberall banket. As God hath made bread to strengthen man, so he hath given wine to cheare his heart, Psal. 104.15. But men must take heed lest in exceeding they fall to riot, and distemper themselves with sup•rfluous abundance. Philo well observeth, that of ancient time, they used after their sacrifices to make their feasts, and in the Temples, that the place and action might put them in minde of sobriety: whereupon some derive the word < in non-Latin alphabet >, to bee drunke, of < in non-Latin alphabet >, after sacrificing. So wee reade that the Elders of Israel did eat bread with Moses father in law before God, Exod. 18.12. in that place where they had sacrificed. Wee should therefore thinke of God in the middest of our feasts, and not be like to those of whom Saint Iude speaketh of, Without all feare feeding themselves, Iud. 12.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Monkes despised of the Iewes.

Vers. 30. His afflictions were inflamed. The word is camar; whereof the Idoll Priests were called cheimarim, of their blacke garments, as of a burnt colour. The Jewes give that name to the blacke Monkes, Mercer. who by their superstitious apparell make themselves ridiculous to the blinde Jewes, and by such foolish toyes hinder their conversion to the faith.

2. Confut. Against the pride of superstitious Papists.

Vers. 32. THat was an abomination to the Egyptians. The Egyptians being a superstitious people despised the true Church of God, and counted them prophane in respect of themselves: which the Prophet noteth to be the guise of hypocrites, Stand apart, come not neare me, I am holier than thou, Isay 65.5. Even so the Pseudocatholike Papists despise the professors of the Gospell of Christ, counting them heretikes, refusing to come into their holy assemblies, Calvin.

6. Places of morall use.

1. Morall. To commit our counsell to God.

Vers. 7. COuld we know certainly that he would say so? Iacobs sons in making mention of their father and youngest brother, thought to have excused themselves, but thereby they came into greater danger: whereby we see that God doth many times frustrate our counsels, and maketh them to fall out farre otherwise than we imagined, Mercer. as Peter also intrapped Ananias by the words of his owne mouth, Act. 5. therefore we must commit our counsels to God, that he would both direct the thoughts of our heart, and words of our mouth.

2. Morall. A bad conscience full of suspition.

Vers. 18. BEcause of the money in our sacks mouth are we brought. Thus a guilty conscience is alwayes suspitious, and disquieted upon every occasion, as appeareth in these men, that are fearfull without cause, and interpret every thing against themselves. Thus Moses describeth the fearfulness of men that are punished for their sinnes, The sound of a leafe shaken shall chase them, Levit. 27.36.

3. Morall. We must be carefull to instruct our families.

Vers. 23. YOur God, and the God of your fathers. This steward of Iosephs house would never have spokē so reverently of the God of the Hebrewes, but that he was so taught of Ioseph, who had a great care to instruct his family in the right faith, in the midst of that idolatrous nation: this was Abrahams commendation, Gen. 18.18. and Iacobs practice, Gen. 35.4.

4. Morall. Iustice to be tempered with mercy.

Vers. 29. GOd be mercifull to thee my sonne. Ioseph which hitherto had shewed himselfe severe and rigorous towards his brethren, beginneth now to use them kindly: whose example teacheth that prudent governours should qualifie and temper justice with mercy, and severity with clemencie, Grigor. as Saint Paul did towards the incestuous young man, 2 Corinth. 2.

CHAP. XLIV.

1. The Method or Argument.

F

First in this chapter is declared the practice of Ioseph in laying theft to Benjamins charge. 1. The device by Ioseph vers. 1, 2. 2. The execution by his servant in accusing them, vers. 4. to 6. 3. Their defence and agreement for the punishment, vers 9, 10. 4. The delprehension of the pretended theft with Benjamin, vers. 11. to vers. 14.

Secondly, the conventing of them before Ioseph, with their submission, and Iosephs mitigation of the punishment, vers. 15. to vers. 18.

Thirdly, Iudah interposeth himselfe, and maketh intercession for Benjamin, where is set downe, 1. The narration both of their first speech had with Ioseph, vers. 18. to 24. then of their conference with their father, vers. 24. to 30. 2. Iudahs perswasion, 1. from the grieffe that his father should be brought unto if Benjamin returned not, vers. 30, 31. 3. From his owne perswasion, who became surety for him. 4. By the oblation and tender of himselfe to remaine a servant in Benjamins place, vers. 33, 34.

2. The divers readings.

v. 5. In the which he useth to divine. H.S.G. the which he useth to consult with the Propheciers.* B. which he carefully sought for. C. by the which he trieth. P. or by experience certainly learneth what manner of men ye are. T. heb. nachash, signifieth to divine, or play the Augre, and to trie by experience.

v. 15. Are ye ignorant that there is not a man like unto me in the skill of divining? * H. doe yee not know that a man, such as I am, will divine? S. that such a man as I doe consult with Propheciers? B. that such a man as I can divine? G. that such a man as I will search it out? Carrie it out? P. or learne it out by experience: sic & heb. nachash, the same word that was used before.

v. 18. You are my Lord next after Pharaoh. H.S. you are a Pharaoh. caet.*

v. 21. And I will have care on him. S. that I may set mine eyes upon him. caet.

v. 28. And you said, a beast hath devoured him. H.S. and I said, he is surely torne in peeces. caet.*

v. 30. His soule is deare unto him, as his owne soule. C. his life hangeth upon his life. B.G.S.H. his soule is tied or bound to his soule. T. heb.

v. 31. Bring the old age of their father with sorrow to hell. S. his gray haire with sorrow to hell.* C.H. his gray head with <◇> to the grave. B.G.T.P. heb. sheol, the grave.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. 1. Of Iosephs divining in the cup, how it is to be taken.

Vers. 5. IN the which he doth divine and prophecie, vers. 15. Know you not that such a man as I am can di/vine and prophecie? First, some doe expound these words, as that Ioseph should be cleared from all blame. 1. Theodoret. qu. 104. in Genes. saith, that Ioseph doth not arrogate the skill of divining to him|selfe, but saith, that such a man as he is could divine, as the Septuag.

read: for it was no rare thing in Egypt for great men to use divination: but Iosephs steward, vers. 5. speaketh of his masters skill and use in divining. 2. Augustine excuseth this fact of Ioseph, Quia magnum aliquid isto ludo significatur, because there was some mystery in it, qu. 145. in Gen. but if this thing had beene evill in it selfe, a mysticall signification cannot make it good. 3. Others say, that the word divining is here taken generally for any kinde of prediction, and so Ioseph indeed had a gift of divining and knowing secrets, Thom. Aquin. Perer. But it is evident in the fifth verse, where Iosephs steward attributeth to his master the skill of divining in his cup, that he speaketh of such a kinde of divining as was used among the Egyptians▪ for it is like that the servant added not that of his owne, as Pererius thinketh, but that he spake as he was instructed. 4. Others answer, that Ioseph here affirmeth nothing of himselfe,^{*} but onely asketh a question by way of interrogation, Know ye not? But vers. 5. the steward doth directly so affirme of his master. 5. Some make this to be the meaning, that Ioseph by the losse of the cup wherein he did drinke, did conjecture that some evill was toward himselfe, ex Vatablo: but the contrary is evident by Iosephs speech, vers. 15. What act is this that yee have done? that he by divining found out their fault, and was not a Prophet against himselfe. 6. Some Hebrewes whom Iunius followeth, doe thus reade, by the which cup, hee now findeth by experience what manner of men ye are: and so the word nachash is taken for an experimentall knowledge, Gen. 30.27. where Laban saith, I have perceived or found by experience, that God hath blessed me for thy sake. But this interpretation I cannot wholly approve for these reasons: 1. Because divers words must be supplied not in the text to make the sense perfect, as quales sitis, what manner of men yee are. 2. Because as yet having not found the cup, hee had no such experience of them. 3. The steward giveth two reasons whereby he doth aggravate their offence in taking away the cup, because his master did drinke in it, and did divine by it: and so the whole verse hangeth together▪ but in the other sense there is no coherence with the rest. 4. Although this word be so taken some where else, it followeth not it should be so here.

Secondly, as these former doe altogether discharge Ioseph, so some doe charge him too farre.^{*} 1. The Hebrewes thinke that Ioseph indeed by this cup did know every mans age and nativity: but it was farre from worthy Ioseph to pollute himselfe with those grosse superstitions of Egypt. 2. Some read thus, Know ye not that such an one as I am doe consult with Propheciars or Augers? Paul Burgens. But as it is a fault to professe such divining, so is it also no lesse fault to consult with such. 3. Some think that Ioseph did in hac simulatione gravius peccare, grievously sinne in this dissimulation, and did impiously profane the gift of the spirit, in professing himselfe a Magitian in stead of Gods Prophet, Calvin. But in mine opinion this is too hard a censure: for whatsoever Ioseph here spake or professed, he did it not seriously, or as he would be talken and counted, but in respect of the vulgar opinion erroneously conceived of him.^{*}

Thirdly, therefore I thinke the meane way betweene both to be safest, that as I exempt Ioseph from such grievous sinne, so I free him not from some infirmity and oversight in this action. 1. Yet with Tostatus I thinke not, that Ioseph, voluit se vere augurem haberi à fratribus, would have his brethren indeed take him to be a diviner: for seeing he presently purposed to discover himselfe, hee would not his brethren should have such a prejudicate opinion of him. 2. Neither sufficeth it to say with Augustine, Quod non serio, sed jocundum dictum est; that this was alleaged in jest, not in earnest: for this is no excuse for him that doth evill, to say, Am I not in sport? Prov. 29.19. 3. Therefore this is the best excuse for Ioseph, that he did all this, not with a purpose to hurt his brethren, but onely to sift them, and know their affection toward Benjamin, and to take occasion to detaine him longer: as also he useth this allegation of his skill in divining, neither as out of his owne judgement, who abhorred such vanities, neither because he would be so coun|ted, but according to that opinion which the Egyptians had of him, who tooke him to be a Magician after the manner of Egypt, Mercer.

QUEST. II. Why the searcher taketh no exception to the money found in their sacks mouth, but onely to the cup.

Vers. 12. ANd he searched, and the cup was found in Benjamins sacke, &c. 1. He cunningly searcheth all their sacks, though he knew well enough where to finde the cup, that it might bee done without suspition, Muscul. 2. Whereas the money was in every one of their sacks mouth, which hee that searched found no fault with, but onely for the cup, it was not for that (as Ramban thinketh) the money was put there with their privity, for the cup was conveyed into Benjamins sacke, together with the money. 3. But he passeth over the money with silence, because he had told them before, Genes. 43.23. that God gave them their treasure: and so he might say now againe, Muscul. and if he had taken exception to the money, they should all have beene stayed, whereas Iosephs purpose onely was to have Benjamin apprehended, for the triall of his brethrens affection toward him, Mercer.

QUEST. III. Why Iudah speaketh for the rest.

Vers. 16. THen said Iudah, &c. the Lord hath found out the iniquity, &c. 1. Iudah speaketh first and for the rest, not because he had now the principality above his brethren, as Calvin, for that yet was not declared: but because he was surety to Iacob for Benjamins returne, and so this matter concerned him most, Mercer*. 2. And this iniquity which God found out, is not to be referred with Vatablus to this present accusation of theft, whereof they were not guiltie, but to their former trespass committed to|ward Ioseph, as they before confessed that trouble was befallen them for that cause, Genes. 42.21. Iunius, Mercer.

QUEST. IV. Why Iudah saith to Ioseph, thou art a Pharaoh.

Vers. 18. THou art even as Pharaoh. 1. Iudah maketh mention of his great authority, both to shew the reason of his former speech, Let not thy wrath be kindled against thy servant: he had reason to feare his displeasure being so great a person, Iunius: as also to shew that he was not ignorant of his greatnesse, and therefore pressed to speake unto him, not of any rude boldnesse, but of necessity, Calvin. Likewise he doth by this meanes insinuate himselfe: for great persons love to heare of their honour and authority, Mercer. 2. And now beginneth more lively to take effect that propheticall dreame of Ioseph, that his brethren should bow downe to him as their King: for so they objected to Ioseph, Shalt thou reigne, or bee a King over us? Gen. 37.8. Muscul.

QUEST. V. How some things are omitted by Moses, afterward expressed.

Vers. 19. HAVE ye a father, or a brother? 1. This question asked by Ioseph, is not set downe by Moses before in the story, Gen. 42. in their first examination: yet there is no doubt but that Ioseph so inquired of them, for Iudah would not tell an untruth in his presence, but Moses supplieth that here which was omitted before. 2. Benjamin is called a little lad or youth, jeled cathan, in respect of the rest: for otherwise he was now supposed to be thirtie yeares of age,  having ten children which went downe with him into Egypt, Gen. 47. some thinke he was but 24. or 25. yeares old: but that number of chil|dren will give him to be elder, Mercer.

QUEST. VI. Why Benjamin could not depart farre from his father.

Vers. 22. THE childe cannot depart from his father. 1. This is neither a doubtfull speech whether to bee referred to Iacob or Benjamin, as Aben Ezra: as hee noteth that to bee of the same kinde, Ruth 4.8. He drew off his shooe: whether it be understood of the buyer or seller. 2. Neither is it meant of Benjamin, that he could not depart from his father without danger to himselfe, as Ramban, 3. But it is spoken in respect of Iacob, whose love was such to Benjamin, that he could not endure that he should goe from him: and therefore Iudah saith, that Iacobs life depended of his life, vers. 30.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Nothing is hid from Gods sight.

Vers. 16. THE Lord hath found out our wickednesse, &c. God then seeth all things; he knoweth what is done in secret: neither the darknesse of the night, neither the secrecie of the place can hide from his sight and knowledge: so the Apostle saith, All things are naked and open in his eyes, with whom we have to doe, Heb. 4.13.

Page 363

2. Doct. Servitude and want of liberty the punishment of theft.

Vers. 16. BEhold we are servants to my Lord, both we, and he with whom the cup is found. They judge themselves worthy of servitude and bondage, because of this supposed theft of the cup: It is therefore a just punishment that they which doe steale away the goods of others, should lose the liber|ty and free use of their owne, Muscul. Answerable hereunto is that law which was afterward made by Moses; that if the theefe had not wherewithall to make restitution, hee should be sold for his theft, Exod. 22.4.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against the vulgar Latine translation.

Vers. 28. ANd I said, of a surety he is torne in peeces. But the vulgar Latine translation readeth, and ye said: whereas the truth is, that Iosephs brethren did not so say to their father, but onely shewed him Iacobs coat embrued with bloud: but Iacob upon the sight thereof so gathered and said, Io|seph surely is torne in peeces, Gen. 37.33.

2. Confut. Against Bellarmine that taketh faith for a vow.

Vers. 32. THE Latine translation readeth, Ego hunc in fidem meam recepi, I gave my faith, or became surety for him: from this place Bellarmino would justifie his exposition of that place, * 1 Tim. 5.12. Having damnation, because they have broken the first faith: which he would have understood of the vow of continencie: as in this place Iudah by his faith meaneth the solemne promise made to his father; But Bellarmino falleth in this collection, for in the originall there is no word that signifieth faith: the word here used is guarabh, which is to be surety, or undertake for another.

6. Places of Morall use.

1. Morall. To use honour and wealth moderately.

Vers. 2. PVt my silver cup, &c. Ioseph might have used cups of gold and precious stone if hee would▪ his honour, riches, and abundance was so great: but he contenteth himselfe to drinke in silver, and carrieth himselfe moderately in his great honour, Calvin. whereby men are taught in the midst of their prosperity to be humble, and not to be proud of their riches: as it is in the Psalme, If riches increase, set not your heart upon them, Psal. 62.10.

2. Morall. That we should looke unto God in all our affliction.

Vers. 16. GOd hath found out the wickednesse▪ &c. Those men doe wisely acknowledge God to be the authour of their trouble and affliction, and their sinne to have justly procured it. Vatablus. So should we in all our tribulation looke unto God, and turne to him that smiteth us, as David said con|cerning Shemei that railed upon him, The Lord hath bidden him to doe it. 2 Sam. 16.11.

3. Morall. Of the childrens duty and reverent regard of their parents.

Vers. 33. LEt me thy servant bide for the childe. Iudah chuseth rather to become a bond-servant in Ben|jamins place, than to returne home to see his fathers grieffe and miserie▪ wherein appeareth his dutifull love toward his father, who preferreth his safety before his owne liberty, Mercer. wherein he did indeed honour his father according to Gods commandement.

CHAP. XLV.

1. The Method and parts of the Chapter.

First Ioseph discovereth himselfe to his brethren▪ wherein appeareth, 1. His wisdome, in causing all to depart beside his brethren, vers. 1. 2. His love and affection in weeping over his brethren, and remitting their trespasses toward him, vers. 2. to vers. 6. 3. His pittie in ascribing all to God• providence, vers. 6. to vers. 9.

Secondly, Ioseph sendeth for Iacob his father. • Ioseph maketh the first motion to his brethren to bring their father downe with them; and beside giveth them instructions what further to say unto him, vers. 9. to 14. 2. Pharaoh ratifieth and confirmeth Iosephs motion, and gi|veth him authority to send for his father, ver. 1•. to v. 20. 2. Then the manner is set downe <◇> Ioseph did furnish them for their journey, with chariots, raiment, victuall, vers. •1. to vers. 24. and advised them not to fall out by the way, vers. 24.

Thirdly, they deliver the message•• their father, who at the first i• somewhat doubtfull, vers. 26. but when he saw the chariot: he resolved to goe with them and for Ioseph, vers. 27, •8.

2. The divers readings:

* v. 1. And Ioseph could not suffer or endure all those that stood before him. S.C. Ioseph could no longer refraine or containe himselfe before those that stood by him. caet.

* v. 7. To nourish for you a great remainder or remnant. S. that you might have meat to live. H. to save you alive by a great deliverance. caet.

* v. 8. Hath made me a father with Pharaoh. T. a father unto Pharaoh. cat.

v. 17. Lade your carts with wheat. S. lade your beasts. caet.

v. 18. I will give you all the goods of Egypt. H. of all the goods of Egypt. S. the goods of the land of Egypt. B. the best of the land of Egypt. cater.

v. 20. Leave nothing of your houshold stuffe. H. let it not grieve your eye because of your houshold stuffe. T. regard not your stuffe. B.G. let not your eye spare your stuffe. caet.

* v. 22. He gave to every one two garments. H. double raiment. S. garments to put on. C. change of garments. caeter.

three hundred peeces of gold. S. peeces of silver. cater.

* v. 26. He was as one waked out of an heavy sleepe. H. he was astonished in his minde. S. these words wavered in his heart. C. his heart wavered. B. his heart failed. T.G. was weakned. P. phug, to be weakned.

3. The Theologicall explication.

QUEST. I. Why Ioseph biddeth all the company to goe forth.

Vers. 1. HAve forth every man from me, &c. Ioseph biddeth them to goe forth, that is, all which were present beside his brethren: not because he was ashamed of his brethren, and of his poore kindred, for he did afterward acknowledge them: neither as being wearied with the suites of the rest of the company for his brethren, whom he bid goe forth, as the Hebrewes thinke: but he did it partly because he thought it not seemely for a man of his place to weepe before them, partly in respect of his brethren, whose unkinde and cruell affection toward himselfe, hee would not bewray in the hearing of others, Iun. 2. And it is probable that Ioseph declared not his brethrens offence to any, no not to Iacob: for that message which they sent to Ioseph in Iacobs name, Gen. 50.17. Ramban well noteth, is not expresse|d in the Scripture: and it is like that Iacob, if he had knowne it, would have set some note upon his sons for their cruelty against Ioseph, as he did upon Simeon and Levi for the murther of the Sichemites, Mercer.

QUEST. II. Why Iosephs brethren could not answer.

Vers. 3. His brethren could not answer him, &c. 1. This silence of Iosephs brethren proceeded not from any joy, as Luther: but from their feare, as the words following doe shew: for they were astonished at his presence. 2. This their feare did arise partly from their conscience of sinne, partly from the opinion of Iosephs great authority, who was able now to revenge his former wrong. 3. This then is the difference betweene feare and griefe: they which are in griefe doe crie out, because the spirits ascend upward and breake forth, and so the voice goeth out withall▪ but when feare invadeth men, the spirits are gathered inward, and so the voice is restrained: like as when a City is besieged, and in danger of the enemye, the Citizens withdraw themselves to the more inward parts, Perer.

QUEST. III. Why Ioseph bid his brethren come neare.

Vers. 4. Ioseph said, come neare. 1. Not to shew them his circumcision, as the Hebrewes imagine, that they might see he was Ioseph: for the mentioning of his selling into Egypt, which no man knew but themselves, was a more evident argument. 2. But Ioseph did call them nearer, (sitting in his chaire of estate) to speake comfortably unto them, that they should not be oppressed of griefe, and that he might speake unto them in secret, that his voice be not heard abroad. 3. The Egyptians heard his weeping and crying, being not farre off: and Pharaohs house heard the same by report onely, vers. 16. but it was not fit that any should heare what Ioseph said to his brethren in secret, Mercer.

QUEST. IV. How Ioseph is said to be a father to Pharaoh.

Vers. 8. Who hath made me a father with Pharaoh. 1. Not that Pharaoh is to be supposed to have bin a young man, and Ioseph in respect of his years as a father to him, as some thinke: for Ioseph was but 30. yeares old when he stood before Pharaoh: and it appeareth by Pharaohs proceeding against his chiefe Butler and chiefe Baker before that, and by his prudent behaviour in seeking the interpretation of his dreame, and approving of Iosephs counsell, that he was a sage Prince, and of good yeares. 2. Neither doth Ioseph meane that he was a father in respect of Pharaoh himselfe, for that had beene to challenge as it were superiority over him: whereas Iudah before thought it the greatest honour to say to Ioseph, that he was even as Pharaoh, Gen.44.18. 3. But I rather approve Iunius reading, that he was a father, apud Pharaonem, with Pharaoh; as a grave and prudent Counsellor of state.

QUEST. V. In what part of Egypt the land of Goshen was situate.

Vers. 10. THou shalt dwell in the land of Goshen. 1. Which was not in Arabia, as the Septuagint in some copies reade, Goshen in Arabia: for then Iacob should have beene further off than in Canaan. 2. Neither was this the Countrey called Thebais, bordering upon Ethiopia, as Hierome thinketh: for that had beene too long a journey for Iacob. 3. But this Goshen was situate betweene Nil^l and the red sea, bordering upon Canaan, not far from On, where Iosephs chiefe habitation was:

Page 365

or this country was both fruitfull, and therefore fit for cattell; it was confined upon Canaan, and lay best for Iacobs journey: it was not far from Ioseph, so that he might see to his fathers wants: it was a country separate from the rest of Egypt, and fittest for Iacob, because the keepers of sheepe were an abomination to the Egyptians, Iun. Mercer.

QUEST. VI. In what sense Ioseph saith my mouth speaketh.

Vers. 12. YOur eyes doe see, that my mouth speaketh, &c. 1. Not that he shewed them his circumcision, as Rasi. 2. Or because by his mouth, that is, his word and authority, all things were done, as R. Levi. for these had beene no certaine demonstrations that he was Ioseph. 3. But either because he spake unto them in the Hebrew tongue, without an interpreter, and after their owne pronuntiation: as Ramban, Vatablus, Iunius: as also for that he with his owne mouth had declared such things unto them, as were not knowne to any other beside themselves, Mercer.

QUEST. VII. When Pharaoh promised the best of the land, why, and in what sense.

Vers. 18. I Will give thee the best of the land of Egypt. 1. Pharaoh was glad, when he heard of Iosephs brethren, and his servants, and maketh this liberall offer, not so much because, as the Hebrewes imagine, whereas Ioseph was thought to be a man of a base and servile birth, he is now knowne to come of a good stock and parentage: but Pharaoh sheweth hereby his great love to Ioseph, in this rewarding his kindred. 2. Neither need we to say with Calvin, that this offer was made by Pharaoh, before Ioseph promised the land of Goshen to his brethren, though it be set downe after: for Ioseph doubted not, but that Pharaoh of his princely love and liberality would confirme his grant. 3. Lyranus noteth this speech of Pharaoh to be propheticall, because afterwards it came so to passe, that the Israelites had the best things of Egypt, when they departed thence: but Tostatus misliketh that collection, because the Israelites had not the best things of all the land of Egypt, but only of those Egyptians that dwelt among them: and beside, the vulgar Latine thus reading, I will give thee all the goods of the land of Egypt, doth depart from the Hebrew text, where no mention is made of [all] but only, I will give thee the best of the land of Egypt, &c.

QUEST. VIII. The meaning of these words: let not your eye spare your stuffe.

Vers. 20. LEt not your eye spare your stuffe. 1. The meaning of which words is not, either as the Latine vulgar text hath, leave nothing of your stuffe. 2. or as some Hebrewes, let not your eye have pittie of your stuffe, because you should leave it behinde: but bring all with you, and load your carts with it: for this sense agreeth not with the reason which is added; For the best of all the land of Egypt is yours. 3. Neither is the meaning, as Mercerus giveth the sense, carry what you will carry, and leave the rest: for thus a contrary sense should be gathered of the same words. 4. But he saith thus much in effect: let it not grieve you because of your stuffe, that you shall leave behinde, for you shall finde enough in Egypt, Iun. and therefore our English Bibles reade well in this place; regard not your stuffe.

QUEST. IX. Of the change of rayment and silver, which Ioseph gave to his brethren.

Vers. 22. HE gave to them all change of raiment. 1. Not double garments, as Hierome and the Sep|tuagint reade: for then Benjamin should have had not five, but ten suits of raiment, that had five times so much as the rest: but they had better garments given them, to change their old apparell with, which before they had rent for grieffe, Gen. 44. and so change of garments is taken for single vel|stures, Iud. 14.19. where Sampson slew thirty Philistims, and gave so many change of raiment to his thirty companions, Vatabl. 2. Whereas Ioseph giveth to Benjamin 300. sicles of silver, the Hebrewes note, that whereas Ioseph was sold for thirty sicles, he therefore giveth to Benjamin as much as all the o|ther ten had for their shares, when Ioseph was sold, ex Mercer. But neither was Ioseph sold for thirty, but twenty sicles: neither yet had every one for his share twenty sicles, much lesse thirty,* but the sum of twenty sicles, the price which was set upon Ioseph, was divided among them all: they therefore in this curious collection, are much deceived. 3. Ioseph gave these great gifts to his brethren, but especially to Benjamin; not so much to testifie his love unto them, as that hereby, they might perswade their wives and others, of the truth of their message, to make them more willing to leave Canaan, and goe downe to Egypt, Calvin.

QUEST. X. How Ioseph is said likewise to send to Iacob.

Vers. 23. VNto his father likewise he sent, &c. 1. This is neither to be referred simply to that which followeth, that Ioseph sent after the same manner to Iacob, that is, ten hee asses, &c. as Ra•i, Mercerus: for that was not after the same manner. 2. Neither (as Ramban) hath it relation to the vit|taile which Ioseph gave his brethren for their money, vers. 21. that so he sent to Iacob also the like vit|taile for his money. 3. But it hath reference to that which immediatly went before, that as he gave mo|ney and raiment to Benjamin, so he sent in the same proportion to Iacob, and moreover he sent ten hee asses, &c. Vatabl. Iunius, and so the Latine translator well expoundeth, addens ei, &c. he added moreo|ver ten asses, &c.

QUEST. XI. Why Ioseph chargeth his brethren not to fall out by the way.

Vers. 24. FALL not out by the way. The word is ragaz, which signifieth to be afraid, to be moved, or trou|bled: 1. Ramban expoundeth it, that they should not beare any trouble by the way; be|cause they were laden with so much riches, for Iosephs name and authority should be their protection. 2. Some thinke that Ioseph biddeth them agree, because brethren are apt to fall out. 3. Some because tra|vellers, by reason that their bodies were distempered with their journey, and are often provoked by their mutuall talke, and communication, doe many times fall out, Thom. Anglic. 4▪ But Ioseph knew how they would wrangle in the way about himselfe, and his selling into Egypt, one laying the fault upon another (for Ruben consented not at all, Iudah gave counsell to sell him, being unwilling he should perish, the rest con|spired his death) therefore he giveth them this charge, Chrysost. Mercer. Vatabl. Iun.

QUEST. XII. How Iacobs heart is said to faile or faint, and for what cause.

Vers. 29. Iacobs heart failed, &c. 1. Iacob was astonished at the report of his sonnes, that Ioseph yet li|ved: * hee had not heard it then before, as the Hebrewes fable, how Serah Asers daughter had told Iacob that Ioseph was alive, and therefore she was translated alive into Paradise, ex Munster. 2. The meaning is not, that Iacob withdrew his heart and attention from them, and greatly regarded them not, as R. Sel. or as the Latine translator, he was as raised out of an heavy sleepe, that is, Attonitus & stupidus ad intelligendum; heaue and hard to understand, as a man newly awaked, as Rupertus expoundeth. 3. Nor yet as Ramban and R. Abraham, whom Oleaster followeth, is the meaning, that his heart left beating and panting, and so they would have the word phag, to signifie to cease. 4. But Iacob for the time did faint and swoond, not for any sudden joy conceived, as Perer. for as yet he beleeeved them not: nor of an affection mixt together of joy and feare, as Calvin. Mercer. for then the one would have quallified the other, that Iacob should not have fainted: but the very naming of Ioseph did renue and revive his former grieffe, and so perplexed him, Iun.

QUEST. XIII. How Iacobs spirit is said to revive.

Vers. 27. The spirit of Iacob revived, and he said, it is enough, &c. 1. The Chalde paraphrast readeth, The holy spirit rested upon Iacob: as though the spirit of prophecie had departed from Iacob all the time of his grieffe and heavinesse: whereupon the Hebrewes further note, that the spirit of God commeth upon those that are chearfull: for which cause they say most of the Prophets were young men, who are more given to chearfulnesse than they which are old: but this is spoken of Iacobs spirit, not of the spirit of God, who now came to himselfe againe, more giving credit to the sight of his eyes when they shewed him the charriots, than to their words, Muscul. Mercer. 2. He saith it is enough, not either in respect of Iosephs great honour, or the rich gifts which were sent, but because he heard he was alive: Iosephs life was more worth unto him than all the rest, Iun.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. The righteous are not void of affections.

Vers. 2. HE wept and cryed. In that Ioseph sheweth himselfe to be a man of affection, which draweth from him plenty of teares: we doe learne, that the righteous are not as stones and blocks that cannot be moved, as the Stoicks defined their wise men; but they also are subject to the affections of love, joy, sorrow, compassion, Calvin. Our Saviour in the day of his flesh did weepe, loved Iohn more than the rest, sometime he was angry: but in all these he sinned not, as it is hard for us to keepe • measure.

2. Doct. God turneth evill to good.

Vers. 8. YOu sent me not hither, but God, &c. who hath made me a father, &c. As God turned the malice of Iosephs brethren to the great good of his Church, the advancement of Ioseph, preservati|on of the whole land of Egypt: so is the Lord able still out of evill to draw goodnesse, as he comman|ded light to shine out of darknesse, 2 Cor. 4.6. Luther. as Sampson found honey in the mouth of the dead and stinking Lion; as the Apostle saith, All things shall worke together for the best, to those that love God, Rom. 8.28.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. The selling of Ioseph into Egypt not done onely by Gods provision.

Vers. 8. YOu sent me not hither, but God. Not that God was the authour of that wicked conspiracie against Ioseph, which was inspired by the suggestion of Satan, not by the instinct of Gods spirit: neither did God onely permit or suffer the same to be done, as Bellarmino would have it, lib. 2. de amission. grat. cap. 11. For if God withdraw his power, nothing can be done in the world: and therefore the Psalme saith, Whatsoever pleased the Lord, did he in heaven and in earth, Psal. 135.6. Wherefore the Lord as he did foresee what Iosephs brethren should doe in this action, and disposed and directed the same after it was done, to an happy end: so also he decreed that this thing should be done by no other meanes: and al|though in the particular the evilnesse of the action proceeded not from the malicious minde stirred by Sa|tan; yet the generall overruling power and disposing providence of God so concurred, as that Ioseph should by this meanes and no other be sold into Egypt. So that Iosephs brethren were instruments here|in of Gods decree and purpose: yet not thereby are they excusable, because they did that of a wic|ked minde, which God in his wise providence converted to good: as Iudas sinne was no whit the lesse in betraying Christ, though, as Peter saith, he were delivered up by the determinate counsell of God, Act. 2.23. Calvin. Muscul.

2. Confut. Against the vulgar Latine translation.

Vers. 20. REgard not your stuffe. The Latine translator maketh a contrary sense, Leave nothing of your stuffe: see before qu. 8. whereas the meaning is, that they should not care to leave their stuffe behinde them: thus that translation which the Romanists so much extoll and magnifie, is found to bee faulty and erronious in many places.

6. Places of Morall vse.

1. Mor. Not to suffer men to be swallowed up of griefe.

Vers. 3. Then Ioseph said, I am Ioseph. He seeing his brethren almost oppressed with griefe, doth speake comfortably unto them, lest they might have beene overcome with too much heavinesse: which teacheth governours not to cast downe altogether with griefe, those which are sufficiently hum|bled, Calvin, as S. Paul shewed himselfe toward the incestuous party, lest he be swallowed up of overmuch heavinesse, 2 Cor. 2.7.

2. Mor. To preserve from spirituall famine the greatest deliverance.

Vers. 7. TO save you alive by a great deliverance. If it bee a great deliverance to preserve men from the famine of corporall food, as Ioseph did, much more ought wee to be thankfull to God for such governours, as provide food for the soules of their people, and deliver them from spirituall fa|mine, Muscul. for much more grievous is the famine of hearing the word, than of bread, or water, Amos 8.11.

3. Mor. Gods providence in turning all things to the best, should move us to forgive.

Vers. 8. YOu sent me not hither; but God. Ioseph looking into Gods providence, who turned his bre|threns evill meaning toward him to good, in that consideration, is more easily brought to forgive them: for when we see how God disposeth to our good of those wrongs that are done to us in the world, wee should in that respect be more ready to forget them. Thus S. Peter speaketh comforta|bly to the people, that gave consent to the killing of Christ: ye have killed the Lord of life, &c. but those things that God had shewed before, by the mouth of the Prophets, that Christ should suffer, he hath thus fulfilled, Act. 3.15, 18.

4. Mor. To seeke to maintaine peace.

Vers. 24. FALL not out by the way. Ioseph as he was ready to make peace with his brethren, and to be at one with them, so he laboureth to maintaine peace among themselves: thus teaching us by his example, not only to be lovers of peace our selves, but to procure it in others: according to the doctrin of Christ: Blessed are the peace-makers, for they shall be called the children of God, Matth. 5.9.

5. Mor. Lyers shall not be beleaved, when they speake the truth.

Vers. 26. FOR he beleaved them not. This is a just reward of lyers, that when they speake the truth▪ they shall not be beleaved: Iacobs sonnes had told him a tale before, when they shewed him Iosephs coat, as though some wilde beast had devoured him, Genes. 37. and now when they tell the truth, that Ioseph was alive, no credit is given unto them, Muscul. Thus S. Paul would not endure, that the maid which had the spirit of divination, and deceived the people with lies, should testifie the truth of the Apostles, that they were the servants of God and taught the way to salvation, Act. 16.18.

CHAP. XLVI.

1. The Method and Argument of the Chapter.

First, we have here set downe Iacobs preparation to his journey. 1. He offereth sacrifice to God. 2. The Lord answereth him by vision, appearing unto him, and encouraging him to goe downe to Egypt, promising him both a prosperous journey, a peaceable end, and the returne of his posterity, vers. 2. to 5.

Secondly, the journey itselfe is described, vers. 5. to vers. 8. with an enumeration of the persons that went downe with Iacob. 1. In particular, the of-spring of Leah and her maid Zilpah, the of-spring likewise of Rachel and her maid Bilhah, of every one by themselves, from v. 8. to 26. they are all summed in grosse: v. 26.27.

Thirdly, Iacobs arrivall in Egypt is declared. 1. How he sent for Ioseph, and of their meeting, greeting and salutation in Goshen, vers. 27. to 31. 2. The counsell and advice given by Ioseph to his brethren, how they should answer Pharaoh, that they might obtaine the land of Goshen, vers. 31. to the end.

2. The divers readings, where the translations differ.

v. 1. he came to the well of the oath. H. S. to Bersheba. caeter.*

v. 2. he heard God calling him by a vision of the night. H. God said to Israel in a vision of the night. cat.

v. 3. I am the God of thy fathers. S. I am God, the God of thy father. B. G. I am the mighty God of thy father. caet. he. ha•el. celohe, the strong God.

v. 4. I wil bring thee up againe in thy returne. H. I will bring that back againe in the end.* S. I will surely make thee come up againe. C. B. I will bring thee up againe. G. I will cause thee to come up, by comming up with thee. T.P. he.

v. 5. they tooke their substance. S. their father, children, and wives. caeter.*

v. 6. they tooke all that they possessed in Canaan. H. S. they tooke their cattell and goods, which they had gotten in the land of Canaan▪ caeter. he racash to get goods.

v. 7. their daughters, and daughters daughters. S. their daughters. H. their daughters, and sons daughters▪ caet.*

v. 10. Iachin, Saher. H. B. Achin Saar. Iachin Sacher. C. Iachin Zohar. G. Iachin Tzochar. T. he. Sochar. P.

* v. 12. Ezron Amul. H. C. Esron, Iemuel. S. Hezron. Hamul. B. G. chezron, chamul. T. P. heb.

v. 13. Thola, Phua Semron. H. Thola, Phua, Asum, Sambram. S. Thola, Phuah Iob, Simron. caet.

v. 16. Ar•lis. S. Haeri, caet. v. 17. Ieul. S. Iesui. caet.

v. 20. priest of On. T.P.C.G. cohen, signifieth both, a prince and priest.

v. 21. the sonnes of Manasses, which Syra his concubine bare unto him, were Machir: Machir begat Galaad: the sonnes of Ephraim Manasses brother, Sutalaam, and Taam, the sonnes of Sutalaam, Edem. S. the rest have none of these words.

* v. 21. Mophim, Ophim and Ared. H. Mamphim, Ophim, and Gerah begat Arad. S. Muppm, Huppm, and Arde. caet.

* v. 22. eightene soules in all. S. fourteene soules all. caet.

v. 27. all the soules are seventy five. S. seventy. caeter. the sonnes of Ioseph, nine soules. S. two soules. cater.

v. 28. he sent Iudah, &c. that he should meet him at the citie of the nobles, in the land of Ramesse. S. that he should tell him, that he might meet hm in Goshen. H. to prepare before him. C. to direct his face to Goshen. B. to direct his way to Goshen. H. to premonish him to meet him in Goshen. T. to appeare before his face in Goshen. P. he. iarah, to appeare to signifie.

* v. 37. said to his brethren. S. said to his brethren, and all his fathers house. caet.

v. 34. in G•sem of Arabia. S. in the land of Goshen. caet.

3. The theologicall explication.

QUEST. I. Why Iacob offered sacrifice in Bersheba.

Vers. 1. ISrael came to Bersheba, &c. 1. This place is interpreted the well of the oath, or of seven: for shabang signifieth both: so called first by Abraham, where he made a covenant with Abimelech, and gave him seven lambs, Gen. 21. and afterward the name was revived by Isaack, Gen. 26. 2. To this place came Iacob, being both in his way as he went to Egypt, for it is in the utmost bounds of Canaan, toward the South: as also because there Abraham and Isaack had long dwelled, built altars there, and consecrated it as a peculiar place for Gods worship. 3. He offereth sacrifice, both to give thanks to God, for the life of Ioseph, and to desire the Lord to make his journey prosperous, Iun.

QUEST. II. Of the Lords calling of Iacob.

Vers. 2. Iacob, Iacob, who answered, I am here, &c. 1. He is called Iacob, not Israel, not because, as the Hebrewes imagine, he should not prevaile against men in Egypt, for he is also called Israel in Egypt, Gen. 48.29. but when as the Lord vouchsafeth to speake familiarly unto him, he calleth him by his name Iacob, Mercer. 2. The name is doubled, to stirre him up to greater attention, Calvin; and to shew the certainty of that which God spake, Perer. • Iacob answereth readily, here am I, and therefore Iosephus misreporteth this story, that Iacob should say quisnam esset, who it was that spake unto him, as though he had not beene acquainted with Gods voice, lib. 1. antiquit.

QUEST. III. Who it was that spake to Iacob.

Vers. 3. I Am God, the God of thy father. 1. This then was not an Angel, that spake in the person of God, but it was the Lord himselfe, to whom Iacob offered sacrifice, vers. 1. 2. who is called the God of his father, rather than of Abraham, because Iacob so used to call the Lord, the feare of his father Isaack, Genes. 1. 53. and for that he had better experience of the mercies shewed to his father Isaack: who also was not many yeares before departed, about the 30 yeare of Iosephs age, when Iacob was 120. Mercer. 3. Where God is said to goe downe with Iacob into Egypt, it is to be understood by the effect; because God was present with him, * in protecting and defending him: for otherwise the God-head nei|ther ascendeth nor descendeth, filling heaven and earth, Mercer.

QUEST. IV. The divers causes why Iacob feared to goe downe into Egypt removed.

Vers. 3. FEare not to goe downe into Egypt, &c. There were divers causes why Iacob feared to goe downe to Egypt: which causes of his feare are here removed by the Lord. 1. He might be somewhat doubtfull, because sometime in the like necessity of famine Isaack was forbidden to goe downe to Egypt, Genes. 26. 2. Mercer. therefore to helpe this, the same God that charged his father not to goe downe, biddeth Iacob not to feare to goe downe. 2. He might feare lest his children might be corrupted by the superstition of the idolaters: and about this time, as Augustine thinketh, began that grosse idolatry of the Aegyptians in worshiping Apis, * a king of the Argives, that died in Egypt, calling him by the name of Serapis, which is compounded of the name Apis and Suros, the coffin wherein Apis was entombed: and in memoriall of this Apis, they worshipped a pide Bull, which they named Apis: by which occasion the Israelites learned to worship a calfe, August. lib. 18. de civit. Dei c. 4. This feare Iacob is discharged of, when the Lord saith, I will goe downe with thee, &c. the Lord promiseth to be a guide to him and his, to keepe them in his feare. 3. Iacob was not ignorant of the prophecie given to Abraham, that his seed should be afflicted and kept under in a strange land; therefore the Lord to take away that scruple, telleth him, that his posterity shall increase there, and he will make him a great nation. 4. He might thinke, that his posterity being overtaken with the pleasures of Egypt, would hardly returne from thence, and so he should lose the hope of the inheritance of Canaan: to meet with this doubt, the Lord saith, vers. 4. I will also bring thee up againe. 5. He also might feare, left being a weake old man he should die by the way before he came to Ioseph: therefore the Lord to make him secure in this, telleth him, that Ioseph shall close his eyes when he dyed, vers. 4.

QUEST. V. Of the ancient use of closing the eies of the dead.

Vers. 4. I will bring thee up againe, and Ioseph, &c. 1. The Lord brought Iacob up out of Egypt, when his body was carried to be buried in Canaan: but most of all was it performed in his feed, whom the Lord brought out of Egypt, under the hand of Moses & Aaron. 2. It was the use to close the eyes of the dead, which commonly are opened, when men dying doe lift up their eyes to heaven, Muscul. and there|fore they that stand by doe shut them before the body is stiffe. Plinie maketh mention of this solemne use among the Romans, who used to shut the eies of the dead at the time of their death, and to open them againe, when they brought them to the fire, vt neque ab homine supremum eos spectari fas sit, & coelo non ostendi, nefas: that neither (saith he) is it lawfull for men to see them last of all, and it were impious not to shew or open them toward heaven. And this duty of closing the eyes was performed by those which were dearest, and best beloved of the dead: as Ioseph was to Iacob: whose eyes Ioseph did shut up, when he had given up the ghost, although no special mention be made of it afterward, Perer.

QUEST. VI. What goods and substance Iacob and his sonnes carryed into Egypt.

Vers. 6. THEy tooke their cattell, and their goods, which they had gotten in Canaan, &c. 1. Though no mention be here made of their servants, yet it is like that Iacob carried them also with him, and would not leave them behinde in that hard time of famine, Calvin. 2. Though Pharaoh sent them word, that they should not regard their stuffe, yet they tooke their substance with them, that they might be as little chargeable as they could unto others: as Abraham comming forth out of his country at the Lords commandement into Canaan, brought his substance with him, Gen. 12.5. Luther. Muscul. 3. Mention is not made of Iacobs goods gotten in Mesopotamia, but onely in Canaan, not because Iacob had gi|ven those goods to Esau, which is not like; but because they were not to be compared to his substance, which he got in Canaan, and Moses speaketh also of the goods and substance of his sonnes, that got all they had in Canaan, being not of yeares in Mesopotamia, to provide for themselves, Mercer.

QUEST. VII. Of Iacobs daughters and the order observed by Moses in setting downe their names.

Vers. 8. His daughters, and his sonnes daughters, &c. 1. Iacob had but one daughter here named, Dinah of Leah, and but one daughter of his sonnes, Serah of Asher, vers. 17. yet they are put in the plurall number, according to the phrase of the Hebrew, as vers. 23. it is said, the sonnes of Dan, Hushai, he had but one, Muscul. 2. The whole sum of Iacobs posterity borne at this time, is seventy, vers. 27. of which number Iacob himselfe is one, as the head of the rest, Mercer. 3. Moses setteth not downe their names, according to the order of their birth, as in other places, c. 29.30.35. but first he rehearseth such as came of Leah and her maid, then those that came of Rachel and her maid, Mercer.

QUEST. VIII. Of the divers names of the sonnes of the twelue Patriarkes.

Vers. 10. THE sons of Simeon, Iemuel. Many hard and difficult questions are moved out of this chapter, which shall briefly be discussed. First, there is great difference in the names here rehearsed, and in other places of Scripture: the sonnes of Simeon, Iemuel, and Iamin, are called Nemuel and Iarib, 1 Chron. 4.24. Zohar is there named Zerah, vers. 13. Iob the sonne of Issachar, is called Iashub. Numb. 26.24. vers. 16. Ziphion, Ezbon Arodi, are called Zephon, Ozn, Arod, Numb. 26.15.16.17. vers. 21. the sonnes of Benjamin, Ashbel, Becher, Ehi, Rosh, Muphim, Chuphim, Ard: are otherwise named, Iediael, Acharah, Nochah, Rapha, Sheph•am, Churam, Addai, 1 Chron. 8.1, 2, 3. It is then no strange thing in Scripture, for the same men to be called by divers names, sometimes with the alteration of some letters, sometimes with a change of the whole name.

QUEST. VIII. Of other differences in the genealogie compared with the 26. Numer. and 1. Chron. 7.8.chap.

Vers. 10. THE sonnes of Simeon, Iemuel, Iamin, Ohad. 1, It is to be considered, that divers of these here named, are else-where omitted: as Ohad, is not reckoned among the sonnes of Simeon, Numb. 26.12, 1 Chron. 4.24. it should seeme that he died without issue, Muscul. so likewise three of Benjamins sonnes, Echi, Gera, Rosh, are omitted by Moses, Numb. 26.40. of whom there came no families. 2. Hee that is there named Achiram and Acharah, 1 Chron. 8.1. was not Echi, as Iunius thinketh upon that place, and Muscul. in Gen. 46. vers. 26. but Becher, who was one of the three chiefe fathers of Benjamin, 1 Chron. 7.6. and therefore it is not like, that Moses setting downe the chiefe families of Benjamin, would make no mention of him, Numb. 26.3. whereas here are rehearsed ten sons of Benjamin, they were not all properly his sons, but two of them, Ard and Naaman were the sons of Bela, and Benjamins nephewes, Numb. 26, 40. It was not then Gerah, as the Septuagint reade, but Bela that bega•Ard. 4. Whereas Bela is made to have six sonnes, 1 Chron. 8.3, 4. and here he hath but two, the reason is: because these two were only borne, when Iacob went downe to Egypt,* the rest were borne after|ward. 5. And whereas 1 Chron. 7.7. five sonnes of Bela are named altogether, divers from those six rehearsed, 1 Chron. 8.3. in the first place, not the immediate sonnes of Bela are mentioned, but such as were the chiefe Princes of that family in the time of David, when Ioab numbred the people: in the other place, they which were the next sonnes of Bela are rehearsed. 6. Moses in this place doth confusedly set them together, not according to their order of birth, Bela, Bechor, Ashbel, &c. whereas Ashbel was the second, Becher or Aharah the third, Nocah or Echi the fourth, Rapha or Rash the fift: as may appeare, 1 Chron. 8.1.

QUEST. IX. How Pharez is said to have two sonnes at Iacobs comming into Egypt.

Vers. 12. THE sonnes of Phares, Ezron and Hamul, &c. Whereas it may seeme strange, that Phare• the son of Iudah by Thamar; should have two children, that are said to come downe with Iacob into Egypt. 1. The right solution is not to say with Augustine, that these two children are said to goe downe, because they were in Pharez loynes; and not yet borne, in this sense, all those children which were afterward borne in Egypt, might be said to goe downe, and so we should have not seventy, but 700. persons. 2. Neither is Pererius answer sufficient for the same reason, who understandeth by Iacobs com|ming into Egypt, the whole time of his and Iosephs life: for so we might account 7000. soules to have descended with Iacob. 3. Therefore according to Moses narration, we say, that these two sonnes of Pharez we•e then borne, but very young: who himselfe being begotten of Thamar at Iudahs 30. yeare, might take a wife at 14. or 15. yeares: for Pererius conjecture is untrue, that Pharez was borne but the yeare before Iacobs descending into Egypt. 4. The like may be said of Bela Benjamins sonne, that had two sons, Ard and Naaman,* borne at Iacobs going downe: Benjamin was now at 30. yeares a grandfather, and Bela his eldest sonne at 15. a father, Mercer. there is no other way to give satisfaction to those doubts. And it is most like that Iacobs sonnes married very soone, and their sonnes also: for how else could they in the space of 215. yeares, which was the time of their aboad in Egypt, from 70. increase to 600. thousand, when as in 215. yeares before, from the 75. yeare of Abraham, till Iacobs going downe, they in|creased but to 70. soules in all. 5. Whereas Selah and Zerah also had issue as well as Pharez, as appea|reth▪ Numb. 26.20. it is not as Pererius thinketh, for the prerogative of Pharez of whom the Messiah should come, that Pharez posterity is remembred, the others omitted, but because Pharez sons were now borne, the others afterward in Egypt.

Page 370

QUEST. X. Of Dinah Iacobs daughter, and whether Iacob had any more daughters.

Vers. 15. THEse be the sonnes of Leah, &c. which she bare to Iacob in Pa•an Aram, with his daughter Dinah. 1. All these before named, were not borne in Mesopotamia, but only the six sonnes of Leah, for she onely bare them and Dinah: the rest were borne in Canaan, Mercer. Iun. 2. This Dinah some Hebrewes say, was married to Iob, but that is uncertaine: some thinke that Simeon tooke her to wife,* having pittie upon her, after Sichem the Canaanite had defloured her, and that therefore she is called a Canaanite, the mother of Saul before named: but it is absurd to thinke, that Simeon would marry his owne sister, or that Iacob would have suffered it. 3. Likewise whereas Dinah of Leah, and Serah of Asher are all the women here rehearsed, that came of Iacob, that appeareth to be but a fable of the Hebrews, that Iacob with every sonne had a twin daughter borne, which were his sonnes wives: for there is no question but that Moses would have made some mention of them, either in this place, or some other.

QUEST. XI. How the number of 33. that came of Leah is to be counted.

Vers. 15. ALL the soules of his sonnes and daughters were thirty three. But the whole number, with Er and Onan, maketh thirty foure: to make this account to agree; 1. We neither thinke with Lyranus that Dinah, because she is a woman, should be excluded, seeing afterward Serah the daugh|ter of Asher is numbred among the rest, vers. 17. 2. Nor yet is Saul to be excluded, vers. 10. as though he were not Simeons sonne, but the sonne of the Canaanitish woman, by a former husband, as some thinke; for then to what purpose would mention be made of him here, being none of Iacobs posterity? 3. Neither with some Hebrewes doe we here understand Iochebed, Moses mother, seeing she is not expressed, and she was borne in Egypt, Numb. 26.59. &c. 4. Therefore this is the just account: Er and Onan, because they were dead, a^oe not to be reckoned: there remaine then thirty two, and Iacob being added to that number maketh thirtie three: and that Iacob is one of this account, it is evident out of the 8. vers. Iacob and his sonnes.

QUEST. XII. The erronious computation of the Septuagint neither agreeing with themselves nor the Hebrew.

Vers. 22. FOurteene soules in all: The Septuagint doth reade, eighteene, wherein a three-fold error may be observed. 1. They beside Manasses and Ephraim doe reckon five more, Machi^o, and Gilead his sonne of Manasseh, Sutalam, and Tuhan, and Edem the sonne of Sutalam of Ephraim these could not be borne at Iacobs comming downe to Egypt: for Manasseh was not then above nine yeare old: for Ioseph tooke a wife in the beginning of the seven plentifull yeares, which were expired, and two of the deare yeares: to say that these are rehearsed for Iacobs honour, though they were borne offer|ward in Iosephs life time, doth not satisfie: for onely Moses accounteth those which were then borne at Iacobs comming downe, which in all make seventy. 2. The Septuagint doe manifestly corrupt the He|brew text, reading here for fourteene, 18. and vers. 27. for two, they reade nine. 3. They agree not with themselves: for the five, which are by them added, put to 14. make 19. not 18. and Ioseph with his two sons, and the other five, make not nine, but onely eight. Augustine and Eucherius thinke this knot to be insoluble, and would picke a mystery out of it, August. quaest. 152. in Genes. But we need not much to trouble ourselves to free the Septuagint here from error, seeing they so manifestly decline from the He|brew verity.

QUEST. XIII. The two numbers of 66. and 70. agree together.

Vers. 26. THreescore and six. In this number Iacob is not comprehended, for only they are here summed that came out of Iacobs loines, though Iacob be one of the first number of 33. But let all these numbers be joyned together, 33. of Leah, 16. of Zilpah, 11. of Rachel, Ioseph and his two sonnes being deducted, 7. of Bitha, and the sum will be 66. Iacob beeing taken out: unto which number of 66. Iacob together with Ioseph, and his two sonnes being added; wee shall have in all 70. soules: for here in this last number Moses saith not, as before, vers. 26. all the soules which came out of Iacobs loynes, but all the soules of the house of Iacob are 70. so that in this speech Iacob himselfe may bee very well included.

QUEST. XIV. The number of seventy in Moses, and of seventy five in the Acts, reconciled.

Vers. 27. BUt whereas Moses nameth only seventy, and yet Stephen according to the Septuagint, saith, that they were seventy five, Act. 7.14. the question is, how these may be reconciled.

1. We neither answer with Augustine (to whom Pererius subscribeth) that the Septuagint are here in no error, nor yet Stephen following them: for they reckon five more, by way of anticipation,^{*} which were borne afterward in Egypt, while Ioseph lived: who because he was the cause of Iacobs comming downe into Egypt, introitus ejus accipiendus est, quam diu vixit Ioseph; his entrance into Egypt is to be taken all the while Ioseph lived, quast. ulrim. in Genes. but by this account there should not only be 70. but 7000. and more, if all they should be numbred that were borne while Ioseph lived, which was seventy yeare after Iacobs comming into Egypt: for Ioseph was then 39. yeare old, and he lived 110. yeares: beside, it is evident, that in the Hebrew, onely seventy soules are accounted, and Deut. 10.22. the Septuagint reade but seventy, though in this place, and Exod. 1. they translate seventy five.

2. Neither is it like that the translation of the Septuagint was herein corrupted by the ignorance of the writers or pen-men, and so that place in the Acts accordingly depraved: as Eugubinus: for the Septuagint doe of purpose adde five more of Iosephs posterity, to make up the number of 75.

3. Neither yet doth Iunius exposition fully satisfie: who thinketh that Stephen meaneth the whole number that are named in this chapter, as Iacobs two wives, and his two concubines, and Iudahs two sonnes, Er and Onan, who beside Iacob make the number 75. for Moses himselfe excludeth Er and Onan: neither are Iacobs wives accounted in the particular sums: and seeing Iacob is included in the number of 70. why should he be excluded in this other number of 75. Further, Steven meaneth those of Iacobs kinred that Ioseph sent for, and caused to be brought into Egypt: but Iudahs sons were dead, and so it is thought were Iacobs wives also.

4. Neither can I thinke, that Saint Luke, either as ignorant of the Hebrew, as Hierome reporteth from the opinion of others: or yeelding unto those times, because the translation of the Septuagint was of great authority among the Gentiles, did herein follow them: especially it being but a matter of story: as thinketh Eugubinus, Mercerus: for it is like that Saint Stephen speaking to the Hebrewes, did follow the Hebrew Scriptures: and Saint Luke did not otherwise report or write, than Stephen spake: this onely reason staieth me from approving this answer and solution.

5. Wherefore in this so great difficulty, nothing remaineth to answer, but that Luke did write, and Stephen spake according to the originall story, that 70. soules came into Egypt. And afterward by some mistaking, pente, which signifieth five, might creepe into the text, for pantes, as Master Beza conjectureth; or some might take upon them to correct S. Lukes report, according to the Septuagint, which was of greater authority and credit then in the world, Calvin. And yet against this answer it may be objected, that the Syriacke translation, which is most ancient, readeth in like manner 75. therefore, if Saint Lukes text were altered or changed, such change was made, before it was translated into the Syriacke language. One of these two last answers I prefer before the rest, and the latter rather: * let the reader make his choice. Howsoever, the Hebrew verity must be received, that onely 70. soules descended into Egypt of the twelve Patriarkes: in remembrance whereof, the Israelites pitched in Elim, where were twelve fountaines, and seventy palme trees: this number answereth the seventy fathers of the world that came of Noah, Gen. 10. according to this proportion were the seventy Elders chosen to be Moses assistants, Numb. 11. Our Saviour Christ also did choose unto him 12. Apostles, and 70. Disciples, to be the spirituall fathers of the Church, Muscul. Mercer.

QUEST. XV. Of the sending of Iudah before to Ioseph.

Vers. 28. HE sent Iudah before him unto Ioseph, &c. 1. It seemeth that Iudah was of authority among his brethren, as a man of more excellent parts, and therefore Iacob thinketh him the fittest to be imployed in this message. 2. He sendeth to Ioseph to meet him in Goshen, that countrie which Ioseph had made choice of before for his father, and it was neerest to Canaan: it is like that some certaine place was appointed, where they should meet: the Septuagint read, in the citie of the nobles, * but what citie that was it is unknowne. 3. The Hebrewes write that Ioseph when he came neere his father, did cast away his bonnet, and other ornaments of honour, that his father might the better discern him, which is not unlike. 4. Where it is said, he fell upon his necke: Rasi referreth it to Ioseph, to whom subscribeth Mercerus: Ramban to Iacob, whom Iunius followeth: though the construction favour the first opinion, because Ioseph is named in the verse, and not Iacob at all: yet the circumstance and usage of those times maketh for the other: for it is more beſeeming the parents to fall upon their ſonnes neck, who doe hum|ble and bow themſelves to their father: as the father fell upon the prodigall childſ necke, and kiſſed him, Luke 15.20.

QUEST. XVI. The cauſes why Ioseph deſired that Iacob ſhould dwell in Goshen.

Vers. 34. THat ye may dwell in the land of Goshen. Divers reaſons moved Ioseph to procure his brethren their dwelling in Goshen: 1. Becauſe it was a moſt fruitfull place, and fit for their keeping of cattell, Calvin. 2. That they might dwell apart from the Egyptians, and ſo not be corrupted with their idolatry and ſuſtition, Mercer. Muscul. 3. Leſt that being diſperſed among the Egyptians, they might have beene diſtracted, and ſo one divided from another, Iosephus. 4. Becauſe the Egyptians abhor|red keepers of ſheepe, it would have beene an occaſion of envy and hatred, if they had lived among the E|gyptians. 5. laſtly, the land of Goshen ſtood more commodious for the Iſraelites returne and paſſage out of Egypt, being ſituate in the utmoſt bounds toward Canaan: whereas if the Iſraelites had beene ſeated in the inward or remote parts of the Countrey, they could not afterward ſo conveniently have eſcaped, Pererius.

Page 372

QUEST. XVII. Why keepers of ſheepe were an abomination to the Egyptians.

Vers. 34. FOr every ſheepe-keeper is an abomination to the Egyptians. &c. Theſe are the words of Moses rather than of Ioseph, as the like reaſon is inſerted by Moses▪ Gen. 43.34. why the Hebrewes and Egyptians might not eat together: the Egyptians then abhorred ſhepherds and keepers of ſheepe: 1. Not onely becauſe they were a proud people, and deſpiſed ſhepherds as baſe and ſervile men, as Ru|pertus: for they were an abomination unto them, which is more than to contemne and deſpiſe them. 2. Neither did they abhorre ſhepherds as though there were none of that condition among the Egypti|ans, for they had their flocks of ſheepe, Genes. 47.17. 3. Neither yet is it like that the Egyptians did alto|gether abſtaine from all eating of fleſh, (Aben Ezra reporteth of the Indians that they kill no fleſh, nei|ther doe ſo much as eat of the milke that commeth of cattell) and that for this cauſe the Egyptians abhorred the Hebrewes. 4. Therefore I thinke rather that the Egyptians eſpecially deteſted keepers of ſheepe rather than of other cattell, becauſe they ſuperſtitiously adored that kinde, and ſo abſtained alto|gether from ſlaying of ſheepe, and eating the fleſh thereof, keeping them for their milke and wooll: whereas the Hebrew ſhepherds did without any ſcruple eat of their flocks: other kinds of cattell it is like they did eat of, as Mercerus reporteth the opinion of ſome writers, that it was lawfull for the Egyptians to kill and eat foure kinds of creatures, Oxen, Calves, Swine, and Geese.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Not to depend upon meanes, or put any confidence in Princes.

Vers. 4. I Will goe downe with thee into Egypt. Although Ioseph were Lord of Egypt, and a man of great power, able to provide for Iacob, and protect him from danger, yet the Lord would not have Iacob to depend upon the meanes, but to truſt to his providence, Muscul. Whereby alſo wee are taught not to put our confidence in men, but to wait upon God: as it is in the Psalmes, It is better to truſt in the Lord, than to put any confidence in man: it is bette• to truſt in the Lord, than to put any confidence in Princes, Psal. 118.9.

2. Doct. The Lord will never forſake his elect.

Vers. 4. I Will also bring thee up againe, &c. The Lord promiseth his presence and gracious assistance to Iacob, both going downe into Egypt, and returning: the Lord then will never forsake his elect; Whom he once loveth, he loveth to the end, Ioh. 13.1. and as he said to Iosua, I will not leave thee, nor forsake thee, Iosu. 15. so the same promise belongeth unto all the faithfull servants of God, as the Apostle •p|plieth it, Heb. 13.5.

3. Doct. A man is not bound to reveale all his counsell, so he speake the truth and lie not.

Vers. 34. Then ye shall say, thy servants are men occupied about cattell. This also was true which Ioseph taught his brethren to answer, that they might dwell in the land of Goshen, but there was another reason which Ioseph would have them to conceale: because it was the most fruitfull and fertile soyle of all Egypt. We see then that a man is not bound to utter all his minde, but speaking the truth in the rest, he may conceale that which he thinketh will bee prejudiciall to his suit and businesse, Calvin. and in such affaires that precept of our Saviour taketh place, To be wise as serpents, but innocent as doves, Matth. 10.16.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. No Sacraments without the spirit and life of the word.

Vers. 2. GOd spake unto Iacob in a vision. The Lord doth not onely appeare and shew a vision to Ia|cob, but hee also speaketh unto him, to the vision he adjoyneth a voyce: of this nature and kinde are all Gods signes and ceremonies, they are not dead or dumbe, but the word of God putteth life unto them. Wherefore it is presumption in the Church of Rome to impose signes and Sacraments upon the Church, which receive not their life from the Word, Calvin. as our Saviour saith, It is the spirit that quickneth, the flesh profiteth nothing, Ioh. 6.63. so the fleshie and terrene part in signes and sacraments pro|fiteth not without the spirit and life, which they receive from the Word.

2. Confut. Antiquity no good argument of the truth.

Vers. 3. I Am the God of thy father. He saith not of thy fathers, as of thy great Grandfather, for Terah was an idolater, Iosu. 24.4. Iacob could not goe beyond Abraham, for divers hundred yeares to fetch his faith: though the most ancient Patriarks, Noe, Se•, Heber, were of the same faith and religion. Wee see then that antiquity is no good argument to prove true religion by, unlesse wee run unto the first beginning: for so truth is more ancient than error. In like manner wee deny not but that of late yeares wee cannot derive the profession of the Gospell from our fathers and ancestors past the third degree, because all the world was blinded with superstition and ignorance for divers hun|dred yeares: but leaving the meane generations, which were corrupted, we are able to fetch and de|rive our faith, from the Apostles of Christ• this the Romanists doe call in derision, a probation of our faith• persalium, by leaping. But Iacob could prove his faith no otherwise; he must leape from Abraham, to Heber and Sem: So Steven would not prove his faith from the immediate descent of his father: for of them he saith, ye have alwayes resisted the holy Ghost, as your fathers did, so doe you, Act. 7. he ascendeth up to Abraham, and Moses, and the prophets times: and in such manner doe we prove and justifie our faith and profession.

3. Confut. Against Perer that holdeth the Septuagint in their number of 75. not to <◇> error.

Vers. 27. ALL the soules of the house of Iacob, &c. are 70. yet the Septuagint reade 75. notwithstanding Pererius justifieth the Septuagint, and freeth them from error, although they set downe five more of Iosephs race, than Moses hath▪ which were born in Egypt afterward: If this, saith he, be an error in them, then was it in Moses, for he also numbred among the rest, the sonnes of Phares, and Benjamin, which were borne afterward in Egypt: and beside he reckoneth Manasses and Ephraim, which came not downe with Iacob, but were in Egypt, Perer. in Genes. 46. numer. 25.

Contra. 1. It is untrue, that Phares and Benjamins sonnes were then unborne at Iacobs going downe into Egypt: I have shewed before▪ quast. 9. how it is not unlikely, but they might very well, be all then borne: otherwise *Moses*s words should not be true: all the soules which came with Iacob into Egypt, vers. 26: if these came not with him. 2. Ephraim and Manasses came not downe with Iacob, and therefore they are not in the first number of 66. but they were borne before Iacob descended, not afterward, and therefore are fitly comprehended in the other account of 70. 3. Wherefore seeing the Septuagint reade 75. Mo/ses numbred but seventy in all, eyther Moses must be in an error, or they: for both cannot agree with truth.

6. Places of morall use.

1. Mor. Not to take a journey in hand without prayer.

Vers. 1. Iacob offered sacrifice to God. Iacob would not take this long and perilous journey in hand, but first he calleth upon God, to consult with him, and prayeth that his journey bee prosperous: which example teacheth us, not to enterprise any journey or to take in hand any businesse of waight with|out prayer, Muscul. so did Abrahams servant. Gen. 24. so did Iacob, Gen. 28.

2. Mor. To provide as much as in us lieth not to be chargeable to others.

Vers. 6. THEy tooke their cattell and their goods. Though Pharaoh sent them word to take no care for their stuffe: yet they provided, having of their owne, to be as little chargeable as they might to others; not like to some, that are carelesse for themselves, and rely altogether vpon the helpe of others, Muscul. this made S. Paul to labour with his owne hands, that he should not be grievous to others, al|though it was their dutie to maintaine him, 2 Cor. 11.8.

3. Mor. The hatred of the world maketh us cleave faster to God.

Vers. 34. EVERy sheepe-keeper is an abomination to the Egyptians: God turned the hatred of the Egypti|ans to their great good: for by this meanes they had a place provided by themselves, where they might quietly serve God, Calvin. so when the righteous are hated of the world, it causeth them to sequester themselves from the vaine delights thereof, and cleave more nearly to God, as the prophet Da/vid did, when his enemies hated him, but I gave my selfe to prayer, Psal. 109.5.

CHAP. XLVII.

1. The Method and Argument.

FIrst in this chapter is set forth the manner of entertainment of Iacob and his sonnes at Pharaohs hands and Iosephs. First, concerning Iacobs sonnes, Ioseph presen|teth five of them before the king: vers. 2. 2. Then they make their request, vers. 3, 4. 3. Pharaoh granteth it, vers. 5.2. Concerning Iacob, he first saluteth Phara/oh, 2. Communeth with Pharaoh about his age, vers. 9.3. taketh his leave. 4. Io/seph placeth his father and brethren in the land of Rameses, and nourisheth them. vers. 11.12.

Secondly, there is declared the extremity of famine and dearth in Egypt: 1. They gave all their money for corne, vers. 13, 14. 2. They sell all their cattell and goods for food, vers. 16, 17, 18. 3. They sell themselves and their grounds for bread, vers. 19, 20. to v. 27. In this last sale these particulars are expressed. 1. Ioseph taketh possession of their grounds, by removing of the people from one place of the land to another, vers. 21. 2. The immunity and priviledge of the princes or priests. 3. The covenant that Ioseph maketh for the fift part of the increase, and the peoples consent, vers. 23. to 26. 3. The law established, vers. 26.

Thirdly, concerning Iacob, there is set forth. 1. The time of his dwelling in Egypt, and his age, vers. 27, 28. 2. The promise and oath which Ioseph maketh to Iacob to burie him with his fathers in Canaan, and Iacobs thankfulnessse to God. vers. 30.31.

2. The divers readings.

* v. 2, he tooke the last of his brethren. H. G. P. from his brethren. S. of the company of his brethren.
 •. part of his brethren. T. G. michtsah, a part or end.

* v. 10. Iacob blessed the king. H. blessed Pharaoh. c•t.

v. 12. giving food to every one. H. wheate by the body. S. providing bread according to every ones family. C. nourished them with bread even to the young children. * G. with bread to the mouth of the little ones. •. that is, as put into their mouth. T. as the father of the house, he provided bread for all, from the great to the small.

* v. 13. there was no bread in all the world. H. in all the land. <◇> .

v. 13. the land of Egypt and Canaan oppressed with famine. H. famished. B. G. failed or fainted because of the famine. * C. S. were mad, or at their wits end, because of the famine. T. labah, to be mad, to faile, that is, they did murmure, or were mutinous because of the famine.

* v. 18. that we be not destroyed of my Lord. S. we will not hide from my Lord. cat.

v. 21. and he made the people servants to Pharaoh. S. H. he removed the people from citie to citie, or into ••|taine cities. caet.

* v. 2•. the land of the officers or governours bought he not. T. the land of the priests. cat. he cohen, signifieth both a prince and priest.

* v. 22. the priests had a portion out of the common barns. H. of Pharaoh. cat.

v. 27. and the Israelites dwelt in Egypt. T. and Israel dwelt. cat.

v. 28: and he lived· H. and Iacob lived. caet.

v. 31. he worshipped upon the top of his rod. S. he worshipped toward the beds head. B. G. prayed toward the beds head. C. Bowed himselfe upon the pillow. T. caet. mittah with cametz, signifieth a bed, mitteh, with three pricks, a rod; the Apostle followeth the reading of the Septuagint, Heb. 11. which translation was then of great authority in the Church: the sense being not much differing.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. Which five of his brethren Ioseph preferred to Pharaoh.

Vers. 2. Ioseph tooke part of his brethren. 1. Because the word here used chetzah, signifieth an end or extreame part: some thinke that Ioseph tooke five of the uppermost or chiefest of his brethren, in person and wisdom, sic Lyran. Tostat. so is the word used, Iud. 18.2. where the children of Dan sent out five of their strongest men. 2. Some thinke he tooke five of the lowest, or meanest, that Pharaoh should conceive no liking to make them courtiers; sic Oleaster: but the word here signifieth not an end or extremitie, but only a part, as shall be shewed. 3. Some say that beside Iudah, Ioseph tooke one of every of Iacobs wives sonnes that he should not be partiall, Cajetan. but that is uncertaine. 4. Some Hel|brewes goe yet further, and shew which five they were, namely Ruben, Simeon, Levi, Isachar, Benjamin, five of the weaker sort: and therefore their names are not doubled or repeated in Moses blessing, Deut. 33. but this is too curious, 5. Some would have Ioseph to take of both ends, the eldest and the youngest, Calvin. 6. But the meaning is, that Ioseph tooke five indifferently out of the company (as the Septu|agint reade) such as were dearest unto him, of which company Benjamin might be one, Mercer. and the word here used, michzah, is not compounded of the preposition, and the word chetzah, as Pagni• rea|deth, de extremitate, out of the end, or extremitie: but it is one whole word, which signifieth a part or portion, as it is used, Dan. 1.2. The Lord gave Iehoiakim into his hand, with part of the vessels of the house of God: so that men is not here a preposition, but a part of the word, Vatab.

QUEST. II. The chronologie explained by the yeares of Iacobs life.

Vers. 9. The whole time of my pilgrimage is 130. yeares: from this age of Iacob here mentioned, divers points concerning the Chronologie may be concluded. 1. Iosephs being now 39. yeare old, when Iacob was 130. it followeth that Ioseph was borne in the 91. yeare of Iacobs age. 2. Then Ioseph being borne 14. yeares after Iacob came into Mesopotamia, Iacob must be of the age of seventy se|ven when he came into Mesopotamia. 3. Further, Ioseph borne in the fourteene yeare of Iacobs service with Laban, was now thirty nine yeare old, then Ruben borne 7. yeares before, must be forty six yeares old, Simeon forty nine, Levi forty foure, Iudah forty three, or there about. 4. Hence it may be gathe|red, that from the first promise made to Abraham, in the 75. yeare of his age, to the comming of Iacob to Egypt, are two hundred and fifteene yeares, Isaack was borne twenty five yeare after that, in the hun|dred yeare of Abraham, who in the sixty yeare had Iacob borne, and Iacob was now an hundred and thirty: all make two hundred and fifteene. 5. Seeing the Apostle maketh account of 430. yeares from the promise made to Abraham, to the going out of Israel from Egypt, Galath 3. it remaineth, that the space of the Israelites dwelling in Egypt, was two hundred and fifteene yeares more. 6. And seeing Abraham was borne in the 352. yeare after the flood, put thereunto an hundred yeare of Abraham, and sixty of Isaack, and Iacob shall be borne in the 512. yeare after the flood, not in the 452. yeare, as Pe|rrierius collecteth,* who buildeth upon a false ground, making Abrahams birth to fall out in the seventy yeare of Terah, whereas it was in the 130. yeare, sixty yeares after, as hath beene shewed before upon that place.

QUEST. III. Why Iacob counteth himselfe a pilgrim.

Vers. 9. The whole time of my pilgrimage. 1. Iacob counteth himselfe a pilgrim or stranger in two re|spects. 1. In respect of his dwelling in the world, where he had no certaine habitation: for he removed from his fathers house to Mesopotamia, where he sojourned with Laban twenty yeares: then he came to Succoth, after that to Sichem, Gen. 33. thence to Bethel, and so to Ephtatah, and then to Hel|bron, where his father dwelt, Gen. 35. from whence he went downe to Egypt, Perer. 2. Iacob and the rest of the Patriarkes counted themselves pilgrims and strangers in the world, in respect of their celestiall inheritance in heaven, Heb. 11.13. Calvin.

QUEST. IV. Of the divers troubles which Iacob had endured in his life.

Vers. 9. FEw and evill, &c. 1. Iacob, though he had not attained to the yeares of his fathers, and yet seemed very old, and therefore was asked of Pharaoh of his age, giveth this as a reason; because he had gone through many troubles: in respect whereof he calleth his daies evill, that is, full of misery and sorrow, Mercer. 2. The Hebrewes reckon seven calamities that befell Iacob: Pererius•en: but they were more: 1. His forsaking of his fathers house for feare of Esau. 2. His hard service in La/bans house. 3. The suborning of Leah for Rachel. 4. The feare of Esau after his returne. 5. The defloulring of Dinah. 6. The death of Rachel. 7. The incest of Ruben. 8. The fornication of Iu•ah with Tha/mar. 9. The slaughter of the Sichemites by Simeon and Levi. 10. The losse of Ioseph. 11. The detaining of Simeon in prison in Egypt. 12. The taking away of Benjamin. 3. Whereas Iacob saith,* he had not attained to the yeares of his fathers, Iacob considering the manifold troubles which he had gone through, and feeling his present weaknesse and decay of nature, did easily conjecture, that he was not like to reach to his father, or grandfathers age, Mercer. Neither indeed did he: he living but an hundred forty seven yeares, wanted twenty eight of Abrahams age, which was an hundred seventy five, and 33. yeares of Isaacks age, which was 180.

QUEST. V. Of the land of Rameses, what country it was.

Vers. 11. IN the land of Rameses, as Pharaoh had commanded, &c. 1. This land of Rameses was nei|ther all one with Goshen, as Augustine seemeth to thinke, quaest. 157. Genes. 2. Neither was it a divers citie from that which was builded by the Israelites, Exod. 1.11. although there be a little diffe|rence in the name, this is Rameses, with schevah under am: that Rameses with patach, as thinketh A/ben Ezra, and Iunius, who would have this to be Heliopolis, the other Pelusum. 3. Neither yet is it the same city which afterward the Israelites built, and that it is here named by way of anticipa|tion, as Tostat. Perer. Genevens. 4. But this land of Rameses was a region rather than a citie situate in Goshen the most fruitfull part thereof, where the citie Rameses was afterward built, bearing the name of the country, sic Cajetan. Mercer. for it is called, not the citie, but the land of Rameses. 5. Some take it to be Arsenois, some Heliopolis, the Septuagint call it the citie of the Nobles: but I take it rather to be the name of the whole territory and country. 6. The Israelites dwelt here apart and divided from the rest of Egypt, but yet there were some Egyptians inhabiting among them, of whom they borrowed jewels of gold and silver at their departure from Rameses, Exod. 12.35, 37. Perer.

QUEST. VI. How Ioseph gave bread to the mouth of the children.

Vers. 12. TO the mouth of the little ones. 1. Some refer this to the number of the families, that Ioseph provided for every one of them, from the elder sort to the infants; sic Chald. Hierom. B.G. Calvin. but that was said before, he nourished all his fathers houshold. 2. Some understand it of the great plenty, that even the children, which use to play the wantons and cast away their bread, had enough: sic quidam Hebraeus. 3. Some apply it to the manner, that Ioseph did provide for them all, as for young chil|dren, that is, without their labour or taking of care: which I take to be the right meaning, Iun. Mercer.

QUEST. VII. When their money began to faile in Egypt, and how.

Vers. 18. THEy came unto him the second yeare, &c. since our money is spent, &c. 1. This was neither the second yeare from the beginning of the famine, as the Hebrews imagine, that after Ia/cobs comming into Egypt; at his prayer Nilus came to his ordinary course, and God for his sake remitted the five yeares of famine, at that time, which came afterward: for this is contrary to the story, Gen. 45.6. where Ioseph saith, there were five yeares of famine yet behind: neither was this in the third yeare: but their money was spent in the fift yeare, they had corne the sixt yeare for their cattell, and in the seventh yeare they had given them seed to sow their grounds, because the 7. yeares of famine were expired, during the which they could not sow: sic Mercer. Iun. Luther. Calvin. 2. Isaack Carus maketh this a doubtfull speech, thus reading, if our money be spent, supposing that they gave all their money in the beginning to Ioseph, and he gave them corne for it, as long as their money did last, according to his discretion: but this is not like, for the text is, v. 15. when money failed in the land of Egypt: they had no more money to bring. 3. Likewise it is uncertaine, as some doe note, that corne continued all at one price all the yeares of famine: it is like that Ioseph did set reasonable prices, but whether at the same continuall rate, it cannot be gathered, Mercer.

QUEST. VIII. Whether Ioseph dealt hardly or unjustly in taking the Egyptians money, cattell, and land, for corne.

Vers. 20. SO Ioseph bought all the land of Egypt for Pharaoh. It may seeme very hard, that Ioseph, when he had received all the Egyptians money for corne, doth take also their cattell, and last of all their land: wherefore Iosephs fact may be thus justified. 1. The corne, which was layd up in Pharaohs barn, was proper to the King: for in the seven plentifull yeares Pharaoh had taken up the fift part for his money of the people, and now he selleth it againe, Muscul. therefore here was nothing but just.

Page 376

2. Beside the equitie, we must consider Iosephs fidelity, it became him to deale faithfully with Pharaohs goods, being put in trust withall: and it is like that he did nothing without the privity and direction of the King, Calvin. 3. Iosephs charity appeared, who when as the people had sold themselves to be Pharaohs servants, and their lands; Ioseph remitteth their service, and taketh only their lands, Perer. 4. His liberality also is seene in this, that whereas he might have taken foure parts for Pharaoh, and left the fift for them: he only reserveth the fift part for Pharaoh: whereas in fruitfull grounds, such as the land of Egypt was, husbandmen doe willingly occupie land, for the halfe of the increase, Mercer. Perer. 5. Iosephs justice appeareth, in that he doth not force them to any thing, but al is done by the peoples franke offer, and willing consent, Calvin. 6. Iosephs prudence and policie may be considered, who tooke this course both for the maintenance of the crowne and common-wealth, the King and his people: he sold them corne, and gave it not, no gratis accipiendo cultum terrarum relinquerent, quoniam qui alieno utitur, suum negligit; lest if they had received it freely, they might have lived idly, and neglected tillage: for hee that may live of anothers, will be carelesse of his owne, Ambros. officior. 2.16. who further saith, that Ioseph did this, ut constitueret tributum, quo suae tutius habere possent; to raise a tribute, that every man for ever after might more safely hold his owne. 7. The people were so far from complaining of Iosephs injustice or hard dealing, that they thankfully acknowledge that he had saved their lives, vers. 25.8. God by this meanes doth punish the Egyptians riotous and licentious life in the yeares of plenty, by their extreme penurie and scarcity now, Mercer.

QUEST. IX. Wherefore Ioseph removed the inhabitants of Egypt to new dwellings.

Vers. 21. HE moved the people to the cities, from one side of Egypt, &c. 1. They were not removed from the principall cities to smaller townes, as some expound, but the contrary rather, they were removed from their fields and grounds to the cities. 2. They were not carried from one side of Egypt to the other, that had been too great a toyle: but throughout Egypt, this course was taken, that the owners and former possessours should change their grounds. 3. Which was done to this end, to acknowledge Pharaoh to bee Lord of their grounds and that it should not grieve them to pay this new tribute and imposition out of those possessions assigned them, which might have seemed grievous in their old inheritance, Iun. Mercer.

QUEST. X. Of the privilege and immunitie of the Priests in Egypt.

Vers. 22. FOr the Priests had an ordinarie. 1. All the interpreters doe so reade, but Iunius, who thinketh that those were chiefe officers rather to the King, that had this immunitie, than the Priests: because Iosephs family was nourished at the Kings charge, and his fathers houshold also as a part of his family, which otherwise the Egyptians would have repined at. Cont. 1. Iacobs family was nourished by the Kings extraordinary favour, as likewise his dwelling was given him in the best of the land, and therefore there was no repining at it. 2. The officers also might be nourished at the Kings charge, but they are not spoken of because they belonged to Pharaohs houshold, whereof Moses speaketh not here, but of the other subjects. 3. The consent of interpreters, the Chaldee and Septuagint, which here translate Priests, with Calvin, Muscul. Mercerus, Tostatus, Pererius, and others, the testimony of forreine writers, Hero /dot. in Euterpe. Diodorus lib. 2. that Priests had their ordinary from the King: the great honour and dig|nity of the Priests in Egypt, who were honoured for their continent and contemplative life, Hierom. ex Cheremon. lib. 1. advers. Iovinian. were held the Masters and chiefe professors of the Mathematickes and other liberall sciences, Arist. princip. Metaphys. were conversant and of counsell with the Kings of Egypt, Strab. lib. 17. all these reasons doe shew, that it is most probable, that this favour was rather shewed to the order of Priests, than of any other. 2. Neither was this ordinary allowed to the Priests only in this time of famine, as Mercer thinketh: but it was a perpetuall custome for the Priests to be so main|tained; singulis eorum continuo cibi sacripraesto sunt, &c. meat is prepared daily for every one of them, He /dot. in Euterpe.

QUEST. XI. Whether Ioseph offended in giving allowance of food to the Priests of Egypt.

NOW in that Ioseph as Pharaohs chiefe officer alloweth this ordinary to the idolatrous priests: 1. Hee is not therein to be reprehended for his connivence, because he did no more resist their superstition, Calvin. for it is not unlike, but that he did what he could, and was grieved that he could not helpe it, as he desired. 2. But seeing the law and custome, and princes pleasure was so, that they should be main|tained, and he was but the kings officer and minister, to see every one served according to their al|lowance: Ioseph could not have gainsayed without very great tumult and sedition, seeing those superstitious priests were greatly honoured with the king and people, Mercer.

QUEST. XII. Why Iacob desireth to be buried in Canaan.

Vers. 30. BVrie me in their buriall. Iacob desireth to be buried with his fathers in the land of Canaan. 1. Not thereby shewing his hope of remission of sinnes in Christ: as Augustine interpreteth, sepultura mortuorum, remissionem significat peccatorum: the buriall of the dead signifieth the remission of sins, quaest. 161. in Genes. for although Iacob had this hope of remission of sinnes, yet it is not the proper and literall meaning of these words. 2. Neither yet was it the love of his country that moved him, wherein men desire to live and die, Oleas. there was a greater matter that moved Iacob. 3. Neither yet as Lyranus, because he hoped to be one of those which should rise out of his grave at the resurrection of Christ: for this is too curious: and it is not like, that any buried so long before, or so far off, as this double cave was thought to be 30. miles from Ierusalem, did rise out of their graves, but some about Ierusalem, and such as had beene lately dead, and were knowne in the citie: for the text saith, they went into the holy city and appeared to many, Matth. 27.53. and it is like, that they returned to their graves againe. 4. Therefore Iacob desireth to be buried with his fathers, partly to testifie his faith, that he doubted not •ut that his soule should presently be joyned to his fathers, Calvin. and his body rise againe in the generall resurrection, Mercer: partly to admonish his children, not to be too much addicted to the pleasures of Egypt, but to wait for their returne into the land of Canaan, as Ioseph also dying, declared his hope, Gen. 50.25. Muscul.

QUEST. XIII. Why Iacob causeth Ioseph to sweare.

Vers. 31. Then he said, sweare unto me. Iacob requireth an oath of Ioseph, not because he did mistrust his obedience: but 1. that Iacob might be better satisfied and confirmed in the thing which he desired. 2. Lest that Ioseph might have beene otherwise perswaded, or overruled by Pharaoh, to have his father buried in Egypt: and therefore Ioseph, when he obtained leave of Pharaoh to burie his father, hee urgeth the oath which he made to his father, Gen. 50.6. Mercer. Rupert. 3. Hee rather bindeth Ioseph to performe this, than any of his other sonnes, because of his authority and favour with Pharaoh.

QUEST. XIV. How and whom Iacob worshipped toward the beds head.

Vers. 31. HE worshipped toward the beds head, 1. Some doe read, he worshipped toward the top of his rod, for mittah signifieth a bed▪ mitteh a rod: so the Septuagint and they which follow this reading. 1. Some interpret that he worshipped toward Iosephs rod or scepter, as giving reverence to him, Chrysost. 2. Some that he leaned upon his owne staffe doing reverence to Ioseph, Theiodoret. 3. Some that he worshipped Iosephs scepter, as a figure of the kingdome of Christ, Procop. But all these are deceived by the translation of the Septuagint who themselves, in the 48. chap. vers. 2. doe translate, not rod but bed, as Hierome well noteth, tradit. in Genes. 2. Some doe read, the beds head: and they that follow this reading. 1. Some say, that he worshipped that way because it was east ward toward Ierusalem, Lyran. as though Iacob had beene so superstitious as to set his bed east and west. 2. Some because God is present at the beds head: so the superstitious Hebrews. 3. But he did nothing else but reare himselfe upon his pillow at his beds head, leaning also upon his staffe, and so gave thanks to God: and that he bowed upon his staffe, may be supplied out of the Apostle to the Hebrews, Heb. 11.21. Iun. Perer.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Corne and food more worth than money.

Vers. 14. AND Ioseph gathered all the money: the Egyptians that were horders up of gold and silver, yet were contented to exchange their money for corne: we see then, that money, if it be rightly esteemed of, is a baser thing, than that which belongeth either to the belly or backe, Muscul. which consideration should teach men not to covet money: but if they have foode for the belly, and rayment to put on, to be therewith content, as the Apostle saith, 1 Timoth. 6.8.

2. Doct. They which preach the Gospell, must live of the Gospell.

Vers. 22. ONLY the land of the Priests bought he not, for the Priests had an ordinary of Pharaoh; the law of nature then teacheth, that they which attend the service of God, and the instruction of the people, should have their publike maintenance: seeing Pharaoh an heathen prince, was so liberall toward his idolatrous Priests: much more should Christian Princes take care to provide for the Ministers of the Gospell: for as the Apostle saith, As they, which did wait at the altar, were pertakers with the altar, so hath the Lord ordained, that they which preach the Gospell, should live of the Gospell, 1 Cor. 9.13, 14. Calvin. Luther.

3. Doct. They are fit to teach others, that first can teach themselves.

Vers. 23. I Have bought your land for Pharaoh, loe here is seed for you, &c. Gregorie hereupon collecteth, that as the Egyptians received no seed, till first they had yeelded their land, and themselves to be servants to Pharaoh: so they are fit to have the seed of Gods word committed unto them, which first have reformed their owne life, and consecrated themselves to the service of God: Restat, ut lo/quando quisque d•ceat vitam alies, quam ipse moribus servat; It remaineth, that he teach others to live well, who hath reformed his owne, lib. 6. Moral. So the Apostle reproveth the Iewes, thou which teachest ano/ther, teachest thou not thy selfe? Rom. 2.21.

4. Doct. Though sumptuous funerals are not to be desired: yet the bodies of Saints must be reverently buried.

Vers. 30. WHen I shall sleepe with my fathers, thou shalt carry me out of Egypt, &c. Although pomlpous funerals, and sumptuous burials doe not profit the dead: which are as Augustine saith rather viventium solatia, than subsidia mortuorum; comforts for the living, than helps for the dead: which Augustine sheweth by the example of the rich man and Lazarus, that as the one was not helped by his precious and solemne exequies, so neither was the other hindred by his vile and base sepulture: yea the Heathen man could say, e•lo tegitur qui non habet urnam, he hath heaven for a cover that wanteth a grave:* neither did Iacob desire to be buried in Canaan, either for the holinesse of the place, or that he had a delight in pompous solemnities, but to testifie his faith, as before is shewed, quaest. 12. yet by this charge give•to Ioseph, we doe learne, that the bodies of the Saints ought in comely and reverent sort to be brought to the grave: as the brethren, that feared God, carried Steven to be buried with great lamen|tion, Act. 8.2.

5. Doct. Of the lawfulness of an oath.

Vers. 31. AND he sware unto him: It was lawfull for Iacob in some serious and weighty matter to en|quire an oath: and for Ioseph to performe it: for men are mutable and therefore may be bound with an oath: and though Ioseph might otherwise have fulfilled his fathers will, yet it was not al|misse, that he should be more straitly bound: we see then the lawfull use of an oath, against the errour of the Anabaptists, which allow not Christians to take an oath: for the Apostle saith, An oath for confir|imation among men, is an end of strife, Heb. 6.16.

Page 378

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against the corrupt Latine translation of this place.

Vers. 31. ISrael worshipped toward the beds head: not as the vulgar Latine readeth, he adored the top of his rod, Heb. 11.21.* which translation differeth both from the Latine in this place, which thus in|terpreteth, he worshipped turning toward the beds head: and from the Septuagint, which readeth, he wor/shipped or bowed himselfe, ùpi to ácron, upon the top of his rod or staffe: the Latine text corruptly leaveth out the preposition ùpi upon; but it differeth most of all from the Hebrew: which standeth thus, he wor/shipped toward the beds head: from which reading the Septuagint doe varie in these two points: first in adding the word, àute, his, which is not in the Hebrew: secondly, in mistaking the word, for mittah, a bed, reading, mitteh, a rod: both which words are derived of natah, which signifieth to extend, or stretch forth: because a man doth stretch himselfe upon his bed, and on his staffe.

Wherefore we see what a simple ground the Rhemists have, to prove by this corrupt Latine text, that creatures may be adored: annot. Hebr. 10.21. there being no such thing in the Hebrew, Greeke, or Latine text in this place, that Iacob adored his rod. Further, the like ground had Hadrianus the Pope, as hee is cited in that erroneous Councell, the second Nicene, who by this text would prove the adora|tion of Images, with relation to their protipa, that is, the presidents, patterns, or patrons of those Images, because say they, the adoration which Iacob gave to this rod, he intended it to Ioseph, whose rod and scepter it was: for Iacob worshipped not either his owne staffe or Iosephs scepter; but toward the beds head, worshipped God.

2. Confut. That the Latine text is not authentically.

FURTHER, whereas the Apostle seemeth to follow the translation of the Septuagint, rather than the Hebrew text: the Rhemists doe infer thereupon, that after the same manner the vulgar Latine text may be received as authentically, * though it doe varie from the Hebrew, ibid.

Contra. 1. The Apostles indeed doe sometime follow the Septuagint, because it was a common translation, and of great authority: but they therein neither approve their errors, nor yet make it of equall authority to the originall: citing only such testimonies, wherein the Greeke translation keepeth the sense, though not the words: as in this place, whether we say Iacob leaning upon his staffe, or turning to the beds head, worshipped: the principall sense is kept, that Iacob worshipped God, especially seeing the same word, with very little alteration in the points, signifieth both a bed, and a rod, or staffe. 2. Hieromes observation then is good, though Pererius without cause misliketh it, Diligentius observandum est, &c. It is to be diligently observed, that where the Apostles and Evangelists doe cite testimonies out of the old testament, they follow not the words, but the sense: and where the Septuagint differ from the Hebrew, they expresse the Hebrew sense: for the Apostle in this place keepeth the Hebrew sense, that Iacob worshipped God, leaning upon his bed and staffe: for it is true, that Iacob did both, that he reared himselfe upon his staffe towards the beds head. 3. The Apostle then rather expoundeth, than alleageth that text: for he nameth Iacob, whereas Moses saith Israel: he speaketh of Iacobs worshipping, when he had blessed his children, but here Iacob worshippeth, before he blessed them. 4. This then is no good argument; the Apostles follow the Septuagint, where they keepe the Hebrew sense, though not the words, Ergo the Latine text must be received, where it differeth both in sense and words from the originall.

6. Places of morall use.

1 Mor. That none should live idly without some honest trade or vocation.

Vers. 3. What is your trade, or what is your worke? Pharaoh as a prudent Prince, examineth Iosephs brethren of their manner of living and occupation: by the which question it appeareth, that he condemned all idle persons, that lived without any trade: and it is the part of good Magistrates, straitly to fitt and examine all such as spend their time unthriftilly, not in any profitable labour: according to the Apostles doctrine, that they which doe not worke, should not eat, 2 Thes. 3.10. Muscul.

2. Mor. A poore life in the Church of God, is to be preferred before the pleasures of the world.

Vers. 3. Thy servants are shepherds. Ioseph taught his brethren thus to say, that they might dwell apart by themselves, and not be employed in Pharaohs court, or in the affaires of the kingdome: they did choose rather to live as poore shepherds, in the service of God, than to be in the kings Palace, as strangers from the Church and household of faith: though Ioseph had a speciall grace given him of God, not to be corrupted with that place of honour, yet he saw it not to bee meet nor convenient for his brethren, Calvin; so the Prophet David saith, A day in thy courts is better than a thousand else/where, Psal. 84.10. Moses likewise did choose rather to suffer adversity with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sinne for a season, Heb. 11.25.

3. Morall. Men called to honour should not despise their parents.

Vers. 7. Ioseph also brought Iacob, and set him before Pharaoh. Ioseph though of honourable place in Egypt, yet was not ashamed of his poore aged father, but presented him to the King: to this Ioseph many are unlike in these dayes, that thinke it a disgrace unto them to acknowledge their poore parents, Muscul. So did not David, who brought his father and mother to the King of Moab to keepe them and provide for them, 1 Sam. 22.4. as Ioseph here setteth his father before Pharaoh.

4. Morall. Our life here is but a pilgrimage.

Vers. 9. The dayes of the yeares of my pilgrimage. Thus not only Iacob, but the rest of the fathers counted themselves but as strangers and pilgrims in the earth, and thereby declared that they sought a Countrey, Heb. 12.13, 14. So the Apostle againe saith, We have not here a continuing Citie, but seeke for one that is to come, Heb. 13.14. and therefore we should not set our affections upon earthly things, but presse forward in our desire toward our heavenly Countrey.

5. Morall. Good officers should not seeke to enrich themselves.

Vers. 14. Ioseph laid up the money in Pharaohs house. Ioseph was a faithfull officer to Pharaoh, he did not seeke to enrich himselfe by his office, but sought the Kings profit, and increased his treasure, Mercer. Such an one was Iosua, who in the division of the land of Canaan to the tribes, did not share any thing to himselfe, but the children of Israel gave him an inheritance among them, when they had made an end of dividing the land, Ios. 19.49. Such should officers and Judges be toward the King and people, to deale faithfully with the one, and justly with the other: not to turne all to their owne profit and gaine, as many doe now adayes.

CHAP. XLVIII.

1. The Method and Argument of the Chapter.

First, in this Chapter is declared how Ioseph came to visit Iacob when he was sicke.

Secondly, Iacobs testament is set downe, first, concerning Iosephs sonnes, then his gift and legacie toward Ioseph himselfe, vers. 22. with a generall prophecie of the returne of all his children, vers. 21.

Concerning Iosephs sons: 1. The ground and occasion of Iacobs blessing of them is expressed, which is first the promise of God, vers. 4. then the right & property that Iacob had in them, vers. 5. Thirdly, because Rachel was taken away, leaving not much issue behinde her, vers. 7. and Ioseph was the eldest of her, who was his principall wife. 2. Iacobs blessing followeth: first, the preparation to the blessing: where we have set forth, 1. Iacobs kissing and embracing of Manasses and Ephraim, vers. 9, 10. 2. Iosephs reverence to his father, vers. 12. 3. The presenting of his two sonnes, and the order of disposing them, Manasses to Iacobs right hand, and Ephraim to his left, vers. 13.

Secondly, in the blessing: 1 There is the ceremonie, the laying on of Iacobshands contrary to Iosephs expectation, the right hand upon the youngest, the left upon the eldest, vers. 14. 2. The pronouncing of the blessing: which sheweth the author or efficient cause, God who had fed him and delivered him, vers. 15, 16. and the effects, the naming of them among the tribes, and their great increase and multiplying, vers. 16. 3. The ratification of the blessing: where we have first Iosephs exception, vers. 17, 18. then Iacobs answer, containing a satisfaction to Ioseph, vers. 8, 9. a confirmation of the blessing, vers. 20.

2. The divers readings.

v. 1. It was told to Iacob. H.S.C. one told Iacob. caet.*

v. 7. Concerning the divers reading of this verse see before chap. 35. vers. 16. and quest. 13. upon that Chapter.

v. 7. I buried her in the way of the horse-race. S. neare the way to Ephrata. caet.*

v. 11. I am not deprived of thy face. H.S. I had not thought to have seene thy face. caet.

v. 14. He layed his left hand upon the head of Manasses, which was the elder, changing his hands. H.S. hee taught his hands, although Manasses was the elder. C. guiding or directing his hands of purpose, for Ma|nasseh was the elder. B. G. he knew feeling with his hands, that Manasses was the elder. T. caused his hands to understand that Manasseh was the elder. P. sacal, to understand.

v. 15. God whom my fathers pleased in his sight. S. served in his sight. C. walked in his sight. cat. halach,* to walke.

v. 16. That they may grow into a multitude. S.H. grow as fish into a multitude. cat.*

v. 20. In thee Israel shall be blessed. H.S.C. shall blesse. caet.

v. 21. The word of God shall be your helpe. C. God shall be with you. caet.

v. 22. I give thee Sechem, the chiefe part above thy brethren. S. I have given thee one portion of land,* &c. B. I give thee one principall part or portion above, &c. C.G.T. Sechem, signifieth a part, portion, or elbow of ground, and it is also the proper name of a place.

Which I tooke out of the hand of the Amorites, by my prayer and deprecation. C. by my sword and my bow. caet.*

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. Of the adopting of Manasseh and Ephraim into the degree of Iacobs sonnes.

Vers. 5. Manasseh, and Ephraim shall be mine, as Ruben and Simeon are mine. 1. Iacob upon Gods promise, that he should increase into many people by the spirit of prophecie, adopteth Ma|nasseh and Ephraim into the number of his sonnes, that seeing Rachel was taken away, before he had many children by her, he should by these be increased. 2. He adopteth them in the place of Ruben and Simeon, the two elder brethren, and so the birth-right is conveyed from Ruben to Iosephs sonnes, because he had defiled his fathers bed, 1 Chron. 5.1. 3. Here we have the practice of that law afterward establi|shed, Deut. 22.17. of allotting a double part to the eldest, Iun. for Ioseph had a double part, in that two tribes came of him, whereas the rest of his brethren had but each one his tribe: Manasseh and Ephraim had not each of them his double part to the rest, as some Hebrewes thinke: but they two being the fa|thers of the two tribes, doe make their fathers part double to the rest, Mercer.

QUEST. II. Whether Ioseph had any other sonnes beside Manasseh and Ephraim.

Vers. 6. The linage, which thou hast gotten after them, &c. 1. This is to be understood, < in non-Latin alphabet > potentially, which thou maiest get afterward: for the Scripture maketh no mention of any sonnes, beside these two, that Ioseph had at this present, Iun. Mercer. as also it might be uncertaine, whether Iosephs wife, were at this time with childe, Mercer. 2. The other sonnes should be more properly Iosephs, yet so as that they should make no tribe of themselves, but be accounted with Manasseh and Ephraim, Iun. 3. They are deceived, which thinke that Machir and Galaad of Manasseh, and others of Ephraim, were those other sonnes of Ioseph, for they are his nephewes, and Manasseh and Ephraim were their fathers, not their brethren: also some thinke, that if Ioseph had begotten any other sonnes, they should have had no inheritance in Canaan: but this is not like, seeing they came of Iacob, whose whole seed was chosen: likewise whether Ioseph had afterward any other sonnes, it is uncertaine: it is like he had not, because no mention is made of them in Scripture: neither doth it much skill, seeing they were to be annexed and incorporate into these two tribes of their brethren, Mercer.

QUEST. III. Why Iacob maketh mention of the death and buriall of Rachel.

Vers. 7. I Buried in the way to Ephrath. 1. Iacob maketh mention of the death and buriall of Rachel. 1. Not to answer a secret objection, why he buried not Rachel in the double cave with his fathers, as he himselfe desired to be buried, and thereupon tooke an oath of Ioseph: because she died suddenly in the way, and he had no time to carry her thither, being in his journey: Iacob had no need to make any such excuse to Ioseph, ex Mercer. 2. But these reasons may be yeelded, why Iacob bringeth in mention hereof. 1. To call to Iosephs remembrance, that Rachel forsooke her fathers house, and sojournd with Iacob in Canaan: that Ioseph might hereby be stirred up to be willing much more to leave Egypt which was not his country, Calvin. 2. As also that hee might have a greater desire to the place of his mothers sepulture. 3. Further, in that Iacob buried her in the way, being so neare to the city, because he would not bury her among Idolaters: by the way he admonisheth Ioseph to detest the Idolatry of Egypt. 4. But the cheifest reasons of the mentioning of this matter are; one, that seeing Rachel died, leaving no great issue behinde her, Iacob hopeth that Gods promise for the multiplying of his seed should be fulfilled in these two, Mercer. The other, that seeing Ioseph was the eldest by his principall wife, Iacob might shew how justly the birth-right was translated from Ruben to Ioseph and his sonnes, Iun.

QUEST. IV. Why Iacob knew not Ephraim and Manasseh at the first, and why Ioseph removeth them.

Vers. 12. And Ioseph tooke them away from his knees. 1. Whereas Iacob before vers. 8. asked who they were, namely Manasseh and Ephraim; it was not for that, Iacob foreseeing, that wicked Ieroboam should come of Ephraim, and Iehu of Manasseh, did therefore at the first take no knowledge of them, but deferred his blessing, as some Hebrewes imagine; but the cause is shewed, vers. 10. because Iacobs eies were dim, and he could not well see. 2. Iacob caused them to be brought neere him that he might imbrace them: they were not set upon the bed, for they were some 22. or 23. yeares old, being borne in the yeares of plenty, some 4. or 5. yeares before Iacob came downe into Egypt, who had beene there now 17. yeares. 3. Ioseph tooke them not from his owne knees, but from his fathers, as the Latine text readeth, though in the originall it be from his knees, not his fathers knees: that he might place them in order, to receive their fathers blessing, Mercer. for Ioseph might perceive, either by the naming of Ephraim before Manasseh. or by Iacobs imbracing them, that he more inclined to Ephraim before Manasseh: and therefore with Iacobs leave removeth a little, and presenteth them againe according to their age, Iun.

QUEST. V. Of the translating of the birth-right from Manasseh to Ephraim what it signifieth.

Vers. 14. Israel stretched out his right hand, and laid it upon Ephraims head. 1. Iacob feeling with his hands, which was the elder and bigger (for the words are he caused his hands to understand,) of purpose laid his right hand upon Ephraim, in signe of preheminance, Iun. for although among the Persians the left hand was the more honourable place, as Xenophon reporteth of Cyrus, that those, whom he honoured most, he placed at his left hand, because it was most subject to danger: yet the phrase and use of Scripture is otherwise: as Salomon caused his mother to sit upon his right hand, 1 King. 2. And this is agreeable to nature, to give the preheminance to the right hand, which is quicker & nimbler, and readier for any worke, Perer. 2. Iacob here transferreth the birthright from Manasseh to Ephraim, as it was before conveyed from Esau to Iacob: as the priesthood was translated from Abiathar to Zadock; the regall dignitie from Saul to David; so here there is a translation of the birthright. 3. Which as it sheweth, that God bestoweth his gifts without respect of persons: so it might prefigure the calling of the Gentiles in stead of the Jewes, who were as the eldest brother, as the parable of the prodigall childe sheweth, Luke 15.

QUEST. VI. The Angell that protected Iacob, whether hee were Christ.

Vers. 26. THE Angell. 1. Although it seeme somewhat too curious out of this place to prove the Trinitie, because God is twice mentioned, and the Angell in the third place: 2. Yet I thinke rather with Calvin and Iunius, that the Angell was Christ, than with Mercerus, that it was an Angell, to whom Iacob ascribeth his deliverance, as to Gods minister: and that for these reasons: 1. Because it is not unusuall in scripture to call Christ an Angell, Malach. 1.1. 2. The Angell which conducted the Israelites, is called Iehovah, Exod. 14.19, 24. Saint Paul saith he was Christ, 1 Cor. 10.4, 9. 3. Because Christ was the Mediatour from the beginning of reconciliation, and of all those covenants made betweene God and man, Calvin. 4. In this place this Angell is joyned in equall power of blessing with God, and therefore hee cannot be any of the created Angels, Iun. 3. Though Christ appeared in the forme and shape of an Angell, yet hee tooke not upon him the nature of Angels, but of man: as the Angels appeared in the shape of men, yet hee tooke not their nature, Calvin.

QUEST. VII. The great increase of Ephraim and Manasseh.

Vers. 20. IN thee Israel shall blesse, &c. 1. Here Israel is taken not for the proper name of Iacob, but for the name of the whole nation that came of him: which hee saw by the spirit of prophecie should be given to his posteritie. 2. In thee, is not here taken casually, as the Lord said to Abraham, in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed: for Christ of Abraham was the cause and author of this blessing. But it is only a forme of blessing, which should be taken up in Israel: the Lord blesse thee as Ephraim and Manasseh: as the like is used, Ruth 4.11. The Lord make the wife that commeth into thy house like Rachel and Leah. 3. And indeed Ephraim and Manasseh increased abundantly in Egypt, even as the fish, as Iacob blessed them: for at the going forth of Israel out of Egypt, there were of Manasseh, 42700. of Ephraim, 32500. and al these perishing in the wilderness, there were at their entring into Canaan, of Ephraim, 42500. of Manasseh, 32200. Muscul. so that in the space of 215. yeares there sprang out of Ioseph 75200.

QUEST. VIII. What portion of ground it was that Iacob giveth to Ioseph.

Vers. 22. I Have given unto thee one portion above thy brethren. 1. This portion was Sechem, which neither is to be understood spiritually, that as Iacob gave Ioseph that place, where hee buried the Idols, Genes. 35.4. So Christ should possesse the Gentiles, that worshipped Idols, so Augustine. qu. 167. in Genes. 2. Neither was it the citie only of Sechem, which Iacob here giveth, as Chrysost. hom. 67. in Genes. For Iacobs sons kept their sheep in Sechem, Gen. 37.12. and so also possessed the grounds and fields belonging to the citie. 3. Neither did hee only give that plat of ground, which hee bought for 100. peeces of money, Gen. 33.19. as Hierom. tradition. Hebraic. For that seemed to be no great circuit bought for so little, Calvin. 4. Neither was this portion a severall lot to Ioseph, beside the portion that afterwards fell unto Ephraim and Manasseh in the division of the land: for they had it in their lot, Iosu. 24.32. Mercer. 5. Wherefore this portion given to Ioseph, was both the citie Sechem, and territorie adjoining, whereof mention is made, Iohn 4.5. For though Sechem bee not here a proper name, as the Septuag. read, because of the word, achad, one, that is joyned with it, (for there was but one Sechem) yet in this word, which signifieth a part or portion, there is a fit allusion also to the place it selfe, which Iacob giveth, Iun.

QUEST. IX. How Iacob is said to have gotten Sechem by his sword and bow.

Vers. 22. WHich I gat out of the hand of the Amorite by my sword and bow. 1. Neither is this under|stood of the violent taking of the citie by the sword of Simeon and Levi, which Iacob should count his act, because his familie assisted them, and for his cause God spared them, Euseb. Chrysostome: for Iacob afterward accursed them for this cruell act; and professed that hee no waies consented to it: into their secret let not my soule come, Gen. 49.6. 2. Nor yet by the sword and bow Iacobs innocen|cie and justice is understood, whereby hee was delivered, Hierom. or his Praiers, as the Chalde: for we need not flie unto metaphors and figures, where the historicall and literall sense may serve. 4. It is also a coact and forced interpretarion, that Iacob got it by his sword, that is, by his money, which he had by his labour gathered, Hierom. 5. And to applie it by the figure prolepsis to the time following, when the Israelites expelled the Canaanites by force, as Iunius doth, is not so sin: for this had beene no gift at all: and beside Iacob had alreadie possession of Sechem in Canaan, and so might dispose of it. 6. Neither because it fell to the lot and share of Ephraim and Manasses, is it said to be given to Ioseph: but Ioseph had a peculiar right in it, and therefore was buried there. 7. Some by the sword and bow ex|pound the favour and grace which Iacob found with Hemor; to buy the ground for so little money; but force and favour are two contrarie things. 8. Some thinke that Iacob used some ceremonie, by the casting of an arrow, and holding out a sword, as Ioas did in the presence of Elisha, 2 King. 9. so giving Ioseph possession of that countrie: But Iacob speaketh of the time past, which I have gotten, not any thing done then presently. 9. Some thinke that Iacob did indeed some such exploit by force, of armes against the Amorites, as Abraham did against the foure kings, Genes. 14. though it be not expressed, Cajetane, Andre. Masius. but where the scripture sufficeth, we need not devise unwritten stories. 10. Wherefore I expound this place by that, Gen. 35. vers. 5. where after that the Sichemites were destroyed, and Iacob at Gods appointment removed to Bethel, God sent a feare upon the cities round about, that they durst not encoun|ter with Iacob and his familie: who as is most like, stood upon their guard, and armed themselves, ready to have resisted their enemies, if they had assaulted them: And by this meanes, because Iacob held the possession of Sechem, as it were, by warlike policie, the Lord causing the Canaanites to feare his force and valour, he is said to have gotten it by his sword and bow, Lyran. following R. Salomon, Mercer. This I take to be the most proper exposition.

Page 382

QUEST. X. How Iacob is said to have gotten Sechem out of the hand of the Amorites.

Vers. 22. WHich I gat out of the hand of the Amorite: whereas Hemor▪ the Lord of Sichem was an Hivite, Genes. 34.2. the question is, how Iacob is said to have gotten Sechem out of the hand of the Amorite: for the satisfaction whereof▪ 1. Neither was Sechem the sonne of Hemor called an Amorite of his father, for Hemor beginneth with the Hebrew letter cheth: Amorite with, alep•. 2. Neither need we suppose, that Iacob after he had bought a peece of ground of Hemor; did afterward inlarge it by expelling the Amorites, as Masius, there being no such expressed in the story. 3. Neither yet with Pererius are we forced to say, that all the Canaanites were called Amorites. 4. But it is most like, that the Hivites and Amorites were mixed together, and that the denomination is taken from the Amorite, as the more valiant people, Mercer: this also confirmeth our former exposition, that Iacob, i. saying, which I gat by my sword and bow, out of the hand of the Amorite▪ meaneth not the surprising of the Sichemites by Simeon and Levi, for they were Hivites, not Amorites, but rather the keeping of that possession afterwards from the Amorites, which inhabited other cities adjoining, who would have invaded Iacob, but that the feare of God came upon them, that they durst attempt nothing against Iacobs sons, whom they held to be men of valour.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Ministers have no power in themselves to blesse, but onely in Gods name.

Vers. 16. THE Angel blessed the children: Iacob taketh not upon him to blesse in his owne name, but as a Minister onely and pronouncer of the blessing, desireth God to blesse the children: Ministers then have no power actually in themselves to blesse or curse, but onely as instruments and messengers, they pronounce the sentence of blessing or cursing in the name of God: so that as the Apostle saith, he that planteth is nothing, nor he that watereth, but God that giveth the increase, 1 Cor. 3.7. Calvin.

2. Doct. God bestoweth his gifts freely, without respect to our worthinesse.

Vers. 19. His younger brother shall be greater than he: Ephraim is preferred before his elder brother Manasseh, and therefore his tribe beareth the name of his father Ioseph. Apocalyp. 7.8. where|as Manassehs tribe is rehearsed under his owne name: so was Abel preferred before Cain; Isaack before Ismael, Iacob before Esau: this was not for any worthinesse in Ephraim, more than in Manasseh: for wicked Ieroboam, that caused Israel to sinne, came of Ephraim: but that we should know that all is of Gods grace, without any respect unto mens worke: as the Scripture saith, I will have mercy on him, to whom I will shew mercy, Rom. 9.15.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against the vulgar Latine translation.

Vers. 12. Ioseph did reverence downe to the ground. If Ioseph did shew such great reverence to his father, bowing himselfe downe to the ground: it is not like that Iacob adored or worshipped the rod and scepter of Ioseph, thereby giving honour to his sonne, as the blinde Latine translation readeth, Hebr. 11.21. see before, Chap. 47. confut. 1.

2. Confut. Against the superstitious use of the signe of the crosse.

Vers. 14. Directing his hands of purpose, &c. Hence Perer: noteth, that Iacob of purpose layed his hands across, to prefigure the mystery of the crosse, whereby the Gentiles, as the younger brothers, were preferred before their elder brothers the Iewes, in Genes. 48. Numer. 7.

Contra. 1. Iacob had no such intendment to prefigure the signe of the crosse, but as the present occasion was offered, because Ioseph had so placed his sonnes, he could not otherwise, but by crossing his armes, lay his right hand upon Ephraims head: so that Ephraim was not preferred to the right hand, because Iacob would lay his hands across, but Iacob did lay his hands across, because Ephraim was to be preferred. 2. Although the fathers did beleieve in the Messiah to come; yet we finde not that they had so particular a knowledge, as to describe the very fashion of the crosse, on which Christ suffered.

3. Confut. Against the invocation of Saints.

Vers. 16. LEt my name be named upon them: This maketh nothing for the popish invocation of Saints: Iacob meaneth not, that they should call upon his name, but should in the world be called by his name; as the like phrase is used before, vers. 6. they shall be called after the names of their brethren, as the women are said to be called by their husbands name, Isay 4.2. Neither doe we reade, that ever the Israelites made their prayers to Abraham, Isaack, and Iacob, Mercer.

6. Places of morall observation.

1. Mor. God granteth beyond our hope.

Vers. 11. I Had not thought to have seene thy face: yet loe God hath shewed me thy seed: thus God dealeth most liberally with his children, granting them many things, beyond and above their hope, Mercer. as the prophet David confesseth: thou didst prevent him with blessings: he asked life of thee, and thou gavest him along life for ever, and ever, Psalm. 12.3, 4.

2. Mor. To submit our naturall affections to the will of God.

Vers. 19. His younger brother. Although Iacobs naturall affection, might be inclined, as well as Io/sephs, to the elder, yet he submitteth his affection to the will of God, who had given E/phraim the Eldership: so Abraham cast out Hagar and her sonnes, because God so commanded, although otherwise it was grievous unto him, Genes. 21.12, 14. so we must learne to conforme our wills and affection to the will of God.

3. Mor. Gods promise dieth not with his servants.

Vers. 21. Behold I die, and God shall be with you: though Iacob died, yet the promise of God died not the death of Gods saints though it be grievous to the Church, yet it cannot hinder Gods purpose, Calvin. but as it is in the Psal. instead of thy fathers, thou shalt have children, whom thou maiest make princes, &c. Psal. 4.16. God can raise up others instead of his faithfull seruants deceased.

AN APPENDIX, OR ADDITION TO THIS SECOND BOOKE, containing that divine Prophecie of IACOB, in his last Will and Testament, and the Historie of his solemne funerall, and honourable buriall.

Dedicated To the right reverend Fathers in God, TOBIE, L. Bishop of Duresme, and MARTIN, L. Bishop of Elie.

Right Reverend Fathers, among other honorable Friends, whom I have remembred in this worke, I thought it not fit in silence to passe by your Lordships: of whose humanity, humility, and love, especially toward Ministers and Preachers of the word, as of the one I heare honourable report, so of the other, I have comfortable experience: * that unto you both fitly agreeth S. Pauls description of a Bishop, that he should be gentle, and < in non-Latin alphabet >, a lover of good men, as Ambrose saith, Episcopo ut membris suis utatur clericis, & maxime Ministris, qui sunt vere filii: * A Bishop should use Ministers as his members, and Clergy men, as children.

I have beene bold to ioine you together, in this Preface, that as you were consociate together in your learned education in that famous college, * and are now still linked together in affection; so I would not separate you in this dedication: that as Ambroses saith, *Quemadmodum vobis ibi omnia fuere communia, * ita hic quoque jus dividuum nesciatis: that as there you enjoyed a certaine communion, so here you should not have a division.*

One of your Lordships hath an interest in me, as being Patron of that Church to the which I am called; the other hath an interest in this worke: to whom one already, a pain|full and industrious man, * now as I heare with the Lord, did dedicate his labours upon Genesis: that which he begunne, making but an entrance into this booke, I have by Gods grace finished: yet proceeding an other way, than •e• propounded to himselfe, and as yet hath not beene attempted by any: so that I may in some sort modestly say with Hierome, Opus in manibus mauditim habeo, non quod studium •eum insolenter extollam, sed quod sudoris conscius, ad lectionem eorum pro vocem nescientes: I have a worke in hand, not heard of before, no• that I insolently commend my study, but only to provoke to the reading of that, wherein I have so much laboured, those which yet knew it not.

Page [unnumbered]

In this Booke of Genesis, Moses the first and best Historiographer, doth pen the lives and acts of the holy Patriarks, Abraham, Isaack, Iacob, Ioseph, with the rest: into whom God vouchsafed this great honour, that so great a Prophet as Moses, like unto whom there rose not up any in Israel, should be the Chronicler of their doings. Tullie in a certaine place remembreth of Alexander the great conquerour, * that beholding Achilles tombe, he should thus say; O fortunate adolescens, qui tuae virtutis Homerum praeconem inveneris, O happy young man, which hadst Homer to be the setter forth of thy praise. But much more happy are these fathers whose doings are commended and recorded by Moses.

The examples of these godly Fathers, who practiced as they professed, and so lived as they loved God, whose obedience was answerable to their faith, doe teach all Christians, but especially us that are set apart to this function, to beautifie and adorne our holy voca|tion, * with a godly conversation: So Abraham is set forth in Scripture not onely as a faithfull beleever, but as a fruitfull follower of good works: by his faith he was justified with God, by his works he is also said to be justified, that is, so declared and testified before men: whose example we must imitate both for beleiving and living, whose sonnes and daughters we are, * as the Apostle saith, While we doe well. Cyprian also well saith, Nil prodest verbis proferre veritatem, & factis destruere virtutē, serm. de mortalit. alta|ribus placere debent, qui de altaribus vivunt; tales sunt sacrati, qualia sacra sunt, de singular. Clericor. It profiteth not in words to pronounce verity, and in deeds to renounce verture: they which live of the Altar, must please the God of the Altar: consecrated men should be like to the sacred things.

In this last addition to this booke, I have explained the divine & propheticall speeches and bequests of Iacob to his sonnes: and especially that heavenly prophecie of the com|ming of Shilo, Gen. 49.10. where I have brought divers expositions of sundry learned men, and some not yet touched by any: I have handled in this & other parts of this worke many difficult questions, with such perspicuity, brevity, variety, as I either could, or they have yet beene treated upon by any: so that I trust as Hierome saith of the trans|lating of Origen into the Latine tongue, I may say of our English, *Agnoscit Anglicana lingua quantum boni & ante nescierit & scire nunc coeperit, * praefat. in Origen. in Luk. That by this meanes it knoweth both how much good it was ignorant of before, and beginneth to know now.*

These my labours I now commend to the profitable use of the Church of God, and your favourable censure, and your Lordships to the blessed protection of the Almighty.

CHAP. XLIX.

1. The Method and Argument of the Chapter.

T His chapter containeth the last will and testament of Iacob: whereof there are two parts: the first concerneth his sonnes, to vers. 29. the second, himselfe and his buriall, vers. 29. to the end.

In the first part, Iacobs sonnes are partly censured and accursed, Ruben is deprived of the birth-right and dignitie, because of his incest, vers. 3, 4. Simeon and Levi are divided in Israel, because of their crueltie against the Sichemites, to vers. 8.

Partly, they are blessed, more principally, Iudah, with preheminance over his bre|thren, vers. 8. strength against his enemies, vers. 9. stabilitie and continuance of his regiment, vers. 10. with plentie, vers. 11. Ioseph, who is blessed with strength and valour against his enemies, vers. 23, 24. whereof the Author is God, vers. 25. and with a fruitfull countrie, vers. 26.

Lesse principally are blessed all the other sonnes of Iacob, which are in number seven, Zebulun, vers. 13. Isachar, v. 14, 15. Dan, vers. 16, 17. Gad, vers. 19. Asher, vers. 20. Nepthali, vers. 20. Benjamin, vers. 27.

In the second part, Iacob 1. Chargeth his sonnes to burie him with his fathers, vers. 29. 2. The place is described by the situation, vers. 30. by the persons there buried, vers. 31. by the parties of whom it was bought, vers. 32. 3. Then Iacob dieth quietly and in peace.

1. The divers readings.

v. 3 The beginning of my sorrow. H. the beginning of my sonnes. S. the beginning of my strength. caet. oon, * signifieth both strength and sorrow.

First in gifts, greater in dominion. H. hard to beare, hard and stubborne, thou hast done wrong. * S. thou shouldest have had three parts, the birth-right, the kingdome, the priesthood. C. the excellencie of dignitie, the excellencie of strength. cat.

v. 4. Thou art powred out like water, thou shalt not increase. H. as water thou shalt not wax hot. * S. because thou didst follow thine owne will, as water powred out, thou shalt not prosper, nor receive the increasing part. C. light or unstable as water. B.G.P. thou shalt fall away as water. T.

* v. 4. Thou defiledst my bed. H. thou didst defile my bed, when thou wentest up. S.C. thou didst defile my bed with going up. B. thou didst defile my bed, thy dignitie is gone. G.P. thou hast defiled: he went up to my bed. T.

v. 5. Simeon and Levi brethren, the warring instruments of iniquitie. H. Simeon and Levi, brethren, have finish|ed the iniquitie of their purpose. S. Simeon and Levi brethren, valiant men, in the land of their pilgrimage, have shewed their strength. C. Simeon and Levi, &c. the instruments of crueltie in their habitations.* B.G.P. in their compacts and agreements. T. mechera, signifieth a compact or bargaine, an habitation, & a sword.

v. 6. In their will they pulled away oxen. T. hanged a bull. S. digged through a wall. caet. shor, signifieth a bull, or oxe: bur shur, is a wall.*

v. 9. Thou art come up from the branches. S. from the prey. caet. taraph, *signifieth a prey, and a branch.

As a lyons whelp. S. as a lyonesse. H.B.G.C. as a great lyon. T.P. Labi, a lyon, which word is used here: Lebia, a lionesse.

v. 10. The rod shall not depart: A.P.G. prin•e. S.C. scepter. H. B.G. the tribe. T. shebet, *a rod, a tribe.

v. 10. Till hee come which is to be sent. H. till those things come, which are laid up for him. S. till the Messiah come: C. untill Shiloh come. B.G. till his sonnes come. T. heb. shiloh, of shil, a sonne, but shalach, signifieth to send.

v. 10. Hee shall be the expectation of the Gentiles. H.S. to himselfe shall be the gathering of the Gentiles.* B.• the people shall be obedient unto him. T.C.P. jachah, is to obey, chavah, to wait, expect.

v. 11. Israel shall dwell in the circuit of his citie, people shall build his temple,* &c. C. he shall bind his asse-foale to the vine, &c. caet. the Chalde is here very corrupt, and commeth nothing neare the text.

And his asse to the vine, O my sonne. H. and his asse-colt to the best vine: caet.

v. 12. His teeth whiter than milke. H.S. white with milke: cat. *the Chalde is very corrupt, reading thus: his hills shall be red with wine, and his fields white with corne.

v. 14. Isachar a strong asse couching betweene the bounds. H. Isachar desired good,* resting betweene the lots. S. Isachar rich in substance, and his possession betweene the bounds. C. Isachar a strong asse, couching betweene two burthens. B.G.T. mishphath, a bound, a lot, a burthen.

* v. 15. Hee saw his part, that it was good, &c. and he shall make the provinces of the people subject. C. he shall see that rest is good, and that the land is pleasant: caeter.

Hee became an husband-man. S. he shalbe subject to tribute: caet. mus, signifieth tribute and melting, because it maketh men to waste and melt.

* v. 16. The Chalde thus maketh a paraphrase upon this verse: from the house of Dan shall be chosen and rise a man, in his time shall the people be delivered: the rest agree in the common translation.

* v. 17. The Chaldee also thus readeth: There shall a man rise of Dan, whose feare shall fall upon the people, and he shall strike the Philistims, &c.

* v. 18. Is thus interpreted: I looke not for the salvation of Gedeon, the sonne of Ioas, which is a temporall saluation nor the salvation of Sampson, but I looke for the redemption of Christ, the sonne of David, &c. C.

* v. 19. The campe of armed men shall come out of the house of Gad, and passe over Iordan to battell before his brethren, and with much substance shall they returne. C. Gad, a tentation shall tempt him, but he shall tempe him neare the feet. S. Gad being girded, shall fight before him, and he shall be girded backward. H. Gad, an hoast of men shall overcome him, but he shall overcome at the last: cat.

* v. 20. The land of Aser is excellent, and he shall be nourished with the delights of Kings. C. Assher, his bread shall be fat, and he shall give pleasures for a King: caet.

* v. 21. Nepthali, his lot shall fall in a good ground, &c. they shall praise and blesse over them. C. Neptali, a trunke, or post, (remissus) sent backe, sending forth beautie in the branch. S. Nepthali, as an hinde let goe, or sent forth, giving goodly words: caet. aial, signifieth an hart, and a post: oomer, a word: amir, an high branch.

* v. 22. Ioseph a sonne increasing. H.S.C. a fruitfull bough: cater. ben sig. a sonne and a bough.

Pleasant to behold. H.S. as a fruitfull bough beside the fountaine: caet. gnen sig. an eye, and a fountaine.

His daughters ran upon the wall. H.P. my young sonne returne unto me. S. two tribes shall come out of his sonnes, and shall receive their part and inheritance. C. his small branches run upon the wall: caet. baen•th, daughters, branches.

v. 22. The men of dissention. C. the archers, or shooters: caet.

v. 2.44. Their bowes were broken with strength. S. his how abode strong: caet. jashab to sit, to rest, to continue.

The sinewes or strings of his arms were dissolved. H.S. the arms of his hands were strengthened. T.B.P. the hands of his arms were strengthened. G. phazzaz, to strengthen.

From thence Israel is strengthened of God thy father. S. of whom was the feeder appointed by the stone of Israel. G. of him shall come a shepherd (or herd-man. B) the stone of Israel. T.H.B.P. the Chaldee translateth here very corruptly, comming nothing neare the text: thus the prophecie was fulfilled in them, because he kept the law in secret, and propounded his constant hope, then gold was put upon his armes, &c.

* v. 25. The blessing of the earth having all things. S. the blessing of the deep beneath. caet.

With the blessings of thy father and mother. C. with the blessings of the breasts and the wombe: caet.

v. 26. The blessing of thy father and mother, above the blessing of the stable hills. S. the blessings of thy father shall be added above the blessings of my fathers. C.B.G.P. the blessings of thy father are strong, with the blessings of his fathers. H. or of mine elders. T.H. he. Har, an hill, harah, a father, a progenitor.

v. 26. In the blessings of the everlasting hills. S. untill the desire of the everlasting hills come. H. which the Princes have desired, which were since the world. C. to the utmost hills of the world. B. to the end of the hills of the world. T.G. ta ah, sig. to limit: avah, to desire: which was ruler over his brethren. S. which was a Nazarite,* or separate among his brethren: caet. nazar to separate.

* v. 27. In the land of Benjamin shall dwell the majestie of the temple, and in the possession thereof, the sanctuarie: evening and morning shall the Priests offer sacrifices, and in the evening they shall divide the rest, &c. the rest agree in the vulgar reading.

* v. 31. There they buried Leah: S. there Leah lyeth buried. H. there I buried Leah: caet.

v. 32. The possession of the field and cave therein, of the sonnes of Heth. S.T. the purchase of the field, &c. of the sonnes of Heth. B.G.C.P. chanah, sig. both to possesse, & purchase: this verse is omitted in the vulgar Latine.

3. The Explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. Of the prophetically testament or Iacobs in generall.

Vers. 1. Then Iacob called his sonnes, &c. 1. Iacob not by any naturall instinct (as some hold an opinion, that the soule is more divine, and apter to foretell things to come, when death approacheth, as Xenophon reporteth of Cyrus, lib. 8. Plato of Socrates, in apolog.) but by a divine inspiration doth prophesie what shall befall his children: as Isaack did blesse his two sonnes, Gen. 27. Moses the tribes of Israel, Deut. 33. David blessed Salomon, 1 Chron. 29. our blessed Saviour praied for his disciples immediately before his death, Ioan. 17. Perer.

2. Iacob doth not blesse all his children, three of them he censureth for their sinne: Ruben, Simeon, Levi: but Moses blesseth all the tribes, Deuter. 33. the cause is not, as R. Salomon imagineth, that Iacob purposed to blesse all, but being forsaken of Gods spirit, and beside himselfe, he falleth into a fit of phren|sie: which were impious to thinke, Perer.

3. Some make question, whether Iacob spake these words, or Moses rather so penned them, Mercer. But it is more like, that Iacob being moved by the spirit, spake after this concise manner as a prophet, though not altogether in the same forme of words.

4. Some doe wonder how Moses should come by the knowledge of these words,* which Iacob spake 200. yeares before to his sonnes in a corner: they may as well muse how Moses should describe the particular places of the land of Canaan, which hee never saw, and set downe the historie of the creation: which things Moses might have by godly tradition, but most of all by the revelation of the spirit. Calvin.

5. Iosephus is too slender in the reporting of this prophetically speech of Iacob, making onely mention thereof in generall, that he prophesied how his children should inherit the land of Canaan, lib. 2 anti|quitat. Some other have beene too bold, to forge other fables upon this occasion: as Origen maketh mention of a booke entituled, The narration of Ioseph the sonne of Iacob,* tom. 2. in Io•u•. out of the which he citeth certaine testimonies to prove the incarnation of Angels, and the prognostication of things done in the world by the starres: but Athanasius, in Synops. holdeth this to be a forged booke: so is that other, called, The testament of the twelve Patriarkes, mentioned by Origen, hom. 15. in Iosun. ex Perer. Some also of our own have beene too bold, in allegorizing Iacobs words, whereas the literall and historicall sense is full enough, and containeth excellent matter, Calvin.

QUEST. II. What last times Iacob speaketh of.

Gather your selves, &c. I will tell you what shall come in the last daies. 2. He calleth all his children to be present, who were not all before assembled, when Iacob blessed Ephraim and Manassah: and he stirreth them up also to attention, to consider diligently what he saith, Mercer. 2. We need not with Rupertus, by Iacobs sonnes to understand his spirituall seed; the Church of Christ: seeing this prophecie was literally accomplished in his carnall offspring. 3. By the lust daies wee understand not onely the times of the Messiah, as David Kimhi, Hierome and Lyranus will have it alwaies taken in the prophets: but sometime it betokeneth the age next ensuing: as Dan.2.28. God sheweth the King what shall be in the latter daies: that is, vers. 29. what shall come to passe afterward: some part of his dreame fell out in the next times and age after Nabuchadnezzar: Like as then in this place Iacobs speaketh of the comming of the Messiah, vers. 10. so also he propesieth of the division of the land of Canaan among his sonnes, that came to passe 215. yeares after, Perer. Iun. and therefore Iunius interpreteth the word chari-h, in the times following, that is, afterwards. 4. But Isidorus Pelusiota is much deceived, who writeth, lib. 1. epist. 365. that whereas Iacob intended to declare to his sonnes the mysterie of the incarnation of Christ, because they were unworthy to heare it, God turned his minde, that he forgot what he purposed to say, and told them of things past, in stead of things to come: to this purpose to prove the alteration and change of Iacobs judgement, he wresteth that saying of Esay 40.27. why sayest thou O Iacob my way is hid from the Lord, and my judgement is passed over of my God. Contra. 1. The Prophet speaketh this not of the person, but of the people and posteritie of Iacob. 2. Iacob here doth reveale to his sonnes the mysterie of the Messiah. 3. And most of Iacobs speech is propheticall of the times to come: he onely in foure of them remembreth things done and past, in Ruben, Simeon, Levi, and somewhat of Ioseph, ex Perer.

QUEST. III. Of Rubens prerogatives.

Vers. 2. RVben the beginning of my strength, &c. 1. This is the first effect of his strength, Iun. whom he begot in the strength of his yeares, Perer. as the Septuag. expound, the beginning of my sonnes. 2. The Latine translator is deceived, that readeth the beginning of my sorrow: which some understand, of the sorrow of travell in the first borne: some, of the Parents care, when he beginneth to have children: some, of his fathers grieffe, because of his incest: but this varietie of exposition ariseth of the mistaking of the word, oo, which here signifieth strength, not sorrow, as it is taken, Deut. 21.21. 3. The excellencie of dignitie, the excellencie of power: some understand these words generally of Rubens dignitie, Mercer. The Chalde insinuateth three privileges due to the first borne, the kingdome, the birth-right, the priesthood. Hierom by dignitie understandeth his double part, or gifts; by power, his command over his brethren: but by dignitie rather, he meaneth, his preeminence over his brethren, which is conueied to Iudah: by power, his double part, which belonged to the eldership, bestowed upon Ioseph, Iun.

QUEST. IIII. How Ruben is said to be light like water.

Vers. 4. Light at water, thou shalt not be excellent. 1. Some understand this lightnesse as water, of Rubens intemperancie, that his lust carried him away as water, Hierom. Mercer. 2. But it is better referred to the losse of his dignitie: that as water runneth to the lower parts, Tostat. and being powred out it leaveth nothing behind in the vessell, as oile and wine doth, Lyran. so he was fallen from his dignitie and birth-right, Iun. 3. As the next word giveth this sense: thou shalt not be excellent, or increase: for the tribe of Ruben did performe no excellent or worthy exploit: Deborah reproveth them for their backwardnesse, Iud. 5.15. and Ruben was but small in number, in respect of other tribes, Deuteron. 33.6. Perer.

QUEST. V. How Ruben is said to ascend or goe up to his fathers bed, and the divers expositions thereof.

THou diddest defile my bed, &c. We need not to enforce here a mysticall sense, either with Ambrose, to applie it to the Jewes, who insulted against Christs humanitie, which was as the bed of the Godhead, and so defiled Gods bed: or with Ruffinus, that they profaned the law by the which God as it were dwellled with them; by corrupting it with their glosses, by preferring the carnall rites thereof before the grace of Christ: or with the ordinarie glosse by Ruben to understand the Angels, which waxed insolent against God, and so were cast out of heaven as water: or with Rupertus to expound it of heretikes, who with corrupt doctrine defile the Church the habitation of God. 2. And concerning the littall sense of these words: 1. Neither doe we read, thou hast defiled my bed by going up: for gulah; is not the infinitive, but the preter tense, Mercer. 2. Neither is the meaning thy dignitie is gone: for the word ieisugni hath a servile accent, that joyneth it with the word following, Mercer. 3. Nor yet, in saying, my bed is gone up or ascended; is the meaning that Iacob forsooke his bed, and never lay with Bilha more, as Kimhi: or that the dignitie and honour of his bed was gone, Mercer. For the word gnalah is persohnally used before of Ruben, not really of the bed. 4. Therefore as before hee said in the second person, Thou wentest up to thy fathers bed; so here in the third person he speaketh to his sonnes in detestation of this fact, He ascended, or went up to my bed, Iun.

QUEST. VI. Simeon and Levi how said to be brethren.

Vers. 5. Simeon and Levi brethren. 1. Not so much brethren by nature, as in this their evill purpose: these two were thought to be the principall contrivers of Iosephs death, if the rest would have consented: some thinke that these two tribes put Christ to death, Iudas of Simeon, the Priests of Levi, Mercer. Though the rest of Iacobs sonnes consented to this action, yet Simeon and Levi are named as chiefe.* 2. They are said to be cruell instruments in their compacts, for so the word mechereth is better interpreted of carah to buy or bargaine, than for their habitations, as Mercer. or swords, (as Hierome, as before is shewed) because they made a subtill agreement with the Sichemites, Iun. And this seemeth to bee the meaning of the Septuagint, who thus read, They have finished the iniquitie of their purpose or invention.

*3. Their cruell and unjust enterprise herein appeareth: 1. That the slaughter of the Sichemites was made against the peace and covenant concluded. 2. They made a fraudulent league, having no purpose to keepe it. 3. They dishonoured their owne profession, killing those which were contented to bee circumcised. 4. And at that time, when they were sore of cutting, and to be pitied. 5. They put not Sichem alone to the sword, who had offended, but all the rest of the Citie that were innocent. 6. They were not content with the slaughter of men, but made a spoile and havocke of the Citie, Perer.

QUEST. VII. What Iacob meaneth by his glorie.

Vers. 6 MY glorie, bee not thou joyned with their assembly. 1. Some by glorie understand good name and fame; some the soule, the glorie of the body, Mercer. But it rather here betokeneth the tongue, which is the instrument of praise and glorie, as it is taken Psal. 30.16. there the word translated tongue, is in the originall chebodh, glorie: so that the meaning is, that as hee gave no consent unto them in his heart, so neither would he afford that action any approbation with his tongue, Muscul. Iun. 2. R. Salomon expoundeth the first clause, into their secret let not my soule come, of Zimri his uncleane act, who was of Simeon, that in secret companied with Cozbi, Numb. 2. and the other of Core his rebellious assemblies, Numb. 16. who was of Levi: but it is more properly referred to the time past, concerning the cruell exploit of Simeon and Levi, Perer.

QUEST. VIII. Whether Simeon and Levi digged downe a wall, killed, or haughed the oxen.

Vers. 6. IN their selfe-will they digged downe a wall. 1. Some read, they haughed a bull, Septuag. or car|ried away their oxen, Iun. They which follow this reading, some referre it to Sichem, who was the principall man whom they slue: some understand it of Ioseph, who is compared to a bullocke: Deut. 33.17. the same word shor is there used, Tharg. Hieros. because Simeon and Levi are held to bee ring-leaders in that conspiracie against Ioseph: for they were of the elder sort, not the younger brethren, that would have had Ioseph killed: now Ruben and Iudah, the first and the fourth sonnes, consented not to kill him: therefore it is most like, that Simeon and Levi were the authors; for which cause some thinke, that Ioseph afterward caused Simeon to be bound in Egypt: but this exposition agreeth not with the former clause, in their wrath they slue a man: for Ioseph was not killed. Iunius seemeth to understand it of the spoile of the Citie, and carrying away of their cattell; but that seemeth to have beene the act rather of *Iacobss*onnes, than of Simeon and Levi, Gen. 34.28. 2. Mercer, Musculus, Calvin thinke this to bee the better reading, they digged thorow a wall: Of which reading these reasons may bee given: 1. Because this was a more peculiar and proper act of their rage, than to carrie away their oxen, that proceeded of a covetous, rather than irefull minde. 2. Though this be not directly expressed, yet these words insinuate as much, they went into the citie boldly, Gen. 34.25. that is, breaking into the citie violently, and over throwing the wals before them, Perer. 3. Though shor, the word here used, signifie an oxe, shur, a wall; yet schurech may bee put for ch•lem, as the Chalde Interpreter readeth, shur. 4. The word ghacar, to root or pull up, properly understood, of plants, Eccles. 3.2. is more fitly by a metaphor applyed to the rooting up of cities, Z•phan. 2.4. than unto cattell and living things.

3. But these reasons notwithstanding I rather preferre the reading of the Septuagint: they houghed an oxe or bull: for shor, the word here used, signifieth an oxe, c. 32.5. Deut. 33.17. the word shur is a wall: neither needed they to have undermined the wals, the citie being secure, and the gates open unto them: the word ghakar is gnakar, signifieth to hough or cut sinewes, as Iosh. 11.6. Ioshua is bidden of the Lord to hough the Canaanites horse: it seemeth in their furie, that they abused the dumb beasts, as Balaamin his rage threatned, if he had had a sword, to have killed his Asse, Numb. 12.29. now in that this is not mentioned before in the storie; it need not see me strange in all matters and circumstances of fact, the Scripture useth not to expresse, as that of Iacobs concerning the Amorites, with the sword & bow, c. 48.22.

QUEST. IX. How Simeon and Levi were divided in Israel.

Vers. 7. I Will divide them in Iacob. 1. Iacob appointeth a punishment answerable to the offence: for as before they conspired together to doe mischief, so now they shall be separated and divided, Iun. 2. Which accordingly came to passe; for Simeon had no possession or inheritance by himselfe, but intermingled with Iudah. Ios. 19. and were constrained afterward by force of armes to enlarge their bounds, 1 Chron. 4.41. Iun. Some thinke that the poore Scribes which were dispersed in Israel came of Simeon, Tha•g. Hieros. But certaine it is, that it was a base and contemptible tribe in respect of the rest:

for which cause Moses▪ omitteth it in his blessing, Deut. 33. Mercer. rather than for that Simeon was cruell against the Sichemites, for then Levi should have beene omitted also: or because Simeon was the chiefe in the conspiracie against Ioseph, or because Iudas Iscariot came of Simeon, for both these are uncertaine: or for that Zimri of Simeon lately had committed such an uncleane act, as Perer. 3. Levi also was divi|ded in Israel: they had no certaine inheritance, but only certaine cities allotted unto them among the rest of the tribes, to the number of 48. Ios. 21. they also went wandring up and downe the tribes, to gal|ther the tithes of their maintenance, Mercer. 4. Yet God, who could bring light out of darknesse, tur|ned this, which at the first was ordained for a punishment, to a blessing; for the calling of the Levites was honourable to themselves, and everie one was glad to entertaine them: it was also profitable to others for their instruction, Calvin. 5. This prophesie against Simeon and Levi is not unfitly by Ambrose, Ruffin, Rupert. applied against the Scribes & Priests that put Christ to death; for by this means the wals of Ierusalem were digged down & overthrown, & the Jewes are dispersed in the world to this day, Perer.

QUEST. X. Of the preeminence of Iudah.

Vers. 8. Thy brethren shall praise thee, &c. 1. Though Iudah also was faultie concerning Thamar; yet Jacob passeth over his offences, and of the rest of his sons touching onely the most notorious sinnes among the rest, as of Ruben, Simeon, Levi, Muscul. 2. In saying, Thy brethren shall praise thee, he alludeth to the name of Iudah, so called by Leah, of judah, to praise, because shee had occasion thereby to praise the Lord: and now his brethren shall magnifie and praise him, Iun. The Chalde readeth, Thou hast confessed, and wast not ashamed: which some understand of Iudah his delivering of Ioseph, or of his ac|quitting of Thamar: but the other reading is more proper. 3. Jacob prophesieth foure things of Iudah▪ 1. His principalitie over his brethren, vers. 8. 2. His victorie over his enemies, vers. 9. 3. The stabilitie and continuance of his kingdome under the Messiah, vers. 10. 4. His outward plentie and prosperitie, vers. 11. 4. Thy fathers sonnes shall bow downe, &c. Though Ioseph for the time present had the temporall honour, yet the perpetuall preeminence is given to Iudah: so that hence it appeareth why the Lord was angrie with the people for desiring a King, because the time was not yet come when God purposed to exalt Iudah: and for the same cause the Kingdome of Saul, of Benjamin, not of Iudah, prospered not, Calvin. 5. This authoritie of Iudah over his brethren tooke beginning, Iudg. 1. when the tribe of Iudah was appointed to be as the Captaine to the rest after Iosua his departure, but it was more fully accomplished in David and Salomon; and most of all in Christ, of David, of whose kingdome shall be none end, Iun. 6. Although the ten tribes did revolt from Iudah, yet the right of the kingdome remained with Iudah still: which continued, notwithstanding it was often by Israel impugned, when the other was dissolved, Calvin.

QUEST. XI. Of the explication of the tenth verse.

Vers. 10. The scepter shall not depart. 1. The word is shebet, which is sometime taken for a tribe, Psal. 78.68. and so Iunius readeth here, it signifieth also a scepter, Hierom, Mercer, Pagnin, agree|able whereunto, the Septuagint and Chalde read, the Prince shall not faile, &c. and the next word giveth it, because it belongeth to the Prince to make lawes. 2. The word mechochech doth not here properly signifie a Captaine, as H.S. translate, nor a Scribe, C. but a Law-giver, as it is taken, Psal. 60.7. Iudah is my Law-giver, Iun. Mercer. 3. From betweene his feet: not because Kings or Judges use to have Scribes sitting at their feet, as the phrase is taken, Deut. 33.3. Va•ablus, Calvin; but the meaning is, that Iudah should alwaies have a Law-giver borne of his posterity; (so is the phrase used, Deut. 28.50.) and brought up as upon his knees, (Gen. 50.23.) Iun. The Latine and Greeke Translator, keeping the same sense, read, a Captaine out of his thigh: the Chalde, from among his sonnes: which in effect is the same, Mercer. 4. Shiloh, some derive of shalah, which is to be peaceable, Mercer. Some of shalach, to send, reading cheth for he, Hierome. Some read shiloh, making it two words, which signifieth, which to him, supplying are due, or laid up, which is the meaning of the Septuagint, Oleaster. But it is most like to come of shil, which is a son, and he is put for van; shiloh then is, his son, and it seemeth to be derived of shiliah, which signifieth the burthen, or after-birth, and is taken for the childe contained therein, Deut. 28.57. but is more specially understood of Christ, who proceeded from the womb of a virgin.* 5. The people shall be obe|dient unto him, rather than shall be gathered: or he shall be the expectation of the Gentiles, as Hierome; as is shewed before in the divers readings: and therefore we need not busie our selves with Pererius, to search how Christ should be said to be the expectation of the Gentiles: either with Augustine, to under|stand it of the expectation of his second comming; or that the Gentiles stood in need of Christ, and therefore ought to expect him, or to understand it of the converted Gentiles that looked for Christ, Perer: for the true reading of these words will ease us of this labour, though I deny not but that Christ was also the expectation of the Gentiles: as he is called the desire of the nations, Hagg. 2.8. so called of the effect, that considering the great salvation which Christ brought to the Gentiles, he ought to be desired of all, and was desired after the light began to appeare unto them.

QUEST. XII. Against the Iewes who deny the prophecie of the comming of the Messiah to be fulfilled.

Vers. 10. The scepter shall not depart. 1. The Hebrewes doe but cavill, that by shebeth which signifieth a scepter or rod, doe understand affliction: for neither is it true, that affliction departed not from Iudah, till Messiah came: and the next words, nor a Law-giver from betweene his feet, doe shew that it is here taken for a scepter, rather than a rod or scourge: and Iacob prophesieth all happie and prosperous things to Iudah.

2. Neither is this the sense, that after Messiah is come, who should restore the kingdome of Iudah, the scepter should never depart: for beside that, Iacob speaketh not of the spirituall, but temporall regiment of Iudah, the words will not beare that sense, which are guad che, untill, not after Messiah is come.

Page 392

3. Rab. Salomons conceit is without shew of reason, who holdeth that the scepter is not yet departed from Iudah, and therefore concludeth that the Messiah is not yet come: for it is notoriously evident to all the world, that the Jewes have no common-wealth at this day, or regiment, but are tributaries and subjects to other Kings, as to the Persian, the great Turke, and others.

4. Some Hebrewes take Shiloh for the proper name of that Citie where the Arke of God continued a long time: as though the meaning should be this, that Iudah should not lose his dominion, till a King came that should be annoynted in Shiloh, which they tooke to be Saul. Contra. 1. Saul was not elected King in Shiloh, but in Mizpeh, 1 Sam. 10.17. Shiloh was then forsaken and became desolate: the comming of Shiloh is then improperly taken for the desolation and ruine thereof. 3. After this Iudah began to have the scepter in David, and therefore it is an impudent and shamelesse glosse, to make the regiment of Iudah then to have an end, when it tooke beginning.

5. And it is absurd, to make this Shiloh Nabuchadnezzar, who should be the man sent of God to punish Israel, and by whom the scepter was taken from Iudah, which is the opinion of some Hebrews: for after the captivitie Zerubbabel the sonne of Selathiel, was the Prince of Iudah, and a Captaine and lawgiver to the people, Ezra 2.2. Hagg. 1.1.

6. Some say that this promise for the continuance of the regall authoritie in Iudah, untill the Messiah came, ^{*} was only conditional, if their sinnes did not deserve otherwise. Contra. 1. No such condition in Scripture is expressed, not here inserted by Iacob. 2. It is to be observed, that the promises concerning the Messiah are absolute, and not conditionall: as that he should come of the seed of Abraham, and of the root or stock of David, and that he should be born of a virgin, and that in Bethlehem: as these prophecies had no condition annexed, no more hath this, ex Perer.

QUEST. XIII. How this prophecie of Iudah was accomplished.

Wherefore the Jews doe but cavill, and in vaine seeke to obscure this prophecie of Iacob, concerning the Messiah. But a greater question ariseth among our selves, how and when this propheticke tooke place: for seeing the Israelites had foure kinde of governments; 1. They were governed by Captaines, Moses and Iosua: 2. By Judges: 3. By Kings till the captivitie: 4. By the high priests, that were as Kings untill Herod: in all these changes, unlesse onely under the Kings, the government was least of all exercised by the tribe of Iudah: for Moses was of Levi, Iosuah of Ephraim, two onely of the Judges Oth•niel and Ibzah were of Iudah: and from the returne out of the Captivitie, the high Priests were the chiefe commanders, and many of them crowned Kings: how then can it be justified that the scepter did not depart from Iudah, till the Messiah came?

1. Some thinke that the scepter and kingdome is not strictly tyed unto Iudah, but onely a principalitie, in respect of other tribes, which might be, though other tribes had the regall authoritie, Euseb. lib. 8. de prapar.

Contra. 1. But Iacob directly saith, the scepter shall not depart from Iudah, the S. and C. reade, the prince shall not faile from Iudah. 2. How could Iudah have the principalitie, when another tribe had the imperiall authoritie? there is no question, but that after the Captivitie, the tribe of Levi, having the crowne, had also the preeminence and principalitie over other tribes.

2. Some thinke that Zerubbabel of Iudah, and his posteritie had the princely authoritie till Herod, Cyrril. lib. 8. cont. Iulian. Contra. 1. The histories of that nation, as is extant in Iosephus, doe testifie the contrarie, that the chiefe government was in the Machabees, and their line, which were of Levi, Aristobulus sonne of Hircanus the sonne of Simeon, was the first Levite that bare a crowne: and it continued in his race untill Herod. 2. We want not sufficient evidence; for this is in the Scripture: for the prophet saith concerning Ieconiah, that none of his seed should sit upon the throne of David, Ierem. 22.30. in him the regall line of Iudah ended. 3. A third opinion is, that the high priests after the captivitie were of Iudah by the mother side, ^{*} as Iehoiada the priest married Iehoshabeath sister to Ahaziah the King, 2 Chron. 22.11. sic T•status. some say further that they were also of the tribe of Iudah by the fathers side: and by this meanes, the scepter did not depart from Iudah.

Contra. 1. It is uncertaine, whether the high priests did alwaies take their wives out of the tribe of Iudah, though some did, nay it is more probable they did not. 2. Though they did, yet could they not be said to be of the tribe of Iudah: for the tribes were counted by the fathers side, not the mothers. 3. And by this meanes, it should be rather true of Levi, that the scepter should not depart from him, than of Iudah. 4. Neither will it satisfie to say, the high priests were of Iudah by the fathers side, for then the Machabees might have challenged the kingdome by inheritance, whereas it came to them by election: as Jonathan was chosen by consent of the people, in the place of Iudas, 1. Mach. 9.31. and beside the Apostle witnesseth, that never any of the tribe of Iudah had the office of the priesthood, Heb. 7.14. but Mattathias was a priest, 1 Mach. 2.1. and therefore not of Iudah.

4. Cajetan answereth, that the scepter was taken away quoad actum, in act, but not quoad spem, in hope: but still they were in expectation, that the kingdome should be restored in the Messiah.

Contra. This answer is not sufficient. 1. Because Iacob speaketh of the visible and terrene kingdome, annexed to Iudah, whereof there was no hope to have it restored, as the prophet Ieremie saith of I•conias, that none of his seed should sit upon the throne of David, Ierem. 22. and yet the Messiah came of Ieconiah: his kingdome was therefore spirituall. 2. By this interpretation, this place, which we urge against the Jewes, to prove that the Messiah is come, should want his force: seeing they might also answer, that the kingdome of Iudah is onely ceased and intermitted in act, but not in hope to be restored.

5. Canus lib. 2. de loc. theolog. hath found out this answer, that the tribe of Iudah had not lost the scepter, quoad jus, in respect of their right, though, quoad usum, in regard of the use, it might bee ad|ministred by other tribes: and to this purpose hee alleageth that place, 1 Machab. 14.41. How the Iewes and priests consented that Simeon should bee their prince and high priest perpetually, till the Lord raised up the true Prophet: where the men of Iudah surrender their right to Simeon.

Contra. 1. True it is, that the right of the kingdome appertained to Iudah: and neither could the tribe of Iudah give it to any other tribe, nor they take it: and therefore it is well observed; that the Macha|bees and their posteritie were justly punished of God, as usurpers: first in being perverted with the wicked sect of Sadduces: for Ioannes Hircanus the sonne of Simon, was a Saducee, and put many of the pharises to death: so did his sonne Alexander, who slew 50000. Pharises; secondly, they were dispossessed of their crowne and dignitie by Antipater, their servant, and his sonne Herod. 2. Yet this cannot bee the meaning of this prophecie, for then wee could not conclude out of this place against the Iewes, that the Messiah is come, seeing they may also answer, that the scepter is not gone from Iudah yet, quoad jus, in respect of the right, and therefore they may yet expect the Messiah: Iacob therefore must be un|derstood to speake of a reall and visible principalitie in Iudah, which should not cease, till Messiah was to come, and the ceasing thereof should be taken as a manifest argument of the approaching of the Messiah.

6. Wherefore, seeing it is manifest, that the scepter and princely government did not really remaine in the tribe of Iudah, till the comming of the Messiah: for Ezechiel thus prophesieth of the kingdome of Iudah: Thus saith the Lord, I will take away the diademe, and take off the crowne, it shall be no more the same, &c. I will overturne, overturne, overturne it, till hee come, whose right it is, and I will give it him, Ezech. 21.26, 27. And so indeed, the government after the captivitie was thrice turned, and changed, first they had captaines, as Zerubbabel, for their chiefe governours, then the high Priests, last of all, Kings. Seeing I say that the reall and actual principalitie and regiment of Iudah ceased,* not long after the•r re|turne out of captivitie: as the Prophet Amos saith, In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David, that is fallen downe, chap. 9.11. And seeing further that it sufficeth not, that the princely regiment remained still in the tribe of Iudah, in hope, or in right: for the Iewes might answer us, that it so remaineth still: therefore this prophecie can receive no other sense or interpretation, than one of these foure waies: which I will set downe, with the approbation of the best.

1. Some by Iudah understand, not the tribe of Iudah only, but the whole nation of the Iewes, both because, although there were of the tribes of Levi and Benjamin among them, yet the whole Com|mon-wealth had the name of Iudah: and the Kingdome was in the tribe, lot, and territorie, that apper|tained to Iudah: and therefore it may fitly bee called the scepter of Iudah, though it might bee usurped by some, not of the tribe of Iudah: and in this sense it is true, that the Iewes had alwaies a King and governour of their owne nation, untill Herod an Idumaeen invaded the regall dignitie, in the 30. yeare of whose reigne, Shiloh the Messiah was borne, Pererius, who alleageth Eusebius, histor. lib. 1. cap. 6. August. lib. 18. de civit. Dei, c. 45. Rupertus lib. 9. in Gen. c. 29. as authors and fautors of this opinion.

This interpretation might well bee received, but that it seemeth, by Iacobs severall prophecies of his sonnes, that hee meaneth particularly the tribe of Iudah, and such as should be borne of that tribe: for so is the meaning of that phrase, from betweene his feet: and seeing Iacob had said before, thy brethren shall praise thee, thy fathers sonnes shall bow unto thee, meaning by Iudah, that particular tribe, and not the whole nation of the Iewes, it should seeme that Iudah also in this place should be taken in the same sense.

2. These words also of Iacobs prophecie, untill Shiloh come, may bee understood of that time, when the certaine terme and number of years should be revealed of Shilohs comming, which was shewed unto Daniel in the first yeare of King Darius, Daniel 9.1. To whom Cyrus permitted the regiment of Babylon, who re|gned together with him: from which time there are reckoned 70. weekes, that is, 490. yeares: which weekes begin in the first yeare of Cyrus, when the Edict went forth for the returne of the Iewes, and end in the passion of Christ, at this time, &c. At this time

Zerubbabel prince of Iudah was captaine of the people, Ezra 2 2. and unto this time, after the scepter was given to Iudah in David, it was not removed, but onely during the captivitie of Iudah, when it is like also that the heads of Iudah bare the greatest sway over their brethren: I leave this interpretation to the judgment of the learned, neither doe I much insist upon it: seeing the prophecie of Iacob rather aymeth at the historicall comming of the Messiah, than the prediction of his comming.

3. Some doe take the word shebet here not for a Scepter, but for the tribe, as Iunius and Oleaster translate: the tribe shall not depart from Iudah: this opinion may seeme probable for these reasons: 1. the word is so taken in this chapter for a tribe, vers. 28. these are the tribes, shibte and it is very rare, or not at all used in Moses for the scepter. 2. Thus this prophecie was evidently fulfilled, for till our Saviour Christs time the line of Iudah, especially from David, was exactly kept, as may appeare by the genealogie set downe by S. Matthew and S. Luke: but after Shiloh was come, the policie and government of the Iewes was within one generation dissolved, and the line and stocke of Iudah not regarded, but shuffled and confounded with the rest: neither can the Iewes tel at this day, of what tribe they are descended: I therefore herein approve of Calvins judgement, who understandeth this prophecie of the policie and common-wealth of the Iewes: which presently after the Messiahs comming was overthrowne. 3. But it will bee objected, that the tribe of Levi continued till Christs time, as well as Iudah, Perer. I answer, that Levi was none of the 12. tribes, neither had his peculiar lot, as the rest had, but according to the prophecie of Iacob, hee was dispersed in Israel: againe, though some of the Levites kept their pedigree, yet most of them could not prove their descent, as it appeareth, Ezra 2.62. these sought their writing of the genealogies, but they were not found, therefore were they put from their Priest-hood: and further mention is made, that the names of the chiefe fathers of the Levites were written unto the dayes of Iohanan, and some of them to the reigne of Darius the last King of Persia, Nehem. 12.22, 23. it seemeth then, that after that, their genealogies were not kept.

Page 394

4. Some understand this prophecie of the 70. Elders, called Sanedrim, which were elected out of Iudah, to whom the cognizance of the weightiest causes, and establishing of lawes appertained: who were of such supreme authoritie, that they convicted Herod, who hardly escaped the sentence of death for his contumacie: these Sanedrim continued untill Herod, who not long before Christs birth, rooted them all out: and then Herod himselfe was absolute King: sir Mercer.

This interpretation joyned with the former, I preferre before the rest: for in this sense Iudah shall be taken for the particular tribe: and the word shebet, signifieth sometime the authoritie of the Judge and magistrate, as Iudg. 5.14. Amos 1.6. The meaning then of this prophecie is, that Iudah should bee possessed of the regall, or at the least the chiefe authoritie, untill Messiah come.

QUEST. XIV. Of the abundance of vines and wine promised to Iudah.

Vers. 11. HE shall binde his asse foale to the vine, &c. 1. Wee doe not with O•kelos, by the asse and foale, understand the parents and children, that should cleave unto the law, as tyed to the vine: and by the washing of their garments in wine, that the Princes should bee cloathed in purple: by the eyes, the hills which should bee full of vines; and by the teeth, the fields white with corne. 2. Neither need wee here run to allegories, as to make the binding of the asse to the vine to insinuate the calling of the Gentiles to Christ: and by the blood of the grape to understand the blood of Christ, by the which wee are washed from our sinnes: by the eyes, the Prophets and Apostles: by the teeth, the Doctors and Pastors of the Church, whose office it is to prepare the spirituall food for the people. 3. Nor yet is that mysticall sense proper to this place, to signifie the abundance of spirituall knowledge in the Church under Christ. 4. And with Hierome literally to understand the colt which the Apostles found tyed, which they loosed and brought to Christ, seemeth to be forced. 5. Wherefore the meaning is no more but this: to shew, that in Iudahs lot, there should bee vines of that greatnesse as they might serve to binde their asses unto, Perer. and they should be as common, as shrubbes, and bushes, to the which they use to tye their Cattell, Iun. Calvin. And that they should bring their asses to their vineyards, to load them with grapes, Mercer. Yea and such plenty of wine they should have, that they might use it in stead of water to wash their garments, Mercer. and it should bee excellent wine, such as maketh the eyes of them that drinke it red: and such store of good pastures should bee in Iudahs portion, that they might eat milke in great abundance, Iun.

QUEST. XV. Of the situation of Zabulun.

Vers. 13. ZAbulun shall dwell by the sea side. 1. Iacob rehearsed not his sonnes according to the order of their birth, for Zabulun was the tenth sonne: first, he nameth the sonnes of Leah toge|ther, then the sonnes of the concubines; Zabulun is set before Isachar, who was the elder in respect of the situation of the countrey, for Isachar had his lot betweene Zabulun and Dan, Mercer. Zabuluns bor|der did not extend to Zidon, for it is like mention would have beene made thereof, Iosh. 19. where the dwelling of Zabulun is bounded, Perer. Neither is the meaning that they should only traffike with the Sidonians, as Andr. Masius: but that their side and coasts should bee over against Sidon, situated by the sea, and full of havens, Iun. 3. This tribe of Zabulun was famous, because of the mount Tabor, where Christ was transfigured, and the citie Nazareth, where Christ was conceived, Luke 1.26. and brought up, Math. 2.23. there also Christ began to preach, Matth. 4.15. to the people that sat in darknesse: he began there, where was greatest need: for they that dwell by the sea are most given to corrupt manners; 1. Because of their wealth, which maketh them proud. 2. Their situation, which ministreth occa|sion of robberies, and pyracies upon the seas. 3. Because of their trading with other countreyes: and therefore Plato in his common-wealth would not have the Metropolis, or chiefe citie, neere unto the Sea, by ten miles, as Eusebius sheweth, that Ierusalem was situate, Libr. 12. de praeparat. c. 27. ex Perer. 4. I omit here Ambrose allegorie, that compareth the Church to Zabulun, which is situate upon the sea of this world, subject to much trouble, seeth the wracke of Heretikes, Pagans, Iewes: is occupied in spirituall merchandise, in transporting and bringing men to the kingdome of God: Iacob hath no such meaning here, but only sheweth how well Zabulun should bee situated for trafficke, as Moses afterwards said, Rejoyce Zebulun in thy going out, that is, in thy prosperous voyages, Deut. 33.18.

QUEST. XVI. Of Isachars sloth and love of ease.

Vers. 14. ISachar shalbe a strong asse, &c. 1. The Chalde paraphrast giveth a contrary sense, that Isachar shall subdue provinces, and dispeople the inhabitants: whereas Iacob sheweth, that by reason of their sloth, they shall become tributarie. 2. Some Hebrews understand this couching like to an asse, of their great labour and studie in the law, as out of this tribe came men that had understanding of times, to know what Israel ought to doe: 1 Chron. 12.32. but this is but an inforced interpretation. 3. Isachar then is compared to a strong asse, (not lying betweene two bounds, that is, the sea of Galilee on the one side, and Thabor on the other, as Mercer: but) couching betweene two burthens, as the word mish-hat, is better translated: because an asse yeeldeth his backe to the burthen, and willingly beareth it, and plyeth his provender, notwithstanding his burthen; so Isachar should labour as an asse in tylling of the ground, and give himselfe to sloth at home, and doe no exploit abroad, as Moses saith, and thou Isachar in thy tents, Deut. 33. That is, hee would not willingly be drawne from home, but rather choose to redeeme his ease and quietnesse with any tribute, imposition, or other burthen, that should be laid upon him, Iun.

QUEST. XVII. How Dan should judge his people.

Vers. 16. DAn shall judge his people, &c. 1. In that Dan is placed next, who was the sonne of Bilha R•chels maid▪ and Nephtali was the other, but Gad and Asher come betweene, the reason may be, for that their ⟨◇⟩ did so fall out together in the land: or i• ⟨◇⟩ like that Iacob did not tie himselfe to any order in the setting downe of his children, Mercer. 2. This prophecie is unfitly applied to Antichrist, that he should be as a serpent biting the horse heeles, as Perer. for that Antichrist shall not come of Dan, it shall be shewed afterwards among the places of confutation: neither ⟨...⟩ understood of the tribe onely in generall, that it should be counted as one of the tribes, Calvin. nor yet of Sampson onely, as the Hebrewes, who caused the rider to fall back wards▪ when he pulled downe ⟨◇⟩ house upon the Philisti••. But it is both understood of the whole tribe in generall, how by subtilty they should enlarge their bounds, as we may see Iudg. 18. with a speciall reverence to Sampson, who of Dan judged Israel 20. yeares, and by subtilty unawares did assault the Philistine: and therefore is compared to a Lion leaping out of Bashan for his prey, Deut. 33.2•. so that this is set downe as an honour to the tribe of Dan▪ that as out of other tribes, foure onely excepted, Ruben, Simeon, Gad, Asher; so out of Dan should arise one that should judge his people, Chalde▪ Paraph. Iun.

QUEST. XVIII. What salvation Iacob looketh for.

Vers. 18. O Lord I have waited for thy salvation, &c. 1. The meaning of which words is not that he desireth to be preserved from the craft of Dan, as before he said of Simeon and Levi, into their secret let not my soule enter, vers. 6. Olanster. 2. Nor yet doth Iacob correct himselfe, as though he had taken Sampson for the Messiah, for seeing by the Spirit of Prophecie what great deliverance he should bring to Israel: and therefore now sheweth that he expecteth another Saviour, Rupert. Lyr••us: for Ia/cob did know that the Messiah should come of Iudah, and not of Dan•. Neither ye• saith hee thus to convince the Jewes of errour, which in time to come should take Antichrist for the Messiah: teaching them to expect the true Messiah, Perer: for there is no such feare that the Jewes should take Antichrist, which is the Pope, with his idolatrous corporation for their Messiah. 4. Therefore Iacob foreseeing the double dangers which the tribe of Dan should be subject unto, both temporall, in being oppressed of their enemies, as they were of the Ammorites, Iudg. 1.24. and spirituall in being corrupted with idolatry, Iudg. 18. Iacob prayeth for Gods gracious assistance and deliverance, Iun. looking also to the Messiah, in whom the deliverance and redemption of his Church is accomplished.

QUEST. XIX. Of the victorie of Gad.

Vers. 19. GAd, an host of men shall overcome him, &c. 1. Iacob alludeth much to his sonnes names: as before he said, Dan shall judge his people, whom Rachel so called, because the Lord had judged on her side, Gen. 30.6. which is derived of don, to judge: so here also in another sense reference is made to the name of Gad, which signifieth an host or armie.

2. Some doe understand this prophecie of Iepthe, of his good successe against the Ammonites Iudg. 11. whom they thinke to have beene of the tribe of Gad, because he was of Gilead, where the Gadites inhabited, 1 Chron. 5.16. Cajetan. Contra. Iepthe is rather to be thought to have beene of the tribe of Ma/nasses, because Gilead was his father: not Gilead the sonne of Machir, the sonne of Manasses, but ano|ther of the same name and kindred: and the children of Manasses had the halfe of Gilead in their lot, as the Gadites had another part, Ios•. 13.31.

3. Some doe expound this prophecie of the Gadites marching with the rest of the tribes against the Canaanites, and their returning backe againe over Jordan to their owne possessions: so Hierome and the Chalde Paraphrast: but this was not peculiar to the Gadites, for the tribe of

Ruben, and the halfe tribe of Manasses went also before their brethren as well as Gad: neither in this their exploit were they overcome, but had prosperous successes against the Canaanites.

4. This prophesie then is rather to be preferred to the divers conflicts which the Gadites had with the Hagarenes, with Iethur, Naphish, and Nodab, whom at length they overcame, when as they carried from them 50000. Camels, and a great prey of cattell beside, 1 Chron. 5.20. Iun. Mercer. This also is agreeable to the prophesie of Gad: comparing him to a Lion, that catcheth for his prey, the arme with the head, Deut. 33.20.

5. Moses goeth further, and speaketh more particularly to Gad, as, ^{*}He looked unto himselfe at the begin|ning, and there was the portion of the law-giver hid: that is, the Law-giver Moses, first looked unto this tribe, and gave them a portion beyond Jordan: the Latine translator readeth corruptly; Because the Doctor or teacher was buried or laid up in their part or lot: which Perer understandeth of Moses buriall in Mount Nebo, which afterward belonged to Gad: but the place of Moses buriall was not yet revealed: Moses further addeth; He shall come with the hands of the people, to execute the justice of the Lord: which was performed when Gad went up before Israel against the Canaanites.

QUEST. XX. Of the blessing of Asher.

Vers. 20 Concerning Asher, his bread shall be fat, and he shall give pleasures for a King. 1. Some reade, he shall enjoy, or be nourished with the pleasures of a King, Chald. but the other reading is more proper and agreeable to the originall. 2. These pleasures fit for a King, are not understood of his fat bread, as Mercer. but rather of other delicate fruits wherewith that Countrey abounded: as Moses saith, of Asher, He shall dip his foot in oyle, Deut. 33.24. which is acceptable to Kings, and whereof are compounded sweet ointments for Princes, Olaster. 3. Moses setteth downe other blessings of Asher beside the pleasantnesse of his soyle: as that he shall be blessed with children: His shooes should be iron and brasse: his Countrey should abound with these mettals: and further, his strength should continue all his dayes:

Page 396

Asher should bring forth strong men: Hierome readeth, as the dayes of thy youth, so shall be thoe old age, rather interpreting than translating: Iunius for strength, readeth, speech, making this to be the sense; there shall be speech of thee as long as thou livest: but the word 〈◇〉, signifieth strength, rather than speech, as the Septuag. doe expresse the sense by the word, Exius, 〈◇〉, strength. 4. This fat bread may ^{•••}tually be applied to Christ, who is the bread of life, that nourisheth our soules. Iohn 6. Must.

QUEST. XXI. Of the blessing of Nephtali.

Vers. 21. Nephtali is an hinde let goe, giving goodly word, &c. 1. The Hebrewes understand 〈◇〉 bles|sing given to Nephtali of the fruitfulnessse of the ground, which by reason of the forward|nesse therof in speedy bringing forth of fruit, is compared to an Hinde: from thence the first offering were brought to the Temple, over the which the Priests praised God: to this sense the Chalde Paraphrase seel|meth to incline, as is to be seene before in the divers readings. 2. Some doe apply it to Barak of Nephtali whose victory against Sisara is described, Iu. 4. and the goodly or faire words here spoken of, to the 〈◇〉 of Barak and Deborah, Iud. 5. Consent. 3. But as this prophesie very well comprehendeth that event, 〈◇〉 generally describeth the state and condition of the whole tribe, who should be as forward to battell 〈◇〉 an Hinde let goe of the hunters is swift: but yet they should by friendly and peaceable words seeke for peace, before they would rashly attempt wa^{•••}e, Iunius they should be of gentle and friendly behaviour▪ and therefore beloved, Perer. Hereunto agreeth the prophecie of Moses: Nephtali satisfied with , and filled with the blessings of the Lord, Deut. 33.23. 4. And whereas it followeth in that place, possesse the West and the South: the meaning is not, that he should possesse the Sea, as Hierome trana•sleth, either the Me|diterranean Sea, or the Sea of Tyberias, as the Chalde: or that he should by traffique with others have benefit of the Sea; but because the Sea was Westward, it is usually taken for the West, as Gen. 12.8. Bethel is said to be on the Sea side, that is, Westward. 5. This prophecie also may bee extended to the times of Christ, who began to preach and to utter his pleasant and comfortable words in the tribe of Nephtali, Matth. 4. Hierome.

QUEST. XXII. Ioseph why compared to a fruitfull bough.

Vers. 22. Ioseph shall be a fruitfull bough. 1. Which is a better reading than to say, a sonne increasing: be|cause of the words following, a fruitfull bough by the West side, where the metaphor is continued: Ioseph is campared to a fruitfull bough planted by the fountaine, Iunius. 2. His branches run upon the wall, that is, out of him branched the two tribes, Ephraim and Manasseh, Chald. Iun. Some reade, his daugh|ters ran upon the wall, which *R•si*expoundeth of the daughters of Egypt, that did strive to behold Io/seph riding in his chariot: some of Iosephs mistresse that gazed upon his beauty: but the first r•ading is to be preferred, Iun. Mercer.

QUEST. XXIII. How Ioseph his bow abode strong, &c.

Vers. 23. The archers grieved him, &c. his bow abode strong, &c. Some referre this to the time to come, signifying the great troubles and afflictions which Iosephs posterity should have, and the di|vers conflicts with the Syrians and other enemies: but it more aptly describeth the divers attempts of Io/sephs brethren, of his mistresse and master against him, Iunius, Mercer. 2. It typically also setteth forth the practices of the Scribes and Pharises against our Saviour▪ Calvin. The Septuagint reade amisse, Their bowes were broken: and the Latine Interpreter, The bonds of his armes were loosed: referring it to the bonds and fetters wherewith Ioseph was tied: whereas in a contrary sense the text is, his armes were strengthe|ned: not adorned with bracelets and gold, as the Chalde: but Ioseph is likened to a strong archer: that as the other his enemies as archers shot at him, so his bow was steadfast, and his armes strong: thus the in|ward fortitude and strength of his minde is expressed, Mercerus.

QUEST. XXIV. In what sense Ioseph is called the feeder and stone of Israel.

Vers. 24. Of whom the feeder, &c. 1. Of whom, that is, of the mighty God of Iacob, not of Ioseph, for he is meant by the feeder: nor from whence came the feeder, that is, out of prison Io/seph was taken: but the meaning is, that the mighty God of Iacob appointed Ioseph to be a feeder, &c. 2. Neither by the feeder doe we understand the Captaines and Kings that came of Ephraim, out of Ioseph: neither yet doe we approve that reading, Of whom was hee that feedeth the stone of Israel: that is, Iacob, which was the head and stone of that familie, as the Chalde, Mercer. Pagnin. nor yet by the stone of Is|rael is God understood in this place, as the Genevens. reade, the feeder of the stone of Israel: but the best reading is, of whom, that is, of God was the feeder and stone of Israel, that is Ioseph, who was the noul|risher of his fathers house, and as a stone and rocke of refuge unto his brethren, Iun.

QUEST. XXV. Of Iosephs blessing both from above and beneath.

Vers. 25. Who shall blesse thee with the blessings of heaven from above. 1. By the blessings of heaven he understandeth not onely the pleasant showres and raine, but the goodnesse and whole|somenesse of the ayre, and the sweet influence of the starres: as Moses further explaneth this prophecie: Blessed of the Lord is his land, for the sweetnesse of heaven, and for the dew, &c. for the sweete increase of the Sunne, and for the sweet increase of the Moone, Deut. 33.13, 14. 2. By the blessings of the depth, is meant not onely the earth below, as the Septuag, but the rivers and springs, which doe arise from beneath and water the earth, Mercer. 3. By the breasts and the wombe, are signified not onely the plentifull increase and prosperous education of the children, as the Chalde, but the multiplying also of beasts and cattell, Iun. but this blessing upon Iosephs posterity, was afterward because of their sinnes turned into a curse upon Ephraim. Give them a barren wombe, and dry breasts, Ose. 9.14. Muscul. 4. I omit here the mysticall application of this text unto Christ, who was blessed both from above, as God, and from below, as man; who was blessed in the wombe, being conceived without sinne, and blessed at his mothers breasts, Perer. Though all this be true of our blessed Saviour, yet it is not the meaning of this place.

QUEST. XXVI. How Iacobs blessing is said to be stronger than the blessing of his elders.

Vers. 26. The blessings of thy father, &c. Some read, shall be stronger than the blessings of mine elders. B.G. P. and do understand it some of the blessings of his elders *passiue*ly, wherewith they were blessed of their fathers: that Iacob bestoweth a greater blessing upon Ioseph than his fathers received, Mer. Some, actively of the blessings, wherewith his elders blessed him, Burgens. But Isaacks blessing upon Iacob, whereby hee bestowed the birthright upon him, seemeth not to have beene inferiour to this given to Ioseph: some understand the blessings which Iacob received of God, & the promises, which were greater than any which his fathers received, Lyran. True it is, that Iacob had more visions, than any of his fathers, Abraham or Isaack and that he excelled in the gift of prophesie, and that he saw greater increase of his seed: yet Iacob would not preferre himselfe before Abraham, who by faith was justified with God, & is called the father of the faithfull: some say Iacobs blessing upon Ioseph was greater, because it was neerer to take effect, Calvin. 2. But the other reading is to be preferred: that, the blessings of thy father are strong, with the blessings of mine Elders: not above them, or strengthened by them, as though Iacobs blessing received force and vertue from his fathers blessing, as Rupertus: but that being added together, and united with the former blessings of Abraham and Isaack, they are the stronger: so that all those blessings together, of Abraham, Isaack, and Iacob, doe light upon the head of Ioseph, Iunius. The Hebrew preposition gna, signifieth as well cum, with; as supra above.

QUEST. XXVII. What is meant by the end of the hils of the world.

Vers. 26. VNto the end of the hils of the world. 1. Some read, to the desire of the hils. H.P. and understand it of the Messiah, who was appointed to come, from the beginning of the world, before the hils were, Rupert. Some by the hils interpret the Princes of the world, that desired to be partakers of Iosephs blessings, Cal. 2. But the better reading is, the end of the hils: and so the word here used, taavah, shall be derived rather from taah, which signifieth to limit, than from avah, to desire: Mercer. which words wee rather with Kimhi, whom Iunius followeth, referre to the duration and continuance of time, that this blessing shall continue, as long as the hils: than with R. Salomon referre it to the place: as that this blessing should not containe it selfe within the countrey of Canaan, but be extended to the utmost hils of the world, Iun. Mercer. 3. This blessing promised to be perpetuall, as concerning things temporall, was conditionall, and Iosephs posterity lost it by their sinnes: but the spirituall verity and truth thereof is eternall in Christ, Mercer. 4. This blessing pronounced upon Ioseph, may also bee extended to the fruitfull hils and mountaines, which fell to the lot of Iosephs sonnes, as Moses in Iosephs blessing, maketh mention of the ancient mountaines and old hils, Deutr. 33.15. Tstat.

QUEST. XXVIII. Why Ioseph is said to be separate from his brethren.

Vers. 26. *V*Pon the head of him that was separate from his brethren, &c. 1. Some reade, the Prince of his brethren▪ and so would derive it of nazar, a crowne. 2. Hierome a Nazarite, as though Ioseph should be so called of his holinesse and chastity: but as yet the profession of the Nazarites was not instituted. 3. Ioseph then is said to be separate from his brethren, for so nazar signifieth, to divide or separate: not for that he did separate himselfe from the evill manners and conditions of his brethren, whom he complained of to his father, or because his brethren did separate him from themselves, when they sold him into Aegypt, but because the Lord separated, and set him apart from the rest, and advanced him to honour, Iun. Vatab.

QUEST. XXIX. Why Benjamin is compared unto a Wolfe.

Vers. 27. *B*enjamin shall ravin as a Wolfe. 1. R. Salomon applyeth it to that exploit of the Benjamites, that took as a prey the daughters of Silo, as they came forth to daunce, to bee their wives. 2. Some other under|stand it of Saul that prayed upon the Amalekites, in the morning, and of Esther and Mordeca•, that in the evening, that is a good while after, made a prey of Haman. 3. Some of the fathers, as Ambros. Chrysostome, Theodoret, re|ferre this prophecie to Saint Paul, who was of Benjamin, and as a wolfe at the first made havocke of the Church, but afterward being converted, divided the spoyle among the Gentiles, in preaching of the Gospell. 4. Some doe thinke this spoken of Benjamin, because the Temple was situate at Jerusalem, in the tribe of Benjamin: where the sacrifices were brought to the alter, which devoured them as a wolfe: but this was more proper to Levi, for the Priests did eat that which remained of the sacrifice,) than to Benjamin: indeed Moses touched this prerogative of Benjamin in his blessing, saying, that God dwelled between his shoulders, Deut. 33.12. that is, upon the hils in his chiefe city, where the temple stood: but this is not the meaning here. 5. Wherefore this prophecie sheweth the warlike disposition of the whole tribe of Benjamin, as may appeare by that fierce battell which they fought with the other tribes, wherein they twice overcame them, being fewer in number, Iud. 20. and by the wars, which the house of Saul had with David, and the tribe of Iudah for the king|dome, Iun.

QUEST. XXX. How Iacob is said to have given every one of his sonnes a blessing.

Vers. 28. *E*very one of them he blessed with a severall blessing. Because Iacob did not blesse all his sons, but accur|sed three of them, Ruben, Levi, and Simeon. 1. We neither say with Ambrose that they are rather to be called prophecies, than blessings, lib. de Benedic. Patriarc. c. 2. 2. Neither with Pererius, that they were so called of the greatest part: for it is said, that he blessed every one. 3. Neither by the word blessing, is cursing understood by an antiphrasis, that is, a contrary kind of speech, as some thinke: but Iacob blessed them verily and indeed. 4. But the opinion of R. Salomon is not farre from blasphemy, that Iacob did indeed purpose to blesse his sonnes, but falling in|to phrensie, he cursed them in stead of blessing: for this were to make the motions of Gods spirit, mad fits. 5. Neither is it like, that Iacob gave his sonnes other blessings here not expressed. 6. But hee indeed blessed them all, though not alike: for the temporall chastisement laid upon Ruben, Simeon, Levi, was but a fatherly correction for their amendment, Calvin. they also are blessed, because they are counted among the tribes, & had their inheritance among them, Mercer. whereupon afterward, Moses in particular blessed both Ruben and Levi, Deut. 33. Iacob also doth conclude these three within the number of his sonnes, and so comprehendeth them within the covenant, Iun.

QUEST. XXXI. Of the double cave where Iacob desired to be buried.

*Vers. 30. IN the cave that is beside Machpelah, &c. 1. Iacob maketh a particular and perfect description of the cave, where he would be buried, from whence he had beene absent 17. yeares, Ioseph 39. yeares, that they should not doubt of the place. 2. But that is a fable devised by the Jewes, that Tsepho the sonne of Eliphaz did strive with Iacobs sonnes about this burying place, and that he fought a great battell with them, but they overcame him and brought him downe to Aegypt, and when Ioseph was dead, he fled out of Aegypt into Italy. 3. Iacob intreated his sonne Ioseph to bury him with his fathers, but he chargeth and commandeth his sonnes: because Ioseph was the principall, who should obtaine leave of Pharaoh, and at whose costs Iacobs funerall should bee solemnized: the rest were but to accompany him, Mercer. beside his other sons did still depend upon him, and were as a part of his family, whereas Ioseph was a man of great command and authority in Aegypt, Perer. 4. Iacob sheweth who were buried there, and maketh speciall mention of Abraham; that his sonnes should bee more carefull there to bury him also, seeing Abraham had of purpose bought that ground to bee a place of buriall for him and his, Luther. and seeing that his mother was there buried, and Leah his wife, it might seeme more reasonable that he should be buried there also. 5. These three couples here mentioned were buried together there, Abraham, Sara: Isaack, Rebeckah: Iacob, Leah: the hebrewes thinke also that Adam and Eve had their sepulture there, but that is not like: as it is also uncertaine, whether any other of the twelve Patriarkes were there interred, Mercer.

QUEST. XXXII. Why Iacob maketh mention againe of the purchase of the cave.

Vers. 32. THE purchase of the field, &c. 1. This repetition is not inserted by Moses, as Marlorat; but they were the words of Iacob. 2. This verse therefore without cause is wholly omitted and left out by the Latine Translat^r. 3. Yet did not Iacob here shew unto his sonnes the very instrument of conveyance, whereby Abraham did purchase the cave and field, as the Hebrewes: for that rite & custome was not then in use. But Iacob hereby sheweth the undoubted right which he had to that ground, whereof his fathers had possession both alive and dead.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. How the Patriarkes and Prophets used imprecations.

Vers. 7. CVrsed be their wrath, &c. The righteous did many times use imprecations and denounce curses: as David, Psal. 35.4. Let them be confounded and put to shame that seeke after my soule: and in other places, and Iacob here: but they did it not in wrath, or in their heat, but with these considerations and regards: 1. They spake as Prophets, and as Ministers and Pronouncers of Gods sentence and decree: so that they were not so much maledictions, as predictions, Perer. 2. For the most part, they accursed such only in temporall things for their amendment: as Iacob here doth his sonnes: as David also saith, Fill their faces with shame, that they may seeke thy name, O Lord, Psal. 83.18. Perer. 3. If they denounced any spirituall curse, it was upon such as were incorrigible: as Psal. 68.21. God will wound the hairy pate of him, that goeth on in his sinnes. 4. They did not hereby revenge their owne particular cause, but did censure them as enemies to the whole Church: as Psal. 35.20. They imagine deceitfull words against the quiet of the land. But these examples are no warrant for us to use the like imprecations, because we have not the like spirit of prophecie: as our Saviour answered to Iames and Iohn, who asked him if they should command fire to come downe from heaven upon the Samaritans, as Elias did; Ye know not of what spirit ye are of, Luk. 9.55.

2. Doct. Iacob prophesieth of his sonnes, as the spirit of God directed him.

Further, in that Iacob spareth not to pronounce the curse of God against his owne sonnes: it is evident that hee spake not of any partiall affection, or ambitiously seeking to make his posterity great, as the prophane disciples of Lucian the Atheists use to object against the doctrine and history of Moses, Calvin. but that he spake as he was thereunto moved by the spirit of God: both in that against his naturall and fatherly disposition, hee pronounceth hard and heavy things against his sonnes; as also because the event afterward answered to these his predictions.

3. Doct. All our helpe and strength is from God.

Vers. 24. The armes of his hands were strengthened by the hand of the mighty God, &c.

Although in waging of battell, weapons of warre, and other meanes are carefully to be used; yet the help power and strength must come from God: as Ioseph was strengthened by the hand of God against his enemies: as David prayeth, Make haste to deliver me, make haste to helpe me, O God, Psal. 70.1. Luther.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. That the punishment of sinne remaineth not after the remission of the fault.

Vers. 6. INto their secret let not my soule come. This punishment, which was inflicted upon Simeon and Levi, was not a satisfaction for their sinne past, which was already upon their repentance remitted unto them, as the Popish doctrine is, that the punishment of sinne often remaineth, the fault being pardoned: but the Lord thin|keth good to chastise those which have offended, though their sin be forgiven them, for these causes: 1. That they may thorowly be humbled, and take heed, that thy commit not the like againe: as David therefore saith, It is good for me that I have beene afflicted, Calv. 2. For the example of other, that they also may be warned, that they offend not in the like: as this correction imposed upon Simeon and Levi, was for the admonition of their brethren and posterity. 3. That men feeling the justice of God in their due corrections, may flee unto Gods mercy, and the promises of God in Christ: as Adam, when he received the sentence of death for his transgression, had also the promise of the Messiah given him, Mercer.

2. Confut. Against popish <...> .

SEeing then, that corrections remaining after the forgiveness of sin, are to make ourselves and others more cautelous: this is no ground for the Popish purgatory paines, which are not visible, and so serve not for the example of others: neither are they availeable unto godly repentance, for the which there is no place after this life, Mercer.

3. Confut. Peter not the chiefest of the Apostles because first <◇> .

Vers. 3. RVben mine eldest sonne. This is to be observed, that the twelve Patriarks are not rehearsed in the same order here, as before, Gen. 30. and Genes. 27. and afterward, Numb. 1.

<◇> . 33. yet <◇> these places Ruben is named first: but not alwayes, sometime Iudah is named before him, as Numb. 2. As then this were but a simple argument for the preheminance of Ruben before his brethren, because he is in most places named first, being the eldest: so as simply doe the Papists conclude for Peters supremacie before the other Apostles, because he is commonly named firsts which was rather because of his Elder|ship, than any priority before the rest: neither is he alwayes named in the first place, for Galat. 9. <◇> is named before him.

4. Confut. The bookes of Iudith and Tobie not canonicall.

Vers. 5. Simeon and Levi brethren in evill. Hence it may appeare, that the booke of Iudith is not Canonicall, because there this fact of Simeon is commended, cap. 9.2. which here Iacob condemneth and accurseth. It satisfieth not to say with Dyonis. Carthusian. that the fact of Simeon and Levi in respect of the Sichemites was just, but unjust in respect of them who brake their faith and covenant: for Iudith commendeth their zeale; which were moved with thy zeale, v. 4. Neither is Lyranus and Pererius answer sufficient: 1. For Iudith in that place commendeth also the manner of the fact, and saith, that God did put the sword of vengeance into their hand, vers. 2. and Iacob here curseth their very affection and zeale wherewith they were first moved: Cursed be their wrath, for it was cruell: and further, whereas Iudith doth set it downe as a reward of their zeale, Thou gavest their Princes to the slaughter: Iacob even there|in doth accurse: For in their wrath they slew a man. It is evident then that the booke of Iudith was not written by the spirit of God, because it commendeth that which is here condemned. Seeing also Iacob remembreth Sampson in Dan; Mordecai and Esther in Benjamin; Barak in Nepthali: it is like that Tobie also under Nepthali, and Iudith in Simeon, should not have beene forgotten, if their stories were of like truth.

5. Confut. The Pope succeedeth not Christ in this Kingdome.

Vers. 10. THE scepter shall not depart from Iudah. Pererius applieth this to the kingdome of Christ, that is, his Church, which shall endure for ever, and so shall the Pope Christs vicar (saith he who succeedeth Christ as the sonne doth the father) in his authority and dignity, in Gen. 49. numer. 58. Con•a. True it is, that of Christs dominion there shall be none end, and that he will alwayes have a Church upon the earth. But the Pope, which is the Antichrist, is no successor to Christ, but an usurper of his kingdome: he is Christs son, as the Jewes boasted they were Abrahams sonnes: but Christ telleth them plainly, They were of their father the Devill: if ye were Abrahams children (saith our Saviour) ye would do• the workes of Abraham, Iohn 8.39.44. So the Pope is his sonne, whose doctrine he followeth: but to forbid to marry, and to teach to abstaine from meats (as the Pope doth) are the doctrines of Devils, 1 Tim. 4.1, 2.

6. Confut. Antichrist shall not come of Dan.

Vers. 17. DAn shall be a serpent by the way, &c Divers of the ancient Writers upon this place did ground their opinion, that Antichrist should come of Dan, and therefore they say that tribe is omit|ted, Apocal. 7. and this Pererius holdeth a probable opinion, and worthy of credit. Con•r. 1. By this meanes that which Iacob pronounceth as a blessing upon Dan, they turne to a curse: and whereas Iacob speaketh of one that should be a deliverer of his people, which some doe fitly apply to Sampson, they would have him point out an enemy and adversary to the Church of God. 2. The tribe of Dan was dispersed a thousand yeeres before Antichrist appeared in the world. 3. Danis omitted in the Apocalypse, because of the idolatry which began in that tribe, wherein Antichrist doth imitate him, though hee come not of his stocke: so likewise is Simeon omitted in Moses benediction, Deuter. 33. yet they will not •nferre, that Antichrist should come of that tribe: as Simeon is omitted by Moses for his evill example, so Dan is by Iohn for his idolatry.

7. Confut. Against Limbus <◇> .

Vers. 25. WHO shall blesse thee with the blessings of the deep•• <◇> lieth beneath. Pererius maketh Ioseph here a type of Christ: whom the Patriarks blessed and praised in the lake or Limbus, in the deepe beneath, whom he delivered from thence, numer. 1•5. Contra. 1. These are but weake arguments of such weighty matters, that are taken from types and figures. • Iacob speaketh here of temporall bles|sings, of the wholesome aire, pleasant dewes, fruitfull ground, and nourishing springs in the deepe below; they are therefore improperly applied to spirituall. 3. Neither shall he ever be able to prove, that the Pa|triarkes were shut up in the deepe below: seeing that the rich man in hell looked up, and lift up his eyes to Lazarus being in Abrahams bosome, Luk. 16. it was then a place above, not in the deepe beneath.

8. Confut. What it is to be gathered to his people.

Vers. 33. WAs gathered to his people. 1. Burgensis will have this people to be the fathers in Limbus, to whom Iacob went, so also Lyranus: Contra. 1. Henoch was of this people, to whom the Patriarks went after death, but hee was not in Limbus, hee was taken up to heaven and walked with God. 2. Abraham went to his fathers in peace, Gen. 15.15. that is, with joy and comfort: but what comfort is there in Limbus, a lake, and dungeon of darknesse? 3. Wherefore to be gathered to his people, is not to be joyned to the Angels, as gloss. interlinear. for Abraham is said to goe also to his fathers, but the Angels were not his fathers: neither is this phrase all one, as to say, he slept with his fathers, or went the way of all flesh, or changed his life, as Perer. Mercer. for Ismael is said also to goe to his people, Genes. 5. Now Abraham and Ismael had not the same people to goe unto: the faithfull cannot be said to be Ismaels people, nor the prophane sort to be Abrahams. But if the meaning of the phrase were no more, than that they were gathered and joyned to the state of the dead, the faithfull and prophane sort should all goe to one people: wherefore this phrase betokeneth a speciall disposition of the soules of the faithfull after this life, in being associated to the company of the just: and a laying up of their bodies in assured hope of the resurrection, Calvin. Muscul. Luther. The Apostle also sheweth what it is for the righteous to be gathered to their people: Wee are come to the celestiall Ierusalem, to the innumerable company of Angels, to the congregation of the first borne, &c. to the spirits of just and perfect men, Hebr. 12.22.13. To all these are we joyned by faith while we live, and really, when we are dead: now quoad spem, in hope, then quoad rem, in deed.

6. Places of morall use.

1. Mor. Fathers must rebuke and chastise their children.

Vers. 4. Thou shalt not be excellent. Fathers may learne by Iacobs example to chastise their children for their sinnes, as here Ruben is censured for defiling his fathers bed: for this cause Heli and his posterity were punished, because hee did not reprove his sonnes according to the quality of their offence, Perer.

2. Mor. Gods vengeance though it be deferred will certainly come.

FURTHER, in that Rubens punishment had beene a long time suspended and deferred, almost 40. yeeres, after he had committed this uncleanne sinne, yet at the last it commeth: let no sinner flatter himselfe in his impunity: for if the long suffering of God draw him not to repentance, it shall but increase his punishment: as the Apostle sheweth, Rom. 2.4, 5.

3. Mor. The short pleasures of sinne deprive men of many blessings.

AGAINE, as Ruben for a little short pleasure, lost his birthright and dignity: so many for the vaine and momentany pleasures of this life, are deprived of many and great blessings: like to Esau, that for a messe of pottage, did part with his birthright.

4. Mor. Contumely against parents never goeth unpunished.

WE see also, what an high offence before God it is, to offer any wrong or contumely to our parents: such was Cham toward Noah; Absalon toward David; and here Ruben, that polluted his father Iacobs bed.

5. Mor. Against unjust and immoderate revenge.

Vers. 7. CVrsed be their wrath. The Lord condemneth all kinde of revenge that proceedeth of wrath, especially such as here was committed by Simeon and Levi. 1. It was done by craft and subtilly, under pretence of friendship. 2. Against men unawares, suspecting nothing. 3. When they were in griefe of body. 4. With a pretext and shew of religion. 5. The revenge farre exceeded in greatnesse the quality of the offence: Such a kinde of revenge is unjust and cruell: Wherefore in this case, wee should follow the Wise-mans counsell: Say not, I will recompence evill, but wait upon the Lord, and he shall save thee, Prov. 20.22. Perer.

6. Mor. Every mans portion in the earth assigned of God.

Vers. 13. AS Zabulun shall dwell by the sea side. Hence we learne that the lot of men, for their habitation and dwelling in the earth, falleth not out unto them by chance, but by Gods providence and appointment: for as it is in the Psalme, The earth is the Lords, and the fulnesse thereof, Psal. 24.1. therefore every one should be contented with his lot and portion, as assigned unto him of God, Perer.

7. Mor. The Church shall overcome at last.

Vers. 19. ANd an host of men shall overcome him, but he shall overcome at the last, &c. So the Church of God, though it shall indure much trouble and sorrow in the world, yet it shall triumph and have the victory in the end: as our Saviour saith to his Apostles, In the world yee shall have trouble, but be of good comfort, I have overcome the world, Iohn 16.33.

8. Mor. The quiet and peaceable end of the righteous.

Vers. 33. HE plucked up his feet into the bed. Before Iacob had raised up himselfe as well as he could, not having his legs hanging out of the bed, as Perer. that had beene no fit lying for a man ready to dye▪ but he had stretched out himselfe before, as well as he could, for reverence unto the word of God, which he delivered: but now feeling the houre of his death to be instant, hee doth gather up his legs, after a seemely and quiet manner, not struggling or striving against death, as many doe, but as though death were in his power, he doth meekely and gently yeeld himselfe unto it: such a peaceable and quiet kinde of departure God often granteth to his children, Muscul. Howbeit, this is not alwayes so: for sometime a wicked man may dye like a lambe, still and quiet, as the Psalme saith, There are no bands in his death▪ Psal. 73.4. and a righteous man may have a strong death, by reason of the extremity of his sicknesse, and the manner of the disease: but yet inwardly he hath a peaceable and quiet soule: and therefore Ba/laam had good reason to pray as he did: Let me dye the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his, Num. 23.10.

CHAP. L.

1. The Method and Argument.

IN this Chapter is set forth, 1. Iosephs piety toward his father Iacob, in causing him to be embawmed, vers. 2, 3. in his buriall, 1. He procured leave of Pharaoh, vers. 4, 5, 6. 2. He did honourably accompany him, vers. 7, 8, 9. 3. They mourned for him by the way, vers. 10, 11. 4. Then they buried him, as he had commanded.

2. His humanity toward his brethren: with their message in their fathers name, vers. 14, 15, 16. their humility, vers. 18. Iosephs friendly answer, vers. 19, 20, ●●

3. Iosephs prosperity in seeing his childrens children, v. 23.

4. His faithfull departure, buriall, and age, v. 24, 25.

2. The divers readings.

v. 2. he commanded those which had charge of funerals. S. commanded the Physitians: c•t.*

v. 4. spake to potentates of Pharaoh. S. spake to Pharaohs house: caet.*

v. 8. only their kinred they left, their sheepe and oxen, &c. S. their children or little ones: caet.

v. 10. they came to Goren Atad. G. to the corne-floore or field beset with thistles. T. to the corne-floore of Athad: cat. of Achad. H. athad, signifieth a thistle.*

v. 11. Abel Mizraim. G. the mourning of the Egyptians: cat.

v. 13. beside Mamre. G. before Mamre. B. over against Mamre: caet. against, or before the face of Mamre: cat.*

v. 19. feare not, can we resist Gods will? H. for I am Gods. S. for I feare God. C. am not I under God? G. am I God? B. am I in the stead of God? T.P.*

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions and places.

QUEST. I. Of the divers fashions of buriall.

Vers. 2. And Moses commanded his servants the Physitians, &c. 1. At the first, it seemeth that Physitians were not much regarded, seeing the servants were Physitians: so also it was among the Romans, but afterwards they grew in credit, and were much honoured, Plini. libr. 29. initi. 2. It seemeth also that some among the Egyptians were especially deputed for this service to embawme the dead. Dio/d•r. writeth, that they used to come to the house of the dead, to know in what manner they would have the buriall solemnized: for there were three degrees of buriall, some after a costly manner, some in a meane, some poorely had their funerals kept: and of these embawmers some did only cut the body, and take out the excrements, who were hated of all; some did embawme them with spices, and these were greatly honoured, Diodor. lib. 2. cap. 5. 3. Divers countries had divers fashions of buriall: The Hircani devoure dead bodies with dogs: the Iberi expose them to the vultures: the Nasamones bury them in the Sea, the Garamantes in the sand: the Celtae drinke in dead mens bones: the Scythians hang them up upon poles to waste and consume: the Indians hang them up in their houses: the Romans from the dayes of Scylla untill the time of the Emperours Antonini used to burne them, the Egyptians to embawme them. 4. The Persians burne not the dead, because they hold fire to be a God, and therefore not fit to feed of dead carkasses: the Egyptians burne not, because they hold fire to have life and to devoure, and when it hath devoured, it dieth it selfe, Perer. ex Herod. lib. 2.

QUEST. II. Of the time and continuance of the Egyptians mourning.

Vers. 3. SO 40. dayes were accomplished. 1. These 40. dayes of embawming are part of the 70. dayes of mourning, that is, they embawmed him 40. dayes, and mourned 30. dayes more, Mercer. not as Diodorus, that they embawmed 30. dayes, or as Herodot. that after the embawming, they salted the corps 70. dayes, or as Comestor, the Egyptians did mourne forty dayes, the Hebrewes thirty;* for the Egyptians are said to have mourned seventy dayes. 2. Before the times of the Gospell when the hope of the resurrection was not so common, the Hebrewes used more ceremonies in buriall, and the Egyptians and other nations, that had not that hope, more than they: so that this use and custome of the Hebrewes borrowed of the Egyptians, which they retained in burials of great persons, as Asa was laid into a bed of spices, 2 Chron. 12. 3. Ioseph did not observe this custome of embawming for feare to offend the Egyptians, but partly to honour his father with this solemnity without superstition, and partly of necessity, because they were to carry the corps a long journey, Mercerus. * 4. The Egyptians are said to have mourned, because it was no wonder, that he was bewailed of his owne children and family: neither doe they mourne, because by Iacobs comming into Egypt they escaped two yeeres of famine, as the Hebrewes imagine; for there were seven yeeres of famine compleat: but they mourned to shew their love unto Iacob, and their reverence to Ioseph. * 5. Here the Egyptians mourne seventy dayes: the Israelites for Moses mourned thirty dayes, following the Egyptian use: Numa Pompilius alloweth mourning of some ten moneths: the mourning for Constantine the great at Nicomedia continued twenty dayes: the custome was divers for the time: but the usuall stint was seven dayes, Ecclesiast. 22.13. so long mourned Ioseph for his father Iacob, v. 10. so many dayes did the Romans bewaile the Emperour Severus, Herodian. lib. 4. Iun.

QUEST. III. Why Ioseph moved Pharaoh by others, not by himselfe.

Vers. 4. Ioseph spake to the house of Pharaoh. 1. Ioseph used other intercessors to Pharaoh, because he had need of a great company to goe with them, which could not be done without Pharaohs leave, Muscul. 2. Ioseph also mourned, and therefore was not fit to present himselfe before the King: for such used not to come in the Princes presence, Esther 4.2. Iun. 3. Beside it was least suspicious for this matter to be moved by others: lest if Ioseph had spoken himselfe, hee might have beene thought to have despised the land of Egypt, and therefore he maketh mention of his fathers purpose before for his buriall, and the oath wherewith he bound him, Calvin. 4. Pharaoh also might have thought, that Ioseph had intended to leave Egypt, and therefore promiseth to returne againe, Mercer. 5. Beside, seeing the Egyptians moved for him, it was better accepted, because he had the consent of the whole court, Mercer. 6. The Hebrewes thinke, that Ioseph did in policie set others a worke, to decline the suit of the countries, who would have beene instant with Ioseph to bury his father in Egypt.

QUEST. IV. Why Iacob is said to have digged or made a grave for himselfe.

Vers. 5. Bury me in my grave which I have made or digged for me. 1. This is not understood of the purchase of the place of sepulture made by Iacob; as the word carah to dig, sometime signifieth, as Deut. 2.6. Thou shalt dig (that is, buy) water for money: for Iacob did not buy this double cave, but Abraham. 2. And Iacob cannot be said to buy it, because Abraham bought it, as Lyranus: for Abraham every where, is said to have bought it, and not Iacob, Gen. 49.30.50.13. 3. That also is but a fable of the Hebrewes, that Iacob is said to have digged, or gotten it, because he bought out Esaus right with a summe of gold. 4. And it signifieth more, than that Iacob appointed himselfe a certaine place of buriall there, Perer. 5. Therefore it is most like, that in deed Iacob did cause a place of sepulture to be digged, and made ready for himselfe against he died, though this be not else where mentioned, August. qu. 170. in Genes. and so was it the use, for men in their life time to make their sepulchers, as Asa did, 2 Chron. 16.14. and Ioseph of Arimathea, Matth. 27.60. Iun.

QUEST. V. Why Christ refused to give leave to his disciple to bury his father: yet Pharaoh granteth it to Ioseph.

Vers. 6. And Pharaoh said, Goe up and bury thy father. It need not seeme strange that Pharaoh an heathen King giveth leave to Ioseph to bury his father, and yet our Saviour would not grant so much to one of his disciples: for the case was not alike. 1. This disciple was called to preach the Gospell, and he could not attend that businesse, unlesse he neglected his calling. 2. His meaning was, not presently to goe bury his father, and come strait againe, but to stay with him till he died. 3. Beside his father, was none of the faithfull or beleevers, but he was of their number that were spiritually dead, and therefore it had beene dangerous for the disciple to converse with such. 4. Neither was he bound by an oath to per|forme that duty, as Ioseph was here, Muscul.

QUEST. VI. Why they left their children and cattell behind.

Vers. 8. Only their children, and their sheepe, &c. left they behind, &c. 1. The Egyptians did not stay their cattell, as now beginning to oppresse them, as the Hebrewes: for they were not yet so hardly used. 2. But they left these things, which might be cumbersome unto them, because they purposed to re|turne againe, both for that Ioseph so promised, upon whom they depended, who was not to forsake his calling: and for that their time of returne was not yet come, and therefore the sonnes of Ephraim had but hard successe, because they prevented the time, 1 Chron. 7.21. Mercer. 3. Although no mention be made of their women and servants, yet it is like, that they stayed behind likewise, the one to attend their children, the other their cattell, Muscul. 4. The charets and horsemen were for their defense.

QUEST. VII. The corne flower of Atad, why so called, and whether on this side, or beyond Iordan.

Vers. 10. They came to Goren Atad. 1. Atad signifieth a thorne or bramble bush, of the greater sort, which brancheth out, and is of the bignesse of a laurell tree: so it is taken, Psal. 58.10. Before your thornes are felt as great brambles, that is, before your power increase, the Lord shall destroy you, Iun. This place then was beset with such brambles: so that Goren Atad, is here rather a name appellative, than proper, Iun. 2. This place was not beyond Jordan, as the most translate, H. B. G.P. S. and therefore some thinke, that Ioseph brought them about by the desarts of Idumaea, and so to Jordan, the same way, which afterward Iosua did conduct the people by into Canaan, for feare of the Canaanites, lest they might have troubled them in the way. But Ioseph being so well accompanied, needed not to feare the Canaanites, and the Egyptians at that time were feared of other nations: and seeing they going the neerest way might be as soone and sooner at Mamre than at Jordan, which lay Eastward out of the way; Ioseph had no reason to fetch a circuit about. Augustine thinketh they came first to Mamre, and from thence went over Jordan to this place, where they mourned, which was 50. miles off from the place of buriall, and re|turned againe the same way over Jordan to Mamre, quest. 171. in Gen. But there is small reason for it, that they should goe 50. miles beyond the place of buriall, which was the utmost period of their journey, and goe backe againe. Wherefore Mercerus thinketh, it is to be read rather on this side of Jordan: or as Iulnius, ad vadium Iordanis, at the passage of Jordan, for so the word begn•ber signifieth, that is, not farre from Jordan: for as Mercerus well noteth, and Luther, beth signifieth cis, on this side, mem, trans, beyond, or on the other side. Hierome also giveth witnesse hereunto, that this field of thistles was about three stones cast from Jerico, two miles from Jordan, called Betagla, that is, the maze or circle, because there the Egyptians went about circle wise, when they mourned for Iacob. Now Jerico is on the West side of Jor|dan, not beyond. Hierome saith, it was trans Iordanem, beyond Jordan in respect of some other place, as France, which the Romans call Transalpina, beyond the Alpes, is to them in France, Cisalpina on this side the Alpes, Mercer.

QUEST. VIII. Why they mourned in Atad, before the place of buriall.

Vers. 10. THere he mourned for his father seven dayes. 1. This mourning then of Ioseph and the Egyptians in this place, was not for the great slaughter of the Israelites, which afterward fell out in that place, when the Lord sent a fire amongst them for their murmuring, as Histor. scholasti. noteth: for neither was that fire sent forth in this place, which is mentioned, Numb. 11. or Numb. 16. and the text saith directly, that they mourned for Iacob. 2. Whereupon of their mourning it was called Abel, which signifieth mourning, not a plaine which is so called, because it mourneth for barrennesse, as Ramban thinketh, and Mercerus following him. 3. They mourned before they came to the place of buriall, Mercer. not after, as some thinke, and not for feare lest they should have beene interrupted by the Canaanites, if they had deferred this solemnity, till they came to Mambre, as Pererius: but this being a fit place for them to rest their weary cattell, that had gone a long way thorow the solitary and sandy desert, in the meane time they used this solemnity, Muscul.

QUEST. IX. How Iacobs sonnes carried him, and in what order.

Vers. 13. *His sonnes carried him into the land of Canaan. The Hebrewes here have certaine curious observations: 1. That Iacob gave charge that his sonnes only, not his nephewes should carry his body, because most of them were borne of Canaanitish women. 2. That Levi should not beare him, whose posterity was afterward to beare the Arke; nor Ioseph, because he was a governour; but Ephraim and Manasseh should be in their stead. 3. That Iacob appointed them their places, three on the East side of the coffin, three on the West, three toward the North, three toward the South: it is like they carried the coffin after a seemely and orderly manner, but whether in this forme, it is uncertaine, ex Mercer.

QUEST. X. By whom the message was sent to Ioseph, and whether indeed Iacob dying, gave any such charge.

Vers. 16. They sent unto Ioseph, saying, &c. 1. This message was not sent by any of the Egyptians,* to whom they would not impart that secret; neither is it like that Dan and Nephtali, the sonnes of Bilha carried it, because Ioseph did keepe sheepe with them, Genes. 37.2. as the Hebrewes thinke: but it is most like, that some of their domesticall and trusty servants went with this message in the name of all the brethren, Mercer. 2. Neither did they come in, watching their time, while the message was in delive|ring, as some thinke, but they stayed till they knew Iosephs minde by the messenger, Calvin. 3. They use three perswasions to move Ioseph, vers. 17. because they were brethren, servants of the same God, it was their fathers will, Iun. 4. Yet all this seemeth to be fained: for it is like, that Iacob would have spoken to Ioseph himselfe, if there had beene any such matter: and Ramban thinketh, that Iacob never knew of his sonnes offence against Ioseph: for he himselfe did forbear to tell his father, because he had remitted it, and his sonnes would not accuse themselves, Calvin. Mercer. 5. The cause of their suspition, was not (as the Hebrewes imagine,) because Ioseph being in the land of Canaan went to see the pit, into the which he was let downe, and there gave thanks, whereby they thought his mind was altered toward them; but their owne timorous heart misgiveth them, and they measured Ioseph by themselves, thinking that he had but dissembled his malice toward them hitherto for feare of their father, as Esau purposed to doe toward Iacob, while Isaack lived, Mercer. 6. Ioseph wept for grieffe,* that without cause they so hardly conceived of him. 7. Iosephus is here deceived, that Iosephs brethren refused to returne into Egypt with him, but that hee gently intreated them: for all this was done after that they were returned.

QUEST. XI. In what sense Ioseph saith, am I God.

Vers. 19. Am I in Gods stead? &c. 1. Some doe read, Am not I under God? and make this sense: if God be ready to forgive, much more I. 2. Some, I doe feare God, or I am Gods, S.C. therefore I will not seeke to revenge. 3. But the best reading is, Am I in Gods stead? with an interrogation, not without, as Cajetane readeth, I am in Gods stead, that is, I follow Gods will and sentence, I looke not to your evill intent: the word thacath, signifieth both pro, for, and sometime it is a note of subjection, but here it is taken in the first sense. 4. The meaning then of these words. Am I God, is not, 1. either, that they should aske God forgiveness, and not him: 2. or that he committed his revenge to God, for hee thought of no revenge: 3. or that he would not have them to worship him as God, for he had divers times before received that reverence at their hands: 4. neither doth he by this meanes excuse their fault, because he referreth all to Gods will. 5. But the meaning is, that seeing God had turned their evill counsell against him, to his good, and theirs, and of many beside, he would not for his part be the man that should turne it to revenge, Calvin. Mercer. and so the Latine Interpreter doth hit the sense, though not the words, can I resist Gods will? Iacob after the same manner said to Rachel, (that said, give me children,) am I God? Gen. 30.2. that is, it is not in my power to give thee children: so here Ioseph saith, am I God? it is not in my power to hurt you, whom the Lord intendeth by this meanes to blesse, Iun.

QUEST. XII. The computation of Iosephs age.

Vers. 22. Ioseph lived an hundred and ten yeeres. 1. Thus God recompenced Iosephs short affliction, which endured 13. yeeres from the 17. yeere (not from the 16. as Pererius saith, following the corrupt Latine text) of his age, to the 30. when he stood before Pharaoh, with a long time of prosperity, for the space of 80. yeeres, that is, from the 30. yeere, to the 110. yeeres, for so long he lived. 2. Yet attained not Ioseph to the yeeres of his father, which were 147. and some of his brethren overlived him as Levi, who lived 137. yeares, Exod. 6.16. whether Ioseph dyed first of all his brethren, as Pererius thinketh, it is uncertaine: the great affliction and hard imprisonment in his youth, the cares and troubles of the government and administration of the kingdome, might be some reason of the shortning of his dayes, Perer. 3. This then was the age of Ioseph, hee was 17. yeares old when he was sold into Egypt, Gen. 37.2. at 30. yeares he stood before Pharaoh, Gen. 41.46. he was 49. yeares old when Iacob came into Egypt; for the seven yeares of plenty were then past, and two of famine, Gen. 45.6. at Iacobs death, who lived 17. yeares in Egypt, Gen. 47.28. he was 56. yeares old; and 54. yeares he lived after, which make 110. in all. * 4. By this age of Ioseph it may appeare, how long hee dyed before Moses was borne, namely 64. yeares, and 144. yeares before the departure of Israel out of Egypt: as may be thus gathered: from the promise made to Abraham, to the going out of Israel, are 430. yeares, Exod. 12.40. Galat. 3.17. of this time 215. yeares were run, when Iacob came downe to Egypt: for Abraham was 75. yeares old, when the promise was first made, Gen. 12.4. Isaack was borne when Abraham was 100. yeares old, Gen. 17.17. Isaack at 60. had Esau and Iacob borne, Gen. 25.26. Iacob at 130. came downe to Egypt, Gen. 48.9. these yeares put together, 25. of Abrahams age, 60. of Isaacks, 130. of Iacobs, make 215. exactly: there remaineth then the other halfe of 215. of the which time Ioseph lived 71. yeares; for he was 49. when Iacob came downe to Egypt, and lived 110. yeares, there remaineth then, 144. yeares: take from this 80. yeares, for so old was Moses, when Israel went out of Egypt, and the remnant is 64. from Iosephs death to Moses birth. 5. Here appeareth Tostatus error, that would have 66. yeares from the death of Ioseph till Moses: and 146. from thence to Israels departure, wherein he faileth in 2. yeares. * But Iustinus the historiographer is in a greater error, who would have Moses to be Iosephs son, lib. 36. and in the same place, he hath other untruths; as that Ioseph was his fathers youngest sonne, that his brethren sold him for the excellency of his wit, whereas they did it of malice; that he got his skill of interpreting dreames by art magicke: whereas the Magitians and wise-men of Egypt could not do it: but he by the spirit of God was enabled thereunto, ex Perer.

Page 404

QUEST. XIII. How many generations Ioseph saw of Ephraim.

Vers. 23. Ioseph saw Ephraims children to the third generation. 1. Thus most doe read, that Ioseph onely saw Ephraims childrens childrens children, in the third descent from Ephraims pro•epotes, his grand-nephewes: which were ab•epotes to Ioseph, nephewes in the fourth degree: but of Manasseh, he saw onely his childrens children: so that Manasseh was only a grand-father, Ephraim a great grand-father, while Ioseph lived: so that Ephraim was forwarder in his posterity, than Manasseh by one descent. 2. But I rather thinke that Ioseph saw Ephraims children in the fourth generation from Ephraim, in the fift from himselfe. 1. Because they are called, in the originall, the sonnes of the third, namely from Ephraim: the sons of the third are in the fourth generation: and so Iunius translateth well abnepotes, that is, nephewes in the fourth descent. 2. Because we finde that Ephraim though younger than Manasseh, exceeded him by two descents: for Iosuah was the seventh from Ephraim, who was the sonne of Nun, the son of Elishama, of Ammihud, of Hadan, of Shutelah, of Ephraim▪ 1 Chron. 7.26, 27. But Zelophehad, who lived with Iosua, and dyed in the wilderness, of Hepher, of Gilead, of Machir, of Manasseh, was but the fift from Manasseh, Numb. 29.1. Therefore when Ioseph saw the sonnes of Machir, of Manasseh, in the second degree from Manasseh, he might see Elishama in the fourth descent from Ephraim: and thus Iacobs prophecie more fully tooke effect even in Iacobs time, that Ephraim should be greater in number than Manasseh.

QUEST. XIV. The meaning of this phrase to be brought up upon the knee.

Vers. 23. WEre brought up on Iosephs knees. The Scripture useth three phrases of this kinde: 1. As to come from betweene the feet, which is taken for education and bringing up, Gen•s. 49.10. though sometime it be specially applied to the birth of women, Deuter. 28.57. 2. They are said, to beare upon his knees, that is, to receive the children newly borne, and to lay hand on them, which properly belon|geth to women; as Rachel saith, when she gave Bilha her maid to Iacob, She shall beare upon my knees, Gen. 30.3. 3. The children are said to be brought up upon the fathers knees, because they with joy imbrace their babes, and dandle them on their knees, Mercer. Iunius.

QUEST. XV. Why Ioseph would not presently be buried in Canaan.

Vers. 25. Ioseph tooke an oath of the children of Israel. 1. The Latine readeth only, he tooke an oath of them: but the Hebrewes well note, that it is said, of the children of Israel, because not only the Patriarkes in person, but all their posterity afterwards did take themselves bound to this oath, and after|wards performed it. 2. Ioseph did not presently charge them to bury him in Canaan, but at their depar|ture, for these reasons: 1. Because he would not prevent the time which God appointed, for hee knew, that God would visit them and deliver them, Mercer. 2. He did it to shew his faith, as the Apostle shew|eth, that this motion proceeded of faith, Hebr. 11.22. and that seeing they were to indure great affli|ction, which Ioseph did foresee, and therefore he saith, God would visit them, hee by this meanes would have them confirmed in the hope and expectation of their deliverance. 3. Hee knew that the Egyptians would not suffer his body to be removed, Perer. 4. And this would bee an occasion, that the Egyptians should have Ioseph in remembrance, leaving his monument among them, and deale the better with his na|tion, Mercer.

QUEST. XVI. Why Ioseph was buried in Secheni.

Vers. 25. YE shall carry my bones hence. 1. This was accordingly performed by Moses, when the Israelites came out of Egypt, Exod. 13.19. 2. Besides, it is evident also out of the Scripture, that Ioseph was buried in Sechem, not because Ioseph was there sold into Egypt, as some Hebrewes thinke, for that done in Dothan, not in Sechem, Genes. 37.17. neither as Rab. Salomon thinketh, because Iacob gave Sechem to Ioseph, to that end to be a place of buriall, or for that Ioseph gave charge to his brethren▪ there to bury him, Mercer. for no such thing is mentioned in the story. But I rather thinke that the Israelites in their discretion did there bury him, because that place was given him in speciall words by Iacob, and be|cause it fell out to be in the inheritance of his sonnes: for which cause also they buried Iosua in his inhe|ritance in mount Ephraim, Iosua 24.30, 32.

QUEST. XVII. Whether the rest of the Patriarkes were buried in Sechem.

NOW whereas a question may be moved whether the Israelites removed the bones of the rest of the Patriarkes, when they came out of Egypt. 1. It is not like, that the Patriarkes as they died in Egypt were removed to Hebron, where Iacob was buried, as Iosephus thinketh, libr. 2. antiqui•at. cap. 4. for this had beene a great trouble to make so many severall journeyes: and seeing Iosephs bones were kept in Egypt, there was no reason to remove the rest. 2. Much more unlike it is (as some thinke,) that they were translated to Sechem as they died: for Ioseph was the first that was there buried. 3. And that they were translated from Sechem by the sonnes of Hemor, as some expound that place, Act. 7.16. it is not probable: for the Israelites after their returne would not have suffered any other to meddle with their fathers bones: and before they returned, they would rather have buried them in Hebron, than in Sechem. 4. Wherefore it is most likely, that the Patriarkes bones were carried out of Egypt together with Iosephs bones, and there all buried together, as Stephen sheweth, Act. 7.16. Perer. Consent.

And seeing mention is made of that place, Act. 7.16. where it is said, That Iacob and the fathers were removed to Sichem, and put in the sepulcher, which Abraham bought of the sonnes of Hemor of Sichem: which place hath moved much question: I will adde somewhat here of this matter, to that which is be|fore handled, qu. 13. in Gen. 23.

QUEST. XVIII. How Abraham is said, Act. 7.19. to have bought the sepulcher of the sonnes of Hemor, whereas he indeed bought it of Ephron.

1. THERE I refused their opinion, that thinke Stephen might faile in memory, and name Abraham for Iacob. 2. Theirs also I rejected, which thinke that Zophar Ephraims father, of whom Abraham bought the ground, was also called Hemor: whereunto Pererius subscribeth. 3. Neither doe I con|sent to Cajetane, which thinketh that the Patriarkes were removed from Sichem, to the sepulcher which Abraham bought, by the sonnes of Hemor; and so referre the last words, of the sonnes of Hemor, not to the verbe, òné sato, bought, but to the word, ètethésan, put: but this is not likely, that the Sichemites had any thing to doe with their bones. 4. Nor yet can I altogether approve Beza his conjecture, that thinketh, by the negligence of the scribes, Abraham to be put into the text for Iacob: the reasons why I refused these foure conjectures, I have set downe in that place, whither I referre the Reader.

5. The Syrian Translator readeth in the singular metetétthe, he was translated, and etétthe, was put, and so understandeth it only of Iacob▪ that he was removed to Sichem, and from thence by the Sichemites carried to Hebron. But the Scripture overthroweth this conjecture, which testifieth, that his sonnes buried him in Abrahams place of sepulture, which he bought of Ephron, Gen. 50.13. beside, the originall copy in the Greeke readeth in the plurall, not in the singular.

6. I resolved in that place upon the exposition of histor. scholastic. from the which Iunius seemeth not much to differ: histor. scholastic. transporteth the words thus: And were translated to Sichem, bought of the sonnes of Hemor, and from thence put in the sepulcher, which Abraham bought for money: but this trans|posing may seeme very hard: therefore Iunius transposeth not the words, but thinketh the article 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, to be supplied: that where it is said, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, of the sonnes, he would have it, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉.

&c. beside that of the sonnes of Hemor; that is, bought of them: and would have this to be the meaning, that Iacob and the Patriarks were buried part of them in Abrahams sepulcher, part in Sechem▪ which Iacob bought. To this interpretation, that Stephen here abridgeth two histories, of Abrahams and Iacobs purchase, I gave liking before, as the best of all the rest propounded.

7. But since I have considered of another way to reconcile this place, which doth satisfie my selfe best: and this it is, that by Abraham here is not understood the posterity of Abraham, as Ge•evens. upon that place, for that were an unproper kinde of speaking: but I rather thinke, according to the manner of the Hebrew tongue, wherein Stephen then spake, that there is here an eclipsis of a word of cognation, as of sonne, nephew, or such like: for it is usuall in the Scriptures to eclipse such termes and names of kindred: as 2 Sam. 21.8. He tooke the five sonnes of Michal, that is, of the sister of Michal: for Michal had no children: and v. 19. of that chapter: Elbanah slew Goliah the Git•ite, that is, the brother of Goliah Lahmi, 1 Chron. 20.5. where the word brother is eclipsed: so also in this place Hemor of Sichem, where, not the word sonne, as the common English translations reade it, but father; as Beza, or prince, as Iunius must be supplied: as Luk. 24.10. we reade Marie of Iames, that is, the mother of Iames, Mark. 15.40. So here in this place, to supply the sonne of Abraham, may as well be admitted, as to supply sister, or brother in the place before recited, 2 Sam. 21.8, 19. I leave now the Reader to take his choice.

Thus the meaning of Stephen is plaine; that the Patriarkes were all buried in Sichem: and so Hierome testifieth, that in his time their monuments and sepulchers were there to bee seene, epitaph. Paul. and whereas Iosephus lib.2. antiquit. c. 4. saith, they were buried in Hebron: both may be true, that they were first translated to Sichem then to Hebron: but not by the Sichemites, nor yet immediately removed thither out of Egypt: But I rather with Beza for this matter, admit Hieromes report than Iosephus.

QUEST. XIX. Whether Iacob made his purchase with ••ney, or with lambes.

BUT whereas it may be objected against this interpretation, which understandeth this place of Iacobs purchase: that he bought it not for money, but for an hundred lambes, Genes. 33.19. 1. I neither thinke with Eugubi•s, that Hierome, reading lambes, was deceived by the Septuagints translation, who at the first as he thinketh, did read, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, money, not 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, lambes: for the Chalde Interpreter also readeth, lambes. 2. Neither with R. Achibac, whom Oleaster followeth, doe I thinke the word ch•s•t•▪ to be ••rowed of the Arabians, who so call their money. 3. Nor yet, was the money, so called chesita, a lambe, as the Basilian penie is called c•rvus▪ a raven, as Lipp•man. 4. But I rather approve Iunius conjecture that it was a peece of money stamped with the print of a lambe: and so it is taken for a peece of coine, 〈◇〉 2.11. where it is said, that every one of Iobs friends gave him a peece of money, and an earring of gold: it had beene no great gift, to bestow upon him a lambe, and the other gift which is joyned with it being of gold, doth rather shew, that it was money: wherefore Stephen in this place doth interpret the other, that this purchase was made with that kinde of money, rather than with lambes.

QUEST. XX. Of the putting of Iosephs bones in a chest.

*Vers. 26. They put him in a chest. 1. I omit here the Hebrewes fables, how that when they could not finde Iosephs tombe, to bring it out of Egypt, a sheepe spake unto them, and shewed where it was: whereupon they led the sheepe with them in the wilderness, and therefore say they, it is said in the Psalme, Thou didst lead thy people like sheepe, by the hand of Moses and Aaron. 2. The like fable is reported by the Author of histor. scholastic. that when Nilus had overflowne the place where Iosephs tombe was, Moses cast a certaine thin plate of gold into the water, wherein hee writ the name Iehovah: which flotig upon the waters, stood still where Iosephs chest was, which they tooke up, and carried with them out of Egypt: and he fableth further, that Iosephs bones did prophesie of their difficult and hard jour|ney. This fable is worthy no better credit th^on the other: though Perer. give not the like censure of it. 3. Whereas in Ecclesiasticus, cap. 49.19. it is said, as the vulgar Latine translateth, Iosephs bones prophesied after his death: which Pererius understandeth, of the accomplishment of Iosephs prophecie at his death, that God would visit his people: the words in the originall are, the bones of Ioseph èpeskép, were visited of God, and so the Interlineariet translation readeth. 4. Cajetanus thinketh, that Iosephs bones were laid up in a marble coffin: but it is more like to have beene made of wood▪ as fittest for carriage. The Hebrewes also thinke, that the Israelites carried but two Arkes in the wilderness: the Arke of the Testament, and Iosephs arke or chest. But besides that, this is great presumption and boldnesse in them, to match Gods Arke and Iosephs coffin together: it is probable, that the rest of the Patriarks bones were carried out of Egypt, at the returne of the Israelites, and that they were buried in Sechem together with Iosephs: for when else should they have beene convoyed thither? not before they came out of Egypt, for then they would have laid them in Hebron, where Iacob was buried, rather than in Sechem: and after they could not,* when they were departed out of Egypt: And though mention be made only by Moses, of the burying of Ioseph in Sechem, because he was the more honourable person, and to shew how carefully they dischar|ged the oath made to Ioseph, yet we doubt not, but that according to Stephens report, the rest of the Pa|triarks were translated thither: which thing Stephen might know, either by undoubted tradition, or some authentike bookes now perished; as Paul learned, that the names of the Magicians in Egypt, that resisted Moses, were called Iam•es and I•mbres, 2 Tim. 3.8.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Righteous m^on apt to shed teares.

Vers. 1. Ioseph wept. This is now the sixt time that Ioseph is said to weepe, Genes. 42.24. Genes. 43.30. Gen. 45.2. Gen. 46.29. and twice in this chapter, vers. 15.18. By this the Stoikes are confuted, who would have a wise man without compassion or affection, Muscul. Also wee see that good men in Scripture were apt to shed teares, as Ioseph, and David, who often in the Psalmes maketh mention of his teares: such were the holy Apostles S. Paul, Act. 20.19 and S. Peter, Matth. 27.57.

2. Doct. God turneth evill actions into good.

Vers. 2. WHen yee thought evill against me, God disposed it to good. Herein appeareth the mighty power of God, who is able to turne evill unto good: not that he either winketh at mens evill actions, and letteth them alone, Calv. neither is he the author, approver, worker, or provoker to evill, Mercer. but he overruleth, even the actions of wicked men, and ordereth and disposeth them to what end it pleaseth him: as Judas conspiracie against Christ, did serve to execute and bring to passe the deter|minate counsell of God, Act. 2.23. yet are not the workers of evill thereby any thing excusable▪ because Gods will taketh place: the good that commeth of an evill action, as here the preservation of the Church by Iosephs captivity, proceedeth from the goodnesse of God, not from any such intendment in the instrulment, Pererius. Therefore Beetius saith well, Sola divina vis est, cui •a•a quo{que} bona sunt, &c. God only can turne evill into good, by using evill to bring forth a good effect.

3. Doct. To love our enemies.

Vers. 21. FEare not, I will nourish you. Thus we are taught by Ioseph to love our enemies, to doe good to them that hate us: according to the doctrine of our Saviour, 〈◇〉. 44. For so Ioseph was a foster-father unto them, that would have starved him in the pit, Muscul.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against Masses and Trent•li for the dead.

Vers. 3. THE Egyptians bewailed him 70. dayes. Petrus Comest•r divideth this number into 40 dayes, and 30. dayes: the first was the time of the Egyptians mourning, the other of the Hebrewes: whereupon he groundeth the superstitious use of the Christians in mourning, and saying Masses 30. dayes for the dead, cap. 114. histor. scholastic. in Genes. Contra. 1. The text saith, that the Egyptians, not the Hebrewes, mourned these 70. dayes: and that use taken up afterward by the Hebrewes, was borrowed from the Egyptians: for the stint of mourning used among the faithfull was but for seven dayes: so long mourned Ioseph, ver. 10. 2. Though the Hebrewes mourne 30. dayes, yet did they not pray for their soules, or offer any sacrifice for them, nor yet doe any penance for the dead: which seemeth to be directly for|bidden, that they should not cut their haire, or their beard, or make any print in their flesh for the dead, Levit. 19.28. as though the dead were profited by any such afflicting of themselves.

2. Confut. Against the superstitious choice of the place of buriall.

Vers. 13. THEy buried him in the cave of the field, &c. Thus was it the use among the Hebrewes to bury their dead without the Cities, as we may read, Luk. 7.12. where our Saviour did meet the people at the gate of the City, carrying a young man to be buried: This custome of a long time was re|tained among the Gentiles: as among the Athenians, who would by no meanes grant to Servius Sulpi|tius a place of buriall within the City, Cicer. epist. famil. lib. 4. Plato also prescribeth, that the dead should be buried in the fields, and such as were barren and good for nothing else, lib. 2. de legib. It was also for|bidden by the Romane Jewes: Hominem mortuum in urbe ne sepelit•; Bury not a dead man in the Citie. The Christians were the first, which buried the dead in their Churches; not as Tostatus, which, first buried them within their Cities or houses, as Pererius therein confuting him, sheweth out of Diodorus, that it was the manner of the Egyptians, to keepe their dead in coffins at home, placing them upright, and to give their bodies as pledges to their creditors, Diodor. lib. 2. cap. 11. and out of Herodotus, how the Egyp|tians doe inclose their dead in vessels of glasse, in their houses, and make pictures of them, Herod. lib. 3. But this use to bury the dead in Churches and neare unto them, for more holinesse of the place, was first taken up by superstitious Christians: which respect of the place, if it be onely civilly used, wee condemne not: as Lycurgus ordained, that the dead should be buried neere unto the Temples, that others passing by, might be stirred up by the sight of their monuments to imitate their vertues, Plutar. in Lycurg. But to place the dead in Church, or Church-yard, to be helped by the prayers of the living, as Tostatus and Pere|rius, is a superstitious device of fantasticall men, without any warrant of Scripture; for if they died in the Lord, they rest from their labours, and their workes follow them, Revel. 14.13. If otherwise, they are in the place of torment, from whence is no returne, Luk. 16.26. and our prayers can doe them no good.

3. Confut. Against traditions and visions.

Vers. 25. GOd will surely visit you. Ioseph though he had received no vision or revelation from God concerning this, yet he did verily beleeeve the word and promise of God, which hee had heard of Iacob; which sheweth their error, that as not contented with the Scriptures, seeke other helps, as the Papists by their blinde traditions, the Anabaptists by their fantasticall visions, Calvin. But wee are taught that the Scriptures are sufficient to lead us into all truth, and that they which do teach otherwise, though an Angell from heaven, are to be held as accursed, Galath. 1.8.

4. Confut. Against prayer for the dead.

Vers. 25. YE shall carry my bones hence. The Patriarkes Iacob and Ioseph desired to be buried in the Land of promise: 1. Because that was the place which the Lord did choose for his people to dwell in. 2. They did hereby testifie their faith in Gods promises, that he would bring their seed thither. 3. They desired to be buried with their fathers, as having the same hope of the resurrection. 4. They fore|saw by the spirit of prophecie, that the Messiah should be borne there. 5. But this was no cause, * as Bellar/mine imagineth, that they might receive benefit by the prayers and sacrifices of the dead. 1. For at this time, and 200. yeeres after Iacobs death, there was no worship of God nor publike prayer professed in Canaan, till the Israelites returned out of Egypt. 2. And if prayer were availeable for the dead, it might profit them which were buried in Egypt farre off, as well as neere hand. 3. No example can be produced out of the Canonickall Scriptures of the old Testament, that ever any prayed for the dead.

5. Confut. Against the carrying about of relikes.

Vers. 26. THEy put him in a chest in Egypt. Ioseph was layed up in a coffin, and there kept: they did not rake in his ashes, and take out his bones, and carry them about to worke miracles, as they serve the bodies of Saints in the popish Church, if they be their bodies: Plinie maketh mention of Pyr/rhus, that his great toe on the right foot could not be burned with his body, and that it gave helpe being touched, to those which had the swelling of the splene, whereupon it was laid up in the Temple, Plin. l. 7. This whether it were an imposture of Sathan, or one of Plinies fables, I cannot say: many like tales are current among the Romanists. But Iosias practised the contrary, who would not suffer the bones of the Prophet of Iudah to be removed, that prophesied of him by name, 2 King. 23.17.

6. Places of morall observation.

1. Mo•. To mourne moderately for the dead.

Vers. 3. THE Egyptians bewayled him 70. daies. But Ioseph onely mourned for his father seven daies, vers. 10. wherein appeareth the difference betweene the mourning of the faithfull, which have hope, and of infidels, which have no hope of the resurrection: the one is moderate, the other exces|sive: So the Apostle teacheth, that wee should not mourne for the dead, as those that have no hope, 1 Thess. 4.13. but with sobriety and in measure.

2. Mor. Vnity of religion the bond of peace.

Vers. 17. FORgive the trespasse of the servants of thy Fathers God: there is nothing which ought more to perswade men to unitie, than that they worship one and the same God: as S. Paul exhor|teth▪ to keepe the unitie of the spirit in the bond of peace, for there is one Lord, one faith, one baptisme, E/phes.3.4, 5. Therefore Christians doe much forget themselves, in dishonouring their holy profession with unbrotherly strife and contention.

3. Mor. Oaths must be religiously kept.

Vers. 6. GOe and burie thy father, as he made thee to sweare. Even Pharaohan Heathen prince made conscience of an oath, and therefore condescended to Iosephs request. This example shall condemne many Christians, that are carelesse to performe their oathes, Calvin. whereas the Scripture teacheth, that a man should keepe his oath, though hee swear to his owne hinderance, Psal. 15.4.

4. Mor. A guilty conscience alwayes fearefull.

Vers. 15. IT may be that Ioseph will hate us: Iosephs brethren, now after 40. yeares, call to minde the trespasse committed against Ioseph, Mercer: such is the nature of a guilty conscience; upon every occasion it is apt to be revived and stirred: as the Lord said to Cain: If thou doest not well, sin lieth at the doore, Gen. 4.7. of such Moses saith, the sound of a leafe shaken shall chase them, Levit. 26.36. Therefore when any hath sinned, let him seeke soundly to heale the wound of his conscience, that it doe not grieve him afterward.

5. Mor: Perfect reconciliation doth good for evill.

Vers. 21. FEare not, I will nourish you, &c. Ioseph here sheweth his unfained reconciliation, in that he doth not only forgive his brethren, but also doth them good: Many now adaies thinke they are perfectly reconciled, if they doe not recompence evill, though they will not extend their hand to doe good to them, who were before their enemies. But our Saviours doctrine is otherwise, that we should doe good to those that hate us, Matth. 5. vers. 44.

6. Mor: To renounce the world, and the vanities thereof.

Vers. 22. IOseph dwelt in Egypt, he and his fathers house. The Latine readeth, with his fathers house: it is like, that Ioseph did joyne himselfe in society of religion with his fathers house, yet exculpting his place of government still: wherein he shewed, that he regarded not the honours and pleasures of the Court, in respect of the fellowship with Gods Church: So the Apostle saith of Moses, that he chose rather to suffer adversity with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sinne for a season, Heb. 11.25. by these examples we are taught to renounce this world, not to be entangled with the vanities thereof, but to presse forward in desire to our heavenly Canaan.

Here then is an end of this booke: which the Jewes make such account of, that they have numbred the very letters, which make 4395. But as they dwell in the letter, so we should take delight in the spirituall sense and godly edifying. Thus have I by Gods gracious assistance finished this laboursome and painfull worke: most humbly beseeching God, to make me able to goe forward in this course, if he shall see it to be to his glorie, and the good of his Church: to whom I give all hearty thanks, who hath thus far holpen and assisted me: and so I conclude with that saying in the Revelation;

Praise, honour, and glory, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the lamb for ever,

Revel. 5.13.

FINIS.

Hexapla in Exodum, That is, A SIXFOLD COMMENTARY UPON The second Booke of MOSES called EXODVS: VVherein according to the Method propoun|ded in Hexapla upon Genesis, these six things are observed in every Chapter: 1. The argument and method. 2. The divers readings. 3. The questions discussed. 4. Doctrines noted. 5. Controversies handled. 6. Morall common places applied.

VVherein in the divers readings these translations are compared together: 1. The Chalde. 2. The Septuagint. 3. The vulgar Latine. 4. Pagnine. 5. Montanus. 6. Iunius. 7. Vatablus. 8. The great English Bible. 9. The Geneva edition. 10. And the Hebrew originall maketh the tenth.

And in the same there are well nie two thousand Theologicall questions handled: and above fortie Authors old and new, writing upon this booke, abridged.

Divided into two parts or Tomes: The first containing the deliverance of the Israelites, with their preservation: The other, the constitution and setting of their State by wholesome lawes.

By ANDREW WILLET, Professor of Divinitie.

The first Part or Tome.

PSAL. 77.20.

Thou didst lead thy people like sheepe by the hand of Moses and Aaron.

[illustration]

VERITAS ❁ FILIA ❁ TEMPORIS

[printer's or publisher's device]

LONDON, ¶ Printed by the Assignes of THOMAS MAN, PAVL MAN, and IONAH MAN. 1633.

Page [unnumbered]

Page [unnumbered]

TO THE MOST CHRISTIAN RIGHT NOBLE, MOST EXCELLENT AND mightie Prince, IAMES by the grace of God King of Great Britaine, France and Ireland, Defender of the true Christian Faith.

A Ntipater King of Macedonia (most gracious Sovereigne) when one presented unto him a booke treating of happinesse, is said to have rejected it with this answer: I am not at lei/sure*. To whom the presenter replied; Be not King, if thou hast no leisure. Your Majestie with better reason might be excused by want of leisure, if such kinde of presents were neglected; both because your Highnesse affaires of the Kingdome are greater, and such gifts are now exhibited oftner. But that replie was rash and audacious: for he so much the more is worthie the name of a King, who inten|ding more weightie businesse, cannot attend smaller matters: yet seeing Princes are as Gods in earth, and this is Gods glorie, who dwelling on high abaseth himselfe to behold things in heaven and earth*; may it please your Majestie to descend a little from your Throne of honour, and to vouchsafe to take knowledge of this gift, which is now offered.

I here present to your sacred view the historie of Moses birth, education, acts, and exploits: whose faithfulness in Gods house, courage against Gods enemies, clemencie and pietie toward his people, and other excellent vertues, as they are mirrors for Princes, and well expressed in your Majesties acts: So in nothing more lively doth your High|nesse, our Moses, resemble this ancient and worthie Moses, than in the manifold preservation of your life and state, even from your cradle and infancie unto this pre|sent. Moses being a childe should have beene destroyed; after he was Governour of Israel, divers times did they assault him, murmure and conspire against him: So your Majesties infancie hath beene assaulted, and since your royall person endangered by ma|ny unnaturall conspiracies: but now of late most of all in that barbarous and devillish treacherie, intended against your princely person, and the honourable state of this land, assembled in Parliament.

No age before us, or now present, nor countrie ever brought forth the like monster,

Page [unnumbered]

such an unnaturall and wicked conspiracie, for device so subtile, in working so secret, in execution so mischievous, or that came neerer to the designed period, not taking effect. The greater was the danger, the more glorious the deliverance; the more del|villish the invention, the more gracious the divine prevention; the more close the con|triver, the more honourable the finder out. And herein as God is to have the chiefe glo|rie, being the author of this counsell, and the onely revealer of secrets: so your Highnesse is to be honoured, as the instrument, whose cogitation the Lord directed as a light to search out the mysterie of darknesse, and as a cunning Pilot to guide the ship beside the rocks and sands. * Now is fulfilled that saying of the Wise-man: A King that sit|teth in the throne of judgement, chaseth away all evill with his eyes. It was David, not the sons of Zerviah, Ioab and Abishai his Counsellors, that found out, by consulting with God, * the treacherie of the men of Keilah, intended against him. And Pharaoh himselfe had the instinct by dreame to foresee the calamitie of Egypt, by the future famine. And the King of Nineveh gave the advice how to prevent the del|struction of the Citie by repentance. * Like as Ambrose doth celebrate the memorie of the Emperour Valentinian, who sitting in his Consistorie, assisted with his Nobles, when they all gave counsell, to restore unto the Romans their Idoll Temples: Solus velut Daniel, excitato in se Dei spiritu, Gentilibus obviabat: He onely as another Daniel, the spirit of God moving him, resisted the Gentiles request. The Seralphims in Isaiah (which Hierome was taught by an Hebrew Rabbine to understand of the Kings and state of Iudea) had six wings, with two they covered their face, with two their feet, and with two they did flie: so while the face of the men of State was as it were blinded, and the feet and inferiour parts had their counsell darkned, thanks bee to God, that your Majesties wings of judgement were not pinioned, but did flie aloft with the Eagle▪ to espie what was working below. And so, as he well saith: Necesse erat, ut qui potentior cunctis fuerat, prudentior fieret universis: It was fit, that hee which was beyond all in power, should exceed the rest in prudence.

But now may it please your Majestie, to the glorie of God, and for eternall memorie to bee transmitted to posteritie, to give mee leave in few words to describe this worke of darknesse, and to bring it to the light, whereby this Cockatrice brood, con|sulting with infernall spirits in the earth, thought at once to have undermined and subverted both the Civill and Ecclesiasticall State of this land. * Wicked Abimelech slew upon one stone seventie of Gedeons sonnes, yet Iotham escaped: but here none within danger could have beene delivered. * Adonibezeks crueltye is noted, that cut off the thumbs of hand and feet of seventie Kings: but in this mischievous plot, both the heads and hands of many honourable persons should have beene miserably rent from their bodies. * Cruell Saul in one day commanded fourescore and five Priests to bee murdered, yet Abiathar the sonne of the high Priest was delivered: but in this bloudie exploit all our Reverend Fathers were appointed to the slaugh|ter. * Ambitious Athaliah destroyed all the Kings seed, yet Ioash the Kings sonne was preserved: but here no not the heire of the Crowne should have beene spared. Savage Caligula was not more barbarous, * who wished that all the Senatours of Rome had but one necke, that hee might smite it off at a blow: Nor yet Hannibal, who when he saw a pit filled with humane bloud, cried out: O formosum spectaculum: O goodly sight! Or Valesus Proconsul of Asia under

Augustus Caesar, who having put to death three hundred men, walked and vaunted himselfe among the dead bodies, saying; O rem regiam: O Kingly act! Sylla was not so bloudie, who com|manded seven thousand Citizens to be killed, whose crie was heard to the Senate house, where Sylla with the Senatours was assembled; for hee did forbear the Senate house: nor that King of Persia, which commanded the people of Syria to have their •oses cut off: or irefull Camby•es, who in his expedition against the Aethiopians, caused every tenth man to be tithed out for food, his armie being almost famished. But here scarce one man of ten that feared God, and loved the truth, should have beene left alive: yea the very infants could not have beene exempted from this generall massa|cre: but as Hierom speaketh of the crueltie of the Hunnes: * Cogerentur mori qui nondum vivere coeperant, & nescientes malum suum, inter hostium manus & •ela riderent; They should have beene forced to die, that yet begun not to live, and not knowing their doome, should have smiled under the bloudie hand of the enemye.

Page [unnumbered]

Blessed be God therefore who hath in his great mercie and love to his Church, disap|pointed their wicked imaginations: in this snare which they laid for others is their owne foot taken: and they are sunke into the pit, that they made for others: the stone which they would have rolled upon us, is fallen upon their owne head. * And as Am|brose writeth of the Bees: Apes quae non obtempera verint legibus regis, immo|riuntur aculei sui vulneri; That they which disobey the order of their King amongst them, die upon their owne stings: So that engine, wherewith the Ro|manists thought to have gored others, hath wounded themselves. * As they with Abi|melech sought to have fired the tower of Sichem, so their owne parts have justly felt the fire: and as with Sathan, that used the winds to overhelme the house upon Iobs sonnes, they attempted with a sulphureous spirit to have blowne up that honourable house▪ so now most worthily their owne members are exposed to the winde and aire, and their wicked acts leave a sulphureous smell behind them. This I write not (God is my record) as rejoycing in their confusion, but grieving rather at the cause thereof, pitying their persons, but hating their actions, ut probem me (as he saith) non homi|nes odisse, sed erro•es, To shew, that I hate not the men, but their manners. They with Dathan and Abiram are gone downe into the pit, * whose mouth they opened to swallow others: as they laboured in the earth to worke iniquitie, so their names are written in the earth to blot out their memorie: they which wickedly imagined to del|prive others of buriall, with Iehoiakim are themselves buried, as an asse is buried, * and cast forth without the gates of Ierusalem.

Now nothing remaineth (most Christian King) but that we give due thanks unto our gracious God, who hath wrought this glorious deliverance. In which action of thanksgiving, the Church of God hath used to performe three duties: * To give sollemne praise unto God; to send presents one to another, in signe of joy; * and to give gifts to the poore. In the first your Majestie hath given us example, who in the same place, where the danger was devised, and deliverance received, publique|ly with godly Iehoshaphat blessed God: and this honourable Parliament, concurring with your Christian Majestie, hath well seconded your princely example, in de|creeing an annuall commemoration to bee kept of that day: no lesse worthie to bee re|membred, than the Iewes feast of Purim, * when vile Haman had cast lots over them for their destruction: or the feast of the dedication of the Temple, after Antiochus had prophaned it: for how can our mercifull God be sufficiently praised, * who discovered the secret counsels of the wicked, undermined the underminers, and he that is a wall of fire about Ierusalem,* hath quenched their fire? There is a path (as Iob saith) *which no fowle hath knowne, neither hath the kites eye seene it: yet the Lord hath de/clared their works, (as Elihu answereth) and he hath turned the night: there is no darknesse, nor shadow of death, that the workers of iniquitie might be hid therein. The Lord hath so brought to passe, that neither sagitta volitans per diem, the arrow of treacherie flying by day;* nor negotium ambulans in tenebris, con|spiracie walking in the darke, hath come neere us: therefore alwaies praised bee his name. Concerning sending of presents, a testimonie of our joy, that honourable assem|blie hath with loving hearts presented to your Majestie a subsidarie benevolence, as a token of their dutie and thankfulnesse. And may it please your Majestie also to accept the widowes mite, this poore present, which I in all humblenesse and loyaltie doe offer to your Princely view: thinking it not the least part of my terrene happinesse, that as my Synopsis was readie to meet your Majestie at your joyfull entrance, so this Hexapla commeth forth (by Gods goodnesse) to congratulate for your prosperous deliverance. The gifts to the poore, are your Princely clemencie and bountie to your Majesties lo|ving subjects; that as the first is extended according to the honourable custome of this nation in the determining of the Parliament, to some kinde of offenders: so the other is desired and expected, in seeing provision and maintenance to be procured for the Mi|nisters and Preachers of the Gospell, which in many places is very small, and so the number of them to be not empai|red but increased, that religion and learning may flou|rish, the two principall props of this Kingdome, as your Majestie well knoweth, what|soever some have impiously thought and profanely written to the contrarie.

Page [unnumbered]

God strengthen your Majestie, with all the honourable State, that as our adversa|ries have digged pits, which hold no water; so our Lawgiver, with the Princes of Israel, may dig wells (of springing water)* with their staves, as it is said of Mo/ses; that is, enact such lawes whereby the spring of the Gospell may be kept open, and run along to our posteritie; but the heads of the bitter Romish waters may be for ever stopped: that all the people of God may use the same joyfull acclamations to such godly lawes, as the Israelites did to the well; Rise up well, sing yee unto it. As for the rest, I end with the conclusion of Baraks song: So let all thine enemies perish, O Lord, but they which love him, shall be as the Sun that riseth in his might.*

Your Majesties most humble Subject, Andrew Willet.

Page [unnumbered]

TO THE MOST REVEREND FATHER IN GOD, RICHARD BY THE DIVINE PROVI|dence, Archbishop of Canterburie, Primate and Metropo|litane of all England, and of his Majesties most Honourable Privie Counsell.

AS concerning lawes, so of books (Righr Reverend Father) there are two opinions; some mislike there should be many, as Arcesilaus in Laertius; whose saying was, Quemadmodum ubi multi me|dici, ibi multi morbi, ita ubi permultae leges, ibi plus vitio|rum; Like as where are many Physitians, there are many dis|eases, so where there are many lawes, there are many faults. Some thinke it not necessarie there should be any: as Demonax used to say, Leges prorsus esse inutiles, ut quibus boni non ege|rent, mali nihilo fierent meliores; That lawes were altogether unprofitable, because neither the good stood in need of them, neither were the evill bettered by them. But Chrysostome with a better spirit, approved all good lawes, and would have none omitted: In cythera non satis esse in uno tantum nervo concentum efficere, universos oportet percuti numerosè & decenter; Like as to make musick on an harpe, to strike upon one string was not sufficient, unlesse all were played upon in due measure. The like judgement is to bee given of books, that as superfluous scribling might be well spared, so necessarie and profitable writing is not to be lightly esteemed.

There are then three sorts of men, whom I first desire briefly to satisfie, and then I will in few words declare the contents, order and end of this worke.

First, some there are, that hold these labours superfluous, and thinke that this age is given too much to scribling, and that the world is pestered with too many books. But this is their error, that, because some books are vainely written, doe so judge of all: and finding some treatises unnecessarie, they imagine the rest to be so. Indeed it cannot be denied, but that there are some writings, which as Aristen compared Logike, are like spiders webs, very curious, but nothing profitable:^{*} yet hee which should contemne all, because he justly condemneth some, were like to an unwise patient, who, because of some unlearned Empirikes, should reject the skilfull Physitian; as even the Heathen Poets could say, that he, which neglected learning, left the Physitian of his soule. In mens divers writings, the diversitie of Gods gifts diversly appeareth: There is no eye so quicke, but may oversee somewhat, which another may espie: no wit so sharpe, but may be more whetted: nor yet any gift so meane, but there may be some use thereof: nor no labourer so simple, but may bring somewhat to further Gods building, as the Apostle saith, Ye may all prophesie one by one, that all may learne, and all may have comfort. Even the greatest Prophet, and best interpreter,^{} may receive some bene|fit by the meanest Preacher, and expounder. True it is, that in these dayes, bookes are counted the vilest merchandise; and the last thing, for the most part, which a man buyeth, is a booke; and any thing is thought more necessarie, than that which is for the soule. This also is the cause, why rich men are more sued unto, than wise men, and Merchants and Vsurers d•ores are more frequented than Preachers houses: because, as one being demanded the reason, why wise men went unto rich men,^{} and not the rich to the wise, answered, Wise men know what is necessarie for themselves, so doe not the other: Therefore the one seeketh things temporall, as requisite for the bodie, the other neglecteth wisdom, being necessarie for the soule. Now concerning such neglecters of divine studies, and contemnners of spirituall labours:^{*} I say, as Hierome answered Ruffinus, Mihi & meis juxta Ismenium canens, si aures surdae sunt caeterorum; I will sing unto me and mine, as Antigēidas the Musician said to his scholar Ismenius, if other mens eares be deafe.

Page [unnumbered]

Another sort there is, that are given to carpe at other mens writings, who if they be such as are enemies to the truth;^{*} I say with the Apostle, Am I become your enemy, because I speake the truth? Hierom saith, Scio me offensurum quàm plu•imes, qui dum mihi iras•untur, suam indicant conscientiam; I know I shall offend many, who while they be angrie with me, doe bewray their conscience. If they speake against him that defendeth the truth, they shew them|selves therein enemies to the truth; if they cannot indure error to be discovered, they declare them|selves to be in error: In this case therefore, they which are offended, doe discover their owne con|science to bee corrupted. But if the reprehenders of this worke, be such as blame other mens dili|gence, because they themselves are idle, and finde fault with that, which they cannot mend, and such as like nothing,^{*} but their owne; I answer with the Apostle, He that praiseth himselfe is not allowed, but he whom the Lord praiseth. Now howsoever other are affected toward me, and my poore labours, this minde I will beare toward the sharpest Censurers and their writings: that, as the Apostle said of certaine contentious Preachers in his time,^{*} That, so Christ be preached, whe|ther under pretence or sincerely, hee would therein joy: So I say of such writers, whether they write of emulation, and vaine glorie, or of sincere affection, so the truth be maintained, I doe rejoyce therein, and give God thanks for their labours. As Hierom writeth of his friends letters: Si amas, scribe obsecranti, si irasceris, iratus licet scribe, magnum & hoc desiderii solamen habebis, si amici literas vel indignantis accipiam; Ad Nitiam: If thou lovest me, write at my request, if thou art angrie, yet write; it is some comfort unto me, that I may receive the letters, yea of an angrie friend.

But some doe thinke, that it is in vaine for men to write in this age, which so smally considereth of their paines, and that it is labour lost, which findeth not recompence in the world. As though peace were the reward of the pen, and the grace of God depended upon the grace and favour of men: the gifts of God, as they are not bought with money, so neither should they be sold for money. Hee that serveth the world, let him looke for his reward in the world: he that serveth Christ, shall finde him a plentiful rewarder. He that said to his Apostles, Great is your reward in heaven, hath a reward in store for those which labour in his name: They which expect either praise or profit in this world, having their desire, doe receive their reward, as our Saviour said of the Pharisees, that did all of vaine ostentation: They have their reward. As for the praise of men, as Hierom saith of the Preacher, Docente te in Ecclesia, non clamor populi, sed gemitus suscitetur, lachrymae auditorum laudes tuae sint; ad Nepotian. When thou teachest in the Church, seeke not to raise the crying, but the sighing of the people; let the teares of the hearers be thy praise. As the Preacher must not respect the praise of men, so neither the writer. And concerning other reward of gaine or preferment to be expected, Ambrose hath this excellent speech; Propositam pia mens mercedem non appetit, sed pro mercede habet boni facti conscientiam, & justi operis effectum; angustae mentes invitentur promisso, erigantur speratis mercedibus; lib. 1. de Abraham cap. 8. A godly minde coveteth no propounded reward; but counteth the conscience of well doing, and the good effect of the well done worke, a reward: let unwilling minds bee enticed by promises, and stirred up with hope of rewards.

Now it remaineth that I briefly shew the argument, order, and matter of this Commentarie: wherein I have chiefly propounded unto my selfe (omitting the ordinarie and usuall collections) the discussing and solution of such questions as seemed more obscure and difficult: according to that saying of Augustine, Verbi Dei altitudo exercet studium, non denegat intellectum▪ The depth of the word of God, doth exercise meditation and studie, it denieth not understanding. And he fitly resembleth the holy writers, the Prophets and Apostles, to the Angels whom Jacob saw ascending and descending:  Ascendentes sunt, quando perfectis perfecta praedicant; descendentes* quando parvulis & imperitis simplicia insinuant: They ascend, when they preach perfect things to the perfect: they descend, when they insinuate plaine things to the simple. I have followed the same method in this Commentarie upon Exodus, which I did before observe upon Genesis: they that know the one, may also judge of the other. This historie of Exodus consisting of two parts, the redemption of the Lords people, and the constitution of them being redeemed▪ by whole some lawes and ordinances; I have accordingly divided into two parts, or tomes: the first whereof handleth the peoples deliverance, and preservation, unto the 19. Chapter: The second treateth of their constitution, and setting of their estate by wholesome lawes, both Morall, Iudiciall and Ceremoniall: which part likewise is distributed into two books, the first containing the promulgation of the foresaid lawes, to Chapter 30. the other the execution thereof, thence to the end of the booke.

Page [unnumbered]

Thus have I proceeded in the old Testament hitherto▪ not being yet resolved with my selfe, whether to take the books of the Hebrew Scriptures in order, which a mans life time would scarce suffice in this manner to goe thorow, or to make choice of the more difficult books indifferently out of the old and new Testament: In the handling whereof, wee shall see the different gifts of Interpreters, as Hierome well noteth, Multi super Evangelia bene disserunt, sed in explanatione Apostoli impares sui sunt; alii cum in instrumento novo optimè senserint, in Psalmis & veteri Testamen/ito muti sunt. Dialog. 1. advers.

*Pelagian. Divers doe treat well upon the Gospels, but in explaining the Apostle are unlike themselves: others being of sound judgement in the new Testament, are no bodie in the old. But yet to begin with the old, maketh a good way to understand the new, for the law is a schoolemaster, as the * Apostle saith, to bring us unto Christ. And as Am/brose elegantly resembleth it, Lex velut inferioris molae saxum, tarda, pigra, otiosa; The law as the nether milstone is heavie, slow, and of small riddance. But yet as the upper milstone, though of greater agilitie and quicker dispatch, yet cannot grinde without the nether, but both together make good meale: so the truth and faith of Christ, as fine flower, is betweene the old and new Testament minsed and divided forth unto us.*

But this further I must advertise the discreet Reader of, not to take offence, that I have made use in this Commentarie, both of Protestant and Popish writers, old and new upon this booke (as I have here set them downe in the margen) not rejecting the judgement of any that wnesse for the truth. For as the Apostle allegeth the Heathen Poets, so farre as they are witnesses of the truth: so I thinke a Protestant, by that warrant, may borrow of such Interpreters, which otherwise favour and savour of superstition, where their pen is a minister and handmaid of truth: and whereas S. Iames saith, Have not the faith of our glorious Lord Iesus Christ in respect of persons; they which doe refuse the testimonie of the truth at any mans hand, in respect of any schisme, sect or profes|sion, should seeme to be partiall in discerning of the truth, against the Apostles rule; wherein Pro|testant writers are more equall than the Romanists: for they thinke scorne to use our writers, though of never so excellent parts: as appeareth in Pererius Commentaries, who sorteth out his collections wholly out of men of his owne sect (I speake of the new writers) whereas he needed be no more ashamed, to have followed the judgement of Luther; Calvine, Simlerus, Iunius, and other worthie writers among the Protestants, as we doe not refuse the learned observations of Cajetanus, Montanus, Vatablus, with others of their side. I have therefore out of their writings taken the best and left the worst: where they speake the truth, I alleage them; where they are found in error, I refute them: herein following Hieroms president, Operis est & studii mei multos legere, ut ex plurimis di/versos flores carperem, non tam probaturus omnia, quàm, quae bona, electurus. Advers. Vigilant. I professe this to be my studie, to gather varietie of flowers out of divers, not to al|low all which I finde, but to make choice of the best▪ And as Ambrose well saith, *Legimus aliqua, ne legantur; legimus, ne ignoremus▪ legimus, non ut teneamus, sed ut repudiemus: * Somethings we reade, that others should not read them; we reade them, not to be ignorant of them; we reade them, not to retaine them, but to reject them.*

These my labours, as your Grace was my great encourager first to undertake them, so it is meet that you should with the first reape the fruit of them. And this I wish from my heart, and humblie crave of God, that, all domesticall contentions being laid aside, wee the Ministers of the Gospell might so spend our time, and imploy our paines, that the age present might receive comfort by our Ministerie, and posteritie profit. And I say with Augustine to Hierome, Quiescamus ab his contentionibus, nostrae vitae salutique parcamus, minus certè assequatur illa, quae inflat, dum non offendatur illa quae aedificat: Let us rest from these contentions, and favour our life and health: let that have lesse which puffeth up, so that be not offended which edifieth. Mens singularitie should give place to charitie, and opinion of knowledge to peace, and selfe love to the common good. And so I conclude with that saying of Hierome, Precor itaque ut p••em, ◇◇ nobis reliquit Dominus, habeamus: in b••evi antetribunal ejus, reconciliat• se• s•iss••••/cordiâ, aut praemium recuperabit, aut poenam; ad Castorin•m: I pray therefore, that ◇◇ may injoy that peace, which our Lord left unto us: shortly before his tribunall seat, for con|cord kept or broken, we shall receive reward or punishment.

Page [unnumbered]

Your Graces readie to be commanded in the blessed Lord Iesus, Andrew Willet.

Page [unnumbered]

CERTAINE DIRECTIONS TO THE READER.

I Desire thee (courteous Reader) to follow these directions in the reading of this worke. In the whole Scripture and euery part thereof, there are two things generally to be considered, the sense and understanding, and the use and profit: As the Apostle toucheth both, first speaking to Timothie of the Knowing, that is, the understanding of Scripture, then of the profitable use, 2 Tim. 3.15, 16. The sense of the Scripture is either the literall and single sense, which is seene in the interpretation of the words; or the compound and mixt sense, which consisteth either in shew|ing the coherence of the text, with the other parts going before, and following; or in removing of doubts, difficulties and con|tradictions. Now the use and profit of Scripture, either con|cerneth doctrine, in confirming the truth, and confuting error; or manners, in reproving vice, or exhorting to vertue: and thus the Apostle saith, The whole Scripture is profitable to teach, to improve, to correct and instruct in righteousness, 2 Tim. 3.16.

According to this distribution, have I observed six points upon every Chapter: three belonging to the sense, the Argument and method shewing the coherence, the diuers Readings explaining the literall sense and signification of words, and the explication of questions, which concerneth the remo|ving of doubts: the other three doe shew the use, in noting the doctrines for confirmation of the truth, or the controversies for the confuting of errors; and then follow the Morall observations, tending ei|ther to the destruction of vice, or instruction in righteousness.

In the Diuers Readings, I. signifieth Junius, V. Vatablus, C. the Chalde Paraphrast, S. the Septuagint, L. the vulgar Latine translation, A. Arias Montanus, P. Pagnine, B. the great Bible, G. the Geneva edition, H. the Hebrew originall. And the letters in the margen shew the best reading: the starre fixed in the margen noteth the diversitie of reading in some principall place. These my labours now I commend unto thy favourable acceptation (Christian Reader;) and both thee and them, to the gracious blessing of our glorious Lord Iesus Christ: to whom be praise for ever.

Page [unnumbered]

Page 1

THE SECOND BOOKE OF MOSES CALLED EXODVS. GENERALL OBSERVATIONS out of the whole Booke.

I. The summe and argument.

AS in the former booke Moses shewed the originall and beginning of th•Church: so in this hee declareth the progresse and increase thereof. Simler: wherein, both Gods faithfulnessse and truth appeareth in per|forming his promise made to their fathers, in multiplying their seed wonderfully, and that under the miserable thraldome and bondage of Egypt. Pellican. and the Lords glorie and power notably appeared in those mighty signes and wonders, whereby Pharaoh was forced to let Israel goe. Vatab. his fatherly and tender care also shewed it selfe, in sparing his people and not utterly destroying them, when they fell into lust, murmuring, and idolatrie: still correcting them as a father, by his chastisements to bring them to repentance, yet remembering his ancient love still following them with new benefits. Genevens. and his wonderfull providence is manifested in giving them lawes to be governed by, and prescribing unto them a most excellent forme of worship. Iunius. And the summe of this booke is briefly comprehended in the 105. Psalm, from verse 24. to the end: wherein the Psalmist sheweth how it fared with Israel in Egypt before their deliverance: by what meanes they were delivered, and what the Lord did for them after their deliverance. Ferus.

2. The parts of the booke.

This booke of Exodus hath two parts:

- 1. The narration and historie of the Israelites deliverance and going out of Egypt. A.
- 2. The constitution and setting of the Church after their deliverance. B.
- A. In their deliverance are to bee considered
 - 1. Such things as went before: as
 - The occasion, which was their grievous oppression in Egypt. chap. 1.
 - The preparation of the instruments of their deliverance: of Moses, chap. 2, 3, 4. and Aaron, chap. 4. with their message to Pharaoh, chap. 5, 6.
 - The meanes procuring their deliverance, those ten severall plagues, which were sent upon Egypt: described from chap. 7. to chap. 12.
 - 2. Their deliverance it selfe: consisting of their
 - Departure out of Egypt, with the manner thereof, and institution of the Passeover, chap. 12. and their going forward in their journey, c. 13.
 - Their passing thorow the red sea, with the destruction of the Egyptians. chap. 14.
 - Their thanksgiving. chap. 15.

- • In the constitution of the Church is set forth
 - 1. The provision of things necessarie for them: as
 - 1. Their foode, chap. 16. and water for their thirst. chap. 17.
 - 2. Defence from their enemies, as the Amalekites▪ chap. 17.
 - 3. A politike order set for government, c. 18.
 - 2. The prescription and promulgation of lawes.
 - Morall, chap. 20. with the preparation thereunto, chap. 19. Judicall, belonging to the policie of the Common-wealth, chap. 21. to 24.
 - Ceremoniall touching
 - The sacred things of the Tabernacle, chap. 25.27.30.
 - The Tabernacle it selfe. c. 26.27.
 - The Ministers of the holy things, the Priests and Levites,
 - Their institution with their holie garments, chap. 28.
 - Consecration, ch. 29.
 - The workmen and instruments. chap. 30.
 - 3. The execution and practice of their people: partly in
 - Their disobedience to the Morall law, in their apostasie and idolatrie, chap. 32. with their reconciliation, chap. 33.34.

- Their obedience concerning the ceremonials
 - Of the people in bringing stuffe to make the Tabernacle and other holy things: chap. 35.36.
 - Of the workmen in making all things according to the pattern. chap. 36. to 39.
 - Moses in approving the worke▪ chap. 39. and disposing it, chap. 40.

3. Certaine generall questions out of the whole booke explained.

QUEST. I. Concerning the inscription of the booke.

This booke is called in Hebrew of the first words, velle shemoth, that is, and these are the names: of the Greekes, it is called 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, Exodus, of the miraculous going of the Israelites out of Egypt: Simler. The inscription of the bookes of Scripture is of three sorts: for it is taken either from the persons that wrote them, as the bookes of Esay, Ierem. &c. or whereof they be written, either in generall, as the bookes of Ioshuah, and of the Judges: or in part, as the bookes of Samuel: or else from the things entreated of, as the booke of Leviticus, Numbers, &c. or of the first words of the booke: as Genesis, is called of the Hebrewes, beresheth, in the beginning: Leviticus, ve•kra, and he called, &c. which are the first words of the text▪ and so also is this booke named, as is said before: Iun. and the reason of it may be this, because where the writer of any booke of Scripture left it without name, they of elder time for reverence and religion sake did forbear to give it any title. Simler.

QUEST. II. Of the computation of yeeres comprehended in the storie of Exodus.

Concerning the continuance of time and number of yeeres, which are comprehended in this booke, they are found to be 142. as may bee thus gathered: From the death of Ioseph to the birth of Moses are yeeres 60. from the birth of Moses unto the departure of Israel out of Egypt, are yeeres 80. chap. 7.7. from the departure of Israel thence unto the Tabernacle erected, was one yeere, chap. 40.17. Iun. These two latter numbers are certainly gathered out of the Scripture: only the first may be doubted of: which is thus also warranted: all the time of the peregrination of Abraham and his seed in Egypt and Canaan maketh 430. yeeres, Exod. 22.40. this time beginneth when Abraham was called out of his countrie, and 30. yeeres was run at the birth of Isaack: who at 60. begat Iacob, Gen. 25.26. who at an 130. went downe into Egypt unto Ioseph, Gen. 47.9. who being then 39. yeeres old, and dying at an 110. Gen. 50.26. lived after that yeeres 71. then put hereunto 80. yeeres of Moses age: all maketh (joyning the summes of 30.60.130.71.80. together) yeeres 371: there remaineth then the summe of 59. yeeres, or 60. to make up the whole summe of 430. yeeres.

QUEST. III. Whether Moses were the writer of this booke.

NOW that Moses was the pen-man and writer of this booke (the spirit of God being the author, and inspirer thereof, it is diversly evident: 1. for Mose testifieth of himselfe, that he wrote all the words of the Lord, Exod. 24.4. which are contained in this booke. 2. The Scripture so divideth the bookes of the old Testament, that they were written either by Moses, or some other of the Prophets, Luk. 16.31. 3. Our Saviour alleaging a certaine place out of this booke, doth call it the booke of Moses: Mark. 12.

26. Have you not read in the booke of Moses? so also Luk. 20.37. And that the dead shall rise againe, even Moses shewed it beside the bush, when he said, &c.

BUt whereas in this booke divers both morall, ceremoniall and Iudiciall lawes are prescribed, where|of the two first there is no question, but that the one doth bind us still, and the other is abrogated: only concerning the Iudicials of Moses, it is controverted, whether Christian Magistrates are bound to observe them: which Iudicials being of three sorts, either such which are annexed to the Morall law, as the punishment of adulterie and murther and disobedience to parents with death, and such like: or such as were appendant to the Ceremoniall law, as the punishment of those that touched any dead thing, or that came neere a woman in her monethly course, and such like: or such as belonged to the peculiar policie and state of that Common-wealth, as concerning the yeere of Jubile, * the raising up of seed to the bro|ther departed in marrying his wife, and such like: of the two latter there is no doubt made, but that the one is abrogated together with the ceremonies, whereon they attended, the other as proper to that go|vernment are now determined: only the third kinde of Iudicials remaineth, about the which great que|stion is made, how farre Christian governours are obliged to the same.

For the discussing of which question, 1. I neither am of their opinion, * which thinke that the Iudiciall law is left to the libertie of the Christian Magistrate to adde to it, and take from it, and to alter it, as shall •e thought fit for the time and manner of the countrey: for this were, 1. to be wiser than God, to leave altogether those directions and rules of justice, which he hath set downe: and the Apostle saith, the foolishnesse of God is wiser than men, 1. Cor. 1.25. that which seemeth to be meanest of the Divine orders, is farre beyond the wisest humane inventions. 2. And there is but one Law-giver that can save and destroy, Iam 4.12. Onely God that gave unto man his life, hath power to take it away: and therefore otherwise than God hath given direction, either by particular precept, or generall rule the life of man is not to bee taken away. 3. And seeing Magistrates are but Gods Ministers, Rom. 13.4. they must execute justice ac|cording to his will: for it is required of a disposer that he bee found faithfull, 1. Cor. 4.2. but Gods will otherwise appeareth not, than in his word. 4. And seeing whatsoever is not of faith (that is, firme per|swasion) is sinne, Rom. 14.23. and faith must be grounded upon the word, as being wrought by the word, Rom 10.17. how can the Magistrate approve his acts of justice as in the sight of God, unlesse hee can warrant the same by the word?

2. Neither yet can I consent with those which thinke, * that the punishment inflicted by Moses for the breach of the morall law together with the morall law is imposed upon Christian Magistrates: as it is not lawfull to punish adulterie otherwise than by death, nor simple theft by death but by restitution: Piscator. praefation. in Exod. for, if this were so, then the Gospell should overthrow the policie and institution of divers Common-wealths, which of a long time have continued: but God is the author of peace, not of confusion. 1. Cor. 14.33. 2. Mardoche and Daniel having place of government under the Persian Kings, did no doubt minister justice according to the lawes of that countrey. 3. Our Saviour Christ commanding to give tribute to Caesar, and injoyning obedience to the higher powers which did beare the sword, and that for conscience sake, Rom. 13. seeme to give approbation to the lawes of nations main|taining right, and tending to equity. 4. Our Saviour himselfe observed not the iudicials belonging to the morall law: for whereas he that gathered stickes upon the Sabbath was stoned to death by Moses, yet our Saviour excuseth and defendeth his Apostles, who did, as much as the other, in rubbing the eares of corne for their necessity, Matth. 12. yea hee giveth a rule, that for fornication onely and adulterie it was lawfull for a man to put away his wife, Matth. 19. which exception needed not, if either in fact then, or in right afterward, adulterers and adulteresses were to bee punished by death. If it be answered that Christ tooke not upon him the office of the Civill Magistrate, to impose corporall punishment: yet would not our Saviour have defended his Apostles, nor yet by silence have left them unproved for ne|glect of the law.

3. Wherefore the best resolution is, that the morall judicials of Moses do partly bind,* and partly are left free: they do not hold affirmatively, that we are tied to the same severity of punishment now, which was inflicted then: but negatively they doe hold, that now the punishment of death should not be adjudged, where sentence of death is not given by Moses: Christian Magistrates ruling now under Christ the Prince of peace, Isai. 9. that is of clemencie & mercie, may abate of the severitie of Moses law, & mitigate the punishment of death: but they cannot adde unto it, to make the burthen more heavie: to shew more rigour than Moses, becommeth not the Gospell, to extend more favour is not unbeseeming: of these two assertions my reasons are as followeth: 1. That which Ambrose urgeth out of the mouth of Luke, how our Saviour reproveth his Disciples, because they would have had fire come downe upon the Samaritanes, upon the which example hee thus inferreth: Ostenditur nobis, non semper in eos qui peccaverunt vindicandum, quia nonnunquam amplius prodest clementia tibi ad patientiam, lapso ad correctionem: It is shewed us, that alwayes vengeance is not to bee taken of those that offend, because oftentimes clemencie is more profitable for patience in thee, and amendement in the offender.* And this collection is ratified by the answer of our Saviour in that place: The Sonne of man is not come to destroy mens lives, but to save them, Luk. 9.55. 2. Augustine urgeth the example of Christ, who suffered the woman taken in adultery to escape without punishment of death, Ioh. 8. Whereupon hee inferreth that the adulter▪ 〈◇〉 ▪ not now to bee put to death, but to live rather, to be reconciled to her husband, or to come 〈...〉 : the usuall answer is, that our Saviour doth not here abrogate the Law against adultery, 〈◇〉

Page 4

only to meddle with the Magistrates office:  Piscator. Ans.* Neither doe wee say that Christ abrogateth that law: but leaveth it free and taketh away the necessitie of it. And though Christ exercised not the Magistrates office in his owne person, yet in this case, it had not beene impertinent to have gi|ven direction to have her before the Magistrate, as in another case, he sendeth the leper to the Priest, Matth. 8.4. if it had pleased him to impose still the severitie of the law: yea our Saviour sheweth by his answer: Let him that is amongst you without sinne, cast the first stone at her; Ioh. 8.7. that hee would not have them such strait executors of the rigour of Moses law upon others, but rather to bee severe judges of themselves, and with charitable affection to support the frailty of others, to the which them|selves were subject. 3. Further, the difference betweene the times of the Law and of the Gospell must be considered: then they received the spirit of bondage to feare, but now the spirit of adoption, Rom. 8.15. then they which came neere the mount, where the morall Law was given, were stone or stricken thorow with darts,* whether man or beast, Heb. 12.20. but it is not so now: then the blood of Abel cryed for vengeance, but the blood of Christ now calleth for mercie: and so speaketh better things than that of Abel▪ Heb. 12.24. Therefore to mitigate the severitie of Moses Law, in some cases (yet not leaving sinne unpunished, nor by connivence cherishing the same) it is more sutable to the profession of the Gospell of peace and mercie.

Wherefore I here say with  Chrysostome: Vbi paterfamilias largus est, dispensator non debet esse tenax: Where the master of the house is bountifull, the steward must not be sparing: Melius est propter misericordiam rationem reddere, quàm propter crudelitatem: It is better to be called to account for too much pitie, than for cruelty.* 4. The continuall practice of the Church sheweth as much, that the rigour of Moses judicials is mitigated. S. Paul willeth the incestuous man only to be excommunicate, 1. Cor. 5. it seemeth then there was no law in force to put such to death: nor in Cyprians time, who thus writeth: Quidam episcopi in nostro provincia, &c. Some Bishops in our province have altogether shut up penance against adulterie. Nor after that in the time of the Eliberin Councell, which was held under the reigne of Constantine, where it was decreed, can. 9. *Moechatus post poenitentiam, That he which committed adulterie after publike penance, should finally be denied the Communion.

In Hieromes time it seemeth that adulterie was punished by death: who in a certaine epistle maketh mention of a young man, qui adulter^oi insimulatus ad mortem trahitur:

who being accused of adultery was led forth to death: yet Augustine, as is shewed before, reasoneth against it: but of all other Origen writeth most plainly:

Apud Christianos, si adulterium fuerit admissum, &c.

Among Christians if adulterie be committed, it is not commanded that the adulterer or adulteresse bee punished with corporall death, &c. neither therefore was the law cruell then, neither now doth the Gos|pell seeme to bee dissolute: * but in them both the benignitie of God appeareth (yet) by a divers dispen|sation: then by the death of the bodie the people was rather purged from their sinnes, than condemned: but unto us sinne is purged, not by corporall punishment but by repentance: and it is to be seene unto, lest our punishment be greater, whose vengeance is laid up for the next world (when as they were ab|solved from their sinne by the paying of the punishment) as the Apostle saith, how much more punish|ment is he worthy of, that treadeth under foote the Sonne of God?

Two reasons Origen yeeldeth of this his opinion, that there is now a mitigation of the rigour of Moses law; because then it served as an expiation of their sinnes, prefiguring the death of Christ: as S. Paul applieth that sentence (Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree) which is generally delivered by Moses, to the particular death of Christ, Galat. 3.13. but now the expiation of sinne is by repentance and remission of sinnes in Christ. Againe, now a greater punishment abideth the contemners of the Gospell, even eternall in the next world, and therefore corporall death is not so much inflicted now, for God punisheth not twice for the same thing, as Origen in the same place alleageth.

Yet, although we contend, that the capitall punishment of Moses law may now be dispensed with in some cases upon the reasons before alleaged, this is not either to condemne those Common-wealths, which doe reteine still and practise the severity of Moses law against adulterers, who therein sinne not: but as Ambrose saith of the Apostles, that asked for fire to come downe upon the Samaritanes: Nec discipuli peccant legem sequentes: Yet did not the Disciples offend, following the law: neither to excuse those places, where this sinne is too easily and lightly punished, as Erasmus complaineth in his time: Nunc adulterium lusus magnatum est: Now adulterie is but a sport of great men. Where adulterie is not capi|tally punished, yet great severity otherwise should be used: as it was decreed in the Elib^orin Councell, that he which having a wife committed adulterie, should be under penance five yeeres▪ can <◇>. He that did sinne that way after should not bee received to the peace of the Church till his dying <...> that did commit adulterie after penance, should never be restored to the communion of the Chu^o c. 7. These or such like severe constitutions, this wanton and lascivious age hath need of, that this overflowing sinne might be kept in with higher bankes, than now it is: So then I conclude this point with Cyprian, who speaking of divers kindes of Ecclesiasticall censure used in divers places, * thus writeth: Manente concordia vinculo actum suum disponit & dirigit unusquis{que} Episcopus, &c. The bond of amity remaining still, every Bishop so directeth and disposeth his owne act, that he is thereof to give account unto God. The like may bee said of Princes and Magistrates, in their dominions and regiments: that the difference in publike punishments (all intending the glorie of God, and the brideling of sinne) is no cause to breake peace or breede jelou|sie betweene Christian states.

*Now for the other part, that Moses Judicials doe bind negatively, that is, where Moses Law inflicteth not death, there Christian Magistrates are not to punish with death: the reasons are these: 1. Because then the regiment of the Gospell should exceed in terror, the strictnesse and severitie of Moses Law. 2. God is that one Lawgiver, that saveth life and destroyeth, Iam. 4.12. he gave life, and he only hath right to take it away. God hath created man in his image, Gen. 9.6. which image is expressed in mans soule animating the bodie. This image then is not to be defaced and dissolved, but by warrant and direction from God: therefore the equitie of the Judicials of Moses ought to be a rule, either by generall direction, or particular president to all Magistrates, in what cases and for what sinnes they are to deprive the offenders of their life.

But here it will be objected, that if this be so, then all those Common-wealths are in error, which punish theft by death, which by Moses law is satisfied by making restitution. Exod. 22.2. Ans. Even by Moses law some kinde of theft received a capitall punishment: as if it were a violent theft,* as it was lawfull to kill a theefe breaking into the house, Exod. 22.2. or a wanton theft, as David judged him worthy to dye, that having many sheepe of his owne, tooke by violence the onely sheepe which his poore neighbour had, 2. Sam. 12.5. Likewise publike theft and sacrilege in Achan was punished by death, Iosh. 7. But that simple theft, when a man stealeth only to satisfie his hungrie soule, or to supply his present necessitie, should be proceeded against to the losse of life, it seemeth hard. And as I take it, the lawes of this land have used a good consideration herein, that such small felons should escape by their booke: wherein, to my understanding, greater clemencie and favour in some Judges were more commendable, who require an exactnesse of such simple clerkes; unlesse they bee such as are worthy, for other former evill demerits to be cut off as rotten members. There is a saying in the law, Favores sunt ampliandi: *Where favour is intended, it should be the largest way extended. It were also to be wished, that a greater valuation were yet set, than of the usuall rate, in such small felonies, when a man is to bee judged for his life. By Dioclesians law some kindes of theft are charged with restitution of foure fold: by another authentike law, the theefe is adjudged to bee beaten with clubbes. By the Decrees, Qui fecerit furtum capitale. &c. Hee that committed any capitall theft, as in breaking into an house, in stealing a beast, or some other thing of price, if he were a Clergie man he was to be under penance seven yeeres; if a lay man, five: if it were a small theft, he was to make restitution and to doe penance one yeere.* By any of these or the like constitutions, sufficient provision might be made against simple theft. But it can no wayes be justified, that such simple theft should bee more straightly punished than adulterie, which farre exceedeth the other, as the Wise man compareth them together, Prov. 6.30.32▪ that which the spirit of God hath judg'd to be the weightier sinne, by mans ballance cannot be made lighter. And hereof Erasmus complaint in his time was just: Savitur passim in miseros fures &c. Poore theeves are every where streightly handled, whereas neither Dracos, nor the Romane, nor Moses lawes punish theft with death. Then hee proceedeth: Avaritia nostra facit ut ideo magnum malum existimemus furium, quia pecuniam summi boni loco ducimus: *Our covetousnesse is the cause that we count theft such a great evill, because we hold money to be so great a good. This may suffice of this question.

4. Places of doctrine out of the whole booke.

1. Doct. Gods election sure and infallible.

First, it is evident by this booke of Exodus, wherein is set forth unto us, how diversly the people provoked God by their sinnes, as their Idolatrie, lust, murmuring, impatience, yet God continued their mercifull Lord still: that Gods election is immutable, and whom he loveth he loveth to the end, Ioh. 13.1. Genevens.

2. Doct. Which is the best forme of a Common-wealth.

SEcondly, In this booke also is described the best forme of a Common-wealth, when as both Prince, Nobles, and people have their due: that forme which is mixed of these three states is the happiest, and least subject to change, and freest from mutinies. So was it in Israel in Moses time: in his sole go|vernment there was a Monarchie, in the 70. Elders, assistants, an Aristocracie, in that out of every tribe the Senatours and Elders were indifferently chosen; therein there was a shaddow of the Democraticall state. S•mler. This mixt forme of government is well seene in our high Court of Parliament, where there is a concurrence of three estates.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confutation against election by workes.

First, this booke shewing on the one side the ingratitude and disobedience of the people, on the other the stedfast love of God toward them, affoordeth an evident argument of Gods free election without any respect to workes, against those which defend election ex praevisis operibus, of workes foreseene be|fore: and the Apostle to the same purpose out of this booke alleageth that notable text, I will have mercie on him, upon whom I will have mercie. Rom. 9.15. Borrhais.

2. Confutation against those which say all things were carnall to the fathers.

FURther: some out of Serveius schoole, which have taught that the fathers in the law had only a carnal imagination of terrene things, and no knowledge of the Messiah, are in this booke confuted: for S. Paul sheweth how that in their externall actions, and symbols, baptisme was shadowed forth, and Christ both their spirituall meat and drinke and ours, 1. Cor. 10.2.3. And though the Apostles expected a terrene kingdome, Act. 1. that they did draw from the error of those times, it being a generall received opinion. But they themselves before that joyned with Peter, in confessing Christ to be the Sonne of God, Matth. 16. and afterward, they shewed, wherein their happinesse consisted, in preaching remission of sinnes in Christ. Simler. Prologomen.

Page 6

6. Places of morall use.

1. Mor. Our spirituall deliverance by Christ shadowed forth.

First, here in the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt, is shadowed forth our spirituall deliverance by Christ: they under Moses escaped from the tyrannie of Pharaoh and the bondage of Egypt: wee by Christ are set free from the spirituall captivitie of sinne and Sathan: as the Prophet Zacharie alludeth unto this externall deliverance, chap. 10.11. The Scepter of Egypt shall depart away. Borrah.

2. Mor. Gods chastisements tend not to destruction, but to amendment.

AGaine: in that the Lord, when the people sinned, scourged them, and yet not to their destruction, but to their amendement: it sheweth that both God is not partiall, but will punish sinne, even in his owne children, as also, that the afflictions, which God layeth upon his children, tendeth not to their ever|sion, but is sent rather to worke their conversion: Genevens. The Apostle saith; If ye endure chastening, God, offereth himselfe unto you, as unto sonnes. Heb. 12.7.

3. Mor. Example of speciall vertues in this booke.

FURther, in this booke many examples of singular vertues are propounded worthy of imitation: of piety in the Midwives, of faith in Moses parents, of meeknesse in Moses, and faithfulness toward his people, of zeale in the Levites: that all flocked to Moses to execute vengeance upon the Idolaters. Simler.

CHAP. I.

T His chapter sheweth the occasion which moved the Lord (for the cause thereof was in himselfe) to procure the deliverance of his people. This occasion is of two sorts:

First, the wonderfull increase of the people, where is mention made both of their names and number comming downe to Egypt, vers. 1. to vers. 7. then of their increasing in Egypt, vers. 7.

Secondly: The other occasion is the affliction of the Israelites, which followed upon this their increasing and multiplying: where is set downe their consultation with the threefold end thereof, vers. 10. Then the execution: where foure severall afflictions of the Israelites are described: 1. Their hard usage under the taskmasters, vers. 11. 2. Their miserable bondage being at the command in generall of the Egyptians not only for publike but private workes, vers. 14. 3. The male children are commanded to be slaine: where first the charge is given by Pharaoh to the Midwives, vers. 15.16. Then the execution followeth contrarie to the Kings expectation: where three things are declared; the reason which induced the Midwives not to obey the Kings cruell edict, v. 17. their defence unto the King, vers. 18.19. the reward of the Midwives, vers. 20. 4. Then followeth the generall edict for the destroying of all the men children, vers. 22.

2. The divers readings.

* 5. But Ioseph was in Egypt. A.P.V.B.G. cum caeter. with Ioseph, which was in Egypt. T. here, which is ad|ded: the meaning is, that Ioseph, though he were in Egypt, must be added to that number to make up 70.

10. That they joyne themselves unto our enemies, or fight against us. T. better than, and fight against us. B.G. cum caet. for their feare is threefold, lest they should run to their enemies, rebell, or escape out of their service.

* 11. They built for Pharaos cities of munition. T.S. rather, than cities of treasure. A.P.C.B.G. or cities of tabernacles, L. or cities of store. V. the word mischenothis taken for munition. 1. King. 9.19.

* 14. With all manner of bondage, which they exacted of them by cruelty. G.A.P.L. or according. S. better than beside all service which, &c. T. for the preposition eeth signifieth, with: or to put it in the nominative: their bondage wherein they served them was most cruell. V.B. the word bepharech, signifieth not cruell, but by or with cruelty.

* 16. When yee looke into the stooles. T. that is, whereon the women sate in their travell: to see of what sex the infant was: better than, see them on their stooles. G. them is added: or, see them in their birth time. V.S. B. looke in the stooles. A. P.H. that is, into them: the word abenim signifieth the stooles of women in travell, so called of banim children. T.P.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. Why the twelve Patriarkes are so often rehearsed.

Vers. 1. These are the names of the children of Israel. The names of the twelve Patriarkes are so often rehearsed in Scripture: 1. because of them came the twelve tribes, the Priestly also and the Kingly order sprang from thence. 2. And this mysticall number of twelve is used in Scripture, to describe the spirituall state of the Church under Christ: as twelve thousand are chosen out of every tribe, Apoc. 7. and the new Jerusalem is set forth by the twelve gates, and twelve foundations, Apoc. 21. Simler. 3. And to shew the truth and constancie of Gods promises, in increasing the seed of Iacob, of twelve fathers into so many thousands. Pellican. 4. And beside the dignitie and prerogative of the children of God herein appeareth, who are chiefly remembred in Scripture where mention is made of the wicked, it is by the way and as it were by accident, and in a manner besides the proper intention of the Scripture. Ferus.

QUEST. II. Why Iacobs sonnes are not alwayes rehearsed in the same order.

Vers. 3. Issachar, Zebulon and Benjamin: the Patriarkes are seldome rehearsed in the same order: for Gen. 46. first Leahs children, then her maide Zilpahs: then Rachels sonnes, and lastly Bilhah her maides are numbred: but here Benjamin Rachels sonne is set before the sonnes of the handmaidens: the like order is kept Genes. 35. So Reuben is here named first, but in the order of the campe Iudah hath the first place, Num. 2. and when the spies are sent out Numb. 13. another order is observed. Simler. The reasons hereof may be these: 1. because in the old Testament for the most part the order of nature, not of grace is followed: for though Reuben were the eldest in birth, yet Iudah had the regall preeminence. Bor. 2. This is done, that we should not be curious observers of numbers, or mens nativities. Pellican. 3. The Patriarkes had now all received their fathers blessing, and were incorporate into one holy people: to shew therefore their equalitie, and that there was no difference of the tribes before God, sometimes one is named first, sometime another. Ferus. 4. But here, and Gen. 35. all the children of Iacobs wives, as sonnes of free women are rehearsed before the sonnes of the maide servants. Iun. Vatab.

QUEST. III. How they are said to be seventie soules, that went downe with Iacob into Egypt.

Vers. 5. SO all the soules that came of Iacobs loynes were seventie: 1. They were beside Iacob 66. with Iacob 67. with Ioseph & his two sonnes 70. so then in this number Iacobs wives are not reckoned, but onely those which came out of his loynes: but Ioseph must be included, and therefore it is added: but Ioseph was in Egypt. Iunius readeth, cum Iosepho, with Ioseph, in the same sense. 2. Whereas the Septuagint read 75. whom S. Luke followeth in Stephens storie, Act. 7. because it was not safe to depart in a matter of number from the received translation; Iunius thinketh, that in that number all are comprehended beside Iacob, that are rehearsed in that catalogue, as Iacobs two wives, Er and Onan, which all make 75. But why should Iacobbe left out in the number of 75. and included in the number of 70. and to what purpose should Er and Onan be comprehended in that summe, seeing they were dead before and went not downe into Egypt? But seeing the Septuag. Gen. 46. doe rehearse five nephewes of Ioseph, Machir, and Gilead his sonne of Manasses, Sutalam, and Edem his sonne, and Taam of Ephraim, it is more like, that S. Luke, for the reason before alleaged, therein followeth the Septuagint: Aretius. See more of this upon that question, Gen. 46.

QUEST. IV. Of the wonderfull multiplying of the Israelites in Egypt.

7. And the children of Israel fructified, &c. 1. The people increased exceedingly: which is here expressed by foure words of like significations: p•ru, they fructified: ijsrezu, they brought forth in abundance, as the fish: ijrbu, they were multiplied, and jagghatzuus, they waxed strong.

Simler. 2. and so accordingly they multiplied that of 70. persons, there came 700000. of every one tenn thousand Pellican. Yea, whereas above six hundred thousand of men able to goe to warre from twentie yeeres old and upward were numbred, that came out of Egypt▪ Numb. 1.46. out of which number were excepted all the males under twentie, and all the old men, beside the women, which were not so few as the men, seeing it was not unusuall in those dayes for one man to have divers wives: it may be supposed, and is so judged by some, that the whole number could not bee lesse than thirtie hundred thousand. Perer. 3.

QUEST. V. In what time the Israelites so exceedingly increased.

FUrther, this multiplying of the Israelites, to take the longest time from the first going downe of Ia|cob, to the returne of the Israelites thence, was in the space of 215. yeeres. Some thinke that the grea|test increase was the first hundred yeere, after that generation was dead, vers. 6. which is usually taken in Scripture for the space of an hundred yeeres. Simler. But there by that generation are understood onely the men of that age. Vatab. Augustine taketh all the time after the death of Ioseph, which Perer. coun|teth an 145. yeeres. But the chiefe time of this increase was after Iosephs death, before the time of their servitude: how they increased also in the time of their bondage is declared afterward vers. 12. Neither need this seeme strange, that in the space of 215. yeeres the Israelites did so wonderfully increase, seeing that forren authors doe write, that Ninus, who began to reigne 250. yeeres after the floud, did lead in his armie against the Bactrianes 700. thousand footmen, and two hundred thousand horsemen: Diod. Sicul. lib. 3. cap. 2. ex Ctesia. Perer.

Page 8

QUEST. VI. By what meanes the Israelites increased.

*HOW this wonderfull increase should be wrought: 1. we neither need to thinke with Augustine▪ that it was miraculous. 2. nor with the Hebrewes to imagine, that every one of them brought forth two or three at a birth. Pellican. For although it be often seene, that women may have many at a birth: as Aristotle maketh mention of one that had twentie at foure times, * five at every birth, and that it is usuall in Egypt for the women to have two and three, and sometimes five at a birth: Trogus reporteth that in Egypt they bring forth sometimes seven at once. Bor. yet this is not usually nor often seene. 3. There|fore, supposing, as is most like, that all the Hebrew women were very fruitfull, that they bore betimes, and were child-bearing long, being not cut off by untimely death or sicknesse: it seemeth not impossible that such a number by ordinarie meanes, in the circuite of 215. yeeres might be multiplied: for seventie persons in thirtie yeeres, if they beget every one but one in a yeere, will have 2100. Cut off the odde hun|dred, and admit that the third part onely of the other number was apt for generation, that is six hundred, which make 300. couples or mariages, those will beget in thirtie yeeres more, which is the 60. yeere from their comming into Egypt, nine thousand: the third part hereof three thousand, maketh fiftene hun|dred couples: which having but every yeere one, will beget the next thirtie yeeres, which makes 90. in all, 45000. hereof the third part 15000. will make 7400. couples, leaving the odde hundred: which will beget by the 12. yeere, 222000. the third part whereof 74000. maketh 37000. couples, and will be|get by the 150. yeere 1110000 the third part hereof 370000. maketh 185000. mariages, which will be|get the next thirtie yeeres, by the 180. yeere, 5550000. whereof the third part 185000. which maketh beside the five odde thousand, 920000. mariages, which will beget by the 210. yeere, 27600000. that is, 27. thousand, six hundred thousand: Simler. Though herein no miracle be admitted, yet could it not be done without the exceeding blessing of God, especially, that notwithstanding their cruell bondage, and sore labour, yet they multiplied without number.

Perer.

Somewhat about this time, the children of Ephraim being increased went against the men of Gath to take away their cattell, but presuming before the time they were slaine, and Ephraim mourned for them, 1 Chron. 7.21. Osiander.

QUEST. VII. Who this new King was that knew not Ioseph.

Vers. 8. There arose a new King in Egypt. 1. This new King was neither an Assyrian borne, as Cajetano conjectureth upon these words of Isay chap.52.4. My people went downe into Egypt to sojourne there, and Asshur oppressed them without cause; but the Prophet in this place toucheth both the oppressions of the Israelites in Egypt, and under Asshur: neither in the Egyptian Chronicles was there any Assyrian King either before Moses, or for a thousand yeeres after, till the reigne of Cambises the Persian. 2. Neither could this King be Mephres, in whose ninth yeere Ioseph should die, and the bondage of Israel begin: as Vincentius. For seeing all the Patriarkes were dead before their affliction began, of which number Levi, elder than Ioseph by foure yeeres, lived 137. yeeres, Exod. 6. and so survived Ioseph (who died at 110. yeeres) 23. yeeres: then could not Mephres be this King, that began to reigne before Ioseph died. 3. Neither was this King Ramesses, as some thinke, because one of the cities which the Israelites built was called by that name: for Ramesses was King of Egypt in the time of the Trojane warre: Plin. lib. 36. cap. 8. which was three hundred yeeres after the death of Moses: if he reigned in Egypt in the time of Deborah, as thinketh Eusebius, he was 140. yeeres after Moses, 4. But it is more probable that this King was Amemphis, in whose 18. yeere Eusebius thinketh Moses was borne: so also Hierome in Chronicis, some call him Memnon, the speaking stone, whose image did use to speake at the Sunnes rise, and so continued untill Christ: Perer. Simler.

QUEST. VIII. Why this Pharaoh is called a new King.

HE is called a new King, because he came of another family: Ioseph▪ or for that he brought in a new kind of government, altering and changing the lawes, as the Chalde Paraphrast: and ruling after his owne pleasure: Simler. He knew not Ioseph, either being borne after his time, or having forgotten his benefits, as Darius had Mardoches faithfulness, Esther 6. Iunius. Wherein his great ingratitude appeared: for two great benefits Ioseph had procured; one in generall, in saving the whole land in the time of the famine; the other to the Crowne, in annexing to it the fift part of the revenewes of Egypt: Perer. As also herein Iosephs modestie appeared, that did not in his long time of honour, which continued 80. yeeres, raise up an honourable and wealthie state to his posteritie, seeing his house was so soone obscured: but, as is most like, he and his sonnes joyned themselves unto their brethren, not hunting after the wealth of Egypt, where they knew they were but strangers: Simlerus.

QUEST. IX. The causes of the affliction of the Israelites.

Vers. 10. Come let us worke wisely with them, &c. 1. There were three causes why the Egyptians consulted to oppress the Israelites: first they envied their happinesse and prosperitie, for God every way blessed them: then they hated them for their religion, in which regard the Hebrewes were an abomination to the Egyptians, for they sacrificed those beasts which the Egyptians worshipped: see Gen. 46.34. and Exod. 8.26. Thirdly they were afraid of them, lest they should joyne with their enemies, and rebell against them: Perer. 2. And three things they feared, lest they might take part with their enemies, or rebell by their owne strength, or make an escape out of the land: Iun. They feared all these joyntly, and every one in particular, therefore it is better read disjunctively: * see before in the di|vers readings. 3. They worke wisely, or cunningly, c•ftily (for so the word Chacham is taken both in the good & bad part) not as the Hebrewes imagine, because they would not destroy them with the sword or fire, lest God might be revenged of them in the same kind, but devised by the water to destroy them, whereby the Lord promised never to destroy the world againe: but their craft is seene in attempting di|vers wayes to keepe them under, that if they prevailed not by one meanes, they might by another: and in respect of themselves they worke wisely, providing both for their owne securitie, and for their profit in the service of the Israelites: Simler. Likewise they opprest them cunningly, that they might not be ac|cused of open and manifest tyrannie: Osiander. 4. Iosephus alleageth another cause of this affliction: that about that time one of the Egyptian Priests foretold unto the King of one that should be borne, who, when hee once came to yeeres, should worke much harme to the Egyptians, and greatly exalt the people of Israel: lib. 2. antiquit. cap. 5. But this being his conjecture, no such thing here insinuated by Mo|ses, may be more safely rejected, than credited.

QUEST. X. Of the hard affliction of the Israelites.

12. THerefore they did set taskmasters over them, &c. 1. Divers wayes were the Israelites most grievously oppressed in Egypt. 1. Philo writeth, that they were caused to carrie burthens above their strength, that they were forced to worke night and day: that the same were constrained to be both workmen, and servers: they were employed in making brick, digging, and building: insomuch, that many of them died under their burthens, and were not suffered to be buried: and beside, the most cruell men were set to be their taskmasters: Phil. lib. 1. de vita Mosis 2. Iosephus addeth further: that the Israe|lites made ditches and trenches to convey the river: and built the great Pyramides of bricke, yea they carried the filth and dust out of the citie: lib. 2. antiquit. cap. 5. 3. Eusebius out of Eupolimus writeth, that to make the Hebrewes more odious, they were commanded to go otherwise apparelled than the Egypti|ans. 4. But we need not seeke further than in the Scriptures: as the businesse of their worke is set forth, vers. 14. they wrought in clay and bricke, and in all manner of rurall workes, Exod. 5. they were compell|ed to seeke straw themselves to make their bricke with, and yet nothing was diminished of their daily taske: & if they failed their officers were beaten. And therefore in respect of their hard servitude, the Lord saith, he brake the bands of their yoke, Levit. 26.13. and tooke them out of the iron furnace, Deut. 4.20. 5. Thus the Egyptians three wayes kept them under, they exacted of them tribute to empoverish their wealth: Bor. they laid burthens upon them, to weaken their bodies, and by this meanes they thought to hinder their generation and increase: Simler.

QUEST. XI. Of the cities Pithom and Rameses, which the Israelites built for Pharaoh.

Vers. 11. AND they built the cities of munition Pithom and Ruhumses: 1. The word is Mischenoth, which signifieth not Tabernacles, as the Latine translation readeth, being deceived as is like by the similitude of this word and succoth, which signifieth Tabernacles: most reade the cities of trea|sures: as sochen is taken for a treasurer, Isa. 22.15. the Hebrewes take them to bee granaries, where the Egyptians laid up their store of corne, which was the riches and treasure of Egypt: & so Vatablus readeth repositoria; storehouses. Lyranus thinketh they were called cities of treasures, because they were so sure, that they might serve for the keeping of treasure. Oleaster deriveth the word of suchan to enclose or shut up, as it is taken, Psal. 139.3. Thou hast shut up all my wayes: and so mischenoth should signifie places made to keepe or shut up any thing: and in this sense, they may be taken cities of defence inclosed with walles: Pererius. And so it is most likely that these were cities of munition, as the Septuagint read, and as the word is taken, 1 King. 9.19. sic Iun. 2. Pithom some thinke to bee the towne Butis or Buto at one of the mouths or dores of Nilus, famous for the Oracle of Latona: but it is rather the towne Pa|traion in the borders of Egypt toward Arabia Petraea, whither reached the great ditch made from Nilus to the red Sea, supposed to be the worke of the Israelites, which Herodotus falsely ascribeth to Pharaoh Necho: Iun. 3. The other citie Rahamses, Tostatus thinketh to be the same with that in the land of Gosen, mentioned Gen. 47.11. by anticipation: not bearing then that name but so called when Moses wrote that booke. Hierome thinketh that it is there the name of a Province,* here of the chiefe citie of the Province: Perer. which is most like, because the Israelites tooke their journey from Rameses: but from one citie, being so many, they could not goe: it seemeth by the Hebrew points to be a divers place from the other: for that is called Rahmeses, this Rahamses, and so thinketh Iunius. 4. The Septuagint beside these two cities, make mention also in this place of On, which is Heliopolis: but this citie was not now built by the Israelites, as Hierome well observeth, seeing long before in the storie of Ioseph, P•ti/pherah is said to be the Prince of On, and the Septuag. Gen. 41. doe make it to be Heliopolis.

QUEST. XII. How many yeeres the affliction of the Israelites is supposed to have continued.

NOW concerning the continuance of the servitude of the Israelites: 1. It was neither so long, as Iosephus thinketh, foure hundred yeeres: for seeing the whole time of their being in Egypt could not be above foure hundred and thirtie yeeres, Exod. 12.40. and Ioseph lived seventie yeeres after Iacobs coming into Egypt, it would follow, that this affliction began fourtie yeeres before Iosephs death: and beside, Iosephus is herein contrarie to himselfe, who in the same booke, lib. 2. antiquit. maketh the whole time of the Israelites abode in Egypt but two hundred and fifteene yeeres. 2. Neither yet was the time so long as Eusebius conjectureth, 144. yeeres from the death of Ioseph: for not onely Ioseph, but the rest of that generation were dead before their oppression began, of the which number was Levi, who lived 23. yeeres after Ioseph: for he was foure yeeres elder than he, and lived 137. yeeres, and Ioseph died at 110. yeeres. 3. Neither is the conjecture of the Hebrewes certaine, that the affliction tooke beginning at the death of Levi, from whence to the going out of the Israelites were 122. yeeres, or thereabout: for not onely Levi, but all of that generation were dead, whereof some came very young into Egypt, as Phares, not then above a yeere old, who is like to have survived Levi long: ex Perer. 4. Nor yet did their servitude continue an hundred & fifteene yeeres, beginning after one hundred yeere of their being in Egypt, which was a full generation: Simler. for Phares was of that generation, who is likely to have exceeded an hundred yeeres. 5. Wherefore seeing all that generation was first dead, of the which Phares was one, who being a yeere old at Iacobs comming into Egypt, may be supposed to live according to the rate of the yeeres of mans life then, which was about 130. (as Levi lived 137. Kohath 133. Aaram 137. Exod. 6.16, 20.) then it will follow, Phares age of 130. being subduced from 215. the time of the Israelites being in Egypt, there will remaine about 86. or 87. yeeres of their affliction: when the Hebrewes supposed Miriam Mosess sister to have beene borne, so called of the bitter affliction which was all her time, ex Perer.

Page 10

QUEST. XIII. The reasons why the Lord suffered his poeple to be afflicted in Egypt.

WHY the Lord suffered his owne people to be thus hardly entreated: 1. It was not chiefly or onelly for their Idolatry, which they learned and practised in Egypt, as Thostatus thinketh. Quest. 7. in Exod. For though it is like that they learned some corruption that way of the Egyptians: as the Pro|phet sheweth that the breasts of their virginitie were pressed, and they committed fornication in their youth in Egypt, Esa▪ 23.2. & it appeareth by their setting up of the golden calfe, which was a resemblance of the Egyptians god Apis: yet it is not like that they practised Idolatrie while Ioseph lived, nor generally were corrupted, for then the Egyptians in all likelihood would not have so hated them, if they had been conformable unto them in their Idolatrous worship. 2. Other reasons therefore may be better yeelded, why the Lord suffered his people to be thus tried. 1. That the Israelites should hate the impure manners and superstitions of Egypt. 2. That by this meanes they might be stirred up to pray to God for their deliverance, and to long for the land of Canaan. 3. That God might take just occasion to shew his judgements upon Egypt. 4. That the Israelites also might be occasioned hereby more justly to shake off the Egyptians cruell yoke. 5. That Gods goodnesse and power might be seene, in supporting his people, and increasing them even in the midst of their affliction. 6. That the Israelites remembring their cruell bondage in Egypt, should have no mind to goe thither againe. For seeing this notwithstanding, if some rebellious of them attempted to make them a Captaine, and to returne into Egypt, Numb. 14. what would they have done, if they had lived in all fulnesse and pleasure there? Perer.

QUEST. XIV. Whether the Mid-wives were Egyptians, or Hebrew women.

15 MOreover the King of Egypt commanded the Mid-wives of the Hebrew women. 1. Those Mid-wives were not Egyptian women, as Ioseph thinketh, to whom Pererius subscribeth with others, as Aretiu • Simlerus, for they were such as usually ministred to the Hebrew women, as the text sheweth, before this time, and it is not to be thought, that the Israelitish women had no Midwives of their owne: besides their religion sheweth as much, because they served God, that they were Hebrew Mid-wives: and the derivation of their names, doth give conjecture thereof: Shiphrah is derived of Shaphar, to be bountifull, to adorne, and Puah of Pahah, to crie out, a name fitting a Mid-wife, that is best acquainted with the crying of children: and whereas Iosephus giveth this reason, because the Hebrew women would have beene partiall for kindred, saith: it may seeme no more unlikely, that Pharaoh useth Hebrew women (whom he might thinke for the feare of their life would obey his commandement) then he did set Hebrew taske-masters over the rest of the Israelites, Exod. 5.15. who might have beene thought also no indifferent overseers.* I therefore rather thinke with Augustine, that those Mid-wives were Hebrew women, than Egyptians: 2. Yet could they not be Iocabed Moses mother, and Miriam Moses sister, (as some Hebrewes) who was too young, not above seven yeere elder than Moses, to be imployed for a Mid-wife, Simler.

QUEST. XV. Why Pharaoh onely giveth his cruell charge to two Mid-wives.

These two Mid-wives are named. 1. Not, as Cajetan, because they attended onely upon the nobler sort of the Hebrewes, whose children especially Pharaoh intended to cut off: for Pharaohs charge is generall to kill all the male children. 2. Nay, there were many more called, as Perer. but these named as the more famous. 3. But these were the chiefe, and had the charge and command over the rest, and from them they are to take their direction. Pellican, Vatablus: and whereas Cajetan denieth that there was any such presidencie or superiority among the Mid-wives, it appeareth to be otherwise, that among the Grecians, there were some, to whom the choise care of that businesse was committed: as Plutarch testifieth: and that publike schooles were kept for that service: Iun. in Analys. 4. Now it is easie to guesse, why the male children were commanded to be put to death, rather than the other: 1. Because they feared not any rebellion or insurrection by that sex. 2. They were fairer than the Egyptian women, and so they might keepe them for their lust. 3. They were industrious, in spinning and needle work, and for that cause might be kept for their service: Perer. 5. But herein Pharaoh sheweth himselfe more cruell than either Athaliah in putting to death the Kings children, or Herod in slaying the infants, or then Astages, and A•lius, that would have destroyed Remus and Romulus: for these did not make a generall edict against the children of an whole nation, as Pharaoh doth, nor yet surprised infants newly borne. Borrh.

QUEST. XVI. Whether the Mid-wives made a lie and are therein to be justified.

Vers. 19. A And the Mid-wives answered Pharaoh, because the Hebrew women are not &c. The most doe hold, that the Midwives doe here make a fained excuse, by an officious lie. 1. And of them which thus thinke, most are of Augustines opinion, that the Mid-wives herein offended: because no lie being against the truth is just: yet God rewarded them not for their dissembling, but for their mercy:  remunerata est benignitas mentis, non iniquitas mentientis: the benignit^e of the mind, not the iniquitie of the lie was rewarded:* so also Simler. Borrh. with others: and Augustine addeth this reason: that if many times the works of the flesh are pardoned, for the works of mercy that follow after; much more, merito miseri|cordi^o dimittuntur, qua propter misericordiam committuntur: for mercy sake those things are remitted, which because of mercy are committed. 2. Others thinke that the Mid-wives were hindred by their lie:  and that which might have beene eternall, in terrenam est compensationem declinata, was because of the lie turned into an earthly recompense. Gregorie: But seeing the feare of God, hath not onely the promise of this life, but of the next, and the Scripture testifieth of these Midwives that they feared God, it is spoken without warrant, that they were onely temporally blessed. 3. Some doe justifie this act of the Mid-wives and seeme to make it meritorious, though not of an eternall, yet of a temporall reward. Thom. Aquin. But to this opinion may be opposed that saying of Aug. Non remunerata est in illis fallacia, sed benevo|lentia: Their fallacie was not rewarded in them, but their mercie. 4. Rupertus doth simply defend this dis|simulation, and holdeth it to be no sinne: because it proceeded of charitie, and God rewarded it, and as well may Rahab be condemned, for making the like excuse, Iosh. 2. Cont But these reasons are very weake. 1. This excuse proceeded not of charitie, but from feare: and though it did, charitie must be alwayes joyned with veritie, otherwise it is inordinate. 2. Their mercy onely was commended, and their infir|mitie by Gods mercy pardoned. 3. Not Rahabs infirmitie, but her faith is commended, if her excuse were untrue. 4. But as Rahab may in that place be defended to have made a true excuse, speaking of some other men, that were departed from her, which came to her house: so here also the Mid-wives may say true, that the Hebrew women having secret notice from the Mid-wives, might be delivered in secret, before the Mid-wives came: Iun. And it is not unlike, but as they were chaster than the Egyptian women, so God might give them more strength and speedier deliverance. Pellican. Here it will be objected, that it is said the Mid-wives preserved the men children, because they feared God, vers. 17. and therefore it is like they were present. Simler. But this may be understood of the care that they had of the infants, by whose meanes they were preserved. Vatab. For otherwise it was not possible, that these two in their owne per|sons could be present at every womans travaile to save the children.

QUEST. XVII. How the Lord is said to make them houses.

Vers. 22. ANd because the Mid-wives feared God and he made them houses &c. There are two generall expositions of this place: Some doe interpret the word Lahem, them, of the Mid-wives: some of the people of Israel.

Of the first: 1. Some referre it to the Israelites that they provided for the Mid-wives, and kept them from Pharaoh: but that is not like, seeing the Israelites could not at this time defend themselves from Pharaohs rage. 2. Some understand it of Pharaoh, that he made strong houses for them, that all the Hebrew women should come to them to be delivered: but that had beene a thing impossible. 3. Some referre it to God that he made them houses: which is diversly expounded: the Hebrewes, supposing these Mid-wives to be Iochebed and Miriam, by houses understand the Kingdome and Priesthood, which was settled afterward in their of-spring, for Iochebed was the mother of Aaron, and Miriam they say ma|ried to Cal^ob: but this is uncertaine, Iosephus writeth, lib. 3. antiquit. that she was the wife of Hur: and it is before shewed, that

Miriam for her age could be none of them. David Chimhi understandeth it of their preserving from the rage of Pharaoh: Tostatus of their incorporating and graffing into the nation and common-wealth of Israel, as Rahab was: but it is more like they were Hebrew women, as is before also touched, and needed no such ingraffing. Hierome understandeth it of spirituall houses in heaven,* so also Rupertus: Augustine and Theodoret, of giving them riches: Pererius of increasing their families, for so is the phrase used. Sarah saith, when she gave Hagar to Abraham, I may be builded by her: Gen. 16. And this uncertaintie there is in the first exposition. 4. Therefore the second is rather to be preferred, to understand it of the people, that God made them houses, that is, families, and increased them: for these reasons: 1. Because in the Hebrew there is a masculine pronoun lahem: which although some thinke is sometime taken for the feminine, as Exod. 2.17. Piscator, and elsewhere: and Vatablus saith that mem, is sometime taken for nun, yet it is more properly taken in the native and originall use, where there is no necessitie otherwise to enforce it, Iun. 2. Because the house and familie is not builded by the woman, but by the man: Simler. 3. This better agreeth to the words going before, that the people multiplied, vers. 20. and the words following, if we read them thus, And so it was, because the Mid-wives feared God, and he made them house; That Pharaoh charged all his people, &c. Pharaoh seeing that God by the meanes and occasion of the Mid-wives, as the instruments, God as the author and chiefe cause increased the people, then he cast about another way, how to effect this cruell purpose, Iun. Simler.

QUEST. XVIII. Whether the Mid-wives onely were temporally rewarded.

NOW what manner of reward it was, which the Lord here giveth, it may thus be briefly resolved: 1. Neither with Gregorie is it to be thought, that because of their dissimulation, they were onely temporally rewarded: for the text saith they feared God: and the feare of God is not onely in this life, but more rewarded in the life to come.* 2. Hierome and Rupertus here understand the spirituall and everlasting houses in heaven: but the words before, v. 20. shew that hereby a temporall blessing is insinuated, the Mid-wives prospered, the people multiplied. 3. Therefore the last resolution is, that no doubt the charitie and mercie of these Mid-wives, and the feare of God in them was eternally rewarded: but the temporall blessing is here onely expressed: both in respect of the times, because as Hierome saith: Aeterna vitae promissio est propria novi testamenti.* The promise of eternall life is peculiar to the new Testament: and in regard of carnall and weake men who are by temporall promises more easily allured: so the promises made to Abraham, whose saith and obedience were eternally crowned, were in shew temporall: as in the length of life, increase of his posteritie, victorie over his enemies: as appeareth Gen. 15. ex Perer.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. That God is not the author of evill.

Vers. 12. They were grieved, or fretted because of the children of Israel: But Psal. 105.25. it is said, he turned their heart to hate his people. The hatred and grieve which the Egyptians conceived against Israel, seemeth to be ascribed to God: yet farre be it from us to thinke that God is the author of the least sinne, much lesse of so great a sinne as to hate the people of God: for as God is not tempted with evill, so neither tempteth he any man, Iam. 1.13. This manner of phrase therefore in Scripture may receive five severall expositions,* which may all together be received: first God is said to turne their heart, not effective, but permissive, not by way of working, but permitting, or suffering, as Theodoret: because he gave way to their wicked will, corum{que} insidias • inimè prohibuerit, and hindered not their evill purpose. 2. God is said to doe it, as he hardened Pharaohs heart: subtrahendo gratiam, by withholding his grace, and leaving them to themselves. Cajetan. 3. God doth it as an universall cause, because in him we move, we live, and have our being, Act. 17. not as a particular agent: as Rupertus useth this comparison: Quem / admodum sol molle lutum convertit in durum: As the Sunne turneth the clay and mire from soft to hard: of which changing, the Sun is onely the generall cause, the proper and next cause is the qualitie of the matter. 4. God turneth their heart into hatred occasionaliter, by ministring the occasion onely: as Aug. Non cor illorum malum faciendo▪ sed populo bene faciendo cor eorum sponte malum convertit in odium: Their heart being evill of it selfe he turned to hatred, not by making it evill, but by doing well unto his people. God is said to doe it, because he was the author of the welfare of his people, whereby the envious Egyptians were provoked to hate them. 5. The Lord is said to harden mens hearts ordinative & dispositive, because he knoweth how to rule and dispose of their evill and obdurate hearts, and turne it to his glorie, as Augustine proceedeth in the same place, Quo illorum odio, & ad exercitationem populi filii, & ad gloriam nomini sui• usus est Deus: Which their hatred God used, both for the exercise of his people, and to the glorie of his owne name, Ex Perer.

2. Doct. God must rather be obeyed than men.

Vers. 17. NOTwithstanding the Mid-wives feared God, and did not as the King of Egypt commanded. This their refusall to obey the Kings wicked charge, was both lawfull and commendable. The things which belong to Caesar, as tribute, custome, honor, feare, Rom. 13.7. must willingly and of conscience be yeelded to Caesar, Matth. 22.21. But the things which belong to God must not be given to Caesar, as to violate our conscience, and to things displeasing unto God, to please men: But herein the Apostles resolution must stand, that it is better to obey Grd than men, Acts 4.19.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Conf. Touching the name of Masse.

Therefore did they set Princes or Officers of the tribute over them. The Hebrewes call tribute missa of messas, which signifieth to melt; in which sense the Popish Masse may very well be so called: for they have melted away all true religion and devotion by that idolatrous invention, and they have made it a right masse indeed to draw tribute and advantage unto them from the people, and wasting and melting their substance by such cunning fraud.

2. Conf. against merits.

Vers. 20. GOd therefore prospered the Mid-wives. Pererius upon these words confuting the opinion of Gregorie, that these Mid-wives because of the lie which they made, deserved a temporall blessing, saith, that considerig that they truly feared God, and that this worke of mercie, which they shewed, proceeded of the grace of God: Sine dubio meruerunt vitam aeternam: Without all doubt they merited eternall life. Disput. 10. in 1. Exod. numer.4.5. But this is an unsound assertion: for seeing this act of mercie was blemished with their infirmitie in telling a lie, as Pererius himselfe thinketh, in which regard they had need of Gods mercie▪ as Augustine saith: Deus pro misericordia ignoscebat mendacio: God of his mercie pardoned the lie: how then could one and the same act include both merit, and require mercie? for grace and workes cannot stand together, as the Apostle sheweth, If it be of grace, it is not of workes, else were grace no more grace, Rom. 11. 6.

These two reasons doe evidently convince that we de|serve nothing at Gods hand, both because our best works are imperfect, and have need of grace to par|don the imperfections thereof: and beside, we are the Lords bounden servants, we doe no more than our dutie, when we doe our best, and even then also wee are unprofitable servants, Luk. 17.10. God indeed crowneth our good works, but rather of his goodnesse and mercie, than our deserving, whose mercie is seene in his gracious promising, and his righteousness in his faithfull performing.

3. Conf. against good works before grace, or without grace.

NOW Bellarmino further by this example of the Mid-wives, whom he supposeth to be Egyptians, and so Gentiles, thus rewarded of God for this their act of mercy, would prove that men naturally may performe some good morall worke, without any speciall helpe of Gods grace, if they bee not urged and pressed by some tentation: Lib. 5. de gratia, & lib. Arbit. cap. 9.

Contr. 1. He taketh that as granted, which is before denied, that they were Egyptians: I have proved before, quest. 14. that it is more like they were Hebrew women. 2. It is an erroneous speech, that in this good worke they were not assisted with Gods grace. For the text sheweth that it proceeded from the feare of God; which cannot be without Gods speciall grace and assistance: and Pererius well confesseth that they were adjuta per interiorem earum animis infusam gratiam: helped by inward grace infused into their mindes: Ibid. 3. This example is unfitly alleaged, for here they were assayled by a manifest tenta|tion, the danger of their lives in disobeying the King, and therefore according to Bellarmines owne polsition, they could not doe this good worke without the speciall helpe of God.

6. Places of morall use.

1. Mor. For their comfort that die in exile.

Vers. 6. NOW Ioseph died and all his brethren. All these died and obtained not the promise, and they died out of their countrey. It should not therefore seeme a grievous thing unto the children of God if they end their dayes in a strange countrey, in exile or banishment, or upon other occasions. For the earth is the Lords and the fulnesse thereof, Psal. 24.1. Ferus.

2. Mor. God turneth affliction to the good of his children.

Vers. 12. THE more they vexed them, the more they multiplied. God can turne affliction to the best prosperitie: our owne corruption maketh oftentimes hurtfull unto us, but affliction by Gods goodnesse becommeth fruitfull and profitable unto us; as the Prophet David saith, Before I was afflicted I went astray, Psal. 119.67.

3. Mor. God overturnes the counsell of the wicked.

Vers. 12. AND they were more grieved. Thus we see how God is able to disappoint and overturne the counsels of the wicked; the Egyptians thought by thus oppressing the Israelites to breed their owne quietnesse, and now seeing the children of Israel to increase the more, they are so much the more grieved and discontented. Thus God turned the counsels of Pharaoh against the Israelites, of Saul against David, of the Jewes against Christ, upon their owne head: Simlerus.

CHAP. II.

1. The method and parts of the Chapter.

IN this Chapter is set forth the condition of the instrument, which God pre|pared for the deliverance of the people, to verse 23. and of the people which were to be delivered. For the first, Moses is set forth first in his infancie, where is shewed his nativitie, vers. 1, 2. his conservation by the naturall care of his mother, v. 3. and sister, v. 4. and the supernaturall instinct of Pharaohs daughter, who taketh up the childe, v. 6. then his education to vers. 10. Secondly in his mans estate, where his publike actions are described, both in shewing himselfe a Judge in being revenged of the Egyptian, and a me|diatour betweene his brethren, to vers. 16. and his private comming to Midian, vers. 20. and his mariage there, both with the occasion thereof, his cohabiting with Revel, and the introduction thereunto, his kindnesse shewed to his daughters, to vers. 21. and the fruit of his mariage, the birth of his sonne. For the second, there is declared the complaint of the Israelites for their bondage, vers. 23. the mercifull inclination of God, vers. 24▪ and fatherly condescension unto them, vers. 25.

Page 14

2. The divers readings.

*Vers. 3. Tooke for him an arke of bulrushes. Iu. A.P.B.L. rather than of reed. S. of papyr, that is, of that kinde of stuffe, whereof they made papyr, the word is goma, another word is used in the end of the verse for reed.

*Vers. 14. Speakest thou this to kill me? Iu. A. better than thinkest thou to kill me. G. or intendest. B. or wilt thou kill me? L.S. the word is Amar to speake.

*Vers. 15. And Pharaoh heard of this matter, G.I.A.P. rather than heard of it. B. or heard this speech. L.V. or this word. S. Dabar signifieth both, the first rather, for Moses speech offended not, but his act.

*Vers. 16. The Prince of Midiam had seven daughters. I. C. rather than the Priest. G. B. cum cater. Cohen signifieth both, and it seemeth he was both Prince and Priest, as they used to be in those dayes.

*Vers. 17. Drove them away. I. that is, the servants which attended upon Revels daughters: for it is put in the masculine gender; better than to read it in the feminine, as V.L.I.A.P.

*Vers. 18. When they came to Revel their father. I.G.B. cum c•ter. not Iethro. L.

*Vers. 22. Here the Latin and Septuagint make mention also of the birth of Eliezar, transposing it out of the 18. chapter: but no such thing is in the Hebrew.

Vers. 23. It came to passe after these dayes, I.A.P.S. rather than in processe of time, G. B. or when many dayes were past. V. the sense rather than the words: dayes are here put for yeeres, for this was 4•. yeeres after.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. Of Amram Moses father.

Vers. 1. THere went a man of Levi. This was Amram the sonne of Kabath the sonne of Levi, who li|ved 137. yeeres, Exod. 6.20. he was borne, as Eusebius writeth, 14. yeeres before the death of Ioseph, that is, 55. yeeres after *Iacob*s going downe into Egypt: who saith he begat Moses at 77. yeeres: Perer. Moses yet maketh no mention of his parents names, lest he should seeme to boast of his parentage: Ferus. 2. The Hebrewes have here a notable fiction that this Amram lived unto the time of Ahiah the Silomite, who was in the dayes of Ieroboam, that is above sixe hundred yeeres, for from the going of Israel out of Egypt unto the fourth yeere of Salomons reigne are numbred 480. yeeres: adde unto these 77. yeeres of Amrams age, when he begat Moses: and 80.

yeeres, the age of Moses, at the returne of Israel out of Egypt, so we shall have above 600. yeeres, whereas the Scripture testifieth that he lived but 137. yeeres. 3. But that which Ioseph reporteth is more probable, that this Amram being a faithfull man praying unto God for his people, had a vision, wherein hee was bid to bee of good comfort, and that the childe whose life was sought should be his sonne, who should be preserved from the Egyptians rage, and be the deliverer of his people, Ioseph. lib. 2. cap. 5. but seeing the Scripture maketh no mention, we may bee at choise whether we will receive this report.

QUEST. II. Why it is said he went and tooke.

NOW it is said he went; not that he went to any other place or Citie, for seeing his wife was of the same familie of Levi, it is like that they did dwell not farre asunder. 2. Neither it is understood of his returning to his wife, from whom he had sequestred himselfe to fasting and prayer, as Ferus: for this text evidently speaketh of his first taking of her to wife. 3. But hereby is shewed his advised purpose and determination in taking her to wife; as also some notable thing insinuated to follow, as it is said that Ruben went and lay with his fathers concubine, Gen. 25. Simler.

QUEST. III. Of Iacobed Moses mother whether she were aunt or cosine German to Amram.

Tooke to wife a daughter of Levi. This was Iocebed, 1. who was not the daughter of Amrams uncle, and so cosine Germane to Amram, as the Septuagint & Latine translator, to whom consent Lyranus, Montanus, Cajetanus, Pererius with others: for though it should be granted that the Hebrew word Ded doth sometime signifie the uncles sonne, as Ierem. 32.12. Hanan-el is called Ieremies uncles sonne, yet the word sonne may be supplied, as before vers. 8. he is called his uncles sonne: yet seeing the Scripture evidently saith, that Iocebed was borne unto Levi, Numb. 26.59. it is without controversie, that she was Levies daughter, sister to Rahath, and Aunt to Amram, being his fathers sister, Exod. 6.20. 2. But yet the Hebrewes are farre wide, that would have Iocebed borne about that time that Iacob went downe into Egypt, for then she should have beene about 135. yeeres old, elder by fortie yeers than Sarah, when she bore Isaack; and if Moses birth had beene so miraculous, the Scripture would not have concealed it: ex Perer. And the Scripture beside saith, that she was borne to Levi in Egypt, Numb. 26.59. 3. Neither was this Iocebed another of the same name beside the daughter of Levi, as some thinke, seeing that the she is said to be Dodatho, his, that is Amrams, Aunt, Exod. 6.20. 4. The sounder opinion then is, that this Iocebed was the naturall and proper daughter of Levi, the Scripture so testifying▪ and of this opinion are, Vatablus, Paguine, Iunius, with the Chalde Paraphrast, and Simlerus with others. Thostatus conjectureth well, that Levi might beget her at 100. as Abraham begat sonnes at 137. after Sarabs death, who lived 127 yeeres, being 10. yeeres younger than Abraham; and Iacob at 107. begat Benjamin. And it is not unlike, but that Iocebed at 68. yeeres might beare Moses; in those dayes women might continue child-bearing till then: but howsoever this computation be counted, yet it is evident out of Scripture that Iocebed was daughter unto Levi, and therefore all disputation to the contrarie is needlesse.

QUEST. IV. Why such mariages were tolerated in those daies.

NOW though afterward such mariages betweene the aunt and the nephew were forbidden by the Law directly, Levit. 19. yet it need not seeme strange that then such mariages were in use, even among the faithfull: 1. Because as Thostatus saith, it was ante legem datam, before any law was published. As Abraham married his brothers daughter, Iacob married two sisters. 2. The paucitie and the fewnesse of the righteous seed is to be considered, and the confusion of those times which made those things to be tolerated: Iun. Annot. 3. They had a desire to match in their owne kindred, as Abraham, Isaack and Iacob did, and by that meanes they joyned often mariage in neere degrees of kindred, Simlerus.

QUEST. V. When Amram married his wife.

COncerning the time, when this man of Levi tooke his wife, though it be mentioned after Pharaohs cruell edict, yet it was done before: 1. Because Aaron was elder than Moses by three yeeres, Exod. 7.7. and Miriam *Moses*sister elder than he; for she was of discretion to watch what should become of the babe: the conservation therefore of these children sheweth that this cruell edict tooke no place then. 2. Neither is it likely that it continued long after Moses birth: for if all the male children had beene cut off after Moses birth, who was 80. yeeres old when Israel came out of Egypt, then there should have beene few or none under that age that went out: and although by some secret provision some infants might have escaped, yet considering the strait and diligent search, which was made, as the Hebrewes thinke every three moneths, such a multitude in all likelihood could not have beene preserved, as went out of Egypt:* therefore it is not unprobable that Iosephus writeth, that an Egyptian Priest told Pharaoh that about that time a child should be borne, which should bee the ruine of him, and his Kingdome, and that Pharaoh thereupon did especially at that time give charge to destroy the infants, to meet with that childe, as Herod did cause to bee put to death all the children in Bethlem, and the coasts thereof, from two yeere old and under, Matth. 2.16. thinking also among the rest to surprise that holy babe. 3. Now it may seeme strange that Amram would take a wife in this miserable time, not being ignorant that they should beget children to be bondslaves; but hee being a faithfull man, and beleiving verily that the Lord would remember his people, to bring them into the promised land, doth therefore take the married estate upon him, both for mutuall comfort in those heavie times, and to increase the people of God, Simler.

QUEST. VI. Of the time of Moses birth, compared with the times before, and the times after.

Vers. 1. AND the woman conceived and bare a sonne. 1. Moses is borne the seventh from Abraham, another Enoch (who was the seventh from Adam, Iud. 14.) buried also of God; another Noah, who was saved also in the Arke, and preached to the world 120. yeeres, for so long Moses lived. • For the time of Moses birth. First to compare it with the yeeres which went before, and the notable accidents therein; it was from the beginning of the world 2430. yeeres, not 2370. onely, as Pererius: and from Noahs flood 714. from the birth of Abraham 425. after the going downe of Isaack into Egypt 135. and from the beginning of the Egyptian servitude 7. yeeres. The truth of this computation may appeare by gathering the summes of yeeres together. From the beginning of the world to the flood are yeeres 1656. Gen. 5. from thence to the birth of Abraham 352. not 292. as Pererius: for hee reckoneth Abraham to be borne at the 70. yeere of Terah, whereas hee was begotten 60. yeeres after, at the 130. yeere of his father, being 75. yeeres old, when Terah died at 105. as it is evident by comparing Gen. 11.32. and 12.4. From the first promise made to Abraham to the giving of the Law in Mount Sinai, S. Paul counteth 430. yeeres: from the going downe of Isaack into Egypt, untill the returne of Israel thence, are 215. yeeres: and Moses was borne 80. yeeres before their going out of Egypt. 3. The time of Moses birth thus agreeth with the computation of the yeeres following. Moses was borne 80. yeeres before the going of the Israelites out of Egypt, Exod. 7.7. & 120. yeeres before their entrance into Canaan, Deut. 34. before the reigne of David 517. yeeres; before the building of Salomons Temple 560. yeeres: for from the going out of the Israelites untill the fourth yeere of Salomon, when the Temple was built, are counted 480. yeeres, 1 King. 6.1. to which adde 80. yeeres of the life of Moses: before the captivitie of Babylon 990. yeeres, for from the building of Salomons Temple untill the captivitie, are yeeres 430. which put unto the aforesaid summe 560. maketh 990. And before their returne out of the captivitie of Babylon, which was 70. yeeres after, 1060. yeeres: before the comming of the Messias 1620. as Pererius:* but with others more truly not above 1500. Concent. Pererius to justifie his computation maketh his account by the Greekes Olympiades. Christ was borne in the last yeere of the 194. Olympiade, that is, from the beginning of the Olympiades 776. yeeres. And the Olympiades begun about the 8. yeere of Ahaz King of Judah; about 280. yeeres from the building of Salomons Temple. But seeing the computation of yeeres unto the Messiah is expressed in Scripture, there is no need to take any direction from forren Chronicles.. So then whereas before the summe of yeeres from the building of the Temple unto the captivitie, meaning, the last captivitie of all under Zedekiah, was said to be 430. from this must be abated 20. yeeres from the third yeere of Iehoiakim, when the first captivitie begun, Dan. 1.1. and there the 70. yeeres captivitie tooke beginning, so we have 480. yeeres: unto this number must be added Daniels 70. weekes unto the death of the Messiah, which make 490. yeeres: and thirtie and odde yeeres must bee substracted (the space betweene the birth and the death of the Messiah) so we shall have about 940. yeeres from the building of the Temple to the birth of the Messiah: unto which adde 560. yeeres from Moses birth to Salomons Temple, so the whole summe of yeeres from Moses birth untill Christs, will bee 1500. as it is said before, 120. lesse than Pererius by his Olympiades accounteth. 4. To compare Moses time with forren accidents: Moses was borne before the beginning of the Olympiades 840. yeeres, which began in the 8. yeere of Ahaz,* and after Ogyges flood 180. yeeres: for Eusebius out of Iulius Africa•us sheweth that Ogyges flood was 1020. yeeres before the beginning of the Olympiades. Moses birth was 430. yeeres before the Trojane warre, which was 407. yeeres before the beginning of the Olympiades, and Moses was borne before the building of Rome 865. yeeres, for Rome was founded in the beginning of the 7. Olympiade, that is, the 25. yeere after they begun: ex Perer.

Page 16

QUEST. VII. Of the antiquitie of Moses, who is found to be the most ancient of all writers, either sacred or prophane.

Concerning then the antiquitie of Moses, it is evident that hee is the first and most ancient of all either sacred or prophane writers: 1. The prophesie of Enoch, mentioned in the Epistle of Iude, is not from a more ancient writer than Moses: which was either kept by certaine or undoubted tradition, or else was framed by the Doctors of Iudah, from the short speeches which Moses hath of Enoch. The booke of the Lords warres, Siho•s victorie, Numb. 21. was after the Law, and it was some rehearsall of the battels, which the Lord fought for Israel, made much about the time: but being not now extant, it is without compasse of this question. 2. For prophane authors and writers Moses farre exceedeth them all, as it may be thus shewed: 1. The Greeke Chronicles have nothing more ancient than the times of Ich• and Phoroneus, the first Kings of the Argives, when Ogyges flood happened; as witnesseth Dionys. Hali•carness. and Plato in Timao reporteth that Solon contending before the Egyptian Priests for the antiquitie of Greece, goeth not beyond Phoroneus and Niobe. About this time Ptolomeus Mendesius the Egyptian Chronicler writeth that Moses reigned among the Jewes: but, as is before shewed, he could not be above 180. yeeres after Ogyges flood. 2. From this flood unto the time of Cecrops the first Athenian King. Athens lay desert almost two hundred yeeres, and long after Cecrops were Deucalions flood, Phaetons• burning, Cadmus, that builded Thebes, Esculapius, Thesius, Hercules: so that Moses being before Cecrops• is found to be farre more ancient than any of these. 3. Moses is elder than Homer the most ancient Greeke writer, as Iosephus sheweth, lib. 1. cont. Appion. who was long after the Trojan warre; Plinie thinketh 250. yeeres, after Solinus 270. Cyrillus 160. Herodotus three hundred yeeres: but it is certaine that he• was at the least one hundred yeeres after. But Moses was borne 430. yeeres before the battell of Troy, as is before shewed: so that he is farre elder than the seven wise men of the Grecians, and then Pythagor•• Heraclitus, Hippocrates, Democritus, Anaxagoras, Socrates, Plato with the rest, who were many yeeres after Homer.* 4. Hence then appeareth that notable error of Appion the Grammarian, in Tiberius Caesars time, who would have Moses bring the Israelites out of Egypt in the first yeere of the seventh Olym|piade, at what time the Tyrians built Carthage in Africa. For it is evident that Carthage was built about the time of the Trojan battell: for Aeneas went from thence to Dido the founder of Carthage, as Virgil testifieth: and Iosephus writing against the said Appion, sheweth, that from Hiram King of Tyre, in whose time the Temple was built, unto Pigmalion and Dido, were 155. yeeres, and to the beginning of the Olympiades in the 8. yeere of Ahaz reigne, were 280. yeeres: so that by this account Carthage was built 140. yeeres before the count of the Olympiades began. Appion then is found to be in a double error▪ for both Moses was divers hundred yeeres before the building of Carthage, and Carthage was built long before the computation of the Olympiades: ex Perer.

QUEST. VIII. Whether the name of Moses were knowne unto the Gentiles before Christ.

NOW then it is evident, 1. that Moses name was knowne unto the ancient writers of the Gentiles, as Saconiatho that Phenicean Antiquarie, and Berosus Chaldeus, Ptolomeus, and Manetho, Egyptian Chronographers; and among the Grecians Artapanus, Polemo, Eupolemus, doe make honourable mention of Moses: Likewise Troyus Pompeius cited by Iustin. Martyr. lib.36. and Diodorus Siculus: Num. Julius Pythagoricus calleth Plato the Attik or Athenian Moses. 2. But yet sparing mention is made of Moses among the Ethnik writers, because they held his writings to bee sacred and divine, and so not to bee prophaned and made common; as Demetrius Phalerius the keeper of the great Library of Alexandria said unto Ptolomeus Philadelphus, alleaging at the same time the examples of Theopompus, the Historiographer, and Theodectes the tragicall Poet, that when they attempted to transpose some things out of Moses bookes, the one into his story, the other into his tragedie, the first was perplexed in minde, the other smitten with blindness, till they perceived their error and desisted: Aristeas. 3. Origen then is deceived, who thinketh that till after Christ the name of Moses was not heard of among the Gentiles • Homil. 2. in Cant. Pererius.

QUEST. IX. How Moses is said to be a proper child, and by whom he was hid.

Vers. 2. When she saw that he was faire and goodly, she hid him. 1. Both the parents did their part i• hiding him, Heb. 11.13. but the mother was the chiefe, either in regard of her motherly affection, or for that the advice came first from her. 2. Iosephus writeth that Amram had a speciall revelation & vision concerning this child, that he should be delivered from this danger, and be himselfe a deliverer of his people. But seeing these parents of Moses are commended for their faith, which must bee grounded upon the word of God, it is likely that they builded rather upon the promises made to their Fathers, than any speciall revelations. 3. The child was goodly to see to, that is, a certaine divine comelinesse appeared in him, not onely propernesse of body, as Stephen sheweth, Act. 7. and the Apostle, Heb. 11.23. this act of theirs then principally proceeded of faith, which was so much the more increased by the object of this goodly child, in whom they saw such signes of grace, as that they doubted not, but that God would take the protection of him: Siml•r.

Page 17

QUEST. X. The Arke wherein Moses was put, whereof it was made, and where placed.

Vers. 3. She tooke an Arke of bulrushes. The word here used is Tebath, which is given also to Noahs Arke and the Arke of the Tabernacle: The Septuag. retaineth the same word Thibis, without any other interpretation; but it is like, through the error of some Scribes, that Thibin was put for 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, as the edition Complutense readeth: but Origen is here deceived, that thinketh Thibis to bee a coffin made of wicker, or of the barkes of trees, Hom. 2. in Exod. it signifieth nothing but an Arke for the frame; the matter whereof it was made, is beside expressed: 2. which some thinke was of Reed: Vatab. Gene/vens. othes of Bulrushes: Iun. Pag. Mont. which is most like; or of the tree Papyrus, as Iosephus, whereof they made the paper (which word is used to this day, though our paper be now made of linnen) it was a light matter that might easily be supported in the waters: and both to fasten the stuffe the better, and to keepe out the water, they daubd it with slime and pitch: Simler. as Noah pitched his great Arke to hold out the waters. 3. This Arke for the bignesse, Iosephus thinketh was no greater than could well containe the child: but Iosephus is deceived that they put this Arke or coffin into the midst of the floud, for the text is evident that they put it amongst the flagges or reedes, that it should not so easily flote upon the waters, and to be the better defended from the winde: Pererius.

QUEST. XI. Whether Moses parents did well in exposing him.

BUt here the question will be moved, whether Moses parents did well in exposing the infant thus to apparent danger, seeing nature hath given unto brute beasts a naturall instinct rather to adventure their lives for their young ones, than to leave and forsake them. These reasons then may bee yeelded in defence of this their fact: 1. That if they had kept their childe at home, then they had most certainly exposed not onely him to danger, who could not be hid, partly from the diligent inquisition of Pharaoh, partly from the notice of the Egyptians, among whom they dwelled, Iunius: but also his parents by all likelihood should have perished: therefore in that they doe thus expose the infant, they doe deliver him from a certaine danger, leaving him to an uncertaine: Perer. 2. Beside, they use all carefull meanes to provide for the childe, in pitching the Arke, in laying it in a safe place, Perer. from whence the mother might take it by stealth and suckle it at her pleasure, Simler. Beside, they appointed his sister to bee his keeper, to see what should become of the infant. 3. Further, though there be no certaintie either of the revelation shewed to Amram that the childe should be preserved, as Iosephus writeth, or of that excuse of the Hebrewes, that Miriam being a Prophetesse gave direction what they should doe; yet seeing this act of theirs proceeded of faith in God, as the Apostle sheweth Heb. 11. it is not to be doubted, but that herein they were directed by the instinct of the spirit, and that they did it not in griefe and despaire, as Philo seemeth to affirme, that they wished they had exposed their childe so soone as he was borne, seeing they could no longer keepe him.

QUEST. XII. Of the education of Moses, and his adoption to be Pharaohs daughters son.

Vers. 5. When she saw the Arke among the bulrushes, she sent her maid to fet it, &c. The Chalde Palraphrast readeth here, that she put forth her arme to take it: for the word amah signifieth both a Cubite, but then it is with dagesh and a maid, then it is without dagesh, amah, not ammah as here; and therefore Aben Ezra refuseth the Chaldee reading. Beside, Pharaohs daughter comming downe to wash her, it is not like she was among the flagges, where the Arke was, which had beene an unfit place to wash in. Simler. 2. By Gods providence Moses owne mother became the childs nurse: Iosephus writeth by this occasion, because when diverse Egyptian women were brought, the child refused to sucke of them, and would not take the breasts of any but of his mother: but the true occasion is here expressed, that when Moses sister perceived that she was in love with the child she offered to goe call a nurse of the Hebrew women. 3. Pharaohs daughter adopted him to be her owne sonne, not as Philo thinketh, faining her selfe to be with child, and making Pharaoh beleieve that it was her owne; * neither yet did the propernesse of the child onely allure Pharaoh to consent that his daughter should nourish him as her son, especially if it were true as Iosephus writeth, * that while Pharaoh played with the child he tooke off his Diadem and Crowne, which the Egyptian Priest that foretold of his birth, did interpret to bee ominous to the Kingdome, and therefore gave counsell the child should be slaine; but Pharaohs daughter snatched him out of his armes and so saved the childs life This then is chiefly to be ascribed to Gods speciall providence, who so wrought that the child should be brought up even among his enemies.

QUEST. XIII. Whence Moses had his learning, of the Egyptians onely, or of the Grecians also.

AS Pharaohs daughter adopted Moses for her sonne, so (as S. Stephen witnesseth) he was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, & being counted a Princes sonne, had no doubt a Princely education. 1. But here Philo is deceived, who beside the arts and science which hee learned of the Egyptians, as Arithmetick, Geometrie, and the Hieroglyphikes, that is, their hid and secret and Enigmaticall doctrine, saith, he was taught of the Chaldes Astronomie, and Philosophy of the Grecians: for beside that Stephen onely maketh mention of his Egyptian learning, it is certaine that there was no profession of Philosophy or of learning among the Grecians, before the seven wise men, before whose time Moses was borne al|most a thousand yeeres, Perer. And Moses was about Inachus time, long after whom in the eleventh ge|neration, Cadmus found out the Greeke letters, after whom flourished Amphion, Orpheus, Museus, Linus: Simler*. 2. Neither is it probable which Artapanus an ancient writer affirmeth, that beside many other benefits which Moses brought to the Egyptians, hee taught them the use of letters, and therefore was honoured of them under the name of Mercurius: for seeing Moses received his learning from the Egyptians, it is likely they had also the knowledge of letters.

*3. That also is as uncertaine which Clemens Alexandrinus alleageth from Eupolymus, that Moses taught the Israelites the knowledge of the letters: for beside that Augustine thinketh that the Hebrew tongue was continued from Heber; and preserved in the family of the fathers together with the letters, long before the giving of the Law, grounding his opinion upon that place, Deut. 29.10. where the Sep|tuagint read 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , * that Moses appointed Scribes and instructors of the letters: Iosephus also writeth that the Hebrew letters were in use before the flood, and that they of Seths posteritie having lear|ned of Adam▪ that the world should be twice destroyed, once by water, and the second time by fire, did make two pillars, the one of brick, the other of stone, and did therein grave the principles of the artes and sciences, that those profitable inventions should not be lost, that if the waters dissolved the bricke, yet the other pillar of stone might continue, which Iosephus saith, was to be scene in his time in Syria, Ioseph. lib. 1. Antiq. Ex Perer.

QUEST. XIV. What kinde of learning Moses received of the Egyptians.

FURther, it will bee inquired what manner of learning it was which Moses learned of the Egyptian. 1. Such profitable arts, as were professed among the Egyptians, as Arithmeticke, Geometrie, Astronomy, Moses was instructed in, as being fit to prepare him for that publike administration, wherein hee should be employed. 2. The Egyptians had more secret and hid kind of learning called the Hieroglyphikes, which by certaine outward symboles and Emblemes did set forth divers mysticall, morall & politike prin|ciples, which kind of doctrine was not knowne to the vulgar sort; herein Iustinus Martyr thinketh that Moses was trayned up, having the knowledge onely thereof, not the use, which was vaine, frivolous & superstitious: Iust. qu. orthodox 25. 3. But that Moses by imitation of the Egyptian Hieroglyphikes did forbid certaine kindes of beasts to be eaten, and some onely and not other to be sacrificed, as Eleazer the high Priest answered the Ambassadour of Ptolemy Philadelphus: as Pythagoras had also his Enigmaticall precepts, Ignem gladio ne fodias; Do not gall the fire with a sword*; that is, provoke not an angry man: C•• non comedendum; The heart is not to be eaten, that is, grieve is not to be nourished in the minde: Hir•n/dinem in domum non esse recipiendam: Not to receive a swallow (that is, a brabler) into the house, and such like: that Moses used many such legall helps in prescribing of his legall rites and ceremonies, it is not to be thought, seeing he had his direction from God and saw a paterne of such things which belonged to the Tabernacle in the mount, Exod. 25.40.

QUEST. XV. Whence the Egyptians received their learning.

BUT if further it be demanded, from whence the Egyptians received their variety of learning. 1. Neither is the opinion of Iamblicus probable, that Mercurius, called Trismegistus, (because hee was a great Philosopher, a great King, and a great Priest) was the author of the Egyptian learning, whom he altogether, certaine ancient authors testifying, to have written of the wisdom of the Egyptians, 35535. bookes: for this Mercurius the nephew, as is supposed, of the other Mercurius, whose grandfather by the mothers side Atlas was, in whose time Moses was borne, as Aug. lib. 8. de civ. Dei cap. 8. being after Moses, could not be the inventor of the Egyptian skill, which Moses long before learned. 2. Neither yet is it certaine that Abraham instructed the Egyptians in these sciences as Iosephus writeth; for his abode and continuance was not long in Egypt, and so he wanted time there to lay the foundation of so many artes. * 3. Augustine yeeldeth to the opinion of Varro, that Isis the daughter of Inachus first delivered to the Egyptians the grounds of these artes, who yet is more likely to have beene the inventor of husbandrie and other such profitable trades, than of the mysticall arts and sciences. 4. Therefore the more probable opinion is, that by whomsoever the first seeds of this mysticall profession were sown among the Egyptians, it is not to be doubted, but that by Iacobs comming downe, but especially Iosephs long time of government, their knowledge was much increased, the scripture bearing witness hereunto, Psalm. 105.21. He made him Lord over his house, to teach his Senators wisdom: and by the cohabiting of the Hebrewes 215. yeeres in Egypt the Egyptians might profit more in the profession of wisdom, which that superstitious people might with their gentilismes and superstitions intermingled, change and alter. And for the truth hereof that the Egyptians learned many things of the Hebrewes, this may serve as an evidence, that in Herodotus, Diodorus Siculus, and other writing of the ancient Egyptians many things are found, having some conformity with the doctrine, law and usages of the Hebrewes, ex Pererio.

QUEST. XVI. Why it pleased God that Moses should be instructed in the Egyptian learning.

NOW it pleased God, that Moses should be thus trained up in the wisdom of the Egyptians and have a courtly bringing up, that by this meanes he might bee instructed in the government of the Commonwealth and be prepared for that publike function which he should afterward be called unto. So Dauid was taken from the flocke and brought up in Saules court to learne the discipline of the Kingdome.

Page 19

Though it pleased God to use the ordinary meanes for Moses instruction, yet he alwayes doth not so, and especially in the new Testament the Apostles were extraordinarily inspired, being in humane learning altogether unexpert, for there was more abundance of spirit and grace in the new Testament under Christ, than in the old under the Law, Simler. 2. Beside, Moses by this meanes became famous and got himselfe great authoritie among the Egyptians, that there might be greater respect had unto his message afterward, and being fully instructed in the knowledge of the Egyptians he was the better able to discern the errors and superstitions, both to convince the Egyptians and to containe the Israelites in the obedience and profession of the truth, ex Perer.

QUEST. XVII. Why Moses had this name given him.

Vers. 10. She called his name Moses. 1. Concerning the imposition of the name of Moses, neither is the opinion of Philo and Clemens Alexandrinus probable, that it is an Egyptian name derived of (Mos) which signifieth water; and Iosephus will have it compounded of Mos water, and Ises saved; for the etymon of the name is not from the water, but because he was drawne and taken out, as the reason is here expressed. 2. Neither yet is it like that Moses was in the Egyptian language, called Mueves, as Iun. out of Diodor. Siculus, or Movion, as Pererius out of Aben Ezra, being of the same signification which Moses is in Hebrew, that is, drawne out; for then it is like the Egyptian name would have beene expressed as Iosephs is, Gen. 41.45. and Daniels Chalde name, Dan. 4.5. 3. Nor yet is it probable that Pharaohs daughter having learned the Hebrew tongue of her maids did give an Hebrew name unto Moses, as Eugubinus, Lippom. Thostatus: for seeing the Hebrewes were an abomination to the Egyptian, it may be thought also, that they abhorred their names. 4. Therefore I rather incline to thinke with Simlerus and Osiander, that this word whereof Moses is derived, is Massahto draw out; as it is taken Psal. 18.17. Thou hast drawne me out of the waters, might be common both to the Hebrewes and to the Egyptians, as some words are common to divers languages, both alike in sound and signification; or it might be translated or transposed out of the Egyptian tongue into the Hebrew. 5. But as for other names that Moses should be called by, as at his circumcision Ioachim, which signifieth established, and afterward Melchi, my King, as Clemens Alexandrinus writeth, wee reject them, as having no ground in Scripture, seeing hee is perpetually called by the name of Moses, which name was by Gods providence imposed, wherein is set forth the principall part of his calling to draw the Israelites out of the waters and troubles of Egypt, and to lead them through the red sea, and so indeed historically to draw them out of the waters.

QUEST. XVIII. Of Moses visiting his brethren.

Vers. 11. AND in those daies when Moses was growne, hee went forth to his brethren. 1. Very little mention is made of Moses time spent in the court till he was fortie yeere old, for then as S. Stephon sheweth, Act. 7. he began to visit his brethren, like as little is expressed of the doings of Christ while he lived privately till he was thirtie yeere old, Pellican. 2. Iosephus writeth how in this time he warred against the Ethiopians, and while he besieged Saba, the King of Ethiopia his daughter fell in love with him, and was married to him, whom the author of historia scholast. saith was Zipporah. But the Scripture sheweth that she was the daughter of the Prince of Midian, Perer. 3. He was now growne not onely in stature of body, but in the grace and gifts of the spirit, Pellican. And as it seemeth having neglected, and forgotten his brethren hitherto, being now especially stirred up & called of God, he goeth to visit his brethren; he did it not onely of a naturall instinct, as Hilary seemeth to write. 4. And this the Apostle sheweth to have beene an excellent worke of faith: For 1. he refuseth to be called Pharaohs daughters sonne: He renounceth his courtly life and he pleasures of Egypt. 3. He preferreth the afflictions of Gods people before the pleasures of Egypt. 4. He looketh unto the reward, Heb. 11. Ferus. But if it be asked, why Ioseph did not so likewise to leave the court, as Moses did, I answere, first that some thinke that Ioseph did in his old age leave Pharaohs court, * and went and dwelt with his brethren in the land of Goshen; beside, the case betweene Ioseph and Moses is farre divers, for in Iosephs time Pharaoh was a friend to Israel, now an enemy; then the people were in happy case, now the state is miserable; Iosephs calling was to be a feeder of Israel in Egypt, Moses to bring them out of Egypt, Simler.

QUEST. XIX. Whether it were lawfull for Moses to kill the Egyptian.

Vers. 12. When he saw no man hee slew the Egyptian. Concerning the fact of Moses in killing the Egyptian, we are farre off from accusing, or blaming the same, which was at the first the opinion of Augustine, who thus writeth against Faustus. Consulta aeterna lege reperio, non debuisse hominem à Mose, qui nullam ordinariam potestatem habebat, quamvis improbium occidi: I finde in the eternall law, that Moses having no ordinary power, ought not to have killed no not a wicked man. But afterward he rejected this opinion, qust. 2. in Exod. Ocumenius also upon Iude bringeth in the Devill contending with Michael the Archangell, that Moses was not worthy of buriall, because he unjustly killed the Egyptian. But S. Stephen defendeth this fact of Moses as being a prooffe of his calling from God, Acts 7.25. 2. Some of the Hebrewes thinke, that the Hebrew here smitten of the Egyptian, was the husband of one Salomith, with whom the Egyptian committed adultery, and had by her that blasphemer that was put to death, Levit. 24. and therefore he was justly killed of Moses: but these are meere conjectures. 3. Some other Hebrewes thinke, that Moses killed not the Egyptian with the sword, but by the word of his mouth, as Peter killed Ananias▪ Act. 5. but then Moses needed not to have beene so circumspect, and to have buried him privily in the sand, Simler. 4. Cajetane defendeth this fact, because this Egyptian was one of the cruell taskmasters, that oppressed the Hebrewes, and therefore it was lawfull to kill him: but if Moses had beene a private man, it had not beene lawfull, no not to kill an enemy in this case. 5. Paulus Burgensis upon this place is of opinion, that Moses might doe this in charitie, to deliver his brethren, and to relieve the oppressed, though he had not a singular inspiration, or publike calling to doe it: & so Ambrose seemeth to thinke, lib. 1. de officiis, cap. 36. And the Scripture seemeth to warrant it: Deliver them that are drawne to death, Prov. 24.11. But though it be an act of charitie to deliver, and to rescue, yet it is an inordinate charitie, to kill one to deliver another. 6. Wherefore the best defence is, that Moses was inspired of God, and had his authoritie from him, to doe the office of a Judge betweene the Hebrew and the Egyptian; which is affirmed by Saint Stephen, He thought that his brethren would have understood, that God by his hand should give them deliverance, Act. 7.25. And this is the resolution of Augustine, quast. 2. in Exod. Thostatus, Lyranus and Thomas Aquin. Unto this may be added, that Moses being the reputed sonne of Pharaohs daughter, was a publike person, and so of great authoritie: Iun. in Analys. It may be also that all the circumstances of this fact are not expressed: as that the Egyptian did so assault the Hebrew, as that the one could not be rescued without killing of the other, or Moses might kill him in his owne defence, the Egyptian running upon him, when hee offered to rescue the Hebrew: Perer. But the best defence is, that Moses was hereunto extraordinarily stirred up of God: which extraordinary motions are not now of us to be imitated or to be drawne into example, Ferus.

QUEST. XX. Why Moses though warranted from God, yet useth great secrecie and circumspection in this businesse.

Vers. 12. AND he looked round about, and when hee saw no man, &c. It will be objected, if Moses had authoritie and a calling from God to kill the Egyptian, why did hee it secretly? To this may be answered, that although Moses was to himselfe assured of his calling, yet was it not knowne either to the Hebrewes or Egyptians; and therefore his calling being yet secret and hid, it was fit that his acts should be secret: otherwise his publicke acts, his calling being yet secret, would have beene as much offensive and called in question, as if hee had had no such calling: Iun. in Analys. So Ehud killed Egl• privately in his secret chamber, Iudg. 3. and Gedeon, being not yet pulikely knowne and taken to be appointed of God to deliver his people, did pull downe the altar of Baal by night, Iudg. 6.27. Herein th•n Moses sheweth his godly discretion that he might proceed by order.

QUEST. XXI. How Moses is said to feare, seeing the Apostle denieth that he feared the King, Heb. 11.26.

Vers. 14. THEN Moses feared and said, &c. Yet the Apostle saith, he feared not the fiercenesse of the King, Heb. 11.26. To reconcile Moses and the Apostle: 1. We approve not Theodorets exposition, that Moses is said not to feare, in respect of the cause of his flight, the killing of the Egyptian, which fact he feared not; as not repenting him hereof: but this interpretation seemeth somewhat hard: and the Apostle sheweth that he feared not the King, no not when he left Egypt: therein then consisted the vacuity of his feare, not in respect of the fact. 2. Chrysostome expoundeth his not fearing of his so leaving Egypt, that yet he feared not to returne againe thither: but Moses was strengthened and incouraged of God to returne afterward: the vision which he saw 40. yeeres after, did not take away his first feare. 3. Theophylact understandeth it of the degree of his feare: hee did not so feare the King, as that he fled a farre off, but went to Midian a Countrie adjoyning, not fearing that the King would pursue him thither: But the Apostle exempteth him, not onely from some degree, but from all feare. 4. Some referre his feare unto the affliction, and persecution, that by this meanes was like to be increased: so hee feared not for himselfe, but for the people, Pellican: but Moses speaketh of his owne feare, upon the which he fled: his fleeing was a meanes to deliver himselfe from the danger, and not the people. 5. Other say, that he feared not so much the King as hee feared to offend God, lest if he had offered himselfe to the danger and not made an escape, he should have tempted him by presuming: Osiander. But the text sheweth that hee was afraid of Pharaoh and fled from him. 6. Others confesse that Moses shewed his infirmitie of feare, but it was covered by faith and so not imputed: Genevens. But the Apostle denieth that he feared at all. 7. Some doe expound it not of Moses first leaving of Egypt, when indeed he feared the King, but of his second departure, when he brought out the people thence, for then hee feared not Pharaohs anger at all, as is evident, cap. 10.29. Lyranus, Thostatus, Pererius, Iun. And this exposition doth very well resolve this doubt. 8. Unto this also may be added, that if wee understand it of his first departure, Moses fled not for any feare in respect of himselfe, but lest that his calling by this meanes should be hindred, and he withdraweth himselfe not so much of feare, as to reserve himselfe for a better opportunitie: Simler. Nor yet doth he feare as distrusting his calling, but because hee lost this opportunitie: Iun. And the reason of his feare is expressed in the text: Then Moses feared and said, certainly this thing is knowne. Hee feared lest he should be hindred in this businesse of the deliverance of the people. Thomas also to the same effect saith, that there are two things to be considered in feare, unum vituperabile, one to be disprayed, when for feare any evill is committed, or any good omitted, and this was not in Moses; another that is Laudabile, praise worthie, si quis salva fide refugiat periculum instans: If one not violating his faith, doth shun the instant danger: unlesse we will say, that Christ, when he escaped out of their hands, that sought to stone him, did it of feare, Luke 4. But I rather preferre the 7. exposition, before touched.

QUEST. XXII. Why Moses sufferings are called by the Apostle the rebukes of Christ.

BUt seeing so oft mention hath beene made of that place to the Hebrewes, it shall not be amisse briefly to shew the meaning of those other words of the Apostle, vers. 26. esteeming the rebuke of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt: 1. We refuse here the exposition of Lyranus, that he calleth the rebukes of Moses the rebukes of Christ, because by faith foreseeing what Christ should suffer, hee by Christs example was confirmed to endure the like: for in this sense they are Moses rebukes rather than Christs. 2. Neither are they called Christs rebukes, because they were such as Christ commendeth: Blessed are they that suffer persecution for righteousnesse sake, Matt. 5. 3. or for that Christ was to come of that people, and therefore their rebukes are counted the rebukes of Christ: Cajetan. 4. or because Moses was a figure of Christ, and suffered the like rebukes: because that as Moses left the Court, and palace of Pharaoh, to be partaker of the afflictions of his people, so Christ descending from heaven tooke upon him our infirmities: Oecumenius, Theophylact. 5. But they are called Christs rebukes, because he suffereth in his members, and accounteth their afflictions as his owne: in which sense the Apostle saith he fulfilled the rest of the afflictions of Christ in his flesh for his bodies sake, which is the Church, Col. 1.24.

QUEST. 23. Why Pharaoh sought to slay Moses.

Vers. 15. Pharaoh heard of this matter, and sought to slay Moses. The causes why Pharaoh sought Moses life, Iosephus alleageth to be these three: 1. Because the Egyptians envied his prosperous successe in the warres against the Ethiopians. 2. They feared him, as like to be one, that aspired to great matters, and might seeke some innovation and change in Egypt. 3. The Egyptian Priests did prophesie of him, that he was like to prove very dangerous to Egypt. By these meanes the King was incensed against him. But I rather approve that which Philo writeth, that Pharaoh was not so much moved against Moses, for the death of one Egyptian, as for that by this he perceived, that Moses was a friend and favourer of the Hebrewes, whom he accounted his enemies, and an enemy to the Egyptians his subjects and friends: Philo lib. 1. de vita Mosis.

QUEST XXIV. The causes why Moses lived in exile and banishment 40. yeares.

Vers. 15. Therefore Moses fled. Zeiglerus thinketh that whereas at the fortieth yeere of Moses age there were 390. yeeres expired since the promise made to Abraham, and that tenne yeeres onely remained of the affliction of the people, which was to continue 400. yeeres in one place and other, Genes. 15.13. Moses thought to prevent the time, there being but tenne yeeres to come: and therefore God punished his presumption with fortie yeeres exile. But this cannot stand with the Apostles testimonie of Moses, that by faith he forsooke Egypt: if it were a worke of faith, how could it be a punishment for his presumption? Therefore the causes of Moses flight and exile are better touched by Ferus: 1. That the people should not depend upon man, but trust in God for their deliverance. 2. That Moses might be weaned altogether from the pleasures of Egypt, and delicate life in Pharaohs Court. 3. That he might be taught, that the deliverance of Israel should not be by sword or strength, but by the spirit of God. 4. To punish the peoples ingratitude, for not more thankfully accepting of this benefit, that God had stirred them up a deliverer: for not onely this Hebrew whom Moses rebuked, rejected his calling, but generally all the people made light of it, as S. Stephen sheweth, Act. 7.25.

QUEST. XXV. Of Midian what countrey it was, and where situate.

Vers. 15. And dwelt in the land of Midian. 1. This was the chiefe Citie of the Midianites, so called of Midian, one of the sonnes of Keturah by Abraham: it was situate in Arabia upon the red sea, as Iosephus. 2. Hierome saith there were two Cities of this name,* one on the South part of Arabia by the red sea; the other by Arnon, and Arcopolis, the ruines whereof were to be seene in his time. 3. The whole Countrey was called Arabia, where the Midianites, Amalekites, Israelites dwelt together: Philo. And these Arabians were called Petrei, of their metropolis or chiefe Citie Petra: Borrh. 4. This Midian was not farre from Mount Sinai, for thereabout did Moses keepe his father in lawes sheepe, Exod. 3. and thither came Iethro with Moses wife and children: and S. Paul placeth Sinai in Arabia, Gal. 4. 5. The women of this Countrey joyning with the Moabites inticed the Israelites to commit fornication, Numb. 25. These Midianites oppressed Israel seven yeeres, of whom Gideon slew 135000. Iud. 8.

QUEST. XXVI. Rehuel, Iethro, Hobab, whether the same.

Vers. 18. And when they came to Rehuel their father; &c. This Rehuel was not the same with Iethro, as the Septuagint and Latine translator here read, Iethro, and as Hierome thinketh, they were two names of the same man. 2. Neither had he foure names, Iethro, Rehuel, Hobab, Keni, as Thostatus,* Lyranus: for Hobab was the sonne of Rehuel, Numb. 10.29. and hee was called Keni of his nation and countrey, because he was a Kenite, Numb. 24.21. Iunius. 3 Pererius also is deceived, thinking that Hobab was not Moses father in law, but his wives brother, and his father in lawes sonne: because (saith he) Moses father in law departed from them at Mount Sinai, Exod. 18. but Hobab staid with them still, and was their guide in the wilderness, Numb. 10.31. But Pererius herein erreth also: for these two stories of Iethro and Hobab. Exod. 18. and Numb. 10. must be joyned together: they were both one man,* and hee tooke his leave of Moses, as it is shewed Exod. 18. but he returned againe unto them, before they departed from Sinai, to be their guide, as Moses requested, Numb. 10. and it is like he brought his kindred and family with him, because the Kenites are read afterward to have cohabited with Israel, Iudg. 1.16.4. Wherefore Rehuel was grandfather unto Moses wife▪ called also their father, after the manner of the Hebrewes.

Iethro and Hobab are the same, for they are both said to be the father in law of Moses, Exodus 18. and Num. 10.29. and Hobab and Iethro was the sonne of Rehuel: ibid. Iun.

QUEST. XXVII. Whether Rehuel were Prince and Priest of Midian.

Vers. 16. And the Prince of Midian, &c. The Hebrew word is Cohen which signifieth both Prince and Priest, and one that is preferred or exalted in any office or authoritie, as David's sonnes are called cohanim, chiefe rulers, or men of authoritie, 2 Sam. 8.18. Priests they were not, being not of the tribe of Levi,* but of Iudah. 1. Yet it is not like that he was King of Arabia, as Eusebius alleageth out of Artapanus an ancient writer: for it was not seemely for a Princes daughter to keepe their fathers sheepe; neither is it like, if he had beene a King, that the other shepherds would have offered such violence unto them: Simlerus. 2. Iosephus, Philo, the Septuagint doe hold him to have beene a Priest: the P^h phrase readeth, Prince. It is like he was both a Prince, and a Priest, as Melchisedeck King of S^olem was: and as after the captivitie of Babylon the same were both Princes and Priests in Judea: Perer: and of old time the Priesthood went with the birthright; Borrh.

QUEST. XXVIII. Whether Rehuel were an idolatrous Priest, or a Priest of the true God.

Concerning this Iethro his profession. 1. I neither thinke this Iethro was an Idolatrous Priest before he came to Moses, Exod. 18. and then first converted, as David Kimhi, to whom Pererius consen|teth: for it is not like that Moses would have married an Idolaters daughter, Simler. at the least Moses had not continued with him so long even 40. yeeres for nought, and his father in law an Idolater still. 2. Neither is it probable that Iethro from the beginning was a Priest and a worshipper of the true God, seeing he was the Priest of the Midianites, that were Idolaters: as Aben Ezra. 3. Therefore it is most probable, that first some seeds of true religion, and of the knowledge of God were preserved among the Midianites even from Adam: yet intermingled with the superstitions of the heathen: Borrh. but by Moses abode and continuance with Iethro wee are to thinke that he was more established in the know|ledge of the true God: and was most of all confirmed, when he came to Moses: Exod. 18. where indeed he professeth himselfe a true worshipper and Priest unto the high God, offering sacrifice unto him, Iun.

QUEST. XXIX. Why Zipporah is called an Aethiopisse, Numb. 12.1.

Vers. 21. Who gave unto Moses Zipporah his daughter. 1. This Zipporah here a Midianitish wo|man, is also the same which is called the Cushite or Aethiopisse, Numb. 12. 1. for that is but a fable of Iosephus▪ that Moses married the King of Ethiopias daughter: which Philo writing of purpose the Historie of Moses life, maketh no mention of, being before Iosephus: and Moses is found to have had no more children, than those which he had by Zipporah, which is a probable conjecture, that he had no more wives. 2. She is then called an Aethiopisse, not of the contrary, because she was faire, as the Chalde readeth, or by way of contempt, because the people of that countrie are noted for their deformitie: but there were two countries called Aethiopia, the one was the occidentall toward the West beyond Egypt, the other was the Orientall toward the East bordering upon the red sea, which the Aral|bians inhabite: Perer. And in Hebrew she is called a Cushite, and Aethiopia is named Cush, because the posteritie of Cush inhabited both the West Aethiopia and the East which is Arabia. The Midianites then were called Cushites, not because they came of Cush, Gen. 10. but because they inhabited in that countrie: Iun. And that Midian also is called Cush, or Aethiopia, it is evident, Habac. 3.7. For iniquitie I saw the tents of Cushan, and the curtaines of the land of Midian did tremble: Perer. ex Hierom.

QUEST. XXX. At what time Moses sonnes were borne unto him.

Vers. 22. She bare a sonne whose name she called Gershom, &c. 1. This child was borne unto Moses not long before his returne into Egypt out of Midian, where Moses stayed 40. yeeres, and likewise his other sonne Eleazer: because they were but little ones both, when Moses tooke his journie into Egypt, for he put them upon an Asse, as not able to travell a foot, and the one of them was not circumcised, whose circumcision though it might be deferred some dayes, yet many yeeres it is not like that Moses would put it off, Perer. 2. The Latine following the Septuagint, doe make here mention also of the birth of Eleazer, with the reason of the imposition of his name: but that is not in the Hebrew, being transposed hither out of the 18. of Exodus.

QUEST. XXXI. To whom the right of imposing names upon the children belongeth.

Vers. 22. Whose name he called, &c. 1. Names are found sometime to have beene imposed by the mother, as Leah giveth the name unto Ruben, Simeon, Judah, Gen. 29.32.33. 2. Sometime the father, to whom that right especially belonged, nameth his sonne, as Ioseph, Gen. 41.51. 3. Sometime both the parents devise the name, as Eva is said to call her sonne borne in Abels stead, Sheth, Gen. 4.25. And Adam also is said to have given that name, Gen. 5.3. 4. Sometimes names are imposed by a generall consent of friends, as Gen. 25.25. They called his name Esau. 5. And sometime also a name is taken up by common use, as Gen. 25.30. he, that is, every one (as Iun. well readeth) called his name Edom: But the right and authoritie of imposing names belongeth unto the father: as Rachel called her sonne Benoni but Iacob Benjamin, Gen. 35. And when Iohn was circumcised they would have named him Zacharie, but his father overruled the matter and ratified the other name, Luk. 1.

Page 23

QUEST. XXXII. Whence the name of Gershom is derived.

Gershom. 1. For the derivation of this name, the first part thereof is taken from the word Ger, which signifieth a stranger, as it followeth in this place: for, saith he, I have beene a stranger in a strange land. For the other part, Iun. thinketh it commeth of the word which signifieth to cast out, or expell, which is garash: but that cannot well stand with the other in this composition, unlesse the same syllable should be repeated; and beside, <◇> with cholem should be superfluous: therefore Piscator frameth it rather of Sham, which signifieth to be desolate: Some derive it of Sham, there, because hee was a stranger there: but because the word Shem, name, is used immediatly before, he called Shemo, his name, Gershom, it is most like that the word is compounded of Ger and shem, that is, a stranger, his name. 2. Some thinke that he calleth it a strange land not in respect of Egypt, where they were onely sojourners, but of Canaan: Simler. But seeing Moses was borne in Egypt, and there he had his education, and there were his parents, it is more like that he hath respect unto that place: being expulsed and exiled thence into a strange land: Iun. 3. There was also another Gershom beside, the sonne of Levi called also Gershon, 1 Chron. 6.1. & 15.

QUEST. XXXIII. What Pharaoh it was that died while Moses was in Midian.

Vers. 23. So it was after many dayes that the King of Egypt died. 1. Some thinke that this King was not Pharaoh, from whom Moses fled, but an other, and that this was the fourth change during his exile: Ors reigned 38. yeeres, in whose latter yeeres Moses fled, then after him succeeded Acengors 12. yeeres: then Achirus 9. yeeres; then Cnphres 16. yeeres, who perished in the red sea. Simler: 2. But it is more probable, that this Pharaoh, that now died, was that King from whom Moses escaped: both for that the Israelites now at the change of the King cried unto God, hoping to finde some alteration, as men commonly doe looke for better times at the change of the Prince: Pellican. As also so much may be gathered by that which the Lord saith to Moses: goe returne to Egypt, for they are all dead which went about to kill thee: that is, both Pharaoh, and all those that sought to revenge the Egyptians blood whom Moses slew. Iun. Iosephus also thinketh that this was the same Pharaoh, from whom Moses fled unto Midian, lib. 2. cap. 5.

QUEST. XXXIV. Whether the cry of the Israelites proceeded from true repentance.

Vers. 23. AND the children of Israel sighed for the bondage, and cried. 1. Some thinke that this crie of the Israelites proceeded not from any true repentance, but from their present miserie and bondage: And God heard their crie of his fatherlie pitie and clemencie, as he often heareth the complaints of those which are worthily punished, so the Lord had respect to Ahabssackcloth and semblance of sorrow. 2. But it is rather to be thought, that the afflictions of the Israelites had brought them to the knowledge of their sinne, and specially of their Idolatrie, which is mentioned by the Prophet Ezechi. 20.8. And thus being humbled with fight of their sinnes, for the which they were worthily chastised, they make their complaint unto God: Iun. Simler. And this may appeare by their effectuall prayers, which went up to heaven, as proceeding from great contrition of heart and humilitie. Ferus. Wherefore Moses also maketh further mention, Num. 20.16. shewing that at the instant & humble suite of the Israelites, the Lord sent his Angell to deliver them. Iun. This crie therefore of the Israelites in Egypt seemeth to be unlike unto that which they made when the Egyptians pursued them, they are said to crie unto God in one verse, and to murmur in the next, Exod. 14.10.11.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the divine providence.

Vers. 3. She tooke for him an Arke. In Moses wonderfull preservation, we have a notable example of the divine providence: which sheweth that all things in the world are governed, ordered, and disposed according to the will of God: the hiding of Moses three moneths, his putting into a close Arke, the finding of it by Pharaohs daughter, the instinct which she had, to bring him up for her owne sonne, by which meanes Moses came to be instructed in the Egyptian learning; doe all excellently set forth the fatherly care of God toward his, in their birth, education, preservation, as our Saviour also saith, even all the haire of your head are numbred, Matth. 10.30. Piscator.

2. Doct. Lawfull meanes to be used.

They covered it with silke and pitch. Although they chiefly commended the childe by a sure faith to Gods providence, yet they refuse no meanes to provide for the childes safetie, like as Noah pitched his Arke within and without: which teacheth us, that we should so depend upon Gods providence, as that we presume not, but carefully use the meanes which God hath appointed, Pellican.

3. Doct. Difference of punishment according to the diversitie of sinne.

Vers. 13. HE said unto him that smote his brother, Wherefore smitest thou thy fellow? Moses wisdom and discretion herein appeareth, that killed the Egyptian, & reproveth onely the Hebrew: so they which sinne maliciously are more severely to be punished, than they which offend of ignorance and infirmitie, Ferus.

4. Doct. That it is lawfull to flee in time of persecution.

Vers. 15. MOses fled from Pharaoh. This sheweth that it is lawfull for one to flie in the time of persecution, specially when his person is sought: so Iacob fled from Esau. David from Saul, Paul escaped out of Damascus, Berrh.

5. Places of controversie.

1. Cont. The mariage of the aunt and nephew against the law of nature.

Vers. 1. A Man of Levi tooke a daughter of Levi. That is, Amram tooke to wife Iochebed his fathers sister, as is before shewed, quest. 3. The Canonists upon these and such other examples of neere mariages doe inferre, that by the law of nature no degrees are forbidden, but betweene father and daugh|ter, mother and sonne onely: because in other neere degrees even mariages were in use among the Pa|triarkes. Contr. 1. It appeareth that these mariages, as to take the Aunt to wife, or uncle to husband, to marrie two sisters, and such like, were even against the law of nature, seeing they are named among the abominations and pollutions of the Cananites, Levit. 18.27. who transgressed nor here in against any po|sitive or judicia|ll law, but against the law of nature▪ 2. This further is made manifest, in that the Ro|manes by the light of nature, and some other nations did prohibite such neere mariages and conjunctions. 3. And the fathers acts and examples doe not therefore conclude that the prohibition of such mariages was not morall & naturall: for it cannot be denied, but in their owne opinion Lots incest with his daugh|ters was unnaturall: the law of nature in many things was then obscured, which afterward by the posi|tive lawes was explained, Simler. in cap. 6. Exod.

2. Cont. That the mariage of ministers is lawfull.

Vers. 16. AND the Priest of Median had seven daughters. R•h•el himselfe was a Priest, and so was the son Iethro, who offered sacrifices unto God, Exod. 16. So that even among the Gentiles, the Priests were married, and the sonnes succeeded the parents in their Priestly function. As in the primitive Church we read of Polycrates, who in an Epistle to Victor writeth, that seven of his auncestors had beene Bishops of Ephesus before him, and he himselfe was the eighth. The Apostles also were married: and S. Paul also sheweth that he might have taken this libertie as well as the rest, 1 Cor. 9.5. and he alloweth every man to have his wife, 1 Cor. 7.2.

3. Cont. Of the authoritie of parents in the mariage of their children.

Vers. 22. WHO gave unto Moses Zipporah his daughter. Here that ancient right of the fathers, in disposing and giving their children in mariage is confirmed: Piscatur. So Abraham pro|vided a wife for Isaack, Rebeckah is given by her parents, they onely aske her consent, Gen. 24. It was in the fathers power to ratifie or disanull the vow and promise made by the daughter, Numb. 30. This maketh against the practice of the Canonists and Romanists, that ascribe very little to the consent of pa|rents in marriage, and they allow that a mans sonne or daughter may against the minde of the parents, be pulled into a Cloister and professe Monkerie.

4. Cont. Of the perfection of the Hebrew originall.

NOW whereas after the 22. verse the Septuagint and the Latine translator doe insert a whole verse of the birth of Eleazar; with the reason of the imposition of his name: all which is not in the Hebrew in this place, but is transposed hither from the 18. chap. of Exodus, vers. 4. Bellarmino would therefore make us beleeve, that herein the Latine text is perfecter than the Hebrew, because mention is made onely of one of Moses sonnes, whereas he had two, lib. 2. de va. Dei, cap. 2.

Contr. 1. It followeth not because some thing is omitted in one place to be inserted in another, that therefore the Hebrew text is defective: as S. Mark making mention of one blind man, chap. 10.46. and S. Luke likewise, chap. 18.36. (whereas S. Matthew speaketh of two blind men, chap. 20.29.) are not there|fore defective: So neither is the Hebrew here thought to be wanting, expressing onely one of Moses sons, seeing the other is supplied, chap. 18.2. And if the Septuagint is to be justified here, then let them be borne out also for adding five more of Iosephs posteritie, Machor, Gilead of Manasseh, and Su••am, and Taam, and Edom of Ephraim, Genes.

46. which are not mentioned in the Hebrew, as not then borne, but borrowed from the 26. of Numb. and 1 Chron. 7. Likewise Exod. 6.19. the Latine and Septuagint put unto Moses and Aaron Miriam, which is not in the Hebrew; this rather sheweth great boldnesse <◇> th•se translators, to adde that which the spirit of God passeth over in silence.

5. Cont. Prayers are not meritorious.

Vers. 24. Then God heard their m•ne, and God remembred his covenant. The Israelites prayers are heard, not for any worthinesse or merit of their sorrow, but the Lord for his promise sake, the foundation whereof is Christ, heareth their complaint, and hath respect unto them: Simler, Borrh. And that our prayers are not meritorious, but heard in mercie, Salomon sheweth, Then hea•s thou in heaven, and be mercifull to the sinne of thy people: 1 King. 8.24.

Page 25

6. Places of morall use.

1. Mor. Rich and great men should have compassion on the necessities of their poore brethren.

Vers. 11. HE went forth to his brethren to looke on their burdens. Moses though himselfe lived in all ease and courtly pleasure, yet could not so content himselfe, but goeth to visit his affli|cted brethren, and is touched in compassion towards them, as Queene Hester also was moved with pity toward her people: which teacheth us, that rich and mighty men, that are in high and wealthy place, should submit themselves to take knowledge of the necessities and wants of their poore brethren: there|fore the Prophet reproveth the rich men of Israel, that dranke wine in bowles, and lived at ease, but no man was sory for the affliction of Ioseph. Ferus.

2. Mor. Friendly admonition is not to be despised.

Vers. 14. WHo made thee a man of authoritie? Moses here for his friendly admonition is recompen|sed with scornfull and disdainfull words: which is the property of naturall and carnall men, to repay them with evill, which carefully watch over them by wholesome admonitions for the good of their soule. Simler. But the Wise man saith, The eare that hearkeneth to the correction of life, shall lodge among the wise, but he that refuseth instruction despiseth his owne soule.

3. Mor. Godly names to be given unto children.

Vers. 22. WHose name he called Gershom. Moses giveth unto his sonne a name that might put both himselfe, and his sonne also, when he came to yeeres of discretion, in minde of their state and condition, that they were but pilgrimes and strangers here. So did the Fathers use to give names un|to their children of good signification and godly edifying: that fond use therefore is to bee reprovod among Christians, that give names unto their children borrowed and taken from the Gentiles, and such as have no good signification, or which they understand not. Pellican.

4. Mor. Patience is necessarie in prayer.

Vers. 24. Then God heard their mone. Yet it was forty yeeres before the Lord sent them deliverance: we must not then thinke, that our prayers are neglected of God, if presently we see not the effect thereof: but we must waite the Lords leisure, and expect with patience, till it bee his pleasure to performe our prayers and grant our requests▪ Ferus. S. Paul prayed thrice, that is often, that the pricke of the flesh the messenger of Satan might be taken from him, yet was it not, but the Lord gave him his suffi|cient grace with patience and strength to endure that combat: 2. Cor. 12.

5. Mor. In affliction we must flie unto prayer.

ANd in that the people cried unto God in this their distresse, they rebelled not, nor sought to deli|ver themselves, by their owne arme or strength: it teacheth us that in all our afflictions wee should depend upon God and betake our selves unto prayer: Pellic. as Saint Iames saith, If any be afflicted let him pray: Iam. 5.13.

CHAP. III.

1. The method and parts.

THe generall preparation of the Instrument of this great deliverance, is set forth in the Chapter going before, in his preservation, education, persecut|ion. Now followeth the more speciall preparation in the vocation of Moses in this third Chapter, and his confirmation, chap. 4.

In this Chapter is set forth, first the preparation to his vocation, to vers. 7.

Secondly, the vocation it selfe, to vers. 22.

The preparation consisteth partly in a vision which Moses saw, both in what place, vers. 1. what vision it was, vers. 2. how Moses behaved himselfe, vers. 3. partly in the voice of God, which Moses feared: wherein Moses is charged what he should doe, vers. 4.5. and the Lord proclaimeth who he is vers. 6.

The vocation of Moses is either a generall charge or commandement to goe unto Egypt: where 1. Moses office is enjoyned him of God, vers. 10. with the occasion thereof, the afflictions of the people, vers. 7. the twofold end thereof, to deliver them out of Egypt, and to bring them into the good land of Canaan, vers. 8.2. Moses excuseth himselfe, 1. By his infirmity; where the Lord satisfieth him by that pre|sent signe, and assuring him of the future event, that they should serve him in that mount, vers. 11, 12. 2. By pretending the curiosity of the people in inquiring after his name that sent him, verse the 13. where the Lord also satisfieth him by shewing his name, vers. 14, 15.

Beside the generall charge, followeth a particular direction what course hee shall take, to vers. 19. and what effect it shall have. For the first, there is prescribed whom hee shall joyne with him, the Elders of Is|rael, vers. 16. what he shall say unto them, vers. 17. what they shall doe; goe unto Pharaoh, vers. 18. The effects or events are foure: 1. Pharaoh shall refuse to let them goe, vers. 19. 2. The Lord will worke signes and wonders. 3. Then he will send them out, vers. 20. 4. They shall goe out richly with ornaments and jewels, vers. 21.22.

2. The divers readings.

Vers.* 7. Because of their exactors. I.V.A.P.S. rather than taskmasters. B.G. The word is derived of Na/gash, to exact, oppresse.

Vers. 12. For I will be with thee. I.V.A.P.S.B. rather than, I will be with thee. L. for here the causall par|ticle for is wanting: or, Certainly I will be with thee, G. chi signifieth for, because.

This shall be a token unto thee that I have sent thee: when thou has brought, &c. ye shall serve God upon this mountaine.* I.S.A.P. that is, this vision which thou seest shall be a signe: not as the most reade, That this shall be a signe, namely, that which followeth, and shall serve me. G.B.V.L. for the perfect distinction, athuah commeth betweene: and that could not properly be a signe to confirme him presently, which was to be fulfilled afterward.

*Vers. 14. E•ich, which am hath sent me. I. to whom consenteth Simlerus: rather than, I am that I am. V.L.S.B.G.X or, I shall be what I shall be. A.P. The first Ehich seemeth to be a proper name, because God answereth directly to Moses question, who was desirous to know his name: the second Ehich is an interpretation of the former, and not part of the name, because that Ehich is but once repeated in the end of the verse: Ehich signifieth properly, I shall be, but it is usuall with the Hebrewes to put the future for the preter tense.

Ehich* hath sent me, that is, I am B.G.V. I shall be, A.P. rather than, he that is hath sent me, L.S. for Ehich is the first person of the future of hajah to be.

Vers. 18. They shall hearken to thy voice. I: rather than, heare thy voice. V.L.S.B. or, obey thy voice. G.A.P. for then the preposition Lamed, which signifieth to should be superfluous.

*Vers. 18. The God of the Hebrewes hath met with us, I.V.B.G. cum caeter: rather than, hath called us. S. L. for the word is Karah with he, to meete or come against, not Kara with aleph, which signifieth to call.

*Vers. 19. The King of Egypt will not let you goe, yea not by strong hand; I.V.A. rather than, he will not let you goe but by strong hand. L.S.B.G. the word is Velo yea not, or, and not: the meaning is, that hee will be so obstinate, that he will not a great while let you goe, though he feeles Gods mighty hand.

*Vers. 22. And ye shall spoile Egypt, or the Egyptians: I.G.S.L. better than, robbe the Egyptians. B. Na•zal in Piel signifieth to take the spoile, as 2. Chron.20.25. They tooke the spoile to themselves.

3. The explanation of doubtful questions.

QUEST. I. How long Moses kept his father in lawes sheepe, what he did in the meane time, and to what end he was so exercised.

Vers. 1. When Moses kept the sheepe. 1. Concerning the time, when this vision here following was shewed to Moses, it fell out 40. yeeres after he fled out of Egypt, Acts 7.30. about the 80. yeere of his age, for so old he was when Moses appeared before Pharaoh, Exod. 7.7. which was the same yeere, Perer. 2. so that Moses kept his father in lawes sheepe the space of 40. yeeres, for he was 40. yeeres old when he visited his brethren, Acts 7.23. and now he was 80. yeere old: wherein appeareth the singular patience of Moses that was brought ab aula ad caulam, from the court as it were to the carte: and in this state of life continued forty yeeres: Simlerus. During which time it is supposed that he wrote the Booke of Genesis, and the Booke of Iob, for the comfort of his afflicted brethren in Egypt: But it is very like that hee gave himselfe to contemplation, and much profited in the study of wisdom, the grounds whereof he had learned in Egypt, Perer. ex Philone.3. And thus it pleased God to exercise Mo/ses in a shepherds life, for these causes. 1. That by this meanes he might fully bee weaned from the pleasures of Egypt, and as it were renounce the world. Perer. ex Gregor. 2. The pastorall life and discipline was a kinde of introduction to prepare him for the government, which afterward hee tooke upon him: as it is in the Psalme, Thou didst leade thy people like sheepe by the hand of Moses and Aaron. 3. that Gods power might appeare, in raising Moses from this contemptible kind of life, especially in the opinion of the Egyptians, that abhorred all keepers of sheepe, to that high place, calling, and authority to the which he was afterward advanced. Simler.

QUEST. II. Of the mount Choreb, whether the same with Sinai.

HE came to the mountaine of God Choreb. 1. Iosephus thinketh that mount Choreb and Sinai were all one: some thinke they were two mountaines joyning together, and that Sinai was the higher: Cajetane thinketh that Choreb was the top of the mount Sinai: but it is more like, that Choreb was the name of that hilly trace or circuit (so called of the drinesse or barrennesse) wherein the mount Sinai was situated: which place as Philothinketh was full of bushes, * and that at the bottome of that bushie hill this vision was shewed. 2. Moses drave his sheepe thither, because there was good store of grasse by reason that the hill was unfrequented, because of the reverence and holinesse of the place: but the place was not had in such reverence before this vision: therefore it is most like that he went thither, as to a secret place, and more fit for contemplation: and that to him thus prepared, this heavenly vision appeared: Simler. Or the Lord might by a secret instinct draw Moses thither, where hee purposed to manifest himselfe unto him: Perer. 3. It is called the mountaine of God, not for any religion which was there placed of old, as Iosephus, * or because of the height and excellencie thereof, as such things are so called in Scripture, as the cedars of God, Psalm 104.16. But it is so named by an anticipation, because there the Lord did appeare to Moses at this time, and afterward shewed himselfe by visible signe, at the delivering of the Law: Iun. 4. This hill is famous in Scripture for seven memorable things there done: as the vision of the fire in the bush: the striking of the rock with Moses rod: there Moses lift up his hands when Ioshua prevailed against Amalek: there the Law was given: Moses fasted fourty dayes and fourty nights; and comming downe from thence broke the tables of stone: there Helias had that admirable vision set forth, 1. Kin. 19. Perer.

Page 27

QUEST. III. Of the vision in the bush.

Vers. 2. Then the Angell of the Lord appeared unto him in a flame of fire cut of the mids of the bush. 1. This is one of the three most notable visions of the old Testament, the two other were the vision of the ladder shewed to Iacob, Gen. 28. The other of the ancient of dayes unto Dan. 7. Pere • But unto these may be added as not inferiour to the rest, the appearing of the Lord in mount Sinai, at the delivery of the Law. 2. Visions were of three sorts, either such as by spirituall illumination were manife|sted unto the intellectuall part and understanding, or such as wrought upon the inward phantasie, or were shewed by some visible signes to the externall sense: Simler. as in this place. 3. This bush is in Hebrew called seneh: which the Hebrewes describe to be a shrub full of prickles, and without fruit, and so thicke, that a bird cannot enter without the ruffling and pulling off her feathers: some thinke that the moun|taine Sinai was called of Seneh, either because of this bush, or for that it was full of bushes: Perer. 4. There are two parts of this vision, the flame burning in the bush, and the Angell speaking • o Moses out of the bush. Simler.

QUEST. IV. Of the flame of fire that burned not.

IN a flame of fire out of the midst. Plato maketh three kindes of fire; the thicke grosse fire, as in the burning of wood; a bright and subtile fire, yet burning; and a cleere pure fire which lighteth onely, and burneth not, such as is in the starres; And hereunto may bee added a fourth kind, which is the element of fire, which neither giveth light, nor yet burneth. This fire was of the second kinde: not a fire in shew and imagination, but a true fire, for otherwise it had beene no marvell that the bush burned not: Perer. 2. This fire was neither fetched downe from the element of fire, as some thinke, for so it should have pierced the middle and cold region of the aire, which is contrarie unto it; neither was it procured by an Angell who have not power of themselves to change the ordinance and course of nature; but it was brought forth by God, made of the aire, or some other matter prepared of God: for this was a supernatu|rall fire in those three things, because it continued without fuel to feed upon, it kept below and ascended not, it burned but consumed not, therefore it sheweth a supernaturall worke. 4. Now that this fire consumed not the bush being a combustible matter, the cause is, because the naturall force thereof was restrained by God: for if God concur not with the nature of things, they cannot worke nor shew their kinde; as the three children walked in the fiery oven, and were not burned. Whereas then the fire hath two inseparable qualities, to give light and to burne, God yet could here divide and separate them: this fire giveth light but burneth not, as the infernall fire shall burne, but give no light, as Basil sheweth upon the 28. Psalme. Perer:

QUEST. V. What is signified by the burning of the fire without consuming the bush.

Concerning the signification hereof, the burning of the fire and not the consuming of the bush: 1. The Hebrewes thinke that God made choice of these two, the fire, and the bush: whereof the one is a base thing, and the other hath no shape, that they should make no image or representation of God. 2 Some thinke it betokeneth the Law that could not purge our sinnes, signified by the bramble, but only shew and demonstrate them. 3. Some understand the divine nature of Christ, which did not consume or dissolve his humane nature. 4. Some apply it to the Virgin Mary, of whom Christ was borne, that carried fire, and she not consumed. 5. Some understand it of the state of a regenerate man, in whom there are two parts, the illumination of the spirit, as the fire, and the corruption of the flesh, as the bramble. 6. But Philo best expresseth what this fire resembled in the bush; the bush sheweth the vile and miserable estate of the Israelites in Egypt; the fire, their affliction; the not consuming of the bush, that they should be preserved in their trouble, and be delivered from it, and that in the end they should be as brambles to prick and wound their enemies: Perer: 7. Beside, God sheweth himselfe by this supernaturall fire, farre unlike the naturall and ordinarie fire, which consumeth things neere hand, but toucheth not a farre off. But God is friendly and favourable to his servants, that draw neere unto him, but he exerciseth his judgments upon the wicked, that goe farre off from him. Ferus.

Page 28

QUEST. VI. Whether it were an Angell or God himself that appeared unto Moses.

〈1 paragraph〉

QUEST. VII. What moved Moses to draw neere to behold this strange sight.

Vers. 3. Therefore Moses said, I will turne aside. 1. Some thinke that Moses being much conversant and exercised in the knowledge of naturall things, might of a curious minde approach to trie out some naturall conclusion, because there are some kindes of fire, that breake out of the earth, as in Lycia and Island, that doe consume water and yet burne not tow: and when Syllabes sieged Athens, there was a certaine tower which being 〈◇〉 with a certaine lime, could not be set on fire. 2. But it is more like, that Moses tooke this to be some divine sight, as being exercised more in the contemplation of divine and spirituall things▪ and was moved to draw neere by some spirituall instinct, Ferus: yet he might presume somewhat farre▪ and therefore is forbidden to come neere. Simlerus.

QUEST. VIII. Why the Lord doubleth Moses name in calling him.

Vers. 4. MOses, Moses. 1. The Hebrewes thinke that this voyce, whereby God spake to Moses, was like to Amrams voice Moses father, which was well knowne unto him: and they further adde, that the Lord used to speake to his servants in such a voice, as was familiar unto them: as when the Lord spake to Samuel he went to Hel▪ supposing it had beene his voice, 1. Sam. 3. But the going to Hel▪ sheweth not, that it was like that old mans voice, but that Samuel, not yet acquainted with the Lords voice, could not judge it to be any mans voice, but his, and therefore goeth unto him to be better instructed. 2. But this calling of Moses by name, is a signe of Gods favour unto Moses; so God calleth Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, whom he loved, by their names. The wicked are seldome called by their names in Scripture: like as among men, when one is called by his name, it sheweth kindnesse and love: as Scipio did study to call the citizens by their names, that they might thinke he had a care of them. And Cyrus called his souldiers by their names: Simler. 3. And this sheweth, that God taketh especiall notice and knowledge of such, whom hee singleth out by name, as our Saviour answereth Nathaniel, who wondred that Christ knew him by his name, whom hee had not seene before, that before Philip called him, when he was under the fig tree he saw him, Ioh. 1.48. Ferus. 4. Beside, this doubling of Moses name serveth the better to prepare and stirre him up to give diligent attention to this heavenly vision and voyce. Simler.

QUEST. IX. What the putting off the shooes meaneth.

Vers. 5. PVt thy shooes off thy feete. 1. We reade of three kindes of putting off the shooes in Scripture: the first common and usuall, as a signe of grieve and mourning, as David came to Jerusalem barefoote, 2. Sam. 15.30. The second civill, as by putting off the shooe they signified the yeelding up of their right, as it is prescribed, Deut. 25.9. and practised, Ruth. 4.7. The third was religious, which betokened the putting off of earthly & carnall thoughts, and the preparing of the minde for spirituall things: Iun. in Analys. 2. This putting off the shooes, 1. some say was commanded Moses, that he thereby should sanctifie that place, by making bare his feete: but the place was holy already, because of Gods presence; the place was not holy because Moses put off his shooes, but because it was holy, Moses is bid to put off his shooes. 2. Ambrose thus applieth it, that because the shooes are made of the skinned of dead beasts, Moses should put off all feare of death, for feare whereof hee fled at the first time from Pharaoh. 3. Cyprian would have thereby signified, that Moses by putting off his shooes, doth not challenge any right in the spouse of the Church, but resigneth it to Christ the head and husband thereof: for this was the custome, that the next kinsman by putting off the shooe, did surrender his right in the brothers wife deceased unto the next after him, Ruth. 4. 3. Because the putting on of the shooes did betoken haste; as the Israelites were commanded to eat the Passeeover with their shooes upon their feete: therefore the putting them off betokeneth the contrarie, not in haste, but with due preparation, Moses should approach: Perer. 4. But the most likely signification is, that all carnall thoughts set apart, Moses should draw neere with reverence, and spirituall preparation, Ferus: as into the house of God, Eccle. 4 17.

QUEST. X. Why the Lord called himselfe the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob.

Vers. 6. I Am the God of thy father, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Iacob. 1. By thy father, he meaneth Amram, shewing that he was the God of them and of their seed, and of all Israel, being mindfull of his promise made to their fathers: Simlerus. 2. Abraham, Isaac and Iacob are here named, not so much in regard of their sanctity and excellent vertues: for Abel, Enoch and Noah were holly men in their time: but for these causes are they especially named: 1. Because to them specially were the promises made touching the land of Canaan. 2. They were the next and immediate fathers of Israel. 3. To them God more fully revealed himselfe and shewed his counsell. 4. And principally for that those Patriarks had most evident propheties of the Messiah, as Abraham, Gen. 22.18. that all the earth should be blessed in his seed: and the same promise was renewed to Isaac, Gen. 26.4. Iacob also prophesieth of the coming of the Messiah, under the name of Shiloh. 5. These three Patriarchs are named to shew the efficacy of Gods promise made unto them: the time now approaching when they should see the accomplishment thereof: Perer. 3. The name of God is thrice repeated, and set before Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob; both to expresse the mysterie of the Trinitie, and to shew the speciall and particular care that God had of each of them, being a gracious God unto them all: and because unto them all were the promises made, the certainty whereof by this repetition is insinuated. Pererius.

QUEST. XI. Why Moses hid his face.

Vers. 6. Then Moses hid his face. 1. For these causes wee find in Scripture that men have used to hide them for feare, as Adam hid himselfe in Paradise for shamefastnesse; as Rebeckah covered her selfe with the vaile, when she saw Isaac, Gen. 24. for reverence and humility, as Elias covered his face, when the Lord spake unto him, 1. King. 19. for weaknesse and impotencie, as Moses face was covered from the Israelites, because they were not able to behold the glory of his countenance, Exod. 34. Perer. 2. For two of these causes Moses here covereth his face, first as being guilty of his owne infirmity and weaknesse, as being not able to behold the exceeding great glory of God, as also of reverence: Piscator. 3. Moses is not mentioned here in direct words to have prayed or worshipped, as wee read of others the servants of God, when the Lord appeared unto them: not that Moses either being astonished forgot it, or disabled himselfe as not worthy, but he inwardly in his soule adored the divine Majesty, as the humililty of his externall behaviour sheweth: Simler.

QUEST. XII. How this text is alleaged by our Saviour in the Gospell, to prove the resurrection of the dead.

NOW whereas our Saviour Christ, Matth. 22. Mark 12. and Luk 20. alleageth this divine testimony; I am the God of Abraham, &c. and inferreth thereupon, he is the God of the living and not of the dead, and so convinceth the Sadduces that held there was no resurrection: the question is, seeing that this scripture proveth onely the immortality of the soule, which some of the Philosophers held, and yet beleevd not the resurrection, how this place was applied by our Saviour to prove the resurrection of the body? First then it may bee answered, that seeing Abraham, Isaac and Iacob being departed out of this world, are said to bee living unto God, and these names were given unto them as consisting of soule and body, this place sheweth, that both their soules doe live actually with God, and their bodies also in hope not being dead, but onely asleepe: Ireneus lib. 4. cap. 11. so also Chrysostome in 22. cap. Mat. 2. Some answer, that by necessarie consequent, the mortality of the soule being granted, the resurrection of the body must follow, because the soule naturally hath a desire to the body, and cannot have true and full happinesse, untill the bodie which was partaker of the labours and travels of this life with the soule, bee made fellow also with it in joy: which reason moved some of the Philosophers, as the Pythagoreans and Platonists, which held the soule to be immortall, to dreame of the remigration and returne of the soule to the body, thinking it impossible, that the soule should for ever bee separated from the body: *sic Thomas lib. 4. contra Gent. cap. 79. 3. But the best solution of all is Hieromes, that against the Sadduces, who denied the resurrection of the body, onely for that they beleevd not the immortality of the soule, it was a strong argument to convince them of error in denying the resurrection, to take away the ground of their error in proving by this text the living and being of the soule: this also is the solution of Cajetane.

QUEST. XIII. Why our Saviour specially urgeth this place against the Sadduces.

FURther, though out of the old Testament divers other places might be alleaged more pregnant at the first sight, than this to prove the resurrection of the dead, as Hierome doth specially note that place, Iob. 19. I know my redeemer liveth: yet our Saviour maketh choice of this out of Moses, not onely as Hierome writeth, because the Sadduces received no other parts of the old Testament, but the five bookes of Moses: but seeing the Sadduces out of Moses, had made the objection against the resurrection; it was fit|test also out of Moses to confute them. Perer:

QUEST. XIV. How God is said here to descend.

Vers. 8. THerefore I am come downe to deliver them. 1. As before, their crie is said to ascend unto God, chap. 2.13. so God here descendeth unto them, as being moved unto pity by their grievous crie and complaint: Borrh. 2. Yet God properly neither ascendeth, nor descendeth, but this is spoken ac|cording to our sense; then God is said to descend out of heaven, the seate of his glory, when he sheweth some visible signe of his presence, as here in the firy bush: Piscator. 3. God is said to descend sometime to take revenge, and to shew his judgements, as he is said to descend unto Sodome, Gen. 18. sometime to shew mercy, as here to deliver his people: Simler. 4. Here also some relation is had unto the situation of Egypt, which was a low countrie, and therefore the Lord here is said to cause them to ascend hence. Borrh. 5. And alwayes this is to bee marked, that when God is said to descend, some notable event followeth: when God is said to descend to see the sinnes of Sodome, then that horrible overthrow of the City fol|lowed; and when he came downe to hinder the building of the tower of Babel, the strange confusion of languages was sent upon them: so upon Gods descending here followeth the miraculous deliverance of Israel, and Gods just vengeance upon Egypt. Ferus.

QUEST. XV. In what respect the land of Canaan is called a large country: Hierome.

INto a good land and a large. 1. Palestina in it selfe was no large country. Hierome saith that in length from Dan to Bershebah it was not above 160. miles, and in bredth from Joppe to Bethlehem not above 46. miles. Hecateus Abderita, as Iosephus writeth, describeth Judea to conteine about thirty hundred thousand jugera, that is, akers of fertile ground both in length and breadth and in the whole content. And the furlong or aker is so much ground as a yoke of oxen can plow in one day, which is in length 240. foote, and 120. foote broad: that is, fourescore yards long and forty broad; counting 3. ordinarie foote to a yard. It seemeth then that of it selfe it was no large countrie, not altogether so big as the Kingdome of Naples in Italy: It is therefore called a spacious and large countrie in comparison of the land of Goshen in Egypt, where the Israelites were pent up: and seeing seven nations more populous than the Hebrewes inhabited the land of Canaan, it was abundantly sufficient for them: neither when the people were most increased, did they complaine of want of roome. Perer:

QUEST. XVI. Of the great fruitfulnessse of the land of Canaan.

A Land that floweth with milke and honie. 1. These fruits are named for the rest by the figure called synecdoche, where a part is taken for the whole; the meaning is, that the land abounded with the best fruits. Iun. And these fruits are named which need least labour and travell of the rest. Simler. 2. And concerning the wonderfull fertility of this land the scripture giveth plentifull. testimonie, for first the spies, that were sent to search the land, found it to be very fruitfull as they shewed by the fruit thereof: A land flowing with milke and hony, Numb. 13.28. which is an hyperbolicall speech, that is it abounded. Againe, the land of Canaan is commended, Deut. 8.8. for these foure commodities: for wheat and barly, for fruitful trees, for springes of water, and for mettals: further considering the great number of inhabi|tants, as in Davids time there were numbred 15. hundred thousand fighting men, 1. Chro. 21. which is commonly esteemed but at the fourth part of the inhabitants: for women and aged men, and children all under twenty yeeres are excepted, this countrie being of no greater circuite, was of exceeding great fertility, that was able to nourish so many hundred thousand. 3. Hereunto also forren nations beare wit|nesse.

Hecateus before spoken of, who lived in the time of Alexander the Great, saith, there were in Iudaea thirtie hundred thousand akers of most fruitfull land. Aristeas in the time of Ptolomy Philadelphus King of Egypt giveth this testimony of this land, that it abounded with Olive trees, Vines, and Palme|tree: with all kinde of spicerie, gold and precious stones brought in by the Arabians, with most fruitfull and pleasant fountaines and rivers: and especially hee giveth commendation of Jordan, the plaine me|dowes whereof contained 60. thousand akers of ground, and that it did use to overflow the ground as Nilus: and beside, that unto the great City, meaning Jerusalem) sometime the people flocked out of the parts adjoyning to the number of 60. myriades, that is 600. thousand, whereof every one possessed an 100. akers of ground. Likewise Iosephus, much about our Saviour Christs time, shewed that the fruitfulness of that land still continued, and that all the fields in generall were very fruitfull both of corne and other fruit, being compared with other countries; but the fields of Jericho and Hierusalem, exceeded all the rest, and especially of Jericho, where the Palme trees were so fat, * that they might presse out oyle by trea|ding upon them. Bochardus that lived 300. yeeres since, and spent ten yeeres in the diligent search of that country, after that it came into the possession of the Saracens of his owne knowledge and experience, commendeth it for abundance of corne which groweth in great plenty out of the ground halfe tilled without any dung or compasse; the fields are like unto our gardens full of all sweet herbes, wine, oyle, hony there aboundeth: and he strangely reporteth of a certaine fruit called the apples of Paradise, * which grow like unto a cluster of grapes, an hundred together, and every one of the bignesse of an egge: the leaves of it are as long as a man, and so broad, that two of them will cover a man: the tree lasteth but three yeeres, and then out of the roote thereof springeth another: Conies, Hares, Partridge, Quailes, Deere, are there in great number: and great store of Lions, beares, and other wild beasts: hee himselfe had seene 3. thousand Camels in one heard. 4. Therefore both Strabo lib. 16. and Hierom. are deceived, * which report even the Countrie about Jerusalem, which Iosephus affirmeth to be more fruitfull than the rest, to be dry, and barren, full of rockes and mountaines, and therefore hee understandeth the flowing of it with milke and hony, spiritually. Ex Perer.

QUEST. XVII. Whether the fruitfulness of the land of Canaan doe yet remaine.

NOW this fruitfulness of the land of Canaan, 1. was partly naturall, for it was fruitfull, even when the Canaans did inhabite it, before the Israelites possessed that Country, and it so continued on part after they were expelled thence, and the Saracens surprised it, as it is shewed before. 2. But this fertilitie was much increased by the blessing of God, as the Lord promiseth unto his people if they would feare him and serve him, Levit. 26.4, 5. and specially the extraordinary blessing of God upon the 6. yeere is an evident argument thereof, which did yeeld increase sufficient to serve them for three yeeres, for the seventh yeere the land did rest, and the eight yeere they began to sow, so that they did eat of the fruit untill the 9. yeere, Levit. 25.22. 3. But this blessing of increase and abundance, was after turned into drinesse and barrennesse because of their sinne, as the Lord threatneth, that their heaven should be as iron, and their earth as brasse, Levit. 25.19. And in the time of the Macchabees, the great increase of the sixt yeere was much abated: for their store was soone eaten up, so that they were oppressed with famine, 1. Macchab. 6.53, 54. Perer. And therefore it is no marvell, if the fruitfulness of that land now, being inhabited by the enimies of God, be not answerable to the commendation given unto that Country in former times.

QUEST. XVIII. Whether the Cananites were a peculiar people by themselves.

*IN*to the place of the Cananites. 1. Iunius thinketh that this was the generall name of all those nations which inhabited the land of Canaan, and that the particular and severall kindes of people are named afterward. 2. But though sometime this name be generall unto all the rest, as they are mentioned among the sonnes of Canaan, Gen. 10.15. yet here and in some other places the Cananites are taken for a severall nation from the rest, as Gen. 15.20. there are ten severall kindes of people rehearsed that dwelt in Canaan, of which number the Cananites are reckoned in the eight place. Piscator. 3. And indeed it may diversly appeare that the Cananites were the same whom the Grecians call Phoenicians; as Andreas Masius hath well observed in his learned commentaries upon the booke of Ioshuah: for first the Septuagint in the fifth of Iosuah, for the Cananites reade Phoenicians: and the woman whom our Saviour dispossessed of a Devill, by Matthew is called a Cananitish woman, by Mark a Syrophenician: beside, these Cananites are said to dwell by the sea, Num. 13.30. where the Phoenicians also inhabited: likewise as Homer setteth forth the Phoenicians by their merchandise and traffike by sea, and so consequently their deceit in bargaining, so also the Cananites are noted in scripture for their craft, Hos 12.7. and their marchandise, insomuch, that a merchant is called a Cannanite, as Prov. 31.24. She giveth girdles to the Cananites, or merchants. Perer.

QUEST. XIX. How many nations of the Cananites, and why they were cast out.

The Cananites, the Hittites, and the Amorites, &c. 1. There are here but six nations rehearsed, the Girgashites are omitted: the same number is not alwayes observed; sometime they are all comprehended under the name of the Amorites, Gen. 15.16. sometime of the Hittites, Iosh. 1.4. sometime 3. nations are only numbred for the rest, as the Hevites, Cananites, and Hittites, Exod. 23.28. sometime ten nations are rehearsed, as beside the usuall seven, the Kenites, Kenazites and Kadmonites, Gen. 15. But usually these seven are named, the Hittites, the Girgashites, the Amorites, Cananites, Perizzites, the Hevites and Jebusites, as Deut. 7.1. and so S. Paul testifieth that seven nations were cast out of the land of Canaan, Act. 13.19. 2. The Girgashites are omitted, some thinke because they willingly gave place to the Israelites, as the Hebrewes thinke, and Augustine reported that the countrie people of Africa being asked whence they are, will answer that they were Cananites: they might then depart out of Canaan into Africa: Siml. But the contrary appeareth, Iosh. 11.20. that all the Cananites were hardned, saving of the Gibeonites: It is more like that they were not a nation of any great power, and therefore are not reckoned here by themselves, but counted among the rest. 3. Now in that God promiseth unto the Israelites their Country, beside that the Lord may freely dispose of the earth being the supreme Lord thereof, these Cananites were of the posterity of Cham, and so under the curse; and beside, because of their sinnes, wherein they continued without repentance, they deserved justly to be deprived of their Countrie. Ferus.

QUEST. XX. What made Moses so unwilling to take this calling upon him.

Vers. 11. Who am I, that I should goe unto Pharaoh? 1. Moses doth not of diffidence or disobeidience refuse, but of humility and modesty excuseth himselfe: as Esay saith, hee was a man of polluted lips, Isa. 6.5. and Ieremie, that he was a child, Ier. 1 6. Simler. And thus by making himselfe unable and unsufficient, the Lord enableth him. Pellican. 2. Moses excuseth himselfe both by the unfitnessse of his person, and the greatnesse and difficulty of the worke: Iun. And hee knew that both he was odious to Pharaoh, and all the Egyptians, as also not well accepted of his brethren, as appeared by that unthankfull Hebrew that upbraided him, in whom was discovered the minde and affection of the rest. Simler. 3. But this is to bee marvelled at, that Moses being so couragious and forward in Egypt in slaying of the Egyptian, should now bee so unwilling: wherein the like thing might befall him, which was seene in Peter, who offered himselfe to suffer much for Christ untill the time came: so Moses might then of a forward spirit put forth himselfe having not yet weighed the weightinesse of the calling, which was an act of his faith, yet mixed with some humane infirmitie. Simler.

QUEST. XXI. What signe it was that the Lord promised to Moses.

Vers. 12. THis shall bee a token unto thee that I have sent thee, &c. The most here doe understand this signe and token, to bee that which followed afterward, that they should serve God in that mountaine, as the Lord gave Hezekiah a signe of deliverance which came to passe afterward, that two yeeres they should eat of the fruit of the earth that sprang of themselves, and the third yeere they should sow and reape, 2. King. 19.29. which things were fulfilled afterward: Simler. And the reason is, because that which God promiseth, nothing can hinder and certainly shall bee accomplished, and therefore the signes which are to come, doe helpe to confirme the faith. Pellican.

Contra. But this seemeth not to bee the sense. 1. Because of the perfect distinction athnah comming betweene, which breaketh off the first clause of the sentence from the latter part. 2. That instance given of the signe to Hezekiah proveth it not: for at that time by reason of the invasion of the enemies, which had invaded the Country by the space of two yeeres, they lived of such things by the extraordinary blessing of God as the earth brought forth of it selfe: Iun. and therefore that signe was in part fulfilled already. 3. It is true, that whatsoever God promiseth, cannot be hindred: but such promises have need of a great faith to apprehend them: but signes doe serve to confirme faith, not for faith to worke upon: for signes are visible to the sense, but faith is of things that are not seene: signes then are rather the causes and helps of faith, than the object. 4. Yet it is not denied, but that such signes as had relation to the Messiah, and were accomplished in him, were effectually, though not present, because in Christ all the promises of God are yea and Amen; such was that signe which the Prophet giveth to Ahaz, Isai. 7.2. Some therefore doe thinke that this signe is referred to the vision going before, of the fire burning in the bush: Iun. with some Hebrewes. 3. And both these clauses may be joyned together: that God confirmeth Moses both by that signe present: as also assureth him of the deliverance of the people, by shewing the fruit and effect thereof, that being delivered out of Egypt they shall serve God in that place to this purpose: Osiander. It may be also a commandement, that being delivered in token of their thankfulness, they should worship God there: Iosephus.

QUEST. XXII. Why Moses enquireth after Gods name.

Vers. 13. IF they say unto me, What is his name. 1. Moses in moving this question doth neither shew his ignorance, as though being polluted with the corruptions of Egypt, hee had forgotten the true God; for seeing those acts of his in Egypt proceeded of faith, as the Apostle sheweth, Heb. 11. in forsaking Pharaohs Court, and joyning himselfe to the people of God; and afterward in his exile, in the giving of his sonnes names, he professeth his faith toward God, naming Eleazar of the helpe of God; no such thing is to bee supposed of Moses. 2. Neither yet, as some thinke, did this proceed of Moses curiosity, as that he not contented with the promises made unto the Fathers, desired to know Gods name, 3. But Moses maketh this request to know Gods name in respect of the Israelites, to satisfie their curiosity, and to winne the more credit to his calling: Simler.

QUEST. XXIII. Of the best reading of these words, I am that I am.

Vers. 14. AND God said unto Moses, Eheje, because I am. These words are read diversly: 1. Some make neither of them a proper name, but reade thus: Ero qui ero, I shall be which shall bee, in the future tense, as Montan. Pagninus. Some reade the first in the future, I shall be; the second in the preterimperfect tense, which was: Piscat. But it is better expressed in the present tense, as it is usuall with the Hebrewes to put one tense for another, as the Septuagint and Latine < in non-Latin alphabet >, which am. 2. Some make them both a proper name, Eheje, & Eheje. Aretius. But it seemeth that the first is only a proper name, as it is taken in the end of the verse: Ehejehath sent me, and that which followeth is the reason of the name, because I am, rather than, which I am, or that I am: sic Iun. Simler.

QUEST. XXIV. What the name is which the Lord here giveth himselfe.

NOW concerning this name Eheje. 1. Neither is it a divers name in effect from the name Iehovah, which the Lord proclaimeth afterward, as thinketh Aquinas:* for they are both derived of the fulture tense of the word Hajah, which signifieth to be: Eugubin: 2. Neither ye• are here two *<◇> e•|*pressed; one of the essence and being of God, Eheje, or Iehovah; the other of Grace, the God of Abraham▪ Isaac and Iacob, as Ferus: for the Lord, v. 15. joyneth them altogether, making bu• <...> of them all. 3. Nor yet doth the Lord here deliver his name never heard of before, and which it *<◇> b•|*fall to utter; as Iosephus: for the name of Iehovah was knowne to Abraham, Gen. 15.7. I am Ieho/vah: and vers. 8. Abraham calleth him Lord Iehovi: therefore this name Iehovah was uttered: as it may appeare also by the corrupt institution of the Heathen, who from the name Iehovah, derived the oblique cases, of Iupiter; Iovis, Iovi, which they ascribed to the principall God. 4. Neither properly hath the Lord any name, for he is incomprehensible, and therefore not to be limited by a name: Dionys*. And names are given to shew the difference of thing•, but God is one: <◇> . Martyr. But here the Lord de|scribeth himselfe, by his everlasting being, who is of himselfe, and giveth being to all other things, which propertie of being is most peculiar unto God (as best shewing what hee is) of all other attributes which are given unto him.

QUEST. XXV. Of the meaning of the name Eheje.

Vers. 19. FOr the meaning of this name Eheje: 1. It signifieth (as the Hebrewes) all the difference of time, both past, present, and to come; as this name i• expounded, w•ich was, which is, and which is to come, Revel. 1.8. So also Gregor. Nazian. Vniversum•d. q•od est, <◇> se complectitur, nec pr••••pium habens nec finem habiturus: He comprehendeth in himselfe whatsoever is, neither having beginning or end. 2. It is as Augustine saith: Nomen incommutabilitatis; A name of unchangeablenesse: for the creatures, which have their dependance of themselves, cannot say, Er•, I s•all be: Simler. 3. It sheweth the perfection of God, that hath his being of himselfe, and not of any other: Ferus. 4. The goodnesse of God, that giveth unto all things their being, Rom. 11.36. Of him, through and for him are all things: as Hierome; Quod esse decuntur, id habuit Dei bonitate do•atum: In that things are said to be, they have it given them by the goodnesse of God: in Epist. ad Ephes cap. 3. 5. It declareth the infinitenesse of God: that God is all in all, 1. Cor. 15.18. as Bernard well noteth: Hoc est •i esse, quòd haec omnia esse: This is unto God to be, to be all these things, as wisdome, goodnesse, righteousness, &c. 6. This name of God maketh a difference betweene the true God, who only is, and the false Gods of the Egyptians, and other heathen that had no being at all: Oleaster. 7. Rabbi Salomon referreth it to the deliverance of these Israelites, that God will bee with them and assist them: but this being a name to continue unto all generations, vers 15. is not to be restrained to this instant. 8. Some referre it to the incarnation of Christ, in which sense the Lord should say, I will be: Simler. 9. This name sheweth both the power of God, that nothing can hinder his everlasting being, and his goodnesse, in promising his continuall presence and assistance with the Church of God: Simler. 10. This name then is the most absolute and peculiar name of God, as shewing his eternitie without either beginning or end, his unchangeable nature, perfection, goodnesse, infinitenesse: Perer. And this name of God was not unheard of among the wiser sort of the Heathen. <...> writeth that this sentence was set u•on the doores of the Egyptian Temples: Ego sum omne, q^od fuit 〈...〉 quod^o futurum est: I am whatsoever was, is, and is to come. And Tha^os Mile^ous being 〈◇〉 what God was, said, Quod semper est, neque principium hab^ons neque finem: That which alwayes 〈◇〉, having neither beginning nor end. Plutarch also writeth, that it was written in the doore of the Temple of Apollo, 〈◇〉, Tis es, Thou art. And Plato in Timaec, saith, Id solum esse quod est prorsus immutabile: That only is said to be which is immutable: but those things which are mutable and changeable, may rather be said not to be, than be. For these and other such divine sentences in Plato, some have thought,* that Plato either had read himselfe the bookes of Moses, or had conferred with some Hebrewes, while he sojourned in Egypt. And this seemeth to be the more probable, because Aristobulus, who flourished in the time of the Macchabees, writing to Ptolemer Philom^otor, saith, that Moses bookes were translated into Greeke before the time of Alexander the Great, and that P^otlhagoras and Plato had received many things from thence. Clearchus also one of Aristotles schollers testifieth, that Aristotle had conference with a certaine Jew a wise and learned man of whom he learned many things. Ex Pererio.

QUEST. XXVI. Of the name of God Iehovah, whether it be ineffable.

Vers 15. Iehovah the God of your fathers, &c. this is my name for ever, &c. 1. The Hebrew Cabalists will have the word gholam being here written without va^o, not to signifie for ever, but rather hid, whence they would gather, that the name of Iehovah is ineffable, and not to be uttered: But beside that not gholam, but ghalum with sh^oerk signifieth hid, the words following unto all ages doe shew, that it must be here read for ever, the latter words expounding the former. Indeed the name Iehovah is ineffable, but in regard of the signification thereof, (for who can declare the essence of God?) not of the letters or syllables. Simler. 2. This name Iehovah signifieth the same with Eheje, being added as more us^oall and better knowne: and it betokeneth two things principally, both the eternity and alwayes being of God, and his cause of being to all other things, both efficienter, formaliter and finaliter; as the efficient cause from whom, the formall, through whom, the finall, for whom all things are. Iun. 3. And this name Iehovah betokeneth Gods power in his goodnesse and truth: the first in being able, the second in being gracious and willing, the third in being constant to fulfill his promises. Borrhaius. 4. This name Iehovah i^o al^oo incommunicable to all other: Elohim is given sometime to Angels, sometime to Judges upon earth. But Iehovah is peculiar to God: and therefore the Messiah is very God, to whom this name is given in Scripture. 5. Beside, some Hebrewes thinke that the Messiah should at his comming reveale and make knowne this name of Iehovah to the world: and so our Saviour commandeth his disciples to baptise else in the name of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost, which name of the Trinitie is comprehended in Iehovah: Simler. The first letter, Iod, they would have to signifie the Father, the second, e the Sonne, the third, being va^o, the holy Ghost, and the second he the humanity of the Sonne. Osian.

Page 34

QUEST. XXVII. Why Moses is bid to gather the Elders together.

Vers. 16. GOe and gather the Elders. 1. The Elders not in age, for such a great number of aged folke, among 600. thousand could not well be gathered together. Simler. But the Elders in office either for government or instruction; which president Moses followeth, Chap. 12.21. and Chap. 19.7. Iun. For although their state was now confused and out of order, which was afterward by Moses reduced to a perfect forme, yet there was a kinde of government among them in Egypt, as may appeare, chap. 5. where officers of their brethren were set over them. Simler. 3. The elders therefore must first be acquainted with the Lords message, both because it was not safe to impart it to the ignorant and unruly multitude, who would have given no great regard: Pellican; as also that the Elders and rulers by their example and perswasion might draw the rest. Ferus.

QUEST. XXVIII. Why they make request but for three dayes journey.

Vers. 18. LEt us goe three dayes journey in the wilderness. 1. In that they went further than three dayes journey, they did Pharaoh no wrong, for they were not his subjects, but he usurped authori|ty over them, and beside they therein followed the Lords direction, that went before them. 2. Yet not|withstanding they dealt not deceitfully with Pharaoh: for it was not necessarie that they should impart their whole councill to their enemies: the truth is not wholly at all times to bee uttered, it may in part bee concealed: as the Lord gave Samuel instruction when he went to anoint David, 1. Sam. 16. Iuniu• 3. The Lord therefore would have them cautelosly and prudently to propound their message: that they would go• but three dayes journey, and into the wilderness, which was in some sort under Pharaohs iulisdiction, that the request being so reasonable, if Pharaoh should deny it, he might be left without excuse. Ferus.

QUEST. XXIX. How the people is said, not to have sacrificed in the wilderness.

THat we may sacrifice unto Iehovah. Yet the Prophet Amos denieth that they sacrificed unto God in the wilderness for the space of 40. yeeres, but carried the tabernacle of Moloch, Amos 4.26. and Act. 7. This then is to be understood, not simply, and absolutely, but in part, that they did not sacrifice unto God, as they ought, but that many of them were Idolaters, and polluted with the superstitions of Egypt: so the Lord denieth, that he required of them, to tread in his Courts, Isay 1.12. or to offer sacrifice, and yet he commanded such things: so he saith, I will have mercie and not sacrifice: that is, not sacrifice alone without mercie. Simler.

QUEST. XXX. How it is said that Pharaoh should not let them goe, no not with a strong hand.

Vers. 19. HE will not let you goe, yea not with a strong hand. 1. The most reade, but with a strong hand: that is, being forced by the mighty hand of God: sic. Lat. Pagnin. Septuag. Simler. Ferus: but then it should be im lo, unlesse, except, not velo, which signifieth neither. 2. Some doe understand this strong hand of the Israelites, that Pharaoh will let them goe, but not with a strong hand, that is, with their armies and forces. 3. Some referre it to Pharaoh, that hee would not let them goe, because by a strong hand, that is by his armies and forces, hee was not able to keepe them still. 4. But the most proper sense and meaning is, that Pharaoh no not with a strong hand (referring it unto God) should let them goe: that is, hee should stand out a great while, notwithstanding the plagues which should be sent upon him: but at the length he should yeeld: So his heart was obstinate during the nine first plagues: but the tenth, when the first borne were slaine, made him to stoope. sic Fagius, Iunius, Piscator.

4. Places of doctrine.

*Vers. 14. I Am that I am, or Eheje, which am: here is proved the unity of the Godhead: that God is but one: for he only is God, Who is, that is, from all eternity, for they are no Gods which were not from the beginning: so the Lord saith, There is not a God besides me, Isay 44.8. He that is, is but one. Where as it is before proved that this was Christ, which appeared in the bush to Moses, and that Christ saith of himselfe, I am, and so it is expounded of Christ, Rev. 1. Which was, which is, and is to come: hence it is also evident that Christ is God, as our Saviour himselfe saith: Ye beleeve in God, beleeve also in me, Ioh. 14. If he were not God; we were not to beleeve in him.

Vers. 18. We pray thee now let us goe: The Lord could if it had pleased him, ^{*} have delivered his people at the first with a mighty hand: but the Lord doth not alwayes shew his immediate power, but worketh by meanes, as here he first sendeth a message to make him more inexcusable if he resisted. Ferus.

5. Places of controversie.

1. Cont. Against the superstitious profession of Anchorists and Heremits.

Vers. 1. Drove the flocke to the backside of the desert: In that we reade, that holy men repaired oft to desert places, as Moses, Elias, Iohn Baptist, yea our Saviour went apart often to pray: this is no warrant for the popish profession of Anchorists and Heremites: for these holy men did but for a time only sequester themselves, the more seriously to be given to prayer and meditation, not leaving and renouncing their callings, as the other superstitious sort doe. Againe, they in time of persecution fled into desert places, therein shewing their humane infirmity, least they might have beene forced by persecution to deny the faith: but these doe place the greatest perfection in this life, in that solitary profession. Simler.

2. Cont. Whether Angels have power to blesse, and their blessing to be craved.

Vers. 2. The Angell of the Lord appeared unto him. Pererius thinketh that this was a ministring or a created Angel, notwithstanding Moses wisheth the good will of him that dwelt in the bush to come upon the head of Ioseph, Deut. 33.16. for (saith hee) the blessings may be desired as well of Angels, as of holy men: as Iacob prayeth that the Angell blesse the children, ^{*} Gen. 48.16. Contra. 1. We desire not, but that Angels, as well as men may instrumentally pronounce the blessings of God, as from him, 〈◇〉 his name, but not originally, and so to be resorted or prayed unto, as the authors and fountaines 〈...〉. 2. It is without example in Scripture, to with any blessing, but from God, as the Apostles 〈...〉 use this salutation in their Epistles, Grace, mercie, and peace from God the Father, and from 〈◇〉 our Iesus Christ. 3. The Angell, whom Iacob speaketh of, in the same place he calleth the God of his fathers. 4. And Moses also calleth him that dwelt in the bush, Iehovah: vers. 12. Blessed of Iehovah be his land.

3. Cont. Against superstitious outward rites and ceremonies.

Vers. 5. Put thy shooes off thy feete: By this usage and ceremonie, Pererius would warrant all these superstitious rites and usages, which are a foote among them in the popish Church: and thus enveyeth against them which condemne them. Quis non Haereticorum nostri temporis rideat amentiam, aut impetatem excretur? who will not either deride the madnesse of the Heretikes of our time or accuse their impietie? Thus these barefoote Friars doe rage, as though they were mad, when their ridiculous toys and fooleries are enveyed against. Concerning this ceremony of baring the feete, it was for the time comely and commendable, during the time of ceremonies, but it is now no more required of us, than other Jewish ceremonies which are abolished: but this hath beene alwayes Sathans craft, to bring men to an outward imitation of ceremonies leaving the substance: for even so among the heathen this custome was continued of going barefoote in sacred actions. Pythagoras gave this rule to his schollers: Nudis pedibus rem sacram facito; With bare feete dispatch the sacred businesse: the Romans had their nudepedalia sacra, their barefoote sacred solemnities. The Lacedaemonians also did worship with bare feete: It is sufficient for us, leaving the ceremony to retaine the thing: to come before the Lord with bare hearts and duely prepared affections: In Augustines time, the contrary ceremony was strictly observed, not to touch the ground with bare or naked feete: of which kinde of curiosity in outward usages hee thus complaineth: I am multis presumptionibus plaena sunt omnia, ut gravius corripitur qui per octavos suos terram nudo pede tetigerit, quam qui mentem vinolenta sepeliet: All things are so full of humane presumptions, that hee is more sharply rebuked, which during his octau^m (•. after baptisme) doth touch the ground with bare feete, then he which drencheth his soule in wine. S. Paul concerning such things giveth this rule, Touch not, cast not, handle not, all which things perish with the using, Colos. 2.21.22. and a little before vers. 17. Which are shadowes of things to come, but the body is in Christ.

4. Cont. Against the holinesse imagined to be in places.

Vers. 5 For the place where thou standest is holy ground. It was holy for this present, because of the apparition and presence of God, but this was no inherent holinesse, annexed continually to the place: but when the cause of this holinesse ceased, the heavenly vision and apparition, the effect also, the holinesse in the ground, was suspended. Bethel was an holy place, when Iacob saw the vision of the ladder there, and so long as the worship of God there continued: but when it began to be defiled with Idolatry, it was no more Bethel, the house of God, but Bethaven, the house of iniquity. The temple of the Jewes was holy, and because of it Jerusalem was called the holy Citie, so long as they continued in the true worship of God: but after they had crucified the Lord of life, both the temple and Citie, as prophane, were destroyed. Herein appeareth the error of former times when such bloody battels were fought for recovering of the Holy land (as it was called) by the evill successe whereof it is evident, that Christians were too much addicted to the holinesse of the place. * Wee deny not but that a reverent respect is to bee had to places, both for the end that we desire to see those places where holy men have lived, to imitate their vertue, and in respect of the use, that such places, as are consecrated to the exercises of religion▪ should not be prophaned, and abused: but to put any religion or holinesse in such places is superstitious. Simlerus.

Page 36

6. Morall observations.

1. Obs. The mutabilitie of the honours of this life.

Vers. 1. When Moses kept the sheepe, &c. Moses which was before a man of authority, brought up delicately in Pharaohs Court, is now become a shepheard, and keepeth the fields, enduring both heat and cold. Such is the mutabilitie and changeable state of this life: that soone may a man bee brought from honour to contempt, from wealth to woe, from fulnesse to want, as is set forth unto us in Iob. Simler. Which should teach every man in his high and flowing estate, to bethinke himselfe of adver|sity, as Iob saith, The thing which I feared is come upon me, Iob. 3.25.

2. Obs. Against vaine curiositie.

Vers. 5. Come not hither. As the Lord inviteth us by faith to draw neere unto him: so he misliketh carnall curiosity: as the people were charged not to come neere mount Sinai to gaze upon God. Marie Magdalene is forbidden to touch Christ, the Apostles are rebuked for gazing up into heaven, Acts 1. We are hereby taught not curiously to search into the secrets of God: but that wee understand according to sobrietie, Rom. 12.3. Simler.

3. Obs. Gods children, notwithstanding their afflictions, are not forsaken.

Vers. 7. I Have surely scene the trouble of my people, &c. The Lord seeth and taketh knowledge of the troubles and afflictions of his people: and notwithstanding these their grievous sufferings, they are the people of God still: Affliction therefore doth not separate us from God, or make him un|mindfull of his children: Pellican. Nay, it is an argument rather that God loveth us, and that wee are his children when he layeth his fatherly correction upon us: as the Apostle saith, If yee be without correction, then are ye bastards, and not sonnes, Heb. 12.8.

4. Obs. Against the ambitious aspiring unto offices.

Vers. 11. Who am I that I should goe unto Pharaoh? Moses modesty in disabling himselfe, and declining this honourable calling, convinceth them of vaine ambition in these dayes, who farre unlike Moses, being unapt and unfit, for their gifts, yet aspire unto great places by favour, and indirect meanes: neither yet are they to be commended, which doe on the other side hide their gifts, and will by no meanes consent to be imployed in the publike affaires of the Church: as Ammonius, who when he was to be made a Presbyter, cut off his eare, that hee might bee refused for the maime of his body, and threatned further to cut out his tongue, if they did not desist in their purpose: yet that is not the fault of this age, but the contrary rather, the ambitious hunting after preferments and honours. Simler.

CHAP. IV.

1. The argument and Method.

IN this Chapter is set forth, the confirmation of Moses in his calling, and his obedience thereunto.

The first part is extended to verse 18. where as Moses maketh three severall excuses and exceptions, so he receiveth three confirmations: The first excuse is, that the people will not beleieve, vers. 1. The confirmation followeth by three signes, two of them are presently shewed before his face; the turning of a rod into a Serpent, vers. 6. and making his hand leprous, vers. 6.7. both these signes are shewed, and returne againe to their first nature: then followeth the third signe which is promised, but not presently effected, by turning the water of the river into bloud, vers. 9. The second excuse is by Moses infirmity of speech, v. 10. the confirmation followeth, where the Lord first sheweth his power, v. 11. then promiseth his assistance, vers. 12. The third exception that Moses taketh, is an absolute refusall, as being altogether unfit. To this the Lord replieth: 1. In shewing his displeasure. 2. In promising the assistance of his brother Aaron: where the fitnessse of his assistance is shewed, and his readinesse in meeting him, vers. 14. then the Lord promiseth to be with them both, vers. 15. Afterward the order and distinction of their offices is declared, God will speake to Moses, Moses to Aaron, Aaron to the people, vers. 16. 3. The Rod is given him as a signe, vers. 17.

The obedience is set forth first of Moses to his calling, to vers. 27. then of Aaron, v. 28. with the successe thereof, the beleefe of the people, vers. 31. In Moses obedience and execution, 1. The preparation to his journey is described with his wife and children, to vers. 21. 2. Then the renewing of his charge and commission, to vers. 24. 3. A certaine accident by the way is mentioned, what had like to have befallen Moses for want of his childs circumcision, and how he escaped the danger, to vers. 27.

2. The divers readings.

Vers. 2. He said a staffe. I.V. rather than a rod. B.G.S.L.A.P. the word is matteh, of natah, * because a man leaneth upon his staffe: and a staffe rather is fitter for a shepheard than a rod.

Vers. 8. Nor hearken to the voice and the first signe. I. better than, *the voice of the first signe B.G. cum caeter. as the next verse sheweth, that the voice is to be referred to Moses: If they will not beleieve these two signes, nor hearken to thy voice.

Vers 9. And the waters shall be which thou takest out of the river they shall be turned.* I. V.A.P. shall be is twice repeated in the originall, not once only, as B.G.L.S.

Vers. 10. Hearken to me my Lord. I.V. for me. P. rather than, I pray thee my Lord. L.S. or, Oh Lord.* B.G. Bi, in me, or to me, where hearken, or attend, or some such word must be supplied: so also vers. 13.

Vers. 11. Or him that seeth, or the blinde. B. G. cum caeter. or him that hath his sense, or the blinde.* I. but the word properly signifieth the seeing, as Pikechim is taken, Exod. 23.8. the seeing: and the opposition of the privative here sheweth as much.

Vers. 25. Zipporah tooke a sharpe knife. G.B. better than a stone. B.V.S.A.P. or sharpe stone.* V. zor signifieth a rocke or stone, and that which is sharpe, as Psal. 89.43. it signifieth the sharpnesse of a sword: and it is not like that Moses and his companie were without a knife, being so fit an instrument for a shepheard.

Vers. 28. Then Moses told &c. all the businesse and words of Iehovah for the which hee had sent him.* I.L. or, which he had sent unto him. S. better than to referre it to the Lord, which had sent him. V.B.G.A.P. as vers 30▪ sheweth: And Aaron had told all the words which the Lord had spoken to Moses.

Vers. 31. They did obeisance, and bowed themselves. I. rather than, bowed downe and worshipped.* G.B. cum cater. for shachath signifieth to bow downe properly, but with intent to worship.

3. The explication of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. Whether Moses offended, with charging the people with unbeleefe.

Vers. 1. BVt loe, they will not beleieve me, &c. The Hebrewes thinke that Moses sinned in charging the people with unbeleefe, and therefore he was punished, in that his hand became leprous. But Moses herein did not gesse amisse: for he knew that they were a stiffe-necked people, Ferus: and he had already experience of their unthankfulnesse: Simler. Beside, he considered that he was but base and contemptible, and not of sufficient authority to bee respected: Iun. and the power and tyranny of Pharaoh would keepe them backe from crediting him: Borrh. and they would thinke it unlikely, that God should speake to him whom never man saw: Pellican. 2. But it is more to bee doubted, how Moses saith, that the people would not beleieve, seeing that the Lord had said before, that the people should hearken to his voice, chap.3.18. Some thinke that Moses infirmity here strived with his faith against the word of God: Borrh. Genevens. But it is not like that Moses was so distrustfull or diffident, no• to give credit to Gods word. Other thinke that the Lord speaketh there onely of the Elders, Moses of the people in generall. Some, that Moses meaneth not the people only, but the Egyptians also, that they would not beleieve: Fer•s. Some, that the Lord spake before conditionally: If they hearken to thy voice, then thou and thy elders shall goe to the King of Egypt. But Moses exception rather is here conditionall, and he speaketh by supposition, if the people beleieve not, as the Septuagint: then he desireth to know how he should perswade them; so he doubteth not of the thing, but desireth to be instructed in the manner. Simler.

QUEST. II. What the first signe meaneth of turning the rod into a serpent.

Vers. •HE cast it into the ground, and it was turned into a serpent. 1. Aben Ezra by the rod turned into a serpent understandeth the cruelty and tyranny of Pharaoh; by the serpent turned in|to a ⟨◇⟩, the abating of Pharaohs pride and tyranny, when he suffered the Israelites to depart. 2. Lyrar|nuse expoundeth it of the Hebrewes, who when they were first afflicted, became contemptible as a ser|pent creeping on the ground, and occupied in base and terrene workes: but afterward they obtained li|berty and authority when they were delivered, and so the serpent was turned into the rod. 3. Some re|ferre it to Moses, that he was as a serpent, that is, terrible to Pharaoh, but he was comfortable to the peo|ple of Israel: Simler. 4. Augustine doth by way of allegory apply it to Christ,* hee is the rod turned in|to the serpent: the rod of the Crosse, which seemed base and contemptible unto the Jewes, became the wisdom of the Gentiles. 5. Rupertus another way doth interpret it of Christ: The rod cast upon the ground, was the Sonne of God taking our nature upon him, it became a serpent; so Christ was that serpent hanged on a tree: by the serpent Christs death is signified, because by the serpent death came into the world, and by Christs death the serpent was overcome. 6. Pererius here understandeth by the serpent cast upon the ground, the nature of man corrupted by the temptation of Satan, and resto|red by Christ, as the serpent was changed againe into the rod. 7. Others doe expound it of the judg|ments of God, which before they are shewed in the world, are as a rod not felt, but afterward they are fearefull and terrible even unto the children of God, as Moses fleeth away at the sight of the serpent: Ferus. 8. But the best signification is this: First in generall that these signes are terrible, both to strike a terror in the heart of the Egyptians, as also mystically to shew a difference of the Law, the ministry whereof is fearefull and full of terror, and the Gospell which bringeth comfort, Ferus: as also in particu|lar it sheweth, that the rod of Moses government should be terrible as a serpent to the Egyptians, but as a rod and scepter of upright and lawfull government to the people. Iunius.

QUEST. III. What is signified by the leprosie of Moses hand.

Vers. 6. BEhold his hand was leprous as snow. First, some make the signification of this signe morall: as that the leprous hand of Moses sheweth the workes of the Law, that justifie not: Ferus. 2. Some make the sense thereof mysticall: Augustine in the place before recited, and Rupertus, understand the leprous hand of the Synagogue of the Jewes rejected, that are cast off, as the leprous person was shut out of the hoste; and the hand restored and healed, betokeneth the Church of the Gentiles adopted in stead of the Jewes. Pererius referreth it to Christ, that he being the hand, that is, the power of his Father, by taking our nature upon him, became as it were leprous, that is, deformed and contemptible by his suf|frings and passion, but by his resurrection and ascension his glorie appeared. 3. Some doe rather rest in the historicall sense. Lyranus by the leprous hand understandeth the miserable state of the Hebrewes in the time of their cruell servitude, who in their deliverance received their former liberty. *Theodore*t think|eth the leprosie better to signifie the pollutions of Egypt, wherewith Israel was defiled, who being deli|vered were restored to the true and sincere worship of God. Ferus doth thus interpret it: that Moses at his first sending was an occasion, that the Hebrewes were more cruelly handled, for, say they, Yee have made our savour to stinke before Pharaoh, chap. 5.21. but afterward his ministry and message wrought their joy and deliverance. 4. But because the hand being the instrument of working, betokeneth the mi|nistery and authority of M•ses, the best application is, that God would use a meane instrument to effect his will, Moses in regard of his base and contemptible estate, having lived a long time in exile and banish|ment, seemed as a thing leprous and vile, yet God should in this his service make him a glorious vessell and instrument: sic Iu•iu•. Simlerus. 5. And this signe did both shew in generall, that as the leprosie is on|ly cured by God, so their deliverance was only Gods worke: Ferus: and in particular to admonish Mo/ses that he should not be lifted up in his minde, because of the miracles wrought by his hand, but be humbled with the remembrance of his owne infirmity, the leprosie of his hand. Theodore.

QUEST. IV. What kinde of leprosie Moses hand was stricken with.

AS snow: That is, white as snow, as Iunius: see also Philo and Iosephus. 1. This was the worst kinde of leprosie, called Elephantiasis, because it spotted the skin, and made it looke like to an Elephants: there were of it two kindes: the common and generall leprosie, and a peculiar onely found in Egypt, which was incurable and commeth by contagion of the river Nilus, as Lu•r••ius writeth lib. 6. 2. This white leprosie was of all other the worst, when the body was all over spotted with white markes, full of white scales and scurfe: whereof there were two principall signes; when the white spots did change the haire also white, and were deeper and lower than the skinne, Levi•. 13. 3. With this kinde of incurable leprosie was Miriam stricken, being leprous white as snow, and halfe eaten and consumed therewith, as a child halfe consumed in the mothers wombe: Numb. 12.10. Iunius.

QUEST. V. Whether the third signe of turning the water into bloud were shewed at this time.

Vers 9. IT shall bee turned into bloud. Iosephus thinketh that this signe, as likewise the two other were done in this place: But the truth is▪ as Philonoteth, that the other two were shewed now, the third was done in Egypt, because hee is bid to take of the water of the river, that is, of Nilus: Perer. 2. This miracle seemeth to bee divers from that chap. 7. of turning the waters of the rivers into bloud: for there the waters in the rivers are changed, here the water is taken out of the river; there the waters so continued 7. dayes, but here the water is powred upon the dry land, and so it is like it was soone dried up of the earth, and returneth not into his kinde, as in the two first miracles. And againe, Aaron is said to have done these miracles in the sight of the people, vers. 30. but the waters of the rivers were not yet turned into bloud: therefore in this place those signes are shewed, which should serve principally to confirme Moses calling before the Israelites, which afterward as occasion was offered were done also before Pharaoh. Simler. 3. And this signe of turning water into bloud did signifie that the time was at hand, that God would judge the Egyptians for the death of the infants, whose bloud they had shed in the waters: Lyranus, Simlerus.

QUEST. VI. Whether in these miracles there were a substantiall change.

NOW, here it will be demanded whether these conversions and changes were verily and substantially done, or they so appeared only. 1. But it is not to be doubted of, for the very substance and nature of these things for the time was changed. 1. Because the word and the thing must agree together. Now the Lord saith that the water shall be turned into bloud, therefore it was turned; but the Hebrew phrase is more significant, shall bee into bloud: so the rod was into a serpent, that is, turned or changed. 2. The sense both of the sight and feeling discerned them to be truly changed. 3. Because it is not impossible or hard with God, the creator of the substance, to change the substance. 4. Such were these conversions, as that of water into wine by our Saviour Christ, at the marriage feast, Ioh. 2. which was a true conversion. Simler.

2. And this is one speciall difference, betweene the miracles which are wrought by God, and such wonlders as are wrought by Satan, these are done in truth, the other in illusion; as our Saviour saith, A spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me to have, Luke 24.39. that is, spirits may assume a shape, but a true body Satan cannot counterfeit; as Hierome saith, Signa qua faciebat Moses imitabantur signa Aegyptiorum, sed non erant in veritate; The signes of the Egyptians did counterfeit the signes which Moses did, but they were not in truth, for the rod of Moses devoured the rods of the Egyptians.

QUEST. VII. Whether Moses indeed had an impediment of speech, and what it was.

Vers. 10. I Am not eloquent, &c. but I am slow of speech and slow of tongue. 1. Some thinke that Moses spake thus only of modesty and humility; Borrh. But it appeareth by the Lords answer that hee had some want in his speech. 2. Others judge that Moses thus speaketh by way of comparison, that since God had talked with him (which they define to be three dayes) taking those words simply according to the letter, as they are in the Hebrew, I am not eloquent from yesterday, to yer yesterday) whereas he seemed somewhat before, now hee seeth that his eloquence is nothing: Origen. in cap. 3. Ruperius. But these words yesterday and yer yesterday, doe for the most part signifie indefinitely the time past, as Gen. 31.2. Labans countenance was not toward Iacob, as yesterday and yer yesterday, and so it is taken here, and the rather because these two times are distinguished, I am not eloquent, yesterday and yer yesterday: and that which followeth, no not since thou spakest with thy servant: and beside Moses after this complaineth that hee was of uncircumcised lippes, Chap. 6.12. Hee therefore only at this time seemeth not so to bee. 3. Some thinke that Moses indeed was astonished at this vision, and thereby began to be as speechlesse: Osiander, Pellican. But that infirmity continued afterward as is before shewed, and therefore it was not procured by his present astonishment. 4. Others do thinke that Moses had indeed an impediment of speech, but it was onely in the Egyptian language, which he might have forgotten, in this long time of his exile: Hugo S. Victor. But beside that it is not like that Moses could forget that language, wherein he had beene trained up 40. yeeres, he simply complaineth of his utterance. 5. Therefore it is most like that Mo/ses had some naturall impediment in his speech: and some one or more of these defects: either that hee was a man of few words, not flowing in speech, for so it is in the Hebrew, a man of words, which the Chalde translateth, a man of speech: or that he was not a man of choice words, not eloquent, as the Latine readeth: or that he was of a slow tongue, as the Latine: so it is in the Hebrew, of a heavy tongue, or of bad pronuntiation, as the Septuagint reade, of a small voyce, for he saith that hee was both of an heavie or slow mouth, and of a slow tongue. 6. But that seemeth to be one of the Hebrewes fables, that Moses by this meanes became a man of imperfect speech: that when Pharaoh playing with him had set his crowne upon his head, and he had cast it downe, which one of the Egyptian Priests interpreted to be an ominous signe against Pharaoh and his Kingdome: then to trie the childs innocencie, they put a burning cole to his mouth, by the which the top of his tongue was seared, and so the child thereupon began to stammer in his speech: Perer. 7. Now it pleased God to make choice of such an unlike instrument, one of an im|perfect speech, that God might have all the glory of this worke, and nothing should be ascribed unto man: As for the same cause, our Saviour made choice of his Apostles from simple and unlettered men, to whom he gave the gift of utterance, and of divers languages. Theodoret. 8. But here it will bee objected, that S. Stephen saith of Moses, that he was mighty in words and in deeds, Act. 7.22. * How then could he be im|perfect and defective in speech? To this some answer, that he was mighty in invention and disposition, not in elocution; for so the Greeke word 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, may as well bee referred to the inward conceit of the minde as to the words of the mouth: Simler. But this rather may bee answered: that as S. Paul saith of himselfe, though hee were rude in speech, yet he was not so in knowledge, 2. Cor. 11.6. the power of S. Pauls speech consisted not in eloquence of words, but in the wisdom of the spirit: so Moses though defective in the manner of elocution, yet might speake with gravity and wisdom, and so bee powerfull in words. 9. Wherefore notwithstanding this or what else is objected, the most probable opinion is, that Moses had some naturall impediment of speech, as appeareth both by his owne excuse, by the Lords answer, by the coadjutorship of Aaron his brother, an eloquent man, vers. 14. and because Moses after this saith, he was a man of uncircumcised lips: and whereas he saith here, nor since thou hast spoken to thy servant, his meaning is, that if at this time, when God spake unto him, who was able to take away all impediment of speech, yet his infirmity remained, much more was it like afterward to continue. Iunius.

QUEST. VIII. How God is said to make the deafe and dumbe.

Vers. 11. Who hath made the dumb or the deafe? 1. Wee refuse here the fables of the Hebrewes,* that when Pharaoh had appointed one to kill Moses, he was stricken blind, that he could not see Moses, and Pharaoh became both deafe and dumbe, that though he espied Moses escape, yet hee could not speake to have him stayed: but it is evident by the story, that Moses fled before hee was apprehended. The Lord here speaketh in generall, not of any one dumbe or deafe, but that as hee sendeth these infirmities upon man, so also hee is able to heale them. 2. And although these infirmities are evill in respect of nature, yet God is the author of them, because they are good also in respect of the end, which is to humble man and bring him to repentance, and to set forth the glory of God: as our Saviour saith of the blind man: that his blindness came, that the workes of God might be shewed upon him. Simler.

Page 40

QUEST. IX. How and wherefore the Lord was present with Moses mouth.

Vers. 12. I Will be with thy mouth. 1. Although Moses was no eloquent man, in outward speech, as humane eloquence is accounted: yet there was in him a grave and divine eloquence, such as the Apostles were endued with: the Lord promiseth the assistance of his spirit, and to bee present with his mouth. 2. But the impediment of his tongue, the Lord doth not altogether take away, both that Gods glory and power might appeare, and that Moses should see how needfull the helpe and society of his brother was: neither did Moses pray unto God to heale that infirmity, but only useth it as an argument to decline his calling. Simler.

QUEST. X. Whom Moses meaneth, that he would have sent.

Vers. 13. Send by the hand of him whom thou shouldest send. 1. Lyranus thinketh that Moses meaneth his brother Aaron, who was elder than he, and fitter for his eloquent speech: but no mention was made yet of Aaron, whom Moses knew not to be alive, as may be gathered vers. 18. till the Lord first spake of him and promised hee should assist him. 2. Rabbi Selomo taketh that hee meaneth Iosuah whom God revealed unto him, should be the man, that was to lead Israel into the promised land. But beside that Iosuah is not yet spoken of, this request of Moses would have shewed some emulation, or envy toward Iosuah. 3. Many of the ancient writers, as Iusten Martyr, Tertullian, Cyprian with others thinke, that Moses here speaketh of the Messias, that should be sent into the world: so also Perer. But this seemeth not to be so fit, both for that Moses not being ignorant of the prophesie of Iacob concerning the comming of Shiloh, and how the Lord promised that he would raise up a Prophet like unto him, Deus. 18.18. which is understood of Christ; could not yet expect the comming of the Messiah: and this request for the comming of the Messiah, proceeding of faith, would not have provoked the Lords wrath. Therefore Eugubinus opinion (though Pererius checkt him for it) is not herein to be misliked, that neither would have those places of Scripture, which are understood of the Messiah, to bee referred to others, for that savoureth of Judaisme, nor yet that which is spoken of others to be applied to Christ, which also would bewray curiosity and superstition. 4. Therefore the plaine meaning of Moses is, that whereas God might find out many more fit than himselfe, he would send by their hand, (that is, ministry) so he aimeth not at any one in particular to be sent, but any other whosoever.

QUEST. XI. Whether Moses sinned in his so often refusall, seeing God was angry with him.

Vers. 14. Then Iehovahs wrath was kindled. 1. Neither doe we consent to some Hebrewes that doe aggravate Moses sinne, as distrusting Gods word, and therefore some say hee was punished in being deprived of the Priesthood which was given to Aaron: some in that he was not suffered, to enter into the land of Canaan. Contr. But neither was the first a punishment, for Moses still was the chiefe, and gave Aaron direction: and it was a comfort to Moses to have such a coadjutor: and beside, Aaron was the elder, to whom the priesthood appertained. Neither was Moses offence here the cause why he entred not into the land of Canaan, but his disobedience at the waters of strife: Simler. 2. Neither on the other side is their opinion found,* that doe justifie Moses herein, and commend his humility in refusing so weighty a calling, as Gregorie, who by Pauls example would have us ready to suffer adversities, and by Moses to refuse prosperity. And Hierome commendeth Esas readinesse after his lippes were purified, and Moses unwillingnesse,* being guilty to himselfe of his owne infirmity. Contra. 1. In that God was anlgrie with Moses, it is evident he offended. 2. And as S. Paul was willing to suffer adversity because it was Gods will, the spirit so testified every where of him, that bands and persecution did abide him: so Moses should not have refused this charge, seeing God so often had signified his will unto him. 3. And if Esay did well after the Lord had purged his lippes, being before unwilling, to shew his readinesse: then Moses did not well, who after the Lord had promised to be with his mouth, yet still persisted in his refusall.

3. Thostatus granteth that Moses sinned, yet it was a veniall and small sinne, because wee reade of <◇> punishment that followed. Cajetanus is of the same opinion, and his reason is taken from the phrase here used, The wrath of God was kindled: as when a man is moved suddenly of choller than of set purpose. Contra. In some sense we confesse, that both this and all other of Moses sinnes, and of all the elect are velniall, in respect of Gods mercie in Christ that pardoneth them: but otherwise in it owne nature, neither this nor any other sinne is pardonable: for the wages of sinne is death, Rom. 6.23. in the justice of God. 2. Neither was this sinne of Moses veniall, that is, a light and small sinne, for such sinnes the Lord passeth over in his children: but here he was angry with Moses: If the Lord should bee angry with every small sinne, and oversight of his children, who should abide it? 3. The forbearing of punishment sheweth not the smalnesse of the sinne, but the greatnesse of Gods mercie. 4. Cajetanes observation is false: for the same phrase ichar aph Iehovah, Iehovahs wrath was kindled, is used upon occasion of great sinnes: as when the people murmured, Numb. 11.3. and lusted for quailles, vers. 33. the same words are there put. 4. This then may safely be held,* that although Moses at the first might in humility disable himselfe▪ yet after God had given him satisfaction to all his doubts, upon his foure severall refusals, first, for his owne insufficien|cie, and the greatnesse of the businesse, Chap. 3.11. Secondly, because they might inquire after Gods name, Chap. 3.14. Thirdly, he excuseth himselfe by the incredulity of the people; Lastly, by his owne imperfe|ction of speech: yet after all this, to stand still upon his refusall, sheweth no small infirmitie in Moses: as it may appeare by the effect,* because God was angrie with him: yet Gods anger is not such against his children, as against the wicked: for there he is angry and punisheth, here he is angrie and rebuketh, but withdraweth not his favour: for immediatly the Lord concurreth with Moses desire, and giveth him his brother to be his assistant: Simler. So that Gods anger here is as when the father is angrie with his child, or one friend with another, which notwithstanding is no breach of friendship.

QUEST. XII. Why Aaron is called the Levite.

Vers. 14. Aaron thy brother the Levite. 1. This is not added, because the Priesthood should have bel|onged to Moses, the Leviticall order to Aaron, but that Moses was deprived of that ho|nour for refusing his calling: as Rabbi Salomon: Pellican. 2. But because there might bee other Aa|rons, not of Levie, this is expressed by way of distinction, that Moses might know that the Lord did meane none other Aaron, but his owne naturall brother of Levi: Iun. Simler. 3. And this might bee also a reason thereof, because the Lord purposed to annex the Priesthood to Aaron and his posteritie. Osiander.

QUEST. XIII. How Moses is said to be as God to Aaron.

Vers. 16. THou shalt bee to him in Gods stead: This sheweth, 1. that Moses should bee superior unto Aaron, as his Prince (as the Chalde Paraphrast) and Aaron as his Chancelor: Moses should give him direction from God what to speake: Osiander. 2. By this also Moses authority is signified, by the which as in Gods place he ordained Aaron to be the high Priest. Pellican. 3. Likewise, he is as God, that is, a wise counsellor, and full of Gods spirit, to whom Aaron should resort for counsell: Vatab. Genevens. 4. And as Aaron was Moses spokesman to the people, so Moses should bee Aarons mouth to consult with God, so the Septuagint and Latine read: Thou shalt be for him, in those things which appertaine to God. 5. But Moses in another sense is said to bee Pharaohs God, Exod. 7.1. not only to declare Gods will unto him, but to execute Gods judgements upon him. Genevens.

QUEST. XIV. Whether Moses did well being called of God, in taking his leave of his father in law.

Vers. 18. THerefore Moses went and returned to Iethro. 1. Some doe charge Moses here with an oversight, that he presently dispatched not into Egypt, but first tooke his leave of his father in law: for Iacob went away without Labans privity, and S. Paul saith that hee did not consult with flesh and blood after he was called, Galath. 1. 2. Contra: these examples are altogether unlike: for Laban was unfriendly to Iacob, and he feared he would worke him some displeasure, and Iacob was then at his owne hand, and kept sheepe for himselfe, and beside he had in a manner sold over his daughters to Iacob, and used them as strangers: But Moses had a kinde and loving father in law, he then kept his sheepe as hee covenanted, and he entertained Zipporah still as his daughter: and therefore Moses could not in humanity but take his leave of him. 3. S. Paul consulted not with any for the approbation of his calling, being therefore fully assured, neither doth Moses conferre with Iethro to any such end, but only to performe the office of humanity. Simler. 4. Wherefore the calling of God doth not take away civill duties toward parents and kindred, saving where they are an impediment to our calling, in which case wee are rather to forsake father and mother, than to disobey God. 5. Moses therefore taketh his leave of Iethro, both because he purposed to carry away his wife and children, and for that he had before covenanted to stay with Iethro, chap. 2.21. Ferus.

QUEST. XV. Why Moses concealed from Iethro, the principall end of his going.

LEt me goe and returne to my brethren. 1. Moses concealeth from his father in law the principall cause of his journey, which was the calling of God, both for that he sought Gods glorie and not his owne. Ferus: lest he should have seemed to boast of his visions: Osiander; and he doth keepe it secret of modesty, least he might be thought to be a vaine man in telling such incredible things. 2. In saying he went to see whether his brethren were alive, and to visite them he dissembleth not, though he went to doe more▪ and it is evident by taking his wife and children with him, that Iethro knew hee purposed not only to visite them, but to stay there: so that it seemeth likely, that Moses imparted so much of his purpose concerning his stay there: Simler. and in generall also, that he went for the comfort and profit of his brethren, as Iosepus, but in particular he kept secret the end of his going. 3. Iethro being a good man would not hinder so charitable a worke, though he had speciall use of him: Ferus: especially having such experience of the fidelitie and wisdom of Moses, that without great cause, he knew he would not desire to depart from him. Simler.

QUEST. XVI. Whether God spake to Moses in Midian beside that vision in Horeb.

Vers. 19. AND Iehovah said to Moses. 1. Some thinke that this sentence is transposed, and that God thus spake unto Moses, before he had moved his father in law: Genevens. Pellican. But although such transposing of the order be usuall in Scriptures, yet heere it need not to bee admitted: for God might often appeare to Moses to confirme him: Iun. and this was said in Midian, the other vision was in Horeb: the distinction of the place sheweth them to be divers apparitions: Simler. 2. The Lord to encourage Moses, taketh away all doubts, and telleth him that all which sought his life, as well Pharaoh as the pursuers of the blood of the slaine, were dead: Iun. And thus much Moses might impart also to his father in law, that he might be more willing to let them goe. Simler.

QUEST. XVII. Of Moses wife and children, and of his provision for his journey.

Vers. 20. THEN Moses tooke his wife and his sonnes, and put them on an asse. 1. Here mention is made of Moses children in the plurall, whereas onely Gershom is spoken of before, chap. 2. Pellican. But Eleazar also was now borne, which is the child that Zipporah afterward circumcised: the story therefore of the birth of both his children must bee supplied out of the 18. chapter. 2. Moses substance was not great, nor yet his companie, that one asse could suffice to carry his wife and children: it seemeth that his abilitie was not such as to provide Camels: thus the Lord would use weake instruments. Moses commeth not with power, honour and riches to deliver Israel, but in the name of God: as the Prophet Zacharie prophesieth of Christ: Behold thy King commeth, &c. poore, and riding upon an asse. 3. Moses taketh his wife with him,* as the Apostles carried about their wives, 1. Cor. 9.5. because men are to forsake father and mother to cleave to their wives: Smilerus: and Moses would have them also joyned to the people of God: Ferus. 4. Yet at this time Moses wife and children went not forward into Egypt, but by reason of that which fell out by the way about Moses schilde, his wife being thereby offended, Moses sent them backe unto his father in law, who bringeth them unto him, Exod. 18. Iunius.

QUEST. XVIII. Why Moses staffe is called the rod of God.

Vers. 20. MOses tooke the rod of God in his hand. 1. It is called the rod of God, not as the Hebrewes imagine, because it was foure square, the foure letters of the name of God Iehovah being written upon it, or because it grew in Iethros orchard, and none could pull it up but Moses; or because it was sent from heaven: but it was so called, because the Lord commanded Mose to take it in his hand, Pererius: and for that thereby the Lord would have Moses to worke miracles, Iunius: yet not by any vertue in the rod, but by the power of God: Pellican. 2. It was also called Aarons rod, because he was the minister, but God was the author and worker of the miracles: Simler. This rod also was a signe of the divine authority of Moses, like as Magistrates have their ensignes of office carried before them: Pellic. 3. Thus it pleased God who could have wrought by wonders without any visible signes, that Moses should use the rod, for the more visible demonstration of the power of God: yet the Lord useth such meanes which have no power of themselves, or likelihood to effect that which is wrought: as Naaman was bid to wash himselfe in Jordan: our Saviour used spittle and clay to anoint the eyes of the blind: David goeth with a staffe against Goliath. And this the Lord doth that the worke should not be ascribed to the meanes: Simler. 4. And hereby also the high spirit and pride of Pharaoh might bee abated and confounded, when hee saw so great workes to bee wrought by the contemptible staffe of a shepheard: Simlerus.

QUEST. XIX. How God is said to harden Pharaohs heart.

Vers. 21. I Will harden his heart. 1. Some thinke that God is said to harden the heart, when he deferreth his punishments, and so men abusing Gods patience and long suffering are hardened:

but seeing the hardning of mans heart is one of the greatest punishments, that can fall upon man, whereas Gods long suffering proceedeth from his mercie, and is a great benefit; these two cannot agree together, that the same thing should be both a punishment and a benefit. Simlerus.

2. Neither doth it satisfie that God hardeneth by permission and sufferance: for if God permitteth ei|ther unwillingly, then should he not be omnipotent, or willingly, so should he be accessarie to sinne: if permission therefore be opposed to Gods will, as though hee should suffer only things to be done, and bee as an idle beholder, and no doer, this distinction cannot be admitted. If permitting be taken for not ap|proving or not assisting with his grace, so the Lord may be said to permit: but then he rather permitteth or suffereth the heart to be hardened, than hardeneth it. Simlerus.

3, Wherefore thus the Lord may bee said to harden the heart: 1. By the deni|all or withholding his grace, as he tooke his good spirit from Saul: and the Lord is not debtor to any, hee may give his grace to whom it pleaseth him, and withhold it at his pleasure. 2. God may leave a man to himselfe, and give him over unto Satan, who worketh upon the corruption of mans owne heart, and hardeneth it: so an evill and a lying spirit was sent upon Ahabs Prophets. 3. The generall power of moving and working is of God, but the evilnesse of the action is of mans owne corruption: as when the Rider doth cause a lame horse to goe, hee is the cause of his going, but the horses evill and uneven going proceedeth of his owne lamenesse: Simler. And like as a good workman using a bad instrument, so the Lord worketh by the wicked: Borrh. 4. The occasions whereby the heart is hardened through mans corruption, doe proceed oft from God, as the miracles which Moses wrought, whereby Pharaoh became more indurate and ob|stinate. 5. God is to be considered here as a just Judge, who punisheth mens former sinnes by their hard|nesse of heart, as here Pharaoh is judged: so the hardning of the heart is of God, as it is poena, a penalty, not as it is culpa, faulty: Ferus. 6. Likewise God is said to harden the heart, dispositivè, because he dispo|seth of it, and turneth it to such end as shall bee most to his glorie: as the Lord ordered the envie of Io|sephs brethren in selling their brother, and the treachery of Iudas in betraying his Master, to the good of his Church and his owne glorie: Simler. So some things are done in the world simply and absolutely, ac|cording to the will of God, and by it, all such good actions. Some things are not done absolutely accor|ding to Gods will, but in respect of a further end, for the which the Lord permitteth them to be done, as Gods will was that Pharaohs heart should be hardened, that God might declare his power in him, Exod. 16. Borrh. 7. Thus God hardeneth not onely by permitting, but in withdrawing his grace, and orde|ring and disposing even mens evill actions to the end which the Lord hath propounded to himselfe, and in using the meanes which the corruption of mans heart apprehendeth, and perverteth to his destruction: so God is the cause of the action of hardning, but man is the cause of the sinne: Iunius. So God hardeneth, * Satan hardeneth, and man hardeneth his owne heart: man as the instrument, Satan as the worker and efficient, God as the supreme Judge overruling every action, and disposing of it unto good: Borrh. As in a ship, man is as the mariner that worketh, the evill spirit as the winde and weather that tempteth and moveth, God as the sternes man that directeth and guideth all. So Augustines resolution is: Deus vo|luntatem ejus, proprio suo vitio malum, in hoc peccatum judicio suo justo & occulto inclinavit: God by his just and secret judgement inclined his will, being evill by his owne corruption, into this sinne. De liber. arbit. cap. 20. Hee there speaketh of Shemei, whom David saith, God bid curse him: the like may bee said of Pharaoh, who is properly said to have hardened his owne heart, Exod. 8.15. as the next and immediate worker of it: but God hardened it, concurring as a just Judge in punishing Pharaohs sinne, by obstinacie and hardnesse of heart. See more of this question before, chap. 1. doct. 1.

QUEST. XX. How Israel is called the first borne sonne of God.

Vers. 22. ISrael is my sonne even my first borne. 1. Israel is called the Lords first borne, not only in respect of eternall election: as Pellican: for the election of God doth not hinder terrene government, they might be eternally elected of God and yet bee Pharaohs servants still. 2. Neither is this spoken only comparatively, because they were the first nation that publicly professed the worship of God, and had the prioritie of the Gentiles, who were as the younger brother. Ferus. 3. Nor yet is it spoken only by way of similitude, that they were as deere unto God as the first borne. Piscator. 4. But they were the first borne people by a peculiar election, whereby the Lord had set them apart from all other people to whom he would give his lawes, and therefore Pharaoh was not to keepe them in servitude, belonging to another Lord: Simler. Therefore to them did belong the right and preeminence of the first borne, as dignity, authority. Borrh. And they were beloved of God in the right of the Messiah the first borne of all creatures, and the only begotten sonne of God: Iun. who was to bee borne of that nation according to the flesh. Osiander. 5. Therefore God will slay the first borne of Egypt both of man and beast, because of the injurie offered to his first borne; and this being the last judgement, which was shewed upon Egypt, it is like, that God revealed to Moses aforehand all those severall plagues, which afterward were sent upon Pharaoh.

QUEST. XXI. Who smot Moses in the Iune, and how.

Vers. 24. THE Lord met him, and would have killed him. 1. In the Hebrew it is said, Iehovah met him, the Latin, and Septuagint read, the Angell of Iehovah; giving the sense rather than the word: for Iehovah by his Angell smote Moses: the Angels of God are found in Scripture to bee the Ministers of Gods judgements: Pellican, Iun. 2. Tertullian thinketh that Moses sonne that was uncircumcised was in danger, rather than Moses himselfe: but that is not like, for then Moses himselfe rather if he had beene in case, would have circumcised the child rather than his wife. 3. For the manner of punishment inflicted upon Moses: that is a ridiculous fable of R. Salomon, that the Angell appeared in likenesse of a Dragon, and swallowed up Moses past the middle to the place of his circumcision, and then when Zipporah in haste had circumcised the child hee let him goe againe. Theodoret thinketh that the Angell appeared with a drawne sword, threatening Moses: but Moses was more than threatned, for hee was so weake that hee was not able to circumcise his child: therefore the common opinion of the Hebrewes is, that Moses was smitten with some sudden disease, as may appeare in that his wife was faine to cut off her sonnes foreskinne: and yet it is like that whether the Angell appeared in a visible humane shape, or otherwise came upon Moses, thar by some visible and evident signe hee and his wife perceived that it was for neglect of circumcision. Iun.

QUEST. XXII. For what sinne the Lord would have killed Moses.

NOW concerning the cause, why the Lord laid his heavy hand upon Moses. 1. It was neither because he carried his wife and children with him, which were a cumber unto him and therefore hee sent them bake, as Augustine, and Eusebius Emisenus:* for seeing Moses had no speciall commandement to leave them behind, he was therein to follow the common order, and duty required in matrimony, to take care of his wife and children. Simler. And he could not have left his wife behinde without offence to his father in law, who might have thought hee had neglected her, and would take him another wife in Egypt. 2. Neither was his feare the cause, because he was afraid to goe unto Pharaoh, as Theodoret, for he was now in his journey, and was resolved to goe forward. 3. Therefore the cause indeed was, for the neglect of the circumcision of the child, as David Kimhi, Rupertus, Thostatus with others: Ex Pereri: as it may appeare, because that as soone as the child was circumcised Moses was presently delivered from the danger: therefore some Hebrewes conjecture, that God punished him for making so long stay in the •ane, is frivolous and without ground. Simler.

QUEST. XXIII. Whether the Israelites transgressed in omitting circumcision 40. yeeres in the wilderness.

BUt it will be further questioned why the Lord was angry with Moses for deferring of circumcision, and ye• he did tolerate it in the Israelites, which were not circumcised in the desert by the space of forty yeeres, as is evident, Iosh. 5. Some therefore thinke, that the Israelites were dispensed with for being not circumcised in the wilderness, because it was not so needfull in that place seeing the people were separated from all other nations, and lived apart by themselves, and therefore circumcision was not so ne|cessarie there, the speciall end whereof was to distinguish the Israelites from all other people: but when they came over Jordane among other nations, then they received circumcision the badge or cognisance of their profession: so Theodore, Damascen. Contra. But this was not the principall end of circumci|sion, to make difference betweene the Israelites and other people: the chiefe scope thereof was to bee a seale of the covenant betweene God and his people, and therefore ought not in any place to have beene neglected.

Page 44

2. Some therefore excuse this omission of circumcision in the desert, by the continuall journeying of the Israelites, they were still to follow the direction of the cloud, whether by day or night: but they could not travell immediatly upon their circumcision. Perer. Who further addeth, that if it had beene a fault in them, Moses would not have suffered such a great breach of the law, seeing the man that gathel|red stickes upon the Sabbath was punished. Contra. 1. The continuall travell of the Israelites could not bee the chiefe or onely cause of such omission, seeing they stayed many yeeres in one place, as in Kadesh barnea, Deut. 1.46. and when they were circumcised in Gilgal, they were presently also to goe forward in expedition against their enemies, and yet that was no hinderance or let to their circumcision. 2. There is great difference betweene the transgression of one man which might easily bee censured without dan|ger, and the sinne of all the people, which could hardly bee redressed, for Moses knew them to be a stif|ne•ked and rebellious people.

3. Therefore it cannot be otherwise held, but that the omission of circumcision in the people was a transgression of the covenant: and that the people did of contempt and disobedience omit it, beside the excuse of their removing campe, as Augustine well judgeth, quaest. 6. in Ioshuah, for the people conti|nually murmured, and wished to be in Egypt, and thought to returne thither, and many of them were Idolaters; therefore it was no marvell, if they casting off the yoke of obedience, and despising the cove|nant of God, regarded not likewise the signe thereof: Iun. Beside, it must be considered that the com|monwealth and Church were not then settled, neither the passeover, nor sacrifices, or other rites, were then observed duly according to the order prescribed; and therefore Moses saith, that when they were come into their inheritance, Yee shall not doe after all these things, which we doe here this day, that is, every man whatsoever seemeth good in his owne eyes, Deut. 12.8.

QUEST. XXIV. What moved Moses to deferre the circumcision of his child.

IT is further doubted what should bee the cause why Moses deferred the circumcision of his child. 1. The cause whereof some impute unto Moses father in law, that Moses did forbear the circumci|sion, lest it might have beene an offence unto him, Tharg. Hieros. but the stay seemeth rather to have beene in his wife, as shall afterward appeare. 2. Aben Ezra thinketh that the child was not eight dayes old, when Moses set forward in his journey, and that he would not circumcise him by the way, because he made haste. Contra. But it is not like, if Moses having beene married forty yeeres, had a child so young, that he would have adventured to travell with his wife, having beene so lately delivered; neither if cir|cumcision had beene deferred because of Gods service, would the Lord have beene so angry with him. Simler. 3 Some judge, that Moses might thinke circumcision not to bee so necessary in a strange land, especially Moses wife being a stranger, and so his sonnes Israelites but by the halfe bloud. Ferus. But Mo|ses could not be so ignorant; for as he was perswaded, that his seed was within the covenant, so he knew that the signe of the covenant belonged unto him. 4. Wherefore the most probable conjecture is, that after Moses had circumcised one of his children, his wife tooke such offence at it, that to content her he did forbear to circumcise the other, and this may appeare by the circumstance of the text, because shee with such indignation calleth Moses a bloody husband, shewing her discontent and dislike of circumci|sion: Iur. Piscator, Pellican, Simler.

QUEST. XXV. Why the Lord correcteth Moses by the way, and not before.

NOW •he reasons why the Lord did thus urge Moses by the way, and not before, may bee these: 1. Because Moses had now taken a publike office and charge upon him, and he was unfit to be a rull•r in the Church of God that could not order his owne familie, as the Apostle sheweth, 1. Tim. 3.5. th•refore it would have beene a great offence and scandall unto all Israel, if Moses the minister of circum|cision should have any uncircumcised in his house. Iun. Perer. 2. While Moses was under his father in law, he was not at his owne liberty, as now, and therefore it is more exactly required of him now than before: Ferus. 3. The Lord doth it also at this time to trie his obedience, whether this correction laid upon him would make him give way and start from his calling. Ferus.

QUEST. XXVI. Whether Zipporah circumcised her sonne with a sharpe knife.

Vers. 25. ANd Zipporah tooke a sharpe knife. 1. Some thinke that circumcision among the Jewes was ministred with no iron instrument, but only of stone, and thinke that Zipporah in this place circumcised her sonne with a sharpe stone, as the Chaldee, Septuagint and Latine read: so Augustine, Bernard with others.* But seeing no such instrument is specially prescribed, Gen. 17. where circumcision is instituted, it seemeth there was no such necessity of using a stone onely. 2. Others doe thinke that it was indifferent to use either a sharpe knife or stone; but in this place they say it was done with a sharpe flint, because the word tzur signifieth a rocke or stone, and Iosh. 5. hee is bid to prepare knives of stone: and this circumcising with a stone did more lively resemble the spirituall circumcision by Christ,* who is the Rocke: so Hugo S. Victor, and Thostatus, and Thomas. Contr. 1. Though the word tzur doe usually signifie a rocke or stone, as Ezech. 3.9. yet in some places it is taken for that which is sharpe, as Psal. 89.44. tzur charbo, the edge of his sword: the same words inverted are used Iosh. 5.2. Charboth tzurim, sharpe knives, which are so called tzurim, because they were in sharpnesse like to a sharpe stone: Piscator: or were sharpned with flints or whetstones. Osiand. 2. And seeing Zipporah was in haste, a sharpe knife, such as they were not without, was readier at hand, than a sharpe stone, which unlesse it had beene prepared of purpose, would not have served that turne: and whence should Iosuah have so many sharpe stones to cir|cumcise above 600. thousand? Iosh. 5. Therefore as Pererius thinketh that the Sichemites because of their number were circumcised with knives and swords, rather than stones, so it is more like so many thousands of Israelites were. 3. And for the correspondencie of the type and the substance, if it had consisted in the likeness of the instrument, Saint Paul speaking so much of circumcision, would not have omitted it. 3. Therefore upon the reasons before alleaged, 1. both because a knife was readier, Zipporah being in haste, and a knife being at hand was a fitter instrument than a stone; Iunius. 2. And it had put the child to more paine, to hackle off his foreskin with a stone; 3. Neither was it possible to finde so many sharpe stones to circumcise 600. thousand, as Ioshuah did; we conclude that Zipporah did this cure with a knife, not with a stone.

QUEST. XXVII. Whether both Moses sonnes or one only were uncircumcised, and upon what occasion.

Vers. 25. And cut away the foreskin of her sonne. 1. Cajetanus thinketh that the singular number is put here for the plurall, and that both Moses sonnes were uncircumcised: because Zipporah at this time calleth Moses a bloody husband, as now first having experience of bloody circumcision: But it is not like that Moses eldest sonne, who might now be toward forty yeeres old, was so long uncircumcised: and whereas before vers. 20. Moses is said to take his sonnes, and here mention is made only of a sonne, the text is against his conjecture: and Zipporah calleth him a bloody husband, because shee was forced to draw her owne childs blood with that cutting, which she was not put to before.

2. Some therefore thinke, that Moses had left one of his sonnes with his father in law as a pledge of his love and sincere affection, so that he had one only child with him: Hugo. But the text also is against this conceit, for Moses tooke both his sonnes with him, vers. 20.

3. Some thinke that Eleazar, Moses youngest sonne, was borne but a little before Moses tooke his journey, and that for haste thereof he deferred his circumcision, Lyranus, Thostatus, Pererius. But if Moses had it in mind to circumcise his child, he would not of purpose have transgressed the law of circumcision, which exactly requireth every male to be circumcised the eight day.

4. Wherefore the more probable conjecture is, that Moses, seeing the circumcision of his first child to have beene so offensively taken, did in gratiam uxoris, to content his wife, forbear: this deferring then of circumcision proceeded rather of his humane infirmity and forgetfulnesse, than of any set or deliberate councill. And this the circumstance of the text will beare, seeing Zipporah as not yet thorowly acquainted with this mystery, doth cast away the foreskin with such indignation: Iunius, Pellican, Piscator.

QUEST. XXVIII. At whose feete Zipporah and what she cast.

Vers. 25. Cast it at his feet, &c. 1. The Septuagint read 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, fell downe at his feete, so also Cajetane: whose meaning is that Zipporah fell downe at the Angels feete, intreating to spare her husband: but so soone as the child was circumcised Moses recovered, and the Angell left him. 2. Rulpertus readeth after the same manner, shee fell downe, thinking that shee was prostrate at Moses feete, intreating him to dismisse her. But Moses rather sent her backe in his owne discretion, unto his father, with her children: it had beene an unwomanly part and not commendable, for the wife to desire to depart from such an husband. Simler. 3. But whereas the Hebrew word tagangh signifieth, she caused it to touch, that is, cast; some say she cast the circumcised foreskin at the feete of the Angell to appease him: so the Chalde Paraphrast, and Tharg. Hierosolymitan: but the words following in the next verse, shew that she cast it at his feete whom she called bloody husband: Perer. 4. Some referre it to the child, that shee cast it at his feete, and Kimhi saith it was an use among the Hebrewes to call the infant circumcised, the spouse or husband. But to what end should Zipporah say thus to a young infant that understood her not? Simler. 5. Therefore she cast it at Moses feete, whom in indignation she calleth bloody husband: Simler. Iun. Perer.

QUEST. XXIX. Why Zipporah calleth Moses husband of blood.

Vers. 26. THou art indeed a bloody husband unto mee. 1. The Septuagint translate, the blood of my sonne, stetit, is stayed: which translation having no ground at all, or colour out of the originall, but Augustine to great businesse, quaest. 11. in Exod. and maketh him flie unto allegories and myste|ries: for it seemeth to make a contrary sense unto the originall, seeing she called Moses a bloody husband, because of shedding of her sonnes blood: it is like then it stayed not. 2. Rabanus thinketh that shee calle|d Moses so, and accuseth him of cruelty, for commanding her to circumcise her child: so also Vata|blus: But seeing shee by this meanes redeemed her husbands life, shee no doubt did not thinke much of her childs circumcision in that behalfe, but thought it well done to save his life. 3. Some thinke, shee by blood meaneth not only this present grie|fe, but other troubles which she was like to endure: as if shee should say, if our journey began with such a hard hap, what is the end like to be? 4. Aben Ezrawill have Zipporah thus to say unto the child, whom they used to call chatan, husband, spouse, because of the joy of circumcision: whom she first calleth husband of blood, because she feared that her husband would dye; but when she saw he was escaped, then she correcteth her speech, and calleth him husband of blood, because of the circumcision: but this name of husband, who se•th not, better to agree to Moses, than to her child? Ex Perer. 5. Wherefore she thus saith unto Moses, calling him husband of blood, both because shee was faine to redeeme him with the blood of her child, and in respect of circumcision it selfe, which she held to be a bloody law being not yet thorowly instructed in these rites: sic Thostatus, Iunius, Ferus: but shee calleth him not man of blood, which name in Scripture is given to cruell and bloody men, but husband of blood.

QUEST. XXX. Whether those words rehearsed againe, were uttered by Zipporah or by Moses the writer.

Vers. 26. BUt shee had said husband of blood because of the circumcision. 1. Piscator, because the word is put in the plurall, circumcisions, thinketh that she so speaketh in respect of the circumci|sion of both her sonnes: but seeing one of them only is here circumcised, and because at this time only Zipporah was put to doe it her selfe, which caused her thus to say, shee so speaketh because of the circum|cision of this child. 2. Some thinke that these are the words of Zipporah, and that shee either qualifieth her former speech, turning her words which she had uttered, of the blood and death of her husband, (for so Aben Ezra taketh them to be spoken to the child, that he was circumcised, with the death and losse of her husband) and after that by this circumcision she perceived her husband to bee recovered, shee applied her speech to circumcision. Iunius in his Analysis (saving that hee holdeth these words to be uttered to Moses, and not to the child) expresseth the same meaning, that Zipporah expoundeth and excuseth her former words, that by blood she understandeth circumcision whereby the young infant, being upon the way, and in an Inne, might bee put in danger. 3. But I rather approve Iunius judgement in his annotat|ions, that these are the words of Moses, rather than of Zipporah, shewing a reason of her speech: for that shee repeated the same words, being uttered with indignation twice, it is not like; especially after that the danger was over, shee had small cause to expostulate with Moses: for then she had shewed that shee had preferred the childe|s health, before the life of her husband: so also Zeiglerus.

QUEST. XXXI. How Zipporah knew that Moses was stricken for the neglect of circumcision.

BUt another question will be here moved, how Zipporah knew that Moses was in danger for neglect of circumcision. 1. Some thinke that the Angel appeared in a visible shape, and both by signes and words threatned Moses because his child was uncircumcised: Cajetan. But to devise words or speech to be said beside Scripture, it is not safe. 2. Some thinke that Moses was put in mind by this sudden sicknesse of his fault, and spake or made signes to his wife to circumcise the child: Aben Ezra, Simler. But the suddennesse, and greatnesse of the sicknesse which made Moses altogether unable to doe it himselfe, may be thought also to have given him small respite, either to bethinke himselfe, or to give notice to his wife. 3. Some thinke that shee had heard before of her husband, how straightly they were injoynd to circumcise their children the eight day: and that of her selfe it came into her minde that they had not done well in omitting the childs circumcision: Osiander. But it seemeth by her words of indignation, that shee had not so reverent an opinion of the necessity of circumcision, as of her selfe to enter into an action so much displeasing unto her. 4. Therefore I consent with Iunius, that (whether the Angell appeared in visible shape, or no, as some thinke; yet) by evident signes, it appeared both to Moses and Zipporah, that Gods wrath came upon him for that cause: the phrase here used, that the Lord, occurrebat ei, came upon him, & dimisit cum, and departed from him, doth shew, that God after some sensible manner assaulted Moses, that they both knew, both from whence that sudden stroke came, and for what cause.

QUEST. XXXII. Who it was that departed from Moses.

Vers. 26. SO he departed from him. 1. Not Zipporah tooke her leave of Moses, and returned to her father, as Lyranus: for beside that the Verbe is put in the Masculine gender in the originall: it is more like that Moses sent Zipporah backe, than that shee first sought it. 2. Nor yet is the meaning that Moses left him, that is, his child new circumcised and sent him backe to his father in law: as Paulus Bur/genesis. It should have beene said then, that Moses left her; which is his wife, rather than him, that is, the infant, that could not shift for himselfe. Perer. 3. And to understand it of the disease, that it left him, is somewhat improper: But it must be referred to the Angell, for he departed now from Moses, that before •an upon him, met him, or assaulted him: sic August. q. 11. in Exod.

QUEST. XXXIII. Of the mysticall application of this story.

NOW for the mysticall application of this story. 1. That of Gregory Nyssen: is somewhat farre fetcht: that Moses married to Zipporah a Midianitish woman sheweth a Christian teacher addicted to Philosophie, which he must circumcise and pare off many error• from, before it can bee admitted in Christianity. 2. So is also that application of Pererius not so fit, that as Moses was chastised because one of his children was uncircumcised, though the other had received circumcision: so it suffiseth not the judgement only to be reformed and circumcised, but the will and affection also must be purged. 3. That of Ferus is more fit: that Christ may be said to be our husband of bloud, by whose bloud we are purged: And Zipporah betokeneth the Church, which by repentance doth circumcise her children to make them acceptable unto God.

QUEST. XXXIV. What manner of faith it was which the people had in beleeving Moses.

Vers. 31. SO the people beleaved. 1. Not all the people whom the Egyptian taskmasters would not suffer to intermit their worke: Simler. but a convenient number of the people gathered together with the Elders: Pellican. 2. These having seene the signes before mentioned, as the Rod turned into a Serpent, Mos•s hand suddenly to become leprous, and to be healed againe, and the water turned into bloud, gave credit unto Moses and Aaron, and beleaved they were sent of God: Osiander. 3. But this seemeth to have beene but a temporarie faith: for a while after they are offended with Moses and Aaron, when their affliction at the first was made more heavy. Simler. 4.

And now they see the effect of Gods promise, that the people should at the first hearken unto them, Chap. 3.18. Borrh.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. The use of true miracles.

Vers. 5. THat they may beleeeve. The end then and use of true miracles is to confirme faith: whatso|ever miracles are wrought to any other end, as to perswade any false doctrine, and to draw away the people from the true worship of God, are false miracles wrought by the operation of Satan, and are not to be regarded, as Moses sheweth, Deut. 13.2. Simler.

2. Doct. Things by their nature noxious and hurtfull, are subdued to the faithfull.

Vers. 4. HE put forth his hand and caught it. By this that this Serpent is turned againe into a Rod, and hath no power to hurt or harme Moses, we see that by the power of God, things by nature hurtfull, yet to the beleeving and faithfull are not noxious, or discommodious. The Lions mouthes were stopped against Daniel, the Viper that leaped upon Pauls hand, forgat her kind. This power and privi|lege floweth from Christ our head, which as it is externally shewed in such miraculous workes, so spiri|tually it is now seene in that the old Serpent, the enemie of mankind, hath no power to hurt any of the members of Christ. Simlerus.

3. Doct. Temporary obedience doth often turne aside a temporary punishment.

Vers. 26. SO he departed from him, &c. Zipporah here not of any devotion, but of necessity, circumcised her sonne, yet it pleased God so to accept of this forced obedience that he spared Moses: so many times a temporary and externall obedience doth turne away a temporall punishment: as Ahabssackcloth put off the punishment threatned, that it came not in his dayes. So the Samaritanes corrupt worship of God delivered them from the Lions, 2. Kings 17. Simler. Piscator. If God be so pleased sometime with outward service, accepting the small beginnings of those that are comming unto him: how much more acceptable unto him is the true spirituell worship?

5. Places of controversie.

1. Cont. Against popish transubstantiation.

Vers. 3. And it was turned into a Serpent. This can give no warrant to the popish transubstantiation, and that imagined conversion of the bread into the body of Christ: for here both the Scrip|ture testifieth, that the Rod was turned into a Serpent, and the sense discerned it: but they can shew nei|ther word for their devised change, and sense also is against it. Simler.

2. Cont. Against the Arrians, that Christ is a true God.

Vers. 16. THou shalt be to him as God. The Arrians most blasphemously abuse this place, making Christ no otherwise God, than Moses is called God. Cont. 1. Not the name Eloh•m only is given un|to Christ, but Iehovah, which is given to no creature. 2. Not only the name of God, but honour, and worship are given unto him, and to no creature beside: Let all the Angels of God worship him, Hebr. 1.6. Simler. 3. Where the word Elohim is given unto men, it is not properly attributed unto them, but by way of comparison with others, as here in respect of Aaron, Moses is so called, as by way of relation unto God, because they are in his stead in earth: but the Godhead and name of God is simply and properly gi|ven unto Christ.

3. Cont. Ecclesiasticall persons subject to the civill magistrat.

FURther, though Aaron be Moses mouth, and speake for him to the people, yet Moses is made his superiour: so though the Priests and Ministers doe declare unto the people the will of God, and the law is to be required at their mouth; yet are they subject to the Civill power, as here Aaron to Moses: Pellican. as the Apostle saith, Let every soule be subject to the higher powers, Rom. 13.1.

4. Cont. Against the baptisme of infants by women.

Vers. 25. AND Zipporah tooke a sharpe knife. This example is alleaged by the Romanists to prove the lawfulness of Baptisme by women in the case of necessity: Bellar. lib. 1. de Bapt. cap. 7. Contra. But this example cannot serve their turne: 1. because the Minister of circumcision in the old Testament is not precisely appointed as the Minister of Baptisme is: for the Levites and Priests were not specially charged by commandement to bee Ministers of circumcision, but that charge did indifferently lie upon the masters of the family, Gen. 17.9. But in the Gospell they are bid to baptise, that are commanded to teach, Mat. 28.20. Piscato. 2. The Romanists lay upon baptisme a necessity of salvation: but here the necessity was not in respect of the infant uncircumcised, but in regard of Moses, and not a necessity of eternall salvation, but of preserving the outward life. Piscator. 3. Zipporah did it in presence, of Moses: by this example they may allow women also to baptise in the presence of the lawfull Minister. Simler. 4. And though it pleased God to remit the temporall punishment, upon this externall obedience, yet this sheweth not, that God did approve this act: as before instance is given of the Samaritanes, who were delivered from the Lions, being but halfe worshippers of God, 2. King. 17. the Lord onely sheweth hereby, that it is pleasing unto him that the externall discipline of the Church should be preserved. Simler. 5. This then being in it selfe an unlawfull act in Zipporah, saving that necessity forced it, and extraordinary: it cannot be drawne to an ordinarie practice, specially where there can bee no such necessity. Iun. 6. This example rather sheweth that baptisme though by an unlawfull Minister, is to be held to bee baptisme, as after Zipporah had circumcised her sonne, he was not circumcised againe, then that such are to be allowed lawfull Ministers Heretikes are not fit Ministers of Baptisme, yet if they keepe the true forme of Baptisme,* the Church useth not to baptise after them: for, as Augustine well saith, That which is given <◇> be said not to be given, although it may be rightly said, not to be rightly given.

5. Cont. That the punishment for the contempt of circumcision was not only temporall, but in Gods justice eternall.

Vers. 24. THE Lord met him, and would have killed him. Bellarmino from hence would prove, that the penalty of the neglect of circumcision was only temporall, and consequently, that circumcision had not to it annexed the promise of remission of sinnes and deliverance from eternall death, as the Sacraments of the new Testament have, lib 2. de effect. sacrament. cap. 17. Resp. 33. ad argum. 1.

Cont. 1. The penalty inflicted for the omission of circumcision is laid upon the party himselfe that is not circumcised, even that person shall be cut off, Gen. 17.4. therefore this example of punishment imposed upon the parent, for the neglect of it in his sonne, is not fitly urged to that end. 2. that law is made against those that willingly neglect circumcision, and so wilfully breake the Lords covenant: but here is no contempt but only negligence and oversight. 3. It followeth not, Moses only should have beene temporally chastised, for this negligence, therefore the neglect of circumcision was onely punished by temporall death: like as God would have killed Aaron with temporall death for consenting to the Idolatry of Israel, Deut. 9.20. Doth it therefore follow, that the punishment of Idolatry was only temporall? God unto his servants remitted in mercie the eternall debt chastising them onely temporally, for their owne amendment and the example of other. 4. But that the contempt of circumcision deserved everlasting death in the justice of God appeareth both by the phrase, that soule shall be cut off from his people, which signifieth a finall perishing from the Church of God, both in this world and in the next, as it is taken, Levit. 20.3 that he which giveth his seed to Moloch shall bee cut off: as also by the reason there given, because hee hath broken the Lords covenant: and cursed is every one which transgresseth any part of the law, Deut. 27.26. And the curse of God is not only temporall, but eternall. 5. Further, that circumcision had annexed to it a promise of grace, and remission of sinnes, the Apostle sheweth, calling circumcision the seale of the righteousness of faith, Rom. 4.11. and the outward circumcision represented the circum[cision] of the heart, whose praise was not of men but of God, Rom. 2.29.

6. Cont. Against the necessity of Baptisme.

NEither can this example of Zipporahs necessary circumcision of her sonne bee fitly alleaged to prove an absolute necessity of baptisme: an hypotheticall, that is, a conditionall necessity depending upon the precept of Christ, wee graunt, that it is necessary, that baptisme both in generall should bee retained in the Church, because Christ hath instituted it; and in particular, that every one should yeeld ready obedience thereunto, as unto Christs ordinance, when it may bee conveniently had: but such a penall necessity as to imagine children dying without baptisme, to bee excluded the kingdome of God, can|not be admitted. 1. This were to tye salvation unto the externall signe, and so to limit the worke of the spirit. 2. Some of the fathers indeed, as Augustine, held such a necessity, but hee made the same ne|cessity of the other Sacrament, upon these words of our Saviour, Ioh. 6.53. Except yee eat the flesh of the

Page 49

Sonne of man, &c. ye have no life in you, &c. Simler. 3. There is not the like necessitie of baptisme now, and of circumcision then, for that was tied to the eight day, so is not baptisme: and the necessitie was not in respect of the infant, but of the parent that neglected it: as the child here was not in danger but Moses himselfe.

6. Morall observations.

1. Observ. That one standeth in need of anothers gifts.

Vers. 14. DOe not I know Aaron thy brother &c. that he shall speake. God could if it had pleased him, have given unto Moses the gift of eloquence & utterance, but he rather joyneth Aaron as assistant unto Moses, not giving all gifts unto one, but so diverslie dispensing and disposing his graces, that one may stand in need of another: even as the members of the bodie cannot say one to another, I have no need of thee, 1 Cor. 12.21. Simler.

2. Observ. Against emulation.

When he seeth thee, he will be glad in his heart. That is, hee shall bee farre from emulation or envie though his younger brother were preferred before him, as Cain envied Abel, Ismael, Isaac, Esau, Iacob. Simler. This teacheth us, that wee should not envie the preferment of others before their equals, and in some sort their elders and superiors: preferment neither commeth from the East nor from the West, or from the South, but it is God who maketh high and low, Psal. 75.6.

3. Observ. Against negligence in receiving the Sacraments.

Vers. 24. HE sought to kill him. We see by this what a great sinne it is before God to neglect the Sacra|ments: if the Lord spared not Moses his faithfull servant, for an oversight onely and negli|gence, how much greater shall their punishment be, that runne into open contempt of the holy mysteries? Ferus. Let men learne then by this example, that they deferre not the baptisme of their children, nor omit the receiving of the Sacraments; for God holdeth this as a wrong done to himselfe, when his ordinance is neglected, contemned or prophaned: for this cause (saith the Apostle) many are weake and sicke among you, and many sleepe, 1 Cor. 11.30.

4. Observ. That masters of families, especially pastors, doe rule well their owne families.

FURther, in that it sufficed not, though Moses himselfe were circumcised, seeing his child which was of his familie and charge was uncircumcised: this is gathered, that it is the dutie of masters of families, specially of Pastors and Ministers, and such as have charge over others, that they see that all their domesti|cals be well ordered and governed: for otherwise God will require it of them; as is evident in the punish|ment of Heli, who being a good man himselfe, yet bare too much with the lewdnesse of his sonnes, Perer. as the Apostle saith, Hee that cannot rule his owne house, how should hee care for the Church of God? 1 Tim. 3.5.

5. Observ. The sword and word must concurre together.

Vers. 27. HE met him in the mount of God and kissed him. Moses the Prince and chiefe Magistrate, and Aaron appointed to be the chiefe Priest, doe each kisse the other, and joyne both the Poli|tike and Ecclesiasticall power together; then the people beleevd: so the Church of God is edified, when the sword and word doe concurre together: as David and Sadok, Ioas and Iehoiadah, Iehosaphat and Ama|riah, Iosias and Hilkiah, the Kings and chiefe Priests did one assist the other, Ferus.

CHAP. V.

1. The Argument and Method.

T His Chapter hath two parts: The first containeth the message which Moses delivered to Pharaoh, vers. 1. with Pharaohs refusall, vers. 2. and their replie from the authori|tie of God, vers. 3. The second sheweth three events of this message: the first is the in|creasing of the peoples servitude commanded by Pharaoh, to vers. 10. and executed by his officers, to vers. 11. The second, the beating of the officers and rulers of the chil|dren of Israel, vers. 14. with their complaint unto Pharaoh, vers. 15.16. with his un|mercifull and ungentle answer, to vers. 19. The third is the expostulating of the offi|cers with Moses and Aaron, to vers. 20. and of Moses with God, to vers. 22, 23.

2. The divers readings.

Vers. 3. The God of the Hebrewes hath met with us. I. P. better than, is called over us. B.A. or hath called us. L.V.S. or, we worship the God of the Hebrew. G. The word nikra is so taken, * 2 Sam. 1.6. and it is here tal|ken in the same sense, as the other nikra with he, chap. 3.18. as it may appeare by the like construction with the preposition ghal.

* Lest he meet us, or fall upon us with the pestilence. I.A.P. better than, lest the pestilence come upon us. L.V.S. or, bring upon us the pestilence. G. for then the preposition should bee superfluous, or, lest hee smite us with. B. but the word phagangh signifieth to run upon, not to smite.

* Vers. 5. And would ye make them leave their burthens? I. It is better read with an interrogation, and so it containeth a reason, why he would not have the people called from their worke: as the Septuagint, following the sense and not the words, let us not therefore cause them to cease, better than to read affirmatively, ye have caused them to cease. A.P. or, doe cause them to cease. B.G. as being confident upon their multitude, and so intending a rebellion: or, how much more if ye give them rest from their worke? L. that is, if they multiplied before being under sore labour, how much more if they take their case? but here these words, how much more, are not in the originall.

*Vers. 9. Let them not regard lying words. I.A.P.L. vaine words. V. S. B. G. but shakar signifieth properly to lie, to deale falsely, as Gen. 21.23.

*Vers. 14. Finish your works, every dayes taske in the day thereof I.A.P. better than, finish your dayes worke, every dayes taske G. for the words are transposed, or, your dayly taskes in their due time. B. the sense, but not the words: or, the works belonging to the day. S. or, fulfill your worke every day. L. here is wanting, of the day.

Vers. 16. The fault is in thy people. I. or, thy people offendeth. P. better than, there is wrong done to thy people. * L.S.B. or, thy people is blamed. G.V. It is better referred to the Egyptians that they were in fault, because they gave them no straw, than to the Israelites: it is not like they would lay the fault upon their brethren.

Vers 19. After he had said, that is, the King. I. better than, after it was said. L.G.B. for the word le•mar; is in the active, or, they saying, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, S. it is referred to the King that so had said, vers. 8.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. Why the Lord so often sent Moses and Aaron.

Vers. 1. Then Moses and Aaron went and said unto Pharaoh, &c. Whereas the Lord might at once have destroyed Pharaoh, and have delivered his people, yet it seemed best unto him by divers and sundrie messages to deale with him: 1. That Gods power might appeare in shewing his wonders. 2. That the Israelites might see the wonderfull care which the Lord had of them. 3. To exercise their patience, being not delivered at the first. 4. And to leave Pharaoh without all excuse, Simler.

QUEST. II. Whether Moses and Aaron went in alone to Pharaoh.

Concerning the number of them that went to Pharaoh: 1. Neither is the conceit of the Hebrewes to be received, that thinke, the Elders, who should have accompanied Moses and Aaron, forbared of feare, and therefore they were not afterward suffered to goe up into Mount Sinah with Moses: for neither did Aaron goe up, and yet presented himselfe with Moses to Pharaoh. 2. Neither is it to be thought with Thostatus and Pererius, that the Elders went not in with Moses: for this had beene directly against Gods commandement, chap. 3.18. 3. Wherefore it is like that the Elders also went in, but Moses and Aaron onely are named as the principall, as vers. 4. Pharaoh in saying, get ye to your burthens, speaketh not to Moses and Aaron onely, but to the other Israelites with them: Iunius, Simlerus.

QUEST. III. Whether Pharaoh were altogether ignorant of God.

Vers. 2. I Know not Iehovah. 1. Paulus Burgens. thinketh that Pharaoh so spake, because the name Iehovah was not knowne to him. But it is not like that Moses would use a strange name of God, which Pharaoh understood not. 2. Thostatus thinketh that hee simplie denied not God, but that he was Iehovah, that is, the ruler and governour of the world, that seeth and beholdeth all things. But this is too curious, and it seemeth that Pharaoh had no good opinion of the Godhead and divine power, 3. Therefore, whereas there is a twofold knowledge of God, the one naturall by the creatures, the other spirituall by the word of God; the first onely sheweth that there is a

God, the other teacheth who that God is, and how to be served; it is like that Pharaoh was not altogether void of the first, which he abused, detracting from the true God, and giving the divine honour unto filthie Idols, but the true God he was utterly igno|rant of, Borrh. 4. So that beside his grosse ignorance, hee in pride of heart contemneth and despiseth the true God: Simler. Hee acknowledgeth the God of the Hebrewes to bee no God, and inferiour to the Idols of Egypt: Perer. and of no such power to command him being King of Egypt: Pellican: and afterwards by plagues and judgements hee is taught to confesse and acknowledge God, Ferus. 5. And there are foure causes that for the most part doe bring men to denie God: either feare, as Peter denied Christ; or grosse ignorance, as the wicked thinketh there is no God, Psal. 10.4. or corruption and wicked|nesse of life, as the foole saith in his heart there is no God, Psal. 14.1. or abundance of prosperitie, which maketh a carnall man thinke that hee is sufficient of himselfe without God: and therefore the Prophet prayeth, that God would not give him too much, Lest I be full and denie thee, Prov. 30. 6. These three last did concur in Pharaoh, his ignorance, wicked life, and abundance of prosperitie, Perer.

QUEST. IV. Why mention is onely made of going three dayes journey.

Vers. 3. LEt us goe three dayes journie into the desert, &c. 1. Some doe mystically apply these three dayes journie as Augustine to the Trinitie. Ferus understandeth it of the purging of our thoughts, words and works, Perer. Of the way of Christians by faith hope and charitie. Borrhaim observeth the like number of three dayes, as chap. 19. when they are bid to sanctifie themselves against the third day. Jonas was three dayes in the belly of the whale, Christ rose the third day. But such mysticall applications are but mens wittie devices. 2. Neither is the conjecture of the Hebrewes sound, that whereas it was not three dayes onely, but three moneths journey unto mount Horeb, where they sacrificed, as appeareth chap. 19. they say a day is taken here for a moneth: for thus Moses request should have beene captious, and full of deceit. 3. Therefore Moses maketh mention onely of three dayes journey, as the Lord comman|ded him, who knew that Pharaoh would not grant so small and reasonable a request, that his inhumanitie might bee made manifest, and so Gods judgements to be just, Thostat. Lyran. 4. And though God pur|posed that Israel should never returne into Egypt againe, yet it was not necessarie, nor convenient, that all the Lords counsell should bee revealed to such a cruell Tyrant: and herein Moses told no untruth, but onely prudently concealed some part as the Lord directed him, Simler.

Page 51

QUEST V. What other things were said and done by Moses before Pharaoh.

COncerning other things said and done by Moses. 1. Neither is it likely that Moses rehearsed unto Pharaoh the benefits, which the Egyptians had received of him, as Iosephus but rather he might make mention of Iosephs worthie acts done in Egypt. 2. Neither is any credit to be given to Artapanus report, alleaged by Eusebius, how Moses caused fire to come out of the earth, that being committed to prison,* his keepers were suddenly slaine, and the gates opened of themselves, and he came into Pharaohs cham|ber without any let: and how certaine Priests for deriding the name Iehovah, which Moses had written in a table, were sudenly stricken dead: it is like, if such memorable things had beene done, Moses would not have omitted them, Perer. Therefore to know the summe of Moses acts, it sufficeth us to have rel|course to the storie here p|nned by himselfe.

QUEST. VI. In what sense Pharaoh saith they were much people.

Vers. 5. BEhold now much people is in the land, and would ye make them leave their burthens? 1. Some re|ferre it to that which was said before, vers. 13. Moses gave this reason of his request, that the people might be dismissed to sacrifice to God, lest he come upon them with the pestilence: and so Pharaoh should answer, that although the pestilence came upon them, he could spare many of them, because they were a great multitude. 2. Some thinke that Pharaoh objecteth to them rebellion, that they being con|fident upon the strength and multitude of the people, did gather them together, and caused them to re|mit their works, intending some mutinie: Vatab. 3. Other doe make this to be the sense, if the people having beene kept under by sore labour, doe so increase, how much more if they had their case? sic Pelli|can, Osiander, Latin. interpret. 4. But it is best read with an interrogation: Seeing they are much people, would you hinder them, and so their works should be intermitted, that were so profitable and of such ad|vantage to Pharaoh? Iun. Simler. This sense is most fitting and agreeable to the text, as may appeare by the scope thereof.

QUEST. VII. Why they used straw in making bricke.

Vers. 7. YE shall give the people no more straw. 1. They used straw to make bricke both to temper the clay therewith, that it might be firmer: Lryan. as also to cover it, and keepe it from parching and chapping by the sunne, as also to burne the bricke with: Simler. 2. There was great use of bricke in Egypt, not onely because they wanted stone, but for that the buildings made of bricke were durable and continued long, as the wall that compassed Athens was made of bricke, and Iupiters temple: Plinl. ib. 35. cap. 14. The same author also reporteth from Epigenes, that there was bricke worke in Babylon of seven hundred yeeres continuance, wherein the observation of the starres were graven: Perer. 3. As for the al|legories which are here devised, as by the strawe to understand evill thoughts, by the clay, corrupt doctrine, by Pharaoh, the devill, I omit them as humane devices.

QUEST. VIII. Whether Moses sinned in expostulating thus with God.

Vers. 22. MOses returned unto the Lord and said, &c. 1. Some (as the Hebrewes) doe altogether blame Moses in expostulating thus with God, and lay upon him an imputation of a grievous sinne, and for this cause they say the Lord would not suffer Moses to enter into the land of Canaan. But if Moses herein had committed so great an offence, the Lord would not have vouchsafed him so gracious an answer. 2. Neither yet is Moses altogether to be excused, as some thinke, that he speaketh not out of his owne sense, but in the peoples: Augustine thinketh, that he uttered not verba indignationis, sed inquisitionis, & orationis, words of indignation, but of inquisition, as desirous to be further instructed. 3. But in that Moses was impatient of delay, and complaineth that the people were not yet delivered, whereas the Lord had before told Moses that Pharaoh would not let them goe at the first, this sheweth Moses for|getfulness, and herein his faith and infirmitie strive together: Simler. Borrh.

QUEST. IX. How the Lord is said to afflict his people.

Vers. 22. WHy hast thou afflicted this people. 1. God is said to afflict his people not onely because he suffered it to be done, for so (as Thostatus reasoneth) God might as well be said to lie, be|cause he permitteth it to be done. 2. Neither onely because the message, which the Lord sent by Mosesto Pharaoh, was the occasion of this persecution, Perer. 3. But, beside that such evils as are punishments in a citie, and the Lord hath not done it? Amos 3.6. The Lord is said to afflict his people, as by whose providence their affliction was sent, and the Lord directeth the same to his glory, the good of his people, and the destruction of his enemies, Simler.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. The beginning of our calling alwayes most difficult.

Vers. 23. Since I came to Pharaoh to speake in thy name, he hath vexed thy people, &c. This people being neere unto their deliverance are more grievously vexed: so the beginning of a mans calling and turning to God is alwayes most difficult, and Satan seeketh by all meanes to supplant them, that are departing from him: so it is said in Ecclesiasticus, chap. 2.1. My sonne, if thou wilt come into the service of God, prepare thy soule to tentation: Ferus, Pererius.

2. Doct. The preaching of the law discovereth and reviveth sinne.

FURther, in that by Moses preaching to Pharaoh, he was thereby more incensed, and his cruelty increas|ed, we see what the preaching of the Law worketh without the Gospell, it reviveth sinne, and disco|vereth that which before lay hid: as the Apostle saith: Sinne tooke occasion by the commandement, and wrought in me all manner of concupiscence, Rom. 7.8. Ferus. not that the law is evill, or properly bringeth orth or causeth sinne, but mans corrupt nature thereby taketh occasion, and rebelleth against the com|mandement, and so sin which before lay hid and secret, is made more manifest and beginneth to shew it selfe: see Rom. 7.12.13.

5. Places of Controversie.

1. Conf. Not Protestants but Papists and Romanists, the raysers of rebellion and plotters of treason.

Vers. 1. Then Moses and Aaron went and said to Pharaoh, &c. thus saith the Lord God of Israel. Pererius here upon giveth this note, that Moses notwithstanding the unjust vexation of his people doth not cause them to rebellion, but goeth in peaceable manner to the King: so farre he collecteth well: then he proceedeth, and very untruly chargeth the Protestants, whom he blasphemously calleth Hereticks, in this manner. Qui specioso quodam obtentu, nescio cujus libertatis & religionis Evangelicae, omnia humana juxta{que} divina jura confundentes ac pervertentes rapinis incendiis{que}, ac caedibus sectam suam fundare, & propagare ac confirmare conati sunt: Who by a goodly pretence of (I know not what) libertie, and the religion of the Gospell, confounding and perverting all humane and divine lawes, endeavour by rapines, burning and slaughter to establish, propagate and confirme their sect. Perer. in cap. 5. disput.

What could be said or devised more maliciously against the profession of the Gospell? * If one word onely be changed, and for Evangelicae, put in Pontificiae: if for the religion of the Gospell he had said the Popish religion, nothing could be uttered more truly: For we call the heaven and earth to witnesse, that we are free from such imputations of re|bellion, as the late dayes of the Marian persecution in England can plentifully testifie, when many hundred Martyrs willingly laid downe their lives, like meeke lambes, and patiently committed their bodies to the fire, not inciting the people to any insurrection or stirring against their Prince. But the Romanists all the dayes of Queene Elizabeth, our late Sovereigne of blessed memorie, tooke a quite contrarie course: they would never suffer her to be at rest: but first attempted a rebellion in the North, after in Ireland, then procured the Spanish nation to enterprise a professed invasion; wherein the Lord shewed himselfe our protector from heaven: not contented herewith, they hatched as cockatrice egges many unnaturall trea|sons against her sacred person: but the Lord preserved his annointed from their wicked conspiracies, and granted her, in despite of them all, to end her dayes in peace. Since which time their heads have beene working, and have disquieted, and endangered the state, first by conspiracie of some Popish Priests, com|bined with some more noble in birth, than in any other condition, or part of true nobilitie. And of late by the desperate plot of some miscreant Gentlemen, Jebusited by that wicked seed and seminarie of Sa|tan, they would have undermined the Parliament house, set the same on fire, and made an end at once, of his sacred Majestie, with all his honourable States and Peeres: more cruell than Caligula, which wished that all the Senators of Rome had but one necke, that he might have stricken it off at once. Now let all men judge whether these be not the men rather which pervert all humane and divine lawes, which with fire and sword would make havocke of all; the very enemies of all pietie and humane societie.

2. Conf. Against the Epicures that denie the divine providence.

Vers. 20. WHy hast thou afflicted this people, &c. This teacheth that afflictions and calamities which are sent upon the people, doe proceed from God, and are governed by his providence, contrary to the wicked opinion of Epicures, who did not acknowledge any divine providence in the world, but ascribed all to fortune and chaunce: like to these, whom the Prophet speaketh against, Who we/re frozen in their dregges, and said in their heart, the Lord will neither doe good nor evill, Zephan. 1.12.

6. Places of Exhortation and morall duties.

1. Observ. The neglect of the service and worship of God procureth plagues.

Vers. 3. LEst he run upon us with the pestilence. The neglect then of the service of God procureth divers plagues, as here Moses feareth lest the people if they should not offer sacrifice and doe service unto God, should be punished: Simler. So the Apostle affirmeth that the Corinthians were chastised, some with sicknesse, some with death, for unreverent receiving of the Lords supper, 1 Cor. 10.30.

2. Observ. Many receive the Gospell joyfully at the first, but after fall away.

Vers. 21. THE Lord looke upon you and judge. At the first this people when Moses brought them a joyfull message of their deliverance, were glad and thankfully received that gladsome tidings, chap. 4.31. But now being more vexed and oppressed than before, and not seeing their present deliverance, they murmure against Moses: Such is the propertie of many in these dayes, that are content to receive the Gospell, as long as it bringeth ease and prosperitie with it, but in time of adversitie they fall away: Ferus; whom our Saviour compareth unto seed sowne in stony ground, which as soone as it riseth, is parched away with the heate of the sunne, Matth. 13.5.

3. Observ. The Gospell falsly challenged to be the cause of Gods judgements.

Vers. 21. YE have put a sword into their hand to slay us. They lay the fault upon Moses and Aaron, and make them the cause of their trouble: So Achab charged the Prophet Elias that he troubled Israel: Thus the heathen Idolaters accused the Christians, as the causes of the plagues and famines that were in the world; as blind superstitious people doe now lay the like imputations upon the Gospell, whereas their superstition and Idolatrie procureth Gods judgements, Simler.

4. Observ. In the time of affliction we must fly unto God by prayer.

Vers. 22. MOses returned to the Lord, &c. By which example wee are taught in all our afflictions and necessities, to have recourse unto God by prayer, as the Apostle prescribeth, If any man be afflicted, let him pray, Iam. 5.13. So the Prophet saith, For my friendship they were my adversaries, but I gave my selfe unto prayer, Psal. 109.4.

5. Observ. Some things fall out in shew contrarie to Gods promises in the beginning to trie our faith.

Vers. 23. AND yet thou hast not delivered thy people. The Lord after he hath made gracious promises to his servants, doth suffer some things contrarie thereunto to fall out for the time; for the triall of their faith and patience: God promiseth unto Abraham to multiplie his seed as the starres of heaven, and yet afterward bid him sacrifice his sonne, in whom the hope of his seed was: So God promised the Israelites prosperous successe against Benjamin, yet at the first they were twice overcome: David was annointed King in Sauls place, yet hee was persecuted of Saul, and driven from his countrie for a while: but at the length, the Lord made good to the full all his promises toward him, Perer.

CHAP. VI.

1. The Argument and method.

T His chapter hath two parts: the first is a declaration or rehearsall of the charge which the Lord giveth unto Moses: which containeth a double commandement or commision: the first to goe unto the Israelites, to promise them deliverance, unto vers. 20. The other unto Pharaoh, to vers. 14.

In the former three things are shewed: 1. The foundation of the peoples deliverance: which consisteth in the power of God, vers. 3. his promises made to the fathers, vers. 4. his compassion upon the afflictions of the people, vers. 6. 2. The promise followeth, partly to deliver them out of bondage, vers. 6.7. partly to bring them into the land of Canaan, vers. 8. 3. The effect is shewed, that the people because they were afflicted hearkened not unto him.

In the other commission, first the Lords commandement is set downe, vers. 11.2. Then Moses reful•••, vers. 12. 4. The renewing of the commandement.

In the second generall part by way of digression is inserted the genealogie of Moses, who came of Levi▪ wherein, first briefly the genealogie of the two elder sonnes of Iacob, Ruben and Simeon, is set downe vers. 14.15. to make a way for Levi. Then the genealogie of Levi is expressed, and of his three sonnes, of Gershon, vers. 17. Merari, vers. 19. of Kothath and of his sonnes, Amram, (of whom came Moses and Aaron. who are specially insisted upon vers. 25. to the end) and of Izzari, vers. 21. and Vzziel, vers. 22.

2. The divers readings.

Vers. 3. I appeard, &c. in the name of God almightie. I.G. in God, shaddai. V. *as an almightie God. B. being their God. S. but the word (name) is fitly supplied, as the other part of the verse sheweth, but in my name Iehovah, &c.

* But in my name Iehovah, was I not knowne. B.G.I.V.A.P. better than, my name Adonai. H. my name 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, Lord. S.

Vers. 7. That I Iehovah bring you out from the burdens of the Egyptians. B. G. cum caeter. rather from being under the burdens. A. that ye be not subject to the burdens. I.

*Vers. 8. Which I did lift up my hand to give it. A. B. H. better than, upon the which I lift up my hand to give it. L. S. P. for upon is not in the text: or, for the which. V. for also is added: or, which with l•ft-up hand I sware to give. I. I sware is inserted.

*Vers. 12. Gave them a commandement, to the children of Israel. V. L. I. or, commanded them to the children of Israel. A. P. better than, concerning the children of Israel. B. the preposition el, signifieth to, or then, gave them a charge to goe to the children of Israel. G. S. to goe, is added.

*Vers. 14. Chenoch and pall•. A.P. rather than, Chanoch. I. for it is hatephpathah, where pathah is assumed to sheva, to helpe to pronounce it, and it is better expressed with e than a, as the Septuag. Hanoch: so also V.L. for it is expressed with the some points with the other Henoch, Gen. 5. and rather than Henoch. S.L.V.B.G. for it is written with cheth, which is rather expressed with ch, than, h.

Chetzron*. I. rather than, Hesron. L. B. or without an aspiration, Esron. S. or Hetzron. V. or Chezron. A P. The first letter is cheth, which is as much as ch: the other tsadi, which is expressed by •z.

Vers. 16. Kehath. I. B. A. P. rather than Caath. L. S. or Cahat. V. or Kahath. G. for it is with sheva, which soundeth e.

*Vers. 18. The yeeres of the life of Kohath I.V.L. cum caeter. rather than, Kahath lived. B. G.

Vers. 25. Pinchas. I.A.P. not Pinhas. V. or, Phinees, L.S. or, Phinehas. G. for the middle letter is cheth ch: but because of the better sound the last is used.

*Vers. 27. These are they that spake to Pharaoh: and in the end of the verse, This is that Moses and Aaron. I. V. L. S. cum caeter. better than, these are that Moses and Aaron which spake. B. G.

Vers. 29. And it was, what day the Lord spake. I. V. A. P. better than, in the day that the Lord spake. B.G.L. for vaichi, it was, is omitted.

3. The explanation of difficult questions.

QUEST. I. Of the divers names which are given unto God in Scripture.

*Vers. 3. I Appeared, &c. by the name of almightie God. Hierome noteth that in the Scripture there are tenne severall names given unto God: 1. Eel, which signifieth strong. 2. Elohim. 3. Elohe, God, derived of the former word Eel, so called because he is mightie and powerfull. 4. Sabaoth, or Tzebaoth, the God of Hostes. 5. Helion, high, as Gen. 14.22. he is called the most high. 6. Eheje, Exod. 3.11. so named of his being. 7. Adonai, Lord. 8. Shaddai, Genes. 17.1. omnipotent, all sufficient; which Aquila translateth strong, mightie. 9. Iah, which is contracted of Iehovah. 10. The last and tenth name is Iehovah.

QUEST. II. Of the divers kinds of names given unto God.

The names which are given unto God are of foure sorts: 1. Some are simply given unto God without respect to any other thing but himselfe, and either these names shew his essence, as Iehovah, or the persons of the Trinitie, as the Father, Sonne, Holy Ghost. 2. Other names have relation to the creature, so he is called the Creator, Lord, Governour, Preserver. 3. Some names include a negation, or absence of some imperfection incident to the creatures, so is God called immortall, immutable. 4. Some names are given from the properties which are essentiall in God, but accidentall in others, as hee is called just, wise, mercifull, gracious, ex Perer.

QUEST. III. Of the excellencie of the name Iehovah.

BUt of all names which are given unto God, none doth more fully expresse unto us what God is then the name Iehovah: first it is derived of hajah, which in piel doth not onely signifie to be, but to give being: which best agreeth unto God, not onely for that he gave being and life unto all things, but giveth being to his promises, and graciously effecteth whatsoever he hath promised to his servants: Simler. 2. The Hebrewes also observe, that the letters of this name of Iehovah, jod, he and van, are called literae flatus & quietis: The letters of breathing and of rest: whereby is signified, that God is the author of breath and life, and that in him onely there is true rest to be found. 3. Some of the Rabbines doe in this name comprehend the Trinitie, for Iehovah, they say, signifieth God begetting or giving essence, and if there be a God begetting, there must bee also a God begotten: and because it is impossible, but that betweene the God begetting and the God begotten there should bee a coeternall and consubstantiall love, therefore in this name is insinuated the holy Spirit the God of love. 4. Hereupon some also thinke that our Saviour alludeth to this name, when he thus saith in his prayer, Father I have manifested thy name unto the men, whom thou gavest me, Ioh. 17.6. that is, hee declared openly the doctrine of the Trinitie, com|manding his Disciples to baptise in the name of the Father, of the Sonne, and of the Holy Ghost: Ex Perer. 5. Beside, whereas some other names of God, as Adonai, Elohim, are communicable unto creatures, as to Angels and men; the name Iehovah is not communicated to any but given onely unto God, Simler.

QUEST. IV. The name Iehovah understood of Christ.

SOME thinke that the name Jesus is derived of Iehovah, shin, being inserted onely to signifie the as|sumption of the humane nature: but the Angell giveth another interpretation of the name Jesus, because Christ should save the people from their sinnes, Matth. 1. so that it is rather derived of Ieshuah,sal|vation, than of Iehovah: Simler. But howsoever it is for the derivation of this name, the signification doth most properly agree unto Christ, who is indeed God Iehovah: for so the Prophets speaking of Christ doe call him Iehovah, as Ierem. 23.61. This is the name whereby they shall call him, Iehovah our righteousnesse. And as now the Lord calleth himselfe Iehovah,because of this powerfull deliverance of the Israe|lites out of the bondage of Egypt: so Christ shewed himselfe Iehovah in delivering of us from the spiri|tuall thralldome of Satan, Borrh.

QUEST. V. Of the right pronuntiation of the name Iehovah.

FURTHER, there is some difference in the pronuntiation of this word Iehovah,which is called tetra|grammaton, because it consisteth of foure letters, he, jod, vah, he, as 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 in Greeke, Deus in Latin have likewise foure letters. Irenaeus doth seeme to call it Iaoth: Isodor, iodiod: Diodorus Siculus saith that the name of the Jewes God was Ia•: lib. 2. cap.5. So also Macrobius lib. 1. Saturnal. cap. 18. Clemens Alexandrinus Iau: lib. 5. Stromat. Theodoret saith that the Samarites pronounce it Iava, the Hebrewes Ia: quast. 15. in Exod. Perer. But the received pronuntiation is Iehovah, as may appeare by the abbre|viation thereof used in Scripture, Iah; Exod. 15.2. Iah is my strength. Hence also it is probable that the Heathen derived the oblique cases of Iupiter, Iovis, Iovi: for from Iehovah,* the word love seemeth to be contracted, which might make Varro also to thinke, Deum Iudaeorum esse Iovem, that love was the God of the Jewes, as *Augustine*alleageth out of Varro.

QUEST. VI. Whether the name Iehovah be ineffable, that is, not to be pronounced.

BUT here will be moved a greater question, why this name Iehovah should be called 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, ineffable, not to be uttered, as the generall custome of the Hebrewes is at this day not to expresse it: 1. We refuse Genebrands opinion, who confidently affirmeth that the word *Iehovah*is neither Iudaicum, nor Christianum, neither a Jewish, nor a Christian word, neither received of the Fathers, nor of the Rabbines, nor yet learned of Christ and his Apostles: to this it may be answered, that the Rabbines followed here|in the received use of the Hebrewes: and whereas the Septuagint in stead of Iehovah read 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, Lord, it is no marvell, if in the new Testament, therein they follow the translation of the Septuagint, being of so great authoritie. 2. Bellarmino, because Hierome for Iehovah readeth here Adonai, contendeth that it ought alwayes to be so read: and that the points or prickes of this word Iehovah, are the same that are in Adonai: which moved Origen also in his Hexapla to read for Iehovah, Adonai. Contra. It is evi|dent that Iehovah and Adonai are two divers words, and therefore not of one pronuntiation, and some|time they concurre together, as Gen. 15.8. Iehovi Adonai: will they here read the same word twice adonai, adonai? That the same prickes doe serve divers words, is not strange nor unusuall: and the Septuagint observe not this rule, for they read not Adonai, but 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉. 3. A third opinion is, that the name Iehovah was of old and former times pronounced, but the right pronuntiation thereof was lost in the Captivitie of Babylon, as likewise the puritie of the Hebrew tongue; Perer. But this is a meere con|jecture, and yet this being admitted, that some alteration of the tongue then happened, yet this sheweth no more that this word Iehovah should not bee pronounced, than other Hebrew words, but that onely the manner of pronuntiation is changed, which thing falleth out in all languages in continuance of time. 4. Others thinke, that Iehovah cannot be pronounced, because the letters, whereof it consisteth, make no perfect sound. 5. But the Hebrewes generally of a superstitions conceit doe forbear from reading or naming Iehovah, even in their Synagogues, in the lecture of the Law, thinking that holy name there|by to be prophaned: and they would prove it by that place, Lev. 24. 6. that he which nameth the name Iehovah should be stoned. Contr. 1. That the name Iehovah may safely be pronounced, it is evident by this place, because the Lord himselfe sheweth a difference betweene his name Iehovah, and other names: which Moses could not have understood, if the Lord had not spoken it. Againe, if it bee not lawfull to be pronounced, neither is it to be written: if the Hebrewes doe the one, why not the other? they them|selves doe allow that the high Priest may pronounce it in their solemne feasts in the Temple, when they deliver that publike blessing, which is prescribed Numb. 6.24. Iehovah blesse thee and keepe thee: it is not therefore simply unlawfull to utter that reverend name. 2. That place alleaged serveth not their turne: for beside that the word nakab signifieth as well to pierce through, and consequently to curse, as to name: it is evident, that the Lord speaketh not of simple pronouncing the name of Iehovah, but of uttering it in contempt and disdaine▪ as there in the next verse before the word Kalal is used, which signi|fieth to curse. 6. Wherefore the conclusion is this, that wee grant the name Iehovah, not in respect of the letters, but of that which is thereby signified, the nature and essence of God, to be ineffable. Againe, it may be so called in some sense, because this reverend name is not communicable to any creature. And thirdly, in that it is not to be prophaned or unreverently used, and upon light occasion, but in grave and weightie matters: any of these wayese we confesse the name Iehovah to bee ineffable, but not in their sense, as though it were impietie at all to pronounce it, and that in the very reading of the Scripture we should forbear to name it, but to pronounce some other word in stead thereof, Simler.

QUEST. VII. How the Lord was not knowne to Abraham, Isaac and Iacob by his name Iehovah.

Vers. 3. But by my name Iehovah was I not knowne unto them. 1. Some thinke that the Lord spake not at all unto Abraham, Isaac & Iacob, by the name Iehovah, but that Moses using that name in wri|ting the storie of Gen. spake according to his time: Osiander. But this cannot be admitted, for then whereas the Lord is brought in saying to Abraham, I am Iehovah, Genes. 15. if the Lord did not there give him|selfe that name, then he should be made to speake otherwise than he did. And againe, whereas Abraham giveth this name to the mountaine, Iehovah ijreh, the Lord will see or provide: Moses should write an un|truth, if that Abraham had not indeed so called it. 2. Some other thinke, that the meaning is, that God had not shewed his power before in working of such wonders and miracles, as he did by the hand of Moses: Paulus Burgens. Rupertus. But beside that the Lord here saith, that he had shewed himselfe unto them by his name Shaddai, that is, omnipotent, and so mightie in workes: it is evident, that as great miracles were wrought before, as the taking up of Enoch, the drowning of the whole world, the burning of Sodom and Gomorrah with fire and brimstone, the turning of Lots wife into a pillar of salt. 3. Some thinke that by this speech is insinuated the great increase of the knowledge of God, which was more fully revealed to Moses, than to Abraham Isaac and Iacob, and afterward was greater in David, and so the neerer they came unto the times of the Messiah: and the Apostles excelled all that went before them in knowledge: sic Gregor. and Gloss. interlinear. But this seemeth not to be the proper meaning, for then it might as well be said to David, that his times compared with Moses, God was not knowne to Moses by his name Iehovah. 4. Others doe thus interpret: that God had not to any of them declared the meaning of this name Iehovah, as he did to Moses, Exod. 3. where he calleth himselfe, Eheje, which α, which is the sense of the name Iehovah, which signifieth the essence and being of God: and beside the Lord did more fully reveale his glorie unto Moses, than unto any other Prophet, Numb. 12.8. He shall see the similitude of God: Lyran. Cajetan.

Thostatus. But if this were the meaning, then neither afterward unto the other Prophets should the Lord have beene knowne by the name Iehovah, seeing Moses in respect of cleere illumination hath the preeminence before all Prophets before or after. But that cannot bee, seeing God was revealed unto other Prophets by that name. 5. Oleaster thus expoundeth: i. That whereas Shaddai may be derived either of shadad, which signifieth to spoyle or pray upon, or of shad, which signifieth the •e•tes, and so consequently plentie: and Iehovah is taken either from the roote Havah, to be, or rather of Hovah, which signifieth destruction, as Ezech. 7.26. God was knowne to the fathers both in giuing them plentifull graces, and spoyling their enemies, to bestow on them, as he tooke from Laban, and gave unto Iacob: but now he began to be knowne by that name Iehovah, in destroying Pharaoh and the Egyptians, &c. But beside that Oleaster in deriving of the name Iehovah, dissenteth from all other; his collection is not generally true: for God had before shewed his power in destroying the wicked and ungodly, as in the flood, and in the overthrow of Sodome and Gomorrah. 6. Wherefore the best interpretation is this, that whereas the name is taken often for the thing signified by the name, as Act. 1.15. The number of the names that were in one place were, &c. i. the number of men: and Rev. 3. I have a few names in Sardis: So here the name Iehovah is taken for God himselfe: Perer. Then whereas the fathers did beleeeve in God as omnipotent and all sufficient, able to effect his promises, which they possessed onely in hope, but saw them not fulfilled: Now the Lord will performe unto Israel, whatsoever he had promised to their fathers, in delivering them from their enemies, and giving the land, which he sware unto their fathers that hee would give unto their seed: as the Lord himselfe saith unto Moses, vers. 7, 8. and thus will he be knowne by his name Iehovah, which signifieth being of himselfe: for so of God, in him, through him, and for him are all things; Iun. Simler.

QUEST. VIII. Why the genealogie of Reuben, Simeon and Levi is inserted.

Vers 14. These bee the heads of their fathers houses, &c. Moses setteth downe the genealogie of certaine tribes, that it might bee knowne, for the more certaintie of the storie, of what stocks those two famous Prophets Moses and Aaron came, the Lords Ambassadors to Pharaoh, and instruments of these great works and wonders wrought in Egypt, and of the deliverance of the people: Borrh. 2. And Moses setteth downe the generation of Reuben and Simeon, which were the two elder, that he might orderly proceed to Levi, lest hee might have beene thought onely to set downe his owne petigree: Simler. 3. And these three tribes are specially named, because they of all other were most hardly censured by Iacob Reuben for his incest, and the other two for their murther, lest they might have beene thought utterly to have beene rejected: Perer. 4. Moses most insisted upon the genealogie of Levi, because that tribe was afterward chosen for the dignitie of the Priesthood, Simler.

QUEST. IX. How Reuben is said here to be the first borne.

Vers. 14. The sonnes of Reuben the first borne. 1. He was the first borne by nature, but he lost the pre|rogative of the first borne by his incest: unto the which belonged a double preeminence, the one of a double part, which right was transferred to Ioseph, of whom came two tribes; the other of dignitie and authoritie over the rest of the brethren, which was conveyed to Iudah: Perer. 2. Of Reuben and Simeon; onely those are rehearsed, that came downe with Iacob unto Egypt, because Moses doth make haste to set downe at large the offspring of Levi, descending even unto Phinehes, the sonne of Eleazar; the sonne of Aaron: Iun. 3. Some names are elsewhere otherwise termed, as he which is called Iemuel, is named in the Chronicles, Nemuel, and Sahar; Zerah. Ohad here named is there omitted, either because he died in Egypt, or else his posteritie was extinct and ceased in the wilderness, Simler.

Page 57

QUEST. X. Of the age of Levi.

Vers. 16. The yeeres of the life of Levi, were 137. Levi was elder than Ioseph by foure yeeres: for hee was the third sonne of Lea, borne in the third yeere of the second seven of Iacobs service, in the end whereof Ioseph was borne; hence divers certaine conclusions concerning the Chronologie of the Scripture may be inferred. 1. That Levi was 43. yeere old, when he came downe with Iacob into Egypt, for then was Ioseph 39. 2. That Levi lived 23. yeeres after the death of Ioseph, who lived an 110. yeeres, for Levi was 4. yeere elder than Ioseph, and lived 137. 3. That Levi lived after he came into Egypt 94. yeeres, unto the which if we adde 43. yeeres, which was his age before he went into Egypt, we shall have the whole life of Levi 137. yeeres. 4. Levi died 121. yeeres before the going of the Israelites out of Egypt: for all the time of their aboad in Egypt was 215. whereof Levi lived 94. in Egypt, which summe being deducted from 215. the residue is 121. yeeres. 5. It is gathered that Levi died before Moses birth 41. yeeres, for Moses was 80. yeeres old, when Israel was delivered out of Egypt, but Levi died 121. yeeres before that, then it will follow that he died 41. yeeres before Moses, ex Perer.

QUEST. XI. Of the age of Kohath.

Vers. 18. KOath lived 133. yeeres. 1. Thus read both the Latine, Septuagint, and Chaldee, agreeable to the Hebrew: So that Eugubinus is deceived that saith Kohath, according to the Septuagint, lived but 130. yeeres. 2. Hence it is evident that Kohath died 2. yeere before Moses birth, and 82. yeeres before the deliverance of Israel: for Kohath comming downe with Levi into Egypt, may be supposed to be borne the same yeere: from whence to Moses birth are 135. yeeres, unto which adde 80. yeeres of the life of Moses, and we have the whole summe of 215. yeeres, the whole time of the Israelites being in Egypt. But hee lived onely 133. yeeres: then he must be dead two yeeres before Moses birth. 3. Hence Alexander Polyhistor is found to be in error, who holdeth, as Eusebius reporteth, Kohath to bee but 40. yeere old, when Levi died, who was rather than 94. yeere old, but 43 yeere younger than his father, * being borne the same yeere when Levi went downe into Egypt.

QUEST. XII. Of the age of Amram.

Vers. 20. ANd Amram lived 137. yeeres. If Amram were borne 14. yeeres before Ioseph died, and bel|gat Moses in the 77. yeere of his age as Alexander Polyhistor in Eusebius accompteth: then it is evident that he died 21. yeeres before the departing of Israel out of Egypt, and in the 60 yeere of Moses age, as may bee thus gathered: Ioseph lived after Iacob came downe into Egypt 71. yeeres, being then 39. and his whole age was 110. so Ioseph died 144. yeeres before the departure of Israel, for the fore|said numbers of 71. and 144. put together make the above said summe of 215. yeeres: it will then follow, that Amram borne 14. yeeres before Iosephs death, and living 137. yeeres, died 121. yeeres before the going forth of Israel, ex Perer.

QUEST. XIII. Why the sonnes of Korah and Aaron are set downe.

Vers. 21. ALso the sonnes of Izhar. 1. Moses in the rest of Levi his posteritie, descendeth but to the fourth degree, saving in Aaron and Korah, because of the one came famous Phinehes, and the sonnes of the other are expressed, because they died not in their fathers rebellion, Numb. 16.11: 2. He|bron or Chebron, his posteritie is not set downe, it may be he was obscure, and therefore not mentioned, Borrh. 3. The rest here also are expressed because elsewhere they are spoken of, for the manifestation of the history: as Nadab and Abihu, Levit. 10.1. Mishael and Elzaphan, Levit. 10.4. Eleazar, Numb. 20. and Ithamar, Exod. 38.21. Iun.

QUEST. XIV. Why Aaron tooke a wife of the tribe of Iudah.

Vers. 23. AND Aaron tooke Elishebah daughter of Aminadab▪ 1. These two, Aminadab and Nahashon his sonne, were Princes of Iudah. 2. Thus Levi and Iudah doe match in marriage together, to signifie the conjunction and affinity that should bee betweene the regall and priestly office, Simler. 3. Hitherto the positive law of not confounding the tribes by marriage was not made: and yet afterward notwithstanding it was lawfull for the Priests of Levi to take unto them wives of other tribes, for, because the Levites had no inheritance given them, by such marriages there could follow no inconvenience, by confusion of their inheritance. So Iehoiadah the high Priest married the King of Judahs sister, and Eliza|beth wife to Zacharie the Priest was Cousin to Mary the blessed Virgin, of Iudah, Simler.

QUEST. XV. How Moses without ostentation setteth forth his owne commendation.

Vers. 27. THEse are that Moses and Aaron, &c. 1. Some thinke that these words should be inserted by Ezra, who digested the Scriptures into order, because it seemeth not to stand with the mo|destie of Moses and Aaron to set forth such a commendation of himselfe. But no such supposition i• here necessarie: for Moses here ascribeth nothing to himselfe, but onely sheweth how •hey were set apart of God, for this great worke: neither is all kind of boasting unlawfull, namely, such as is referred to the glory of God, as Saint Paul did say of himselfe, that he laboured more than all the Apostles. 2. As Aaron i• in the former verse set before Moses, as having the preeminence of nature, because he was eldest: so here Moses is set before Aaron, as having the preeminence of grace, who was first called, and from whose mouth Aa|ron was to receive direction, and by whose hand Aaron was consecrated to the Priesthood, Pellican.

QUEST. XVI. In what sense Moses saith he was of uncircumcised lips.

Vers. 30. I Am of uncircumcised lips, and how should Pharaoh heare me?&c. 1. Whereas the Septuagint read, of a small voyce▪ Augustine moveth this doubt, that Moses should be said to have so small a voice, as though Pharaoh onely had not beene able to heare them, qu•st. 7. in Exod. But this doubt ariseth upon ignorance of the originall, for the true reading is, I am of uncircumcised lips. 2. As circumcision properly signifieth the cutting off that which is superfluous, in the bodie, and so consequently of any sulperfluitie in any power or facultie: so uncircumcision signifieth the remaining of that superfluous part, either in any part or power of the bodie, or of the soule: so because Moses stammered in his speech, and so doubled many superfluous syllables, in that sense he saith his lips, that is, his words uttered by his lips were uncircumcised: Iun. But that which is uncircumcised is also taken for that which is polluted and defiled, as S. Stephen saith, Act. 7. that the Iewes were of uncircumcised hearts and eares, Perer. But this is diligently to be marked, that God, notwithstanding Moses so oft complaineth of this naturall defect and imperfection, yet would not take it from him, but giveth him the supplie of his brother Aarons eloquence, that Moses should not be sufficient of himselfe, Perer.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Knowledge still increased the neerer they approached to the time of the Messias.

Vers. 3. BVt by my name Iehovah was I not knowne. The Lord did more fully reveale himselfe to Moses than to Abraham: David saw more than Moses of Christ, as it is extant in the Psalmes, and evident by the particular propheties of the Messiah: Daniel saw more than David, describing the very time of the Messiahs comming: The Apostles saw more than the Prophets, which desired to see those things which they saw, and did not see them, Matth. 13. Thus we see that still in processe of time know|ledge increased, and more still was added unto it, and the neerer they came unto the time of the Messiah, the greater was the light: Gregor. homil. 16. super Ezechiel.

2. Doct. God performeth his promises for his owne mercy and truths sake.

Vers. 4. AS I made my covenant with them. The onely cause that moveth the Lord to be gracious to his people, is the remembrance of his covenant which proceeded from his love: there was no|thing in this unthankfull people to procure the love of God toward them: So the Apostle saith: Her•i• i• love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, 1 Ioh. 4.10. Piscat.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Conf. Of certaine Hereticks, that take exception to the authoritie of the booke of the Canticles.

Vers. 3. I Appeared unto &c. by the name of almightie God. Certaine Heretikes (because God was knowne to Abraham by his name Shaddai, to Moses by his name Iehovah, and there is no booke in Scrip|ture beside the Canticles, wherein some of these names of God are not found) have impiously taken ex|ception upon this reason against this booke. Contra. True it is that in the Canticles, which are indited to set forth the sweet spirituall love betweene Christ and his Church, the fearefull and terrible names of God are omitted: in stead of omnipotent, the Church calleth Christ her Spouse, peaceable and lovely: for Lord, her Spouse, her beloved: for Iehovah, that ineffable name, she compareth him to a bundle of Myrrhe, and to an Ointment powred out: so Christ also giveth unto the Church amiable termes, as Sister, Spouse, the Dove and such like: and this is the cause why those fearefull names are omitted in that bookes Perer. And for the same cause Christ in the Gospell setteth not forth God under the names of Ad•nai, Shaddai, Iehovah, as in the Law, but under the name of God, and our Father, because the Gospell bringeth peace and comfort, not feare and terror: sic Zeigler.

2. Conf. Of the Iewes that attribute great force to the letters of the name Iehovah.

BVt by my name Iehovah was I not knowne. The Jewes ascribe much unto this name, affirming that by the vertue thereof miracles may be wrought, and that Christ did thereby effect his great works: they attribute unto this name power to cast out deuils, to adjure spirits, to heale diseases: and hereupon Mal|gicians in their devilish invocations abuse the names of God, Elohim, Adonai, Iehovah.

Contra 1. Words have no vertue or propertie beside the signification. If by words pronounced any thing bee effected, it proceedeth of faith, not of the sound of the words: if any words of themselves wrought any thing, most like the words of prayer; yet not the words, but the prayer of faith saveth▪ Iam.5.15. If it be answered, that the uttering of the name of Iehovah to such purposes is with faith, I relplie that it cannot be, because faith is groundd upon the word: but they have no warrant out of the word, that the syllables of the name Iehovah have any such force.

2. Indeed in the name of Iehovah, that is, by faith in his name, many great works have beene done, but not by vertue of the letters and syllables. As the seven sonnes of Sceva a Jew, by the bare name of Iesus could doe nothing, Acts 19.14. but by faith in his name were miracles wrought, Act. 3.16. 3. Christ wrought miracles not by words and syllables, but because he was Iehovah, the Lord of life and power himselfe, he by his owne power brought forth these wonderfull works. 4. Iosephus writeth that Alexander meeting Iadda the high Priest in his priestly garments, having the name of Iehovah in his forehead, did fall downe at his feet and worshipped. But this was not done by vertue of those letters, but by the power of God: * for being secretly asked of Parmenio, why hee, whom all men adored, fell downe at the high Priests feet, answered: Non hunc se adorare, sed Deo cuius pontifex esset honorem illum habuisse: That he worshipped not him, but yeelded that honour to God, whose Priest he was.

6. Places of morall use.

1. Observ. The greater light of the Gospell requireth greater faith.

Vers. 3. BVt by my name Iehovah was I not knowne. This then was a just rebuke unto the Israelites, that whereas their fathers being a great way from the fulfilling of the promises, and having not such manifest revelations and signes, as they now had by the Ministerie of Moses, yet were more firme in faith than that present incredulous age, Simler. So shall it bee a just rebuke unto us, that live now in the cleere light of the Gospell, if wee be lesse zealous of Gods glorie, than they which have lived before us in the time of ignorance. Therefore let us give eare unto the Apostle: The night is past, and the day is at hand: let us therefore cast away the works of darknesse, and put on the armour of light, Rom. 13.12.

2. Observ. Affliction at the first is grievous, but in the end comfortable.

Vers. 9. BVt they hearkened not unto Moses for anguish of spirit. Such is the condition and qualitie of affliktion, that it maketh the heart heavie, and so disquieteth the soule, that it can not raise up it selfe to lay hold on any spirituall comfort: Simler. as the Apostle saith: No chastising for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: but afterward it bringeth the quiet fruit of righteousnesse to them that are thereby exercised, Heb. 12.11. Here the Apostle sheweth two divers effects of affliction, one which proceedeth of our naturall infirmitie, to worke sorrow and griefe; the other wrought by grace in those that make good use of their chastisement, it bringeth in the end peace and comfort.

3. Observ. God raiseth honourable instruments from meane places.

Vers. 16. THese are the names of the sonnes of Levi, This tribe, by reason of Iacobs curse laid upon it, was in disgrace and contempt; yet God out of the same raised these honourable instruments Moses and Aaron. So God many times raiseth his servants out of the dust: as Mary was a poore despised handmaid in Israel, yet chosen to be the mother of Christ: the Apostles were taken some from base trades, other from ignominious offices, as Matthew that was a Publican.

4. Observ. God giveth his gifts diversly.

Vers. 30. I Am of uncircumcised lips. Moses had not the gift of eloquence, but he had a most plentiful gift of heavenly wisdom and understanding: thus God distributeth his gifts diversly: Pellican. Aaron had the gift of eloquence, but was in heavenly knowledge and illumination inferior to Moses. So the Apostle saith, To one is given by the spirit the word of wisdom, and to another the word of knowledge, and to another diversities of tongues, 1 Cor. 12.9.10. Every one hath not all gifts, that one may stand in need of another.

CHAP. VII.

I. The Method and Argument.

Moses appeareth the second and third time before Pharaoh, delivering the Lords message unto Pharaoh for the dismissing of his people, and upon his refusall sheweth signes, and calleth for the first plague, of the turning of the waters into blood.

There are three parts of the whole Chapter.

The first containeth the renewing of the charge and commandment of God to Moses to goe unto Pharaoh, to verse 8. wherein these things are declared: 1. The authoritie which the Lord giveth to Moses over Pharaoh, vers. 1. 2. His commission what he shall speake, vers. 2. 3. The event, Pharaohs refusall. 4. The end, that God may worke his great judgements in Egypt, vers. 4. 5. Moses and Aarons obedience, with a description of their yeeres and age, vers. 6.7.

The second expresseth the generall signe, which serveth for the confirmation of Moses calling, by turning his rod into a Serpent, from vers. 8. to vers. 14. wherein three things are further shewed: first, the commandment of God to Moses, vers. 8. Secondly, the execution by Moses, vers. 9. Thirdly, the event, the hardnesse of Pharaohs heart, vers. 13. with the occasion thereof, the Magicians counterfeit miracle in doing the like.

Page 60

The third part describeth the first plague laid upon Egypt: 1. The denuntiation thereof by the Lord: containing the message to Pharaoh, vers. 15.16. The matter or subject of the first plague, the water and fish therein, the one shall bee turned into blood, the other shall die, vers. 17. with the generall instrument Aarons rod, vers. 19. 2. Then followeth the execution by Moses, vers. 20. 3. Then the events follow: first, the fish die, the water stinketh, vers. 21. Secondly, Pharaohs heart is hardened, by reason of the like practice by the Egyptian Sorcerers, vers. 22, 23. Thirdly, the endeavour of the Egyptians in digging pits for water.

2. The divers readings.

*Vers. 1. Aaron thy brother shall be thy Prophet. B.G.A.P. cum caeter, shall be thine interpreter. I. the sense, but not the words: Nebi signifieth a Prophet.

*Vers. 4. Pharaoh shall not hearken unto you, that I may lay my hand. B. G. and I will lay my hand. L. V. A. P. S. H. rather, when I have laid my hand I. Pharaohs hardnesse of heart is set forth, as the cause rather, why the Lord would send his judgements, than an effect, as the former verse sheweth, and chap. 3.19.

So Moses and Aaron did, as Iehovah commanded them, so did they. I. A. P. better than, Moses and Aaron did as the Lord commanded them: even so did they. B. G. cum caeter. for the perfect distinction ath•ah comming betweene, divideth the first part of the sentence.

Vers. 9. Shall be turned into a Dragon. I. A. P. S. rather than, a Serpent. B.G.V.L. Tanmin signifieth a Dragon: * yet he meaneth a Serpent: called a Dragon, because of the fearfulness and greatness of it, as Moses fled from it. chap. 4.3.

Vers. 18. The Egyptians shall be grieved to drinke: that is, loath. B.G. shall be troubled in drinking. L. shall be wearied in drinking. * I.V. shall not be able to drinke. S. shall labour. A.P. so laah signifieth, and it is some time taken for to grieve, or loath, as Iob 4.2.

Of the water of the river. B.G. cum caeter. of every river. I. but in the originall there is no pronoun, but an article onely set before; * yet the same effect followed also in other rivers and waters.

Vers. 19. Stretch out thine hand against the water; as it is taken vers. 5. I will stretch forth H. mine hand rather upon the waters. V. L. cum caeter. as chap. 8. 5. Stretch forth thine hand to worke on the waters. I. to worke is inserted.

Vers. 23. He did not set his heart upon this. I.L.S.A.P.B. did not consider this in his heart. V. this yet did not enter into his heart. * G.

3. The explanation of difficult questions.

QUEST. I. Of the divers appellations of the name of God.

Vers. 1. I Have made thee Pharaohs God. This name and title of God is used and applied foure wayes in Scripture. 1. essentially, and so it is given onely unto the blessed Trinitie, and is not communicable unto any creature: 2. personally, and so it agreeth onely unto Christ as man: 3. according to the vaine opinion and estimation of men: so the Idols of the Gentiles are called gods, as 1 Cor. 8.5. Though there be that are called gods, &c. 4. by way of similitude, as Princes and Magistrates in respect of their authoritie, wherein they represent God in earth, are called gods: so also Prophets, in respect of their diuine knowledge, holy men for their sanctitie, and Angels for the excellencie of creation, and the ministers in regard of their diuine function and calling, have that name and title given them: Perer. 2. To this agreeth also the distinction of Gregorie, that some are called gods nuncupativè, that is, by a kinde of title and appellation, as Moses is here called Pharaohs God: but the Lord is called God essentially: The God of Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, Exod. 3. Gregor. hom. 8. in Ezechiel. 3.

QUEST. II. In what sense Moses is called Pharaohs God.

MOses is called Pharaohs God: 1. not onely for that from God, and in Gods name he declared his will unto him, for the delivering of his people, as Vatab. 2. nor yet, that he was as a Prince onely to Pharaoh, as being mightier than he, and of greater power: as the Chalde readeth, and Simlerus consenteth: 3. but he is so called in respect of the diuine authoritie given unto him, in bringing those great plagues upon Egypt, which made Pharaoh to feare him as God, and the Magitians afterward acknowledged, that he wrought by the finger of God: Perer. 4. Augustines note also is not here to be omitted, that otherwise Moses is said to be in Gods stead to Aaron, Exod. 4. that is, a director of him in things belonging to God: otherwise here he is said to be Pharaohs God, that is, to execute judgement upon him, Augustine much to his purpose quaest. 17. in Exod.

QUEST. III. In what sense Aaron is called Moses Prophet.

Aaron thy brother shall be thy Prophet. 1. This word Prophet is taken five wayes. First, it signified such as did prophesie and foretell things to come, which in old time were called Seers, and in this sense this name also was given unto false Prophets, that tooke upon them to declare things to come, as also S. Paul calleth Epimenides the Cretensian Prophet, because he truly prophesied of the manners of the people, Tit. 1. 2. They are said to prophesie, which had a speciall gift to sing and play upon instruments, as Asaph, and Heman, are said to prophesie upon their harpes, 1 Chron. 25. 3. They also had the name of prophesying given them, which onely in the outward behaviour were like unto Prophets, that is, as men ravished for the time and beside themselves, as Saul is said to prophesie, when the evill spirit came upon him, 1. Sam. 18.10. that is, he was as a man beside himselfe. 4. To prophesie is taken for the doing of any strange and miraculous worke, as the dead body of Elisha, is said to prophesie, Eccl. 48. because by the vertue thereof, one was restored to life. 5. To prophesie is to expound and interpret, as S. Paul useth this word, 1. Cor. 14. comparing prophesying and the gift of tongues together: and in this sense is Aaron Moyses Prophet, that is, his interpreter and spokesman to Pharaoh. Pererius.

QUEST. IV. Why the tribes of Israel are called armies.

Vers. 4. AND bring forth mine armies. 1. The Israelites are so called in respect of their numbers, because every tribe of them by it selfe was able to make an army: for if the summe of 600000. be divided into 12. partes, each part will make. 50000. Simler. 2. Beside, this sheweth that they should goe forth of Egypt, not as men afraid, or fleeing, but with courage and strength: as chap. 13.18. it is said, they went up armed or well appointed out of Egypt. 3. Hereby mystically is signified the great numbers of servants and people of God: Borrh. 4. They came up by their armies, that is, by troupes and compalnies, for as yet their commonwealth was not constituted, nor distributed into tribes. Iunius.

QUEST. V Of Moses age.

Vers. 7. NOw Moses was 80. yeere old. 1. To this agreeth S. Stephens narration that Moses was forty yeere old when he fled out of Egypt, and that forty yeere more was expired before he retur|ned into Egypt, Act. 7.23.30. 2. This is inserted concerning Moses and Aarons age, for the further evi|dence of the story, and to serve for the chronology of the Scripture and computations of times. 3. And in that Moses and Aaron were called to place of governement being now aged, it sheweth that it is not safe, that the publike administration of offices should be committed to young men, especially such as are but young in gifts necessary for governement.

QUEST. VI. Whether Pharaoh asked a signe: and whether a signe may be required.

Vers. 9 IF Pharaoh speake unto you, saying, shew a miracle, &c. 1. Though it be not expressed afterward, that Pharaoh asked a miracle, yet it is not to be doubted, but that according to Gods direction to Moses, he first shewed not this signe till Pharaoh had called for it, because it is said, vers. 10. that they did, as the Lord commanded. 2. But to aske a miracle, is not alwayes peculiar to the wicked: sometime the godly may require a miracle for the confirmation of their faith, as Gedion did. But Pharaoh here as|keth a signe of a captious minde, that if Moses could not have warranted his calling by a signe, hee might <◇> have rejected him: and yet after that the signe was shewed, he would not give place, but seeketh <◇> evasions. 3. This is the third time that this signe was shewed, once in mount Horeb, where the Lord g•ve this signe to Moses, and afterward before the people to assure them of Moses calling, Exod. 4. and now here before Pharaoh. Ex Simler.

QUEST. VII. Of the divers names of the Egyptian Magicians here used.

Vers. 10. Then Pharaoh called for the Wisemen and Sorcerers. 1. Here are foure words used to describe the Magicians of Egypt, the first is chacamim or chacam to be wise: which Simlerus taketh to be a generall name of that superstitious sect of Magicians, that challenged unto themselves the onely opinion of wisdom, being full of sophistry and deceit, (as the Septuagint read (〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉) rather than of true wisdom. Vatablussaith, the next word Sorcerers, is an exposition of the former. But I thinke rather it was a peculiar kinde of Magicke, whereof there are set downe 8. severall professions, Deut. 18.10. and the same that is there called jidghoni, a wisard, of jadagh, to know: the Septuagint readeth 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, a marker or observer of signes, such as by the intrals of beasts and such other observations gave conjecture, as Gen 41.8. they are taken for those which were cunning in the interpreting of dreames.

The next word is mecasphim, praestigiatores, whom we call Juglers, which deceived mens senses: the Sep|tuagint read 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, veneficos, or as the Latine, maleficos, such as by sorcery bewitched men or beasts.

The third sort are chartumim, which are taken to be the Genethliaci, the casters of mens nativities. The Septuagint call them 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, enchanter: R. Levi taketh them to be those which by naturall meanes seeme to doe strange things, while their craft is not perceived, as here they seeme to make serpents of rods. R. Saadias would derive it of chor and atam, which signifieth an hole, and secret, because they did hide in se|cret holes and places, as in graves, those whom they consulted with, and which gave answer unto them: but this seemeth to be curious.

The fourth word is lahate of lahat, which signifieth fire, or the blade of a sword, as Gen. 3.24. because Magicians use not onely words to enchant with, but other instruments: Aben Ezra. But their enchant|ments are rather so called because they deceive men, making them to take one thing for another, as the fight is easily deceived in shaking of a bright sword: Borrh.

QUEST. VIII. Of the divers kindes of magick.

BESides these here named, there were other kindes of Magick, as Pliniere hearseth divers, as how they divined by water, by the aire, by the starres, by basons, shadowes, talke with the dead, lib. 30. c. 11.2. * Au|gustine out of Proclus and Porphyrius, sheweth, that they made two kindes of Magick, the one was thour|gia, which by certaine sacrifices, and a fained purity of the body, and by other rites, did invoke, as they thought, the good spirits: the other was called goetia, because they used mourning in invoking of spirits; and Necromantia, because they consulted with the dead. 3. Suidas maketh three sorts: M•|gia, art Magicke, which was by invoking of the spirits, for the effecting of some good worke, as they were made to beleve. Goetia, which by mourning called upon the spirits of the dead: Pharmacia, when they used or applied any venomous or poysoned thing. Ex Perer. 4. But to know the divers devilish del|vices which Magicians used, we can have no better direction than from the Scripture it selfe, Deut. 18.10. Where beside these two kindes before rehearsed, of jidgeni the wisard, and casheph, the Jugler or deceiver, there are six more magicall practices set downe: The first is Kasam, the diviner, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, Septuagint, such as tooke upon them to tell of things which were lost, and to declare hid matters and things to come, such as divined by visions, as Micah. 3.6.

The next is meghonen, an observer of times, Planetarius, a Planetary, such as by the aspect of the starres, moving of the cloudes, and by such like tooke upon them to prognosticate, not of naturall things, but of civill and humane affaires: so is the word used, Isai. 2.6. They are Southsayers, as the Philistims: and what the Philistims were we may read, 1. Sam. 6. who by the going of the cart, and by the way it tooke, did take upon them to finde out the author of the plagues, that were sent upon them: the Septuagint readeth 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, such as observe words and use spels.

The third is nachash, an Augur or Conjecturer, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, such as by the flying of birds, or such like, doe make conjectures: as they that count the crossing of a hare the way, ominous, and such like.

The fourth is casheph, the plurall whereof is cashphim, deceivers, touched before.

The fift is chober, chaber: the Inchanter, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, Septuagint, that useth enchantment, as it is expounded by another word, Psal. 58.6. lachash, which signifieth to mutter or whisper, such as take upon them to charme Serpents, and adjure Devils, and to doe great cures by hanging enchanted things about the necke, or such like: the word chabars signifieth to joyne, because such have a league and conjunction with evill spirits.

The sixth is shoel obh, that asketh of familiars, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉; ventriloquus, Septuagint, that give answers, as though a spirit or familiar spake within them: for obh signifieth a bottle, or the belly swelling and puffed up, and ready to brast, as Iob. 22.20.

The seventh is j•dgoni, the Wisard, spoken of before.

The eight is doresh el hamethim: 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, that inquireth of the dead, such as make men believe they can raise up the dead to consult with them: whereas it is the Devill in their likeness: as the witch of Endor brought up the Devill in likeness of Samuel, 1. Sam. 28.

QUEST. IX. Of the first author and inventor of art Magicke.

Vers. 11. THese Charmers of Egypt. Though Egypt was much given to this devilish invention of Magicke, yet neither were they the first founders, nor the onely professors of it. 1. Most Writers doe make Zoroastres of Persia the author of it, as Plinie and Diogenes Laertius, Iustinus: Plinie writeth of him, that hee only of all men that ever were laughed the same day hee was borne, and his braine so moved up and downe, that it would remove or put off the hand laid upon it, which, they say, was a signe of his great and mysticall knowledge: the author of the Scholasticall history saith, that this Zoroastres was Ninus, who wrote this art Magicke, and the seven liberall Arts in fourteene pillars, seven of brasse, and seven of bricke, to preserve them from the destruction of the world, one by water, the other by fire. 2. Concerning the antiquity of Zoroastres, hee was neither so ancient, as some write, that hee was 600. yeeres elder than Plato. or five thousand yeeres before the battell of Troy, as Hermippus, (as Laertius citeth him) nor yet was he so late, as Xantus Lydius maketh him to be, but six hundred yeeres before Xerxes expedition into Greece. For Zoroastres was in the time of Ninus when Abraham lived, from whose birth to the first Olympiad are counted 1268. yeeres: and the battell of Troy was 407. yeeres before the beginning of the Olympiades. But Xerxes passage into Greece followeth in the 75. Olympiade, and Plato his death in the 108 Olympiade: by this it is evident, that Zoroastres was neither so many yeeres before the first, nor so few as the rest imagine. 3. But Cassianus deriveth the first invention of Magicke, from before the flood: for whereas Adam having the knowledge of the celestiall bodies and elements, taught the same unto Seth: which kinde of knowledge continued uncorrupt in the righteous seed, till they joyned in marriage with the posterity of Cain, then they abused and prophaned the same to the finding out of superstitious and Magicall devices: which wicked inventions they say were preserved by Cain, and by him graven in certaine plates of mettall: sic Cassianus collat. 8. cap. 21. So these devilish practises continued along, and were dispersed in the world: they were first in Canaan in Moses time, as may appear by the Lawes made against such in divers places, but especially Deut. 18.10. And afterward about the time of the Trojane warre these Magicall studies were much followed, as Homers fable of Circes sheweth. Orpheus among the Thessalians, and Osthanes, that accompanied Xerxes in his warre against Greece, were famous in this kind. Pythagoras, and after him Empedocles, Democritus, Plato seemed to make great account of them. In the Apostles times, Iarchas among the Indian Drachmanes, Tespesion among the Gymnosophists of Aethiopia excelled in this kinde, and Simon Magus was in that time. But Apollo/nius Tyaneus in Domitians time went beyond them all.* 5. And what might be the cause, that these Diabollicall studies received such liking in the world, Plinie declareth: because this Magicall profession borroweth of three notable Arts, Physicke or Medicine, the Mathematickes, and a colour or shew of Religion is the third: and thus mens mindes were bewitched therewith. But whosoever was the minister and instrument to set abroad these impious Arts, Satan was the author and inspirer of them: for he was a liar from the beginning, and when hee telleth a lye hee speaketh of his owne, as our Saviour saith, Ioh. 8.44.

Page 63

Porphyri• also confesseth as much, that the mysticall knowledge of these things came first from the spirits themselves: Quibus rebus gaudant, quibus alligantur d•i hominibus significarunt: ad haec quibus rebus ipsi cogantur, qua illi offerenda sint, &c. The Gods (hee meaneth such Gods as Magicians worship) *them/selves signified unto men, what things they were pleased with, and with what they are bound; and further wherewith they are forced, and what is to be offered unto them. Ex Perer. Which testimonie of Porphyrie by the way sheweth what we are to thinke of those usuall receipts against witchcraft, as in scratching the Witch, burning of some part, or seething of the urine, and such like: that these were Satans owne revelations at the first in making carnall men beleieve that he is bound with such things.

QUEST. X. Who were the ringleaders and chiefe of the Egyptian Magicians.

BUT if further it be inquired, who these Magicians were; 1. Saint Paul sheweth that the principall of them were Iannes and Iambres, 2. Tim. 3. which Paul had either by some certaine tradition, or by inspiration, for in Scripture their names are not found; so thinketh Chrysostome, *Theodore*t, and Theophylact upon that place. It seemeth that some Heretikes afterward, by occasion of these names framed a booke of Iannes and Iambres, which Origen and Ambrose count among the Apocryphall bookes,* and of hid authority, 2. Other forren Writers also have made mention of these two, Iannes and Iambres, as Nu/enius Pythagoricus (as Eusebius reporteth) writeth that these two resisted Moses, whom he calleth Mu/sius, the Captaine of the Jewes: Plinie also calleth them Iamne and Iotape, whom hee saith, were many thousand yeeres after Zoroastres, wherein he is deceived, for from Abrahams birth, which was in the time of Ninus, when Zoroastres flourished were not above 500. yeeres. 3. But that seemeth to be very strange which Palladius reporteth in the life of Macarius, if it be true: * that whereas Iannes and Iambres in their life had made them a sepulchre, in a pleasant place, set with all manner of fruitfull trees, and therein made a fountaine of water, which place was kept by evill spirits: Macarius having a desire to see this place, and approaching thither, was met with 70. Devils in divers shapes, gnashing their teeth, and running upon him: but he not affraid passed along, and came to the sepulchre, where the great Devill appeared unto him, with a naked sword, shaking it at him, and there he saw a brassen bucket, with an iron chaine, wasted and consumed, and pomegranates dried, having nothing in them. Wee may worthily suspect that some Friars finger hath bene tempering with this fable, as in other reports of the Saints lives, to get credit unto them with fained miracles.

NOW it followeth to shew by occasion of this conversion of rods into serpents wrought by these Egyptian Magitians, whether such things done by magicall inchantment are verily so effected, or but in shew and appearance only. 1. It cannot bee denied, but that many apparitions brought forth by sorcery, are meere illusions, as the transforming of Vlysses companions into divers shapes of beasts: so the Arcadians are said by swimming over a certaine river to bee turned into wolves. * Augustine writeth of certaine women in Italy, that by giving certaine enchanted cheese unto passengers, changed them into beasts, and used them to carry their burdens for a time. The like Philostratus reporteth of Apollonius, that as he sat at the table, brassen men served them with drinke, and filled the cups like butlers: and how the image of Memnon in Egypt, as soone as the Sunne rising shined upon the mouth, began to speake: and how Vespesion the chiefe of the Gymnosophists in Aethiopia caused an elme with a low and soft voice to salute Apollonius. So to this purpose in the Cannons mention is made of certaine women, * that were so deluded of Satan, that they thought they did ride in the aire in the night, and were brought unto a pleasant place, where they did feast with Diana, and Herodias. 2. These and such like were but done in conceit and imagination: for the Devill cannot in truth bring forth the substance of Lions and such other beasts, which cannot come without generation and not at once but in continuance of time they come to their growth: and seeing to speake and worke are actions incident to man, they cannot bee per|formed in truth by images and dead things: And whereas they have seemed by Magike to raise up the dead, as is also written of Apollonius, that is beyond the Devils power, for the soule being immortall, the Devill hath no command over it, it is in Gods hand: and though he had, yet can he not prepare the body, being without naturall heate and life to bee a fit and apt instrument againe for the soule. 3. Yet not|withstanding, that some workes of Magicians are counterfeit, it followeth not that all should bee so: the Scripture sheweth that a false Prophet may shew a signe or wonder, that may come to passe, Deut. 13.1. Apollonius principles and receipts were currant through the world, whereby they used to stay the inundation of waters, and incursion of wild beasts, which Iustinus Martyr thinketh might bee done, * by the great skill which hee had in naturall things. The Roman histories remember, how Claudia Vestalis, to prove her chastity did move a ship her selfe alone, tying her girdle to it, that many men and oxen could not stirre. So Tucia another vestall Virgin, for the triall of her chastity, carried water in a fieve from the River Tiberis unto the Capitoll, Plin. lib. 28. cap. 2. These things seeme verily to have beene so done, but by the operation rather of Satan, to keepe the prophane Gentiles still in blindness and unbeleefe, than by the ministry of the good Angels, as thinketh Thomas Aquinas, ex Perer. 4. Now that many such things may be truly effected by Sorcerers through the power of Satan, it is evident by these two reasons: first, because Satan by the subtilty of his nature, and long experience hath great knowledge of naturall things, he knoweth their sympathies, and Antypathies, their qualities and operations, he can apply and tem|per the causes together, and so is able to worke wonders, though not true miracles, which are beside the order and course of nature, which Satan cannot invert. As to put this for an example, the small fish which is called Echinus, or Remora, is able by applying himselfe to the ship to stay it, though it bee un|der saile, * and have both the sea and winde with it: which Plinie sheweth to have beene found by expe|rience, how that Antonius his ship at one time, and Caius at another were stayed by this fish: Now if a Magitian should secretly apply this fish to a ship, hee might bee thought to worke a great wonder, and yet it should bee naturall. The other reason is, that beside the knowledge of nature, Satan is skilfull of all humane arts and sciences, by the benefit whereof even men doe worke wonders: as Archimedes was able to stirre a ship with his hand by certaine engines which he had prepared, which a great number of men by strength could not doe:

He also devised such kinde of instruments, when Marcellus the Ro|mane Captaine besieged Syracuse, * whereby they so annoyed their enimies and made such havock, and slaughter of the Romanes, that Marcellus himselfe said, they fought not against men, but against the Gods. Architas the Pythagorean, by Mechanick art, made a dove of wood to flie. Severinus Boetius made serpentes of brasse to hisse, and bird of brasse to sing: If men can make such admirable things by art, it need not seeme strange, if by the power of Satan wonderfull matters are sometime compassed. Ex Perer.

QUEST. XII. What things are permitted unto Satan to doe.

THE next point to be shewed here is, what things, which seeme to us to be miraculous, the Devill may doe by himselfe, or his ministers, the Magitians. First in generall, wee are here to consider a twofold action of spirits, the one is immediate; as they can themselves passe speedily from place to place, as Iob. 1. Satan came from compassing the whole earth: for if the Sunne being of a bodily substance, can compasse the heavens of such a huge circuit, many hundred thousand miles about, in the space of 24. houres, the spirits can doe it with greater agility: they have also power to transport bodies from place to place, as our Saviour yeelded his body to be transported of Satan, to the tempters further confusion. The other action is mediate, as Satan can transport, and bring together the causes of things, which being tempered and qualified, may bring forth divers naturall effects, which are wrought immediatly by those naturall cause, yet mediately by Satan which bringeth them together. Secondly, in particular these things are permitted to Satans power, he can transport bodies and carry them from place to place, as the Ecclesiasticall stories make mention, how Simon Magus was lift up on high in the aire by the <◇> of Satan, but by the prayer of Peter was violently throwne downe: so sometime serpents, and <◇> have beene seene flie in the aire: Albertus Magnus saith, that oxen have rained and fallen out of the aire; all which may be wrought by the conveyance of Satan. 2. The Devill can suddenly convey things out of ones sight, as Apollonius from the presence of Domitian. Thus it may be that Gyges, if that report be true, not by the vertue of a ring, but by the power of Satan became invisible. 3. They can make images to speake and walke, as before wee heard of Apollonius brasen butlers, and the image of Memnon; so the image of Iuno Moneta, being asked if she would remove to Rome, answered, se velle, that she would: and the image of fortune being set up, said, ritè me consecrastis, yee have consecrated mee aright. Valer. Maxim. lib. 1. cap. ultim. de simulachris. But the Devill cannot give power unto these things being dead, to performe any action of life, but that hee moveth and speaketh in them: as the Angell caused Balaams Asse to speake. * 4. The Devill can cause divers shapes and formes to appeare, as of men, Lions, and other things in the aire, or on the ground, as in the life of Antonie the Devill appeared unto him in the shape of terrible beasts. 5. And as he can counterfeit the shape of living things, so also of other things both naturall, as of gold, silver, meat, and artificiall, as of pots, glasses, cuppes: for if cunning artificers by their skill can make things so lively as that they can hardly bee discerned from that which they resemble, as Plinie writeth of Zeuxis grapes, lib. 35. cap. 11. much more can Satan coyne such formes and figures, as Philostratus lib. 4. of the life of Appolonius maketh mention, how a certaine Lamia pretending marriage to one Menippus a young man, shewed him a banquet furnished with all kinde of meat and precious vessels, and ornaments: which Appolonius discovered to be but imaginarie things, and shee confessed her selfe to bee a Lamia. * 6. The Devill by his subtile nature can so affect the sensitive spirits, and imaginary faculty, as that they shall represent unto the inward sense, the phantasie of some things past, or to come, and cause them to appeare to the outward sense, as wee see that franticke persons imagine many times that they see things which are not, and there is no doubt but that the Devill can effect that, which a naturall disease worketh. 7. Hee can also conforme the fantasies of those that are asleep, to represent unto them things, which the Devill knoweth shall come to passe, and by this meanes to bring credit unto dreames. 8. In some things the Devill can interpose himselfe, and helpe forward those superstitious meanes which are used to prognosticate; as the Augurs by the flying and chirping of birds, by looking into the intrals of beasts, by casting of lots, tooke upon them to divine, and the Devill by his mysticall operation concurred with them, more strongly to deceive. 9. The Devill can stirre up in naturall men the affections of love, anger, hatred, feare and such like: as he entred into the heart of Iudas, Iohn 13.1. and this he doth two wayes, either by propounding such externall objects, as helpe to inflame, and set on fire such affectiōns, and by conforming the inward phantasie to apprehend them: Hierome in the life of Hilerius, sheweth how a certaine virgin by Magicall enchantments was so ravished with the love of a young man, that shee was mad therewith.

QUEST. XIII. How divers wayes Satans power is limited.

These things before recited, Satan by his spirituall power is able to doe, yet with this limitation, that his power is restrained of God, that he cannot doe what he would: but sometime the Lord letteth him loose, and permitteth him to worke, either for the triall and probation of his faithfull servants, as is evident in Iob, or for the punishment of the wicked, as hee was a lying spirit in the mouthes of Ahabs false Prophets: for if Satan had free libertie to exercise his power, like as hee ran upon the heard of swine, and cast them all headlong into the sea, so hee were able to force men into many dangers, both of their bodies and soules: Ex Perer. Beside this absolute limitation and restraint of Satan when God doth stay him from working; there are two other kindes of inhibiting,* for neither hath Satan such free scope, to exercise his rage upon the faithfull, as hee hath power to worke upon the children of disobedience: for they are his proper subjects: and in them the God of this world blindeth their mindes, 1. Cor. 4.4. and they are taken in the snares of Satan at his pleasure, 2. Tim. 2.26. But over the faithfull hee hath no command, to delude, deceive, or seduce them, neither to invade them at all without speciall licence from God, as Iobs tentation sheweth And againe though the Lord for some causes best knowne to himselfe doe give him leave to trie his children, yet God so qualifieth his assaults and tentations, as that they effect not that which Satan intendeth, but are disposed of to that end, which the Lord propoundeth: as Satan desired to winnow Peter as wheate, and thorowly to have sifted him, but Christ upheld him that his faith failed not, Luk. 22.31, 32. and that his tentation tended not to his subversion.

Concerning this threefold limitation of Satan, I thinke it not amisse here to adde the sentence of Au/gustine. For the first, that Satan cannot doe what he would, but his power is restrained, he thus writeth: Si tantum posset nocere diabolus, quantum vult, non aliquis justorum remaneret: If the Devill might hurt, as much as he would, not any of the just should remaine* For the second, that Satans power is more free and absolute over the wicked, he thus saith: In fili is diffidentiae tanquam in suis mancipus operatur, quemadmodum homines in pecoribus: In the sonnes of unbeliefs he worketh, as in his owne vessels, as men upon their cattell. Againe: Sicut homo de pecore suo facit quod vult, de alieno pecore ut faciat, expectat sibi dari potestatem ab eo cujus est: As a man doth what hee will with his owne cattell, but with another mans he cannot doe any thing, but expecteth first that leave be given him of the owner*. For the third, that when the Lord permitteth Satan to assault his owne servants, yet he moderateth the action, that Satan worketh not his will upon him, but what he intendeth for their destruction, the Lord directeth to be onely for their probation, Au/gustine also thus inferreth: Vtitur Deus Angelis malis, non tantum ad puniendos malos, ut in Achab, sed etiam ad probandos & manifestandos bonos, sicut fecit in Iob: God useth evill Angels not only to punish the wicked, as in Achab, but to prove and make knowne the good, as he did in Iob*. Thus then is this point determined: 1. The Devill hath not now such power as before his fall: as Augustine saith: Sunt nobis potentiores, neque tamen tam firmi nunc sunt ac si in pristino statu permansissent: They are mightier than wee are, but yet not so strong as if they had remained in their former estate. 2. The good Angels have greater power in working upon the creatures than the evill. Augustine: In haec Angelis longe amplior potestas est bonis & malis quamvis & major bonis: The Angels both good and bad have greater power than man over these inferiour creatures, and yet the good have greater power than the evill. 3. Satans power is limited, he doth not what hee will. 4. The Devill hath more command over the wicked, than power over the righteous. 5. When hee practiseth against the righteous, yet his malice is restrained, God turneth the tentation to that end which shall be to his glory and the good of his children.

From hence may bee inferred two conclusions: first, that righteous and faithfull men are not altogether freed from the assaults and invasions of Satan: as S. Paul felt in himselfe the pricke of the flesh, the messenger of Satan, sent to buffet him, 2. Cor. 12. And as hee may trie them with spirituall tentations, so also he may, if God permit, torment them with corporall vexations, as Iobs example sheweth: and to this purpose Augustine concludeth well: Contra multiformes daemonum incursus, quis sua innocentia fidet, &c. * Who can trust upon his innocencie to be defended against so many incursions of the Devill seeing that they many times vex infants, then whom nothing is more innocent?

The other conclusion is, that although Satan may set upon the members of Christ, yet hee cannot hurt them: he may enter into the lists with them, but not overcome them: the Serpent may bite the heele, but Christ hath broken his head: and as our blessed Saviour saith of himselfe, The Prince of this world commeth and hath nought in me, Ioh. 14.30. So neither by Gods grace hath he any part in us, that are the members of Christ. Augustine doth notably touch this point in this manner: Fortior quis est aut corpore, &c. One may be said to be stronger either in body, as an horse is stronger than a man; or in minde,* as the reasonable creatures than the unreasonable; and in affection and disposition, as the just man more than the unjust; or in power and authority, as the Captaine stronger than the souldier: by the first of these wayes, potestas datur deterioribus, in meliores, the worse may have power given them over the better, for the prooffe of their patience: and so he concludeth: Principes illi in re inferiore superant, in potentiore superantur: fideles enim mente firmiores sunt, infirmiores corpore: Those principalities (he meaneth the spirituall powers) are superiours to us in things inferiour, but they are in things superiour weaker; the faithfull are stronger in minde and more infirme in body.

QUEST. XIV. Whether the Devill by his owne power can raise thunder and lightning.

Hitherto it hath beene shewed what Satan is able to doe in that immediate action of moving and transporting himselfe and other creatures from place to place: it followeth to shew what power he hath in the other mediate action, which is done by the meanes and instrument of the creatures. But here ariseth a question fit to bee discussed, whether the Devill by his owne power can raise tempests, windes, thunder, lightning, as Pererius thinketh he can by warrant of the story of Iob, where Satan brought downe lightning upon Iobs sheepe and raised winde, whereby the house was overwhelmed upon Iobs children: Perer. in 4. disput. in cap. 7. Num. 34. But herein I must needs dissent from Pererius, though I finde that Augustine inclineth to the same opinion: * for thus he writeth: In libro fidelissimo legimus diabolum potuisse ignem de coelo demittere: We reade in a most faithfull booke that the Devill could bring downe fire from heaven. But how is it then called the fire of God, if it were of Satans sending? therefore the text it selfe is against that opinion: some take it to bee called a fire of God, that is, a great and most vehement lightning, as things of excellencie are so called, as the wrestlings of God. Gen. 30.8. and the mountaines of God, Psal. 36.7. Iunius. But this sense in that place seemeth to be improper: for as here the lightning is called the fire of God, so Psal. 29. thunder is called the voice of God: I thinke that it will not be said, that here also it is so called because the thunder giveth a mighty voice, for this is there beside expressed, The voice of the Lord is mighty: but there the reason is shewed why it is called the voice of the Lord: because the God of glorie maketh it to thunder, vers. 3. Again, every where the Scripture maketh God the author of thunder and lightning and windes, as Psal. 107.25. Hee commandeth and raiseth the stormie winde: and Psal. 147.15. Hee sendeth forth his commandment upon the earth, and his word runneth very swiftly: he giveth snow like wooll. Psal. 148.7, 8. Praise the Lord &c. fire, and haile, snow, and stormy winde which execute his word: they execute Gods word and commandment onely: but if they might bee raised by the power of Satan, then should they execute his word. Further, the Lord saith, Iob. 38.25. Who hath divided the spoutes for the raine, as the way for the lightning of the thunders? and vers. 28. the Lord is said to bee the father of raine, and so consequently of the other meteors: If the Devill can cause raine, thunder, lightning, then he might be said to bee the father of it. Hence it is that the people of God have used to pray unto him, as the only author and giver of raine, and weather: as Samuel saith, *Is it not wheate har/hvest, * I will call unto the Lord and he shall send thunder and raine,* 1. Sam. 12.17. So Ambrose saith: Cum pluvia expeteretur ab omnibus quidam dixit neomenia dabit eam, &c. When raine was desired of all, one said, the new Moone will bring raine, although we were very greedy of raine, yet I would not such assertions to bee true, yea and I was much delighted that no raine was powred: donec precibus ecclesiae datus, manifestaret, non de initiis lunae sperandum esse, sed providentia & misericordia creatoris: untill it being at the prayers of the Church, did manifestly shew, that raine is not to be hoped for by the renewing of the Moone, but by the providence and mercy of the Creator.

Some thinke that the fire which came upon Iobs flocke did not come downe from heaven, but was otherwise kindled by Satan: but that the Devill made as though it came from Heaven, the more to terrifick Iob, when hee should see that even the heavens and God himselfe were set against him: Of this opinion seemeth to bee the author of the Commentary upon Iob under Origens name. *Non de coelo cecidit ignis ille, sed ita finxit nequissimus, &c. Non à Deo missus est sed tua iniquita • miserrime omnium diabole succensus est: * That fire came not downe from heaven, but so the wicked one fained: it was not sent of God, but kindled by thy wicked meanes, O thou Devill of all most miserable.* And afterward hee sheweth that Satan cannot bring fire from heaven: Dic ergo infoelix tunc super oves Iob ignem de coelo potuisti adducere? & cur non potuisti revocare illum ignem, quem advocavit Helias? Say then, couldest thou, O wretched one, bring fire upon Iobs sheepe, and why couldest thou not then keepe backe the fire which Helias called for upon the fifties, for they were thy ministers and servants? This authors judgement in this latter point wee willingly imbrace, but his first conceit seemeth not to bee agreeable to the text, which saith it was the fire of God, then not kindled by Satan.

Neither yet is it to be thought, that Satan had no hand in it, but that it was wholly Gods worke: for so God should be Satans Minister, in serving his turne and not Satan his. Wherefore my opinion is this, that this tempest of fire and winde were in respect of the naturall generation of them of the working and sending of the Creator. But Satan was Minister dejecti ignis: the minister of the fire cast downe, as Osi/ander saith, not the author, but the minister, yet not Gods minister in the originall worke, which proceeded of naturall causes, but in the execution: God caused the fire, but Satan brought it upon Iobs flocke: God raised the winde, but Satan drave it upon the foure corners of the house: for this we doubt not of, but that thunder and lightning and winde being once raised, that Satan hath power by Gods permission to carry and transport it from place to place: if the winde blow one way, he can turne it to another: but of himselfe by his spirituall power I deny that he can raise windes and tempests where none are, upon the reasons before alleaged. And therefore we may hold that to bee a fable, which Philostratus reporteth: how Apollonius saw two tunnes among the Indians, which being opened did send out the windes, and being shut they were restrained. So I conclude this place with that decree of the Councell, Braca•ens. 1. c. 8.  Si quis credit, quòd diabolus tonitrua, fulgura, tempestates, siccitates sua autoritate facit, sicut Priscillianus docet, anathema sit: If any man beleeve, that the Devill by his owne authority can make thunder, light/ning, tempests, drought, as Priscillianus holdeth, let him be accursed.*

QUEST. XV. Of the power of spirits in naturall workes.

NOW concerning the other actions of spirits, which is called mediate, they by applying, tempering and qualifying naturall causes, may bring forth strange effects: for the vertues and properties of herbes, plants, precious stones, mettals, minerals, are exactly knowne unto them, and but in part unto us. 1. As we see man by art, by composing things together, can effect rare and strange workes, as is evident in the graffing and incision of trees, in distilling of waters, compounding of medicines; so much more can spirits by apportioning and applying divers naturall causes together, produce strange things. 2. Againe, many times the excellencie of the artificer or workeman, addeth to the perfection of the worke beyond the vertue of the instrument as an axe serveth but to cut, but the cunning workeman, can therewith doe more than cut, as frame a bed, or table, and such like: so these spirituall powers by their great skill, can by naturall instruments and meanes, bring forth more excellent and strange works, than their naturall force serveth unto, because they are the instruments of Angels and spirits. Sic Thom. Aquin. cont. Gent. c. 103. 3. Augustine giveth instance of divers strange and admirable workes in nature, * as the naturall burning of certaine mountaines, as of Aetna in Cicilia, Vesuvius in Campania. It is found by experience, that certaine things putrifie not, as the flesh of a Peacoke, as Augustine saith, and coales, upon the which for the same cause Chersiphron founded the temple of Diana: lime boyleth with water and is quenched with oile: the adamant is so hard, that it cannot bee broken upon a smithes anvill: the Agrigentine salt melteth in the fire, and sparkleth in the water: there is said to bee a fountaine among the Garamants, that boileth in the night and freezeth in the day: the stone Asbestus burneth continually, being once set on fire, and is never extinct: the wood of a certaine figge tree in Egypt, sinketh in the water: in the Isle Tilo, the trees cast no leaves: in the Temple of Venus. there was a lampe that no tempest could put out: and Lodovicus Vives there reporteth, that a certaine lampe was found in a grave, that had burned above 1050. yeeres. At Alexandria in the Temple of Serapis, a certaine image of iron did hang in the top by reason of a certaine loadstone, which was inclosed in the rooffe. These and other such like strange things in nature Augustine remembreth. Some wee have knowledge of, but many secrets of nature are hid from us, but knowne unto the spirits who by this meanes doe worke wonders, only producing extraordinarie effects of nature. 4. Augustine further in another place sheweth the reason thereof in this manner: *Sunt occulta quaedam semina, arborum, plantarum, &c. in elementis, &c. There are certaine hid seeds, * of trees, plants in the elements: for as there are visible seeds, so there are hid seeds, which give unto the other their vertue: like as then the husbandman doth not create corne, but bringeth it out by his labour; so the evill Angels doe not create things but only doe draw forth those seeds which are unknowne to us, but well knowne to them: As Iacob did not create that variety of colour in the sheep, but by applying of particoloured rods brought it forth: sicut ergo matres gravidae sunt foetibus, it mundus gravidus est causis & seminibus nascentium. Then as mothers that are great with child, so the world is full of such seeds and causes of the beginning of things, which causes they better knowing then we, doe worke wonders: yea wee see that men, by the pounding of certaine herbes, and by such like meanes can cause wormes and other like small creatures to come forth. To this purpose Augustine.*

QUEST. XVI. What workes in naturall things are forbidden unto spirits to doe.

IT followeth now to shew, as wee have seene what things are possible to bee done by spirits, so what things are out of their reach, and beyond their power. 1. Touching the immediate action of spirits, which is by locall motion, the Devill cannot destroy the world, or any principall part thereof, nor subvert the order and course of nature: he cannot change the course of the heavens, or put the starres out of their place, neither although he may work some alteration in some part of the earth, the whole he cannot remove: these and such great workes he cannot doe: Perer. ex Aquinat. the reason is this, because this were to crosse the Creator, who by his providence, as by his power hee created the world, and all that is therein, so he preserveth the same, in that order which he hath appointed: as the Psalmist saith, The earth is the Lords and all that therein is: hee hath founded it upon the sea, and established it upon the flouds, Psalm 24.1, 2.

Secondly, concerning the other mediate action of spirits by the instrument and mediation of the creatures: these things are denied unto spirits. 1. They cannot create any thing of nothing, for that argueth an infinite power, and is peculiar unto God 2. The Devill being himselfe spirituall and without a bodil|ly substance, cannot immediatly change or transforme any materiall or corporall substance, without some other naturall cause comming betweene. 3. Neither can these spirits change any naturall thing, into an other naturall thing immediatly, without that subordination of nature, and preparation and disposition of the matter, which is observed in the generation of things: therefore hee cannot bring forth a beast without seed, nor a perfect beast all at once, because naturally both the generation of such things is by seed, and they receive their increase and growth not all at once, but by degrees and in time: therefore, when by the operation of Satan, lions and beares and such like creatures have beene made to appeare, ei|ther they were but phantasies, and no such things indeed, or were transported from some other place; and by this reason he cannot restore dead bodies to life, because the body being void of naturall heat and spirits, is not fit to entertaine the soule. 4. Neither can Satan hinder the operation of naturall things, if nothing be wanting, which is necess•ry for their working: And generally whatsoever alteration may be made by naturall causes, as wormes, and frogs and such like may come of p•refaction, these things may be atchieved and compassed by spirits: but such changes and transmutations, as cannot be done by natu|rall meanes,* as to turne a man into a beast, are not within the limits of Devils power. But when such things seeme to be done, they are in shew rather than truth, which may be done two wayes: either by so binding and blinding the inward phantasie and sense, as that may seeme to be which is not: or by fashio|ning some such shape and forme outwardly, and objecting it to the sense. Perer. Ex Aquinat.

QUEST. XVII. Whether Satan can raise the spirits and soules of the dead.

AMong other things which exceed the power of spirits, it is affirmed before, that they cannot raise the soules of men departed, as Necromancers doe take upon them to talke with the dead. 1. Let us see the vaine opinion of the heathen of this devilish Necromancy. Porphyrius writeth that the soules of wicked men are turned into Devils, and doe appeare in divers shapes, and the soules of them that want buriall doe wander about their bodies, and sometimes are compelled to resume their bodies: Likewise Hosthanes did professe and promise to raise what dead soever, and to bring them to talke with the li|ving: as Plinie writeth, lib. 30. cap. 2. who in the same place reporteth a farre more strange, or rather fal|bulous thing, that Appion the Grammarian should tell of a certaine herb called Cynocephalia, and of the Egyptians Osirites, which hath power to raise the dead, and that thereby he called Homers ghost, to in|quire of him touching his countrie and parents.* There were among the Gentiles certaine places famous for Necromancie where they received oracles from the dead, as they were made to beleieve: such was the Cymmerian oracle at the lake Avernam in Campania; such was Ericthone the Thessalian that raised up the dead to declare to Sextus Pompeius, the successe of the Pharsaliam battell. Tertullian writeth that the Nasomannae and Celtae used to consult with the dead at the tumbes of their parents, and of warlike men, lib. de anima. Such was the vaine opinion which the heathen had of this magicall art: which Plinie himselfe derideth as vaine and foolish, because Nero that wicked and bestiall Emperour, who was given over to all lewdnesse, yet could not be induced by Tyridaetes (whom he greatly advanced and gave him a Kingdome) soliciting him thereunto, and bringing Magitians unto him, to give any credite unto Necro[mancie, Plin. lib. 30. cap. 2.

*2. Now this vaine, or rather prophane profession of summoning of the dead and consulting with them, may evidently be convinced, to be nothing else but the Devils sophistry and forgery, for first the soule being separated from the body, hath no power to move or exercise any body, but that which it did give life unto, being the forme thereof: which being now dead, is an unapt organ or instrument for the soule: and therefore such soule being once departed from the body, can neither assume it, nor any other body. Secondly, the soules that are departed, are either in heaven at rest: and over the soules of the holy and righteous, which are in the hands of God, the Devill hath no command: or they are in hell, and from thence there is no returning againe; as is manifest in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, where it was denied unto the rich man, that any could goe from thence to be a messenger to the living.

*3. True it is, that the Lord by his power hath called againe into the bodies, and caused to appeare some that were departed: of the which we finde three sorts, some were restored to life, and their soules joyned againe to their bodies, as the daughter of Iairus, the widdow of Nains sonne, and Lazarus: others appeared in their true bodies, and came out of the graves, yet not to converse among the living, but to bee witnesses of the resurrection of Christ, Matth. 27.53. And yet wee reade of a more strange apparition of Moses and Helias in mount Tabor, where our blessed Saviour was transfigured, who appeared not out of their graves, but from heaven in their glorious persons. We deny not but that God hath and can at his pleasure cause the Saints departed to appeare unto men: but not out of purgatory, as Pererius imagineth, or to the end to bee patrons and helpers to his Church, for wee have alwayes the presence of Christ and of his Angels: neither yet can we beleieve, that so many Martyrs have appeared at their Tombes, as some Ecclesiasticall histories make mention: for as Christ is gone out of the world not to returne, till the day of judgement; so because he saith, where I am, there shall my minister bee, Ioh. 12.26. so wee cannot but thinke, that the Saints departed attending upon Christ, are not now to bee seene in the world. This then being granted, that the Lord hath power over the soules of men departed to command them to their bodlies for a time, for some speciall service, and to send them into the world at his pleasure: yet this is no warrant at all to thinke, that Satan or his ministers can doe the like: for seeing this is as great a miracle, for the spirits of the dead to appeare, as to raise the dead, to cause the borne blinde to see, or to doe any such great worke: and God being the only worker of miracles, this cannot fall under Satans jurisdiction. Such visions then and apparitions, when dead men appeare in their bodily shape, though not with true bodies, and in their wonted apparell, counterfeiting their voice and behaviour while they lived, are to bee held meere illusions of Satan, that can transforme himselfe into an Angell of light: so I conclude this point with that saying of Tertullian: Et si quosdam revocavit Dei virtus in documentum juris sui, non id cir/co communicabitur fidei & audaciae Magorum, & falaciae somniorum, & licentiae Poetarum, &c. Although the power of God hath called some againe,* to shew his dominion, yet this power is not communicated to the confidence and boldnesse of Magicians, to the deceitfulnesse of dreames, or to the libertie of Poets.

QUEST. XVIII. Why Satan doth counterfeit the spirits of the dead.

THE Devils then doe counterfeit the spirits and soules of the dead, as Chrysostome sheweth, Homil. 29. in Matth. and August. lib. 10. de civit. Dei cap. 12. for these causes: 1. By this meanes the Devill more strongly deceiveth, seeing men are ready to heare their parents and friends departed. 2. By this subtilty the Devill perswadeth men, that hell is not so fearfull a place, nor so enclosed, but that there may bee a respite and going forth. 3. Thus that opinion is nourished of the passing of soules from one body to another, as Pythagoras taught. 4. And it commeth also to passe, that the living are afraid of the dead, whom they imagine doe appeare unto them, and so to please and reconcile them, they superstitiously wor|ship them, and offer unto them. Ex Perer. 5. Tertullian addeth further, that these apparitions bred a con|ceit, that all wicked men goe not to hell, but their spirits wander up and downe. 6. Et iudicii & resurre|ctionis fidem turbant: And they doe hinder the faith of the last judgement and of the resurrection: if they could assume their bodies being dead, which the Christian faith holdeth to sleepe in the grave untill the resurrection.

QUEST. XIX. Of the divers kindes of miracles.

NOW to proceed and draw neere to the principall question in hand concerning these wonders wrought by the Egyptian Magicians, two things in generall are briefly to be touched: first concer|ning the divers kindes of miracles, then of the difference betweene true miracles and false. Concerning the first: A miracle is taken three wayes, first simply and absolutely in respect of any nature whatsoever: so there is no miracle: for unto God the author and framer of nature, to whom all things are possible, there is nothing strange or miraculous: that is called a miracle, which either excel|leth ones power or understanding: but God both knoweth all things and can doe all things. 2. A miracle is called in respect of men: those things which are unusuall, and whose causes they are ignorant of, men use to wonder at: and in this sense, not only spirits, and their ministers the Sorcerers, but wise and cunning men may doe miraculous and strange workes. 3. But properly that is a miracle which exceedeth the nature and power of things created, and is beside the ordinary course of naturall things.

And this kinde of miracle last spoken of is effected three wayes: 1. The miracle is either in the thing, that is made or done, which nature can by no meanes bring forth: as for the body of man to bee made immortall, and to remaine in the heavens: and this is the highest degree of miracles. 2. Or else the mi|racle is in that, out of the which a thing is made or brought forth, as to make a thing of nothing, to give fight unto a man that is borne blind, and such like: and this is the next degree of miracles. 3. Or the mi|racle is seene in the manner: as a Physitian may heale a man, but not of a sudden, or without m•dicine: so the spirits may bring forth Serpents, or other vermine out of wood, but not immediatly. Now the wonders wrought by Magicians are not properly of any of these sorts of miracles: but they are either cousening and counterfeit trickes, or procured by naturall meanes. Ex Pererio.

QUEST. XX. Of the difference betweene true miracles and false.

FOr the second: true miracles differ from false these five wayes: 1. In respect of the power whereby they are wrought, for true miracles are wrought by the power of God, in whose name the Prophets and Apostles and other servants of God did shew forth signes: but Magicians doe bring forth their won|ders, either by the force of naturall things, or by the helpe of Satan. 2. They differ in the qualitie of their persons that are the agents and ministers: for they which worke in Gods name are holy and vertuous men, and if any of them doe sometime effect any miraculous thing, they doe it for the confirming of the faith, or to some other good end: but Magicians and Sorcerers are most wicked and impure men. 3. The third difference is in the worke it selfe: for the signes and wonders of Magicians, are either counterfeit, or unprofitable, but true miracles are done in truth and upon great necessity and utility. 4. They differ in the manner of working: for true miracles are done by lawfull, holy and godly meanes, as by fasting, prayer, invocation of the name of God: but Magicians worke by enchantment, by words and signes and other superstitious rites, 5. The end also is divers: for Sorcerers worke wonders, either for their profit and honour, to make the people seeke unto them, as Simon Magus did in Samaria, Acts 8. or to confirme the people in errour and superstition: but the end of true miracles is to seeke the glory of God, the edifying of his Church, and the propagation of the faith. Ex Perer. 6. Hereunto may be ad|ded the sentence and judgement of Augustine: Aliter miracula faciunt magi, aliter boni Christiani, ali|ter* mali Christiani: Magi per privatos quosdam contractus, boni Christiani per publicam justitiam, mali Christiani per signa publicae justitiae, &c. Magicians doe worke miracles one way, good Christians another, and evill Christians another: Magicians by private contracts (with the spirits) good Christians by publike justice (that is, by the power and authority of God) evill Christians, by the signes of publike justice: As di|vers that followed not Christ, nor yet beleevd in him, yet in the name of Christ wrought miracles: as evill and disordered and discarded souldiers may use the ensignes and banner of the Captaine to terrifie their enemies.

QUEST. XXI. Whether the sorcerers brought forth true serpents.

IT followeth now to shew, whether these serpents, which the Magicians made, were true serpents, or only counterfeited for the time: 1. Some thinke that it was a true and reall conversion of the Magi|cians rods into serpents, and that it was done by the power of God, and that Satan did craftily challenge unto himselfe Gods worke: Simler. but the text is against this conjecture: they are said to doe the like by their enchantments, vers. 11. but the power of God giveth no place to enchantments. 2. Others thinke that they were true serpents so converted by the power of Satan: so August. lib. 3. de Trinitat. cap. 7. and in other places: and Theodoret quæst. 18. in Exod. Thom. Aquin. Lyranus, Thostatus, Burgens. Cajetane: of the same opinion seemeth Philo to be, lib. de vita Moses: their reasons are these: 1. Be|cause the Magicians are said to doe in like manner with their rods, and in the same phrase their rods are said to be turned into serpents, as Aarons rod is. 2. And againe, afterward the Sorcerers could not bring out lice, as they had serpents and frogs before: their impotencie was not, in not shewing shapes or shewes, but in not being able to bring forth the things themselves. sic Cajetan: and Moses serpents de|voured their serpents, they were therefore true serpents; if they had beene otherwise, it is like Moses would have discovered their counterfeit dealing: sic Perer.

Page 70

Contra. 1. They did the like in outward shew and appearance: and the same phrase is used of both, because to the sight and view they were so changed: and the Scripture useth to speake of things as they appeare, not as they are: as he that appeared unto the witch at Endor is called Samuel, yet being the De|vill in his likenesse and habit, 1. Sam. 28. and Daniel saith, the man Gabriel, chap. 9. because hee appeared in the shape of a man. 2. The Sorcerers were restrained in their counterfeit dealing, that they should not be able any more to deceive by their phantasticall and imaginary shapes. 3. Rupertus doth gather the contrary, that the devouring of the Sorcerers serpents by Aarons serpent, sheweth that they were but counterfeit: devorari ergo & devorare non po•nerunt: because they could not devoure, but were devoured. 4. And in this sufficiently Moses discovereth their sleights, in that his serpent devoureth theirs.

Now further against this opinion, this speciall argument may be urged, that God only hath power to change and convert one substance into another,* especially a dead thing into a living body, a peece of wood into a serpent: as it was decreed in the Avansicane Councell, in this manner; Quisquis credit aliquid posse fieri, aut aliam creaturam in melius aut deterius mutari aut transformari in aliam speciem vel si/militudinem, nisi ab ipso creatore, qui omnia fecit, proculdubio infidelis est & pagano deterior: Whosoever be|leeveth that any thing can be made, or any creature to be changed into the better or worse, or transformed into any shape or likenesse, but by the creator, which hath made all things, is undoubtedly an infidell, and worse than a Pagan. To this argument divers answers are framed. 1. Cajetane saith that the Devill might use some naturall meanes secretly, by the which serpents might be made out of those rods, and all the time, while the Sorcerers were called together, Satan made a way for that worke and prepared the matter. Contra. There is no naturall meanes to make a rod a serpent immediatly, and especially to bring forth serpents at once, of perfect bignes, neither was there any such preparation of matter, for they were rods in the Sorcerers hands, not changed into any other preparative matter fit to engender serpents. 2. Cajetane answereth againe, that although the rod of it selfe was no fit matter for such a worke, yet by the excellencie of the agent and worker, which were the spirits, it might bring forth serpents of a sudden. Contra. The excellency of the agent, doth adde to the manner of the worke, as to doe it sooner, or better, it addeth no to the matter: Angels working by naturall meanes doe it more admirably, than nature can worke it of it selfe, but beyond the strength of nature, or against the course of nature they can doe nothing. 3. Perrinius misliking both these answers of Cajetane, yet consenting to his opinion, for the truth of this miracle, addeth a third: that Satan fetched those serpents, and suddenly transported them into this place, and suborned them in stead of the rods. Cont. But the text saith the rods were turned into serpents, the serpents then were not brought from any other place, but there changed, or seemed so to be. Again, as here they turne their rods into serpents, so afterward did they change water into bloud, but that was not by transportation: for from whence could Satan convey such abundance of true lively bloud which is not ingendred but in the body, neither have they power to alter substances: it was therefore done by collusion, and so was this. 3. Wherefore the founder opinion is, that those serpents which the Egyptian Sorcerers brought forth, were only such in shew not indeed, or in truth: so Iosephus writeth, that the Magicians serpents, In speciem ac similitudinem verorum serpentium reptasse, did creepe in shew and likeness of true serpents, lib. 2. antiquit. cap. 15. And Iustinus Martyr, Those things which the Magicians did by the helpe of the Devill, spectantium oculis praestigias offundebant: did dazle and deceive, and as it were cast mist before the eyes of the beholders. quæst. Orthodox. 16. Tertullian, Mosis veritas mendacium Magorum devoravit, Moses trueth devoured their lie. lib. de anima. Gregor. Nyssen saith, they were visus deceptione serpentes: serpentes onely in the mistaking of the fight. Ambrose calleth it, commentitiam emulationem: a fained emulation, in cap. 3.2. Epist. ad Timoth. Hierome saith, imitabantur signa quae faciebat Moses, sed non erant in veritate. They did imitate the signes which Moses did, but they were not in truth. lib. 2. advers. Iovin. The reasons of this opinion before alleaged are these; 1. because solius divinae potestatis est: It belongeth onely to the power of God, to convert a dead substance into a living creature: Rupert. 2. Moses true serpents devoureth the other, which Iosephus and Ferus urge as an argument that they were imaginary. 3. Other signes which they did, were only imaginary, as the turning of water into bloud, as is before shewed, and so this also.

QUEST. XXII. By what meanes Satan deluded Pharaoh with a shew of serpents.

THIS being then thus resolved upon, that those were but serpents in shew, and to the outward sense: this counterfeit signe might be wrought two wayes by the operation of Satan: 1. Either by the confounding the inward sense and phantasie of the beholders, that they imagined to see that which was not: as sicke men of phrensie doe conceive they see strange sights: and there is no question, but that the Devill can effect, whatsoever by diseases or other naturall meanes may be wrought. 2. Or else, which is more like, Satan did forme such a shape and shew of spirits: as before is shewed, that the Devill hath such power by illusions, apparitions and phantasies to deceive: as the Apostles seeing Christ walking upon the seas, supposed it had beene a spirit, Phantasma, that is, a phantasticall apparition, Mark. 6.49. Ex Perer which sheweth that such illusions were usuall.

QUEST. XXIII. Why the Lord suffered the Sorcerers of Egypt to shew such contrary signes.

NOW the Lord suffered the Magicians thus by their lying signes to contend with Moses, for divers weighty causes. 1. That by this meanes Moses the faithfull servant of God, and true Prophet, might be the better knowne, as darknesse maketh the light more glorious, and sicknesse health: Chrysostome. So Saint Paul saith, There must bee Heresies, that they which are approved among you might bee knowne. 1. Cor. 11.29. 2. That Moses might be freed from the imputation of being a Sorcerer, which thing some have not beene affraid to object: and a difference might appeare betweene his working by the power, and in the name of God, and of the Sorcerers working by the power of Satan: Rupert. 3. That thereby it might be made manifest, how the truth hath alwayes gainesayers, and is never without contradictions and oppositions, as Lucifer opposed himselfe to God in heaven, Cain to Abel in earth, Ismael was against Isaack: the true Prophets were molested by the false. Thus Saint Paul collecteth that as Iannes and Iam/bres withstood Moses, so these also resist the truth, 2. Tim. 3.8. Perer. 4. Hereby also it is manifest, how according to the common saying, the Devill is Gods ape; that he taketh upon him to imitate and coun|terfeit Gods workes: that therefore wee should examine such workes and signes, whether they be of God, that wee be not deceived, and as the Apostle saith, cry every spirit, 1. Ioh. 4.1. 5. Another reason is, that seeling the Devill by his ministers can doe such strange things; that the servants of God bee not offended, when thy see wonders and signes to be done in the false Church by Heretikes, or Idolaters, the instru|ments of Satan. 6. This was permitted for the triall of the faith and constancie of Moses and Aaron, and the rest of the Hebrewes, whether because of the contrary signes, they would doubt of the truth of Gods promises: Perer. 7. And for the further hardning of Pharaohs heart, as hee had deserved by his former sinnes, that God might take occasion thereby to worke all his wonders in Egypt: Simler. Ferus, Borrh.

QUEST. XXIV. Whether Pharaoh being deceived by the Magicians false signes, be thereby excusable.

BUT seeing these Magicians by their Satanicall craft, doe so strongly deceive, whether is Pharaoh to be excused, that he doth not acknowledge Moses to be the Minister and Prophet of God? To this the answer is, that this notwithstanding Pharaoh is not to be held excusable, because there are evident signes to have discerned betweene the working of the one, and of the other, so that Pharaoh could not plead ignorance. To omit the differences before noted, Quest. 20. how that true miracles differ from false, in the power of working, in the quality of persons that worke, the worke it selfe, the manner and the end: which differences are not so easie to be discerned of all; there were besides most notorious workes that discovered the hypocrisie and weaknesse of those Sorcerers. 1. Moses serpent devoured theirs, which required a greater power. 2. They could counterfeit the like plagues, but they could not remove the true plagues, as Moses did. 3. They faile in their working, they could not bring forth lice, nor counterfeit any of the plagues following. 4. The plagues doe fall upon the Sorcerers themselves, chap. 9.11. 5. Lastlly, they themselves doe give way, and confesse it was the finger of God. By all these arguments Pharaoh might well have perceived, that they were but counterfeit workers: and that Moses onely was the true Prophet, and they imposters and deceivers. Perer. In the next place, the plagues which were sent upon Egypt come to be handled, and first certaine generall questions are to be premitted.

Certaine generall questions concerning the plagues of Egypt.

QUEST. XXV. Of the number of the plagues of Egypt.

FIRST for the number of these plagues: it is certaine they were these ten, the turning of the water into blood, the bringing of frogs, of lice, of swarmes of noysome flies, the murrane of cattell, biles and bot|ches, thunder, haile and lightning, grasshoppers, the thicke darknesse, the slaughter of the first borne. 2. These plagues in other places of Scripture, are neither rehearsed in the same number, nor order; as Psal. 78. there are omitted the third of lice, the sixth of botches, the ninth of darknesse; and in the 115. Psal. two are passed over in silence, the first of the murrane of cattell, and the sixt of the botches. 3. Hence it is evident, that Austen is deceived, who thinketh that there were more than ten plagues: because ac|cording to the Septuagint, whom the vulgar

Latine followeth, it is said, Psal. 78.46. He gave their fruits to the mildew, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ; and vers. 47. He killed their wild fig-trees with the hoary frost; and vers. 48. Hee gave their possession to the fire. But these three doe belong to the other plagues, for in the first plague according to the originall, we must reade, He gave their fruits to the caterpillar, for the word is chasil: In the next, the word chanamal signifieth hailestones; so this is referred to the seventh plague of lightning and haile, as the other to the eight plague of locusts: and in the third place, the best reading is, Hee gave their sheep lareshaphim, to burning coales, that is, to the thunderbolts, which was part of the seventh plague.

QUEST. XXVI. The greatnesse of the plagues of Egypt, how the Egyptians were every way punished.

FURther let it be observed, that the Egyptians were every way plagued. Philonoteth that the number of ten signifieth perfection, and so their plagues were perfect and absolute. True it is that their punishment was indeed absolute: howsoever the observation of the number seemeth somewhat curious: 1. they were punished by all kind of creatures, as by the elements, the earth, the water, ayre, fire: by living creatures, as frogges, lice, caterpillars, flies: by the starres, in that the light was restrained: they were punished by men, as Moses and Aaron that were instruments of the plagues: And by the Angels the Ministers of the plagues, Psalme 78.44. 2. They were punished in all things wherein they delighted, in all manner of fruit, in their cattell, in their bodies, in their children. 3. They were punished in all their senses, in their sight by that thicke darkenesse, and the horrible sights which appeared, as it is noted, Wisdom. 17.6, 7. in their taste, by the waters turned into blood, and their thirst: in their smelling, by the stinch of the frogges, and of their ulcers: in their feeling, by the grieffe of their ulcers, and the biting of flies and vermin: in their hearing, by the terrible thunder: in their inward sense, by feare and terror. And to make up the full measure of their punishments, they were overthrowne and drowned in the red sea. Ex Perer.

Page 72

QUEST. XXVII. Where the plagues of Egypt and to what place they were first sent.

Concerning the place: 1. all Egypt generally was smitten, chap. 3.20. which is called the land of Cham, Psalme 105. because Mizraim, which was the father of the Egyptians, (and in Hebrew Egypt is so called, Mizraim) was one of Chams sonnes, Gen. 10. But whereas it is said, Psalme 78.12. Hee did marvellous things in the land of Zohan, which the Septuagints call Tanis, there was the Kings seat, and there first the plagues began: the head is first smitten, then the members, and from thence the plagues passed over all Egypt. And it is said in the fields of Zohan, because all Egypt was as a plaine. Ex Perer.

QUEST. XXVIII. At what time the plagues were sent upon Egypt.

FOR the time when the plagues were sent: 1. Iulius Africanus is deceived, who thinketh that Egypt was plagued at the same time, when Ogyges flood was: but that cannot be, for he maketh that flood 1020. yeeres before the Olympiades, which began in the eighth yeere of Achaz King of Judah: unto which time, from the plagues of Egypt there are not above 763. yeeres. 2. Paulus Orosius commeth neerer the truth. lib. 1.9.10. that these plagues came upon Egypt in the time of Deucalions flood, when most part of the inhabitants of Thessalia were destroyed, a few escaping unto the hill Pernassus, where Deucalion rigned. About the same time the Sunne parched the world with burning heate, not onely in Aethiopia and other hill countries, but in Scythia, and others under cold climates: which gave occasion unto the Poets fabulous fiction of Phaeton. 3. These plagues were from the beginning of the world 2483. yeeres; from Noahs flood 797. before the battell of Troy, which happened in the time of Sampson or Heli, 356. yeeres; before the first Olympiade 763. yeeres, before the building of Rome 789. yeeres. Ex Pererio.

QUEST. XXIX. In what time all the plagues were finished.

FOR the time how long the ten plagues continued, and in what space they were finished: 1. The Hebrewes thinke, whom Genebrard followeth, that these plagues were all sent upon Egypt, not in lesse time than of twelve moneths, with some respite betweene every plague. 2. Some thinke that these plagues continued the space of ten moneths, taking beginning when the Sunne entred into Cancer; about the twelfth of June, and ending in the vernall equinoctiall, about the fourteenth of March, when the first borne were slaine: the first miracle in the turning of the waters they would have done, when Nilus be|ginne|th to increase, which is when the Sunne entreth into Cancer, and so Nilus continueth in his increas|ing forty dayes, and forty dayes more it decreaseth: eighty dayes therefore after the first plague, when Nilus being abated leaveth a great slime behind, they thinke the second plague of frogges was sent. Borrh. But these conjectures are very uncertaine and improable: for first, whereas during the first plague they are said to have digged round about the river, chap. 7.17. this could they not have done in the overflow|ing of Nilus. 2. Though the slime had beene a fit matter naturally for the procreation of frogs, yet their plagues were extraordinary and beyond the worke of nature: and the text sheweth that the frogs came not out of the slime, but out of the river, chap. 8.3. 3. Beside, if there had beene such respite given Pha|raoh betweene plague and plague, the hand of God had not beene so strong upon Pharaoh, as now when they followed one in the necke of another. 3. Pererius bringeth them all within the compasse of 27. dayes, or about a moneth, which hee doth thus collect: the first plague of converting the waters into bloud, continued seven dayes, chap. 7.25. then upon the eight day came the frogs, and the next day after, chap. 8.9. which was the ninth, they were taken away: upon the tenth day the lice were sent: upon the eleventh day, the swarmes of noisome flies are threatned; upon the next day being the twelfth, they are sent, and the morrow after they are taken away, chap. 8.29. which was the 13. day: upon the 14. the fifth plague of the murrane of cattell is threatned, the morrow after it is sent, chap. 9.6. which was the 15. day: upon the 16. day, the sixt plague of botches and sores followeth: the 17. day, the 7. plague of haile is threatned, sent the next day, chap. 9.18. which was the 18. day, and taken away the next, which was the 19. day: on the 20. day the 8. plague of grasshoppers is threatned, sent the 21. day, and removed the 22. day: the three dayes following the thicke darknesse came, chap. 10.22. the 23.24. and 25. dayes: upon the 26. day Pharaoh expelled Moses from his presence, and about midnight following, the beginning of the 28. day, the first borne were slaine. So that from the first plague to the last, there was not above a moneth: the last plague then of the slaughter of the first borne falling upon the 14. day of Nisan, the first moneth of the Hebrewes, the first began about the middle of Adar, the last moneth, which answereth to our February, as Nison doth unto March. Pererius. And that it is more likely, that all these plagues came together in the space of one moneth, rather than of twelve moneths, it may thus appeare▪ first, be|cause the plagues following one immediatly upon another, without any pause or respite, they were so much the more grievous, and this was the strong hand of God, whereby Pharaoh was constrained to let Israel goe, chap. 6.1. Secondly, the plagues were such as Egypt never saw, nor felt before, chap. 9.24. and 10.14. and if they had continued long, the Egyptians could not have endured. Thirdly, whereas the Israelites spent full forty yeeres in the wilderness, Iosh. 5.6. and Mos|s was 80. yeere old, chap. 7.7. before any of the plagues began, and 120. yeere old, in the end of the 40. yeeres travell in the wilderness, Deut. 34. much time could not bee spent in Egypt after the hand of God, by the ministry of Moses, began to worke upon them.

QUEST. XXX. Whether the good Angels or bad were the ministers of the Egyptian plagues.

Concerning the author of these plagues, there is no question, but that they came from God, who thereby did most justly punish the Egyptians, for the unjust vexation of his people: for so the Lord saith, He will smite Egypt with all his wonders, chap. 3.20. But there ariseth a greater doubt, who were the ministers of these plagues, whether the good angels, or evill. 1. Genebrard thinketh because it is said, Psalm 78.49. By the sending of evill Angels, that the evill spirits were executioners of these plagues. But Augustines reason is very strong against this opinion; for in the two first plagues, which were coun|terfeited by the Sorcerers, it is evident, that the evill Angels were doers, by whom the Magicians wrought, they certainly were not the ministers of the true plagues, for then as he saith, Angeli mali ex utra{que} parte consisterent, the evill Angels should be of both sides, hinc illos affligentes, inde fallentes: affl•cting the Egyptians on the side, and deceiving them on the other:* If the evill Angels then were not ministers of the first plagues, neither were they used in the rest: and beside we have a more evident argument, that when in the third plague the Sorcerers attempted to doe the like they could not: the Lord inhibited and restrained the evill spirits, that they should worke no longer by their ministers the Sorcerers. If the Lord restrained their power, then he loosed it not, or used it. 2. Wherefore they are called evill Angels, not in respect of their office but of the effect, because they were messengers and ministers of evill plagues: Perer. 3. But I thinke with Iunius▪ that it is not necessary here to understand Angels for those ministring spirits: but the word malac•, may here signifie messengers, and is referred to Moses and Aaron, that were the mes|sengers and ministers of these plagues: And this interpretation is confirmed by two reasons: because in this historie it is directly expressed, that most of the plagues were procured by Moses and Aaron, as the three first by Aaron, the sixt, seventh, eight and ninth by Moses: the fourth and fift, though it be not ex|pressed, yet it may bee supposed to bee done by the same instruments▪ and againe that place, Psalm 105.26. may helpe to expound this; Hee sent Moses his servant, and Aaron whom he had chosen, they shewed among them the message of his signes. The messengers then and ministers of these evill plagues, were Mo|ses and Aaron. 4. Yet I deny not, but that God used also therein the ministry of his Angels: as it is evi|dent in the last plague of the destruction of the first borne, Exod. 12.3. but the meaning of this place in the Psalme is more properly referred to Moses and Aaron. And although God useth both the ministry of good Angels in punishing the wicked, as in the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrha, and of the evill sometime to trie the righteous, as in the temptation of Iob, much more in judging the wicked: yet in this place for the reasons before alleaged the good Angels are thought rather to have beene used than the evill.

QUEST. XXXI. For what ends and causes the Lord wrought such wonders in Egypt.

THE ends wherefore it pleased the Lord, thus to judge Egypt, and to shew his mighty workes were di|vers. 1. That the Lord might take just revenge of the Egyptians, for the unrighteous vexing and opl|pressing of his people, Exod. 4.23. 2. That they by this meanes might bee forced to let Israel goe, Exod. 6.1. 3. That Gods power might bee knowne to all the world, which exceedeth the law of nature, or na|turall things; and that his justice might be made manifest in judging the wicked: so the Lord saith: For th•• cause have I appointed thee, to shew my power in thee, and to declare my name throughout all the world, Exod. 9.16. 4. That the Hebrewes and people of God hereby might perceive the singular care and love of God toward them, as Moses urgeth, Deut. 4.20. The Lord hath taken you and brought you out of the iron f•rnace, out of Egypt. 5. That the fame of these great workes might keepe other nations in feare and awe of them, by whom they should passe, that they should not molest or trouble them, neither that the He|b•ewes should be affraid of them: so Rahab saith, Iosh. 2.10. We have heard how the Lord dried up the wa|ter of the red sea before you, when yee came out of Egypt. To this purpose the Priests of the Philistims thus say: Wherefore harden yee your hearts, as the Egyptians and Pharaoh hardened their hearts▪ when he wrought wonderfully among them? 1. Sam. 6 6. 6. That the Hebrewes by the remembrance of these great workes, should bee kept in obedience to the law of God, as it is therefore set before the ten Commandements, Exod. 20. 7. That the just confusion and subversion of the Egyptians might bee made manifest to all men, that hardened their hearts notwithstanding such grievous plagues. Perer.

QUEST. XXXII. Who were exempted from the plagues of Egypt.

FURther it will be inquired, who were exempted from these plagues in Egypt, whether they were generally upon all. 1. It is certaine, that all the Israelites that dwelt in the land of Goshen were exempted: wherein three things are to be considered: first, that although this exception and reservation bee expressed only in five plagues, as in the swarmes of noisome flies and beasts, chap. 8.23. in the murrane of the cattell, chap. 9.7. in the haile, chap. 9.26. the thicke darknesse, chap. 20.23. and in the destruction of the first borne. chap. 12.23. Yet by the same analogy, it is to be understood, that the Israelites were also freed from the rest of the plagues. Secondly, mention is first made of this privilege in the fourth plague, when the Sorcerers were hindered from working, for this cause, that whereas before they tried their skill in their counterfeit signes in the land of Goshen (for in all Egypt the plagues overspread) and from thence it is like that they had the water which they turned into bloud) now it is insinuated, that they had no longer power to doe any such thing, no not in the land of Goshen, as they had before. Thirdly, not onely the persons of the people of Israel were free, as Exod. 12.23. from the death of the first borne, but even their cattell, chap. 9.7. and their ground, the land of Goshen where they dwelt, chap. 8.22.

2. Another sort is likely also to have beene exempted from these plagues: namely such strangers as sojourned of other nations in Egypt: for the story runneth upon the Egyptians, that they were plagued▪ because they only were guilty of the wrong done to the Lords people: the other that were not accessory, might either withdraw themselves out of Egypt, seeing the hand of God so heavy upon them, or they might through the mercy of God be spared.

3. Whereas these plagues did most of all light upon Pharaoh▪ and next upon the Ministers and Officers of his Kingdome, as the chiefe authors of the affliction of the Israelites, and then generally upon all the common sort of people, who executed the Kings cruell edict for the drowning of the Hebrewes children, Exod. 2.23. yet wee are to thinke, that although in other generall plagues, which came upon Israel, many righteous persons did suffer in the calamity of the City, as in the destruction of Jerusalem, and the Babylonian captivity▪ yet that in these universall plagues they that feared God of the Egyptians were spared: as is expresly mentioned in the seventh plague, that they which feared the word of the Lord among the servants of Pharaoh, were delivered from it, chap. 9.20. that hereby it might appeare, that the Egyptians were punished for their cruelty towards the Lords people. Perer.

QUEST. XXXIII. Whether the Egyptians which inhabited with Israel in the land of Goshen were exempted from the plagues.

BUT it is more doubted of the Egyptians, which dwelt among the Israelites in the land of Goshen, for they were mingled together, as is evident chap. 3.22. whether they were freed from these generall plagues. 1. Thostatus thinketh that they also tasted of all the plagues, as well as the rest of Egypt, because their hatred was no lesse towards the Lords people. But in some plagues, as in the fourth of the swarmes, and in the seventh of the haile, it is affirmed that there were none in the land of Goshen: If the Country were freed, then the inhabitans also: and though these Egyptians that cohabited were haters of them also, yet the Lord might spare them for his peoples sake: because some plagues should also have touched the Israelites, if they had fallen upon their neighbours, as the haile and lightning. 2. Augustine thinketh, that the Egyptians inhabiting Goshen, were free from all the plagues, but the last upon the first borne, because this was upon their persons, the other upon the ground it selfe, wherein Goshen was privileged, quaest. 44. in Exod. But this is not like neither: for in the fifth plague only the cattell and beasts of Is|rael are preserved from the murrane, chap. 9.4. the beasts of the Egyptians, though dwelling among Is|rael, cannot bee said to bee the cattell of Israel. 3 Wherefore this distinction and difference must bee made, that all those plagues which might be inflicted upon the persons, or substance of the Egyptians, without any damage or annoyance to the Israelites, among whom they dwelt, did as well fall upon them, as other Egyptians: as such plagues as their persons were smitten with, as the sixth of botches and sores, and the tenth of the first borne: as also which fell upon their cattell, as the fifth plague, likewise the ninth plague of darknesse come upon the Egyptians also, who, as it is observed, Wisdome 18.1. did heare the Israelites, but saw them not: even the Egyptians, which were neighbours to the Israelites, felt of that plague also: But from the other plagues, which were an annoyance to the ground it selfe, and to all the inhabitants, even the Egyptians also were freed, that cohabited with them: as from the plague of waters turned into bloud: for herein the Egyptians there dwelling could not be punished, but the harme would likewise redound to the Israelites; such were the plagues of the frogs, lice, swarmes, haile, grashoppers, which were noisome to all the inhabitants where they fell: and in some of these plagues it is expressed directly, that the land of Goshen was free, as chap. 8.22. in the 4. plague of the swarmes, and in the 7. of the haile, chap. 9.26.

QUEST. XXXIV. Of the diversity in the manner of the plagues.

The last of these generall considerations is, both of the divers manner of inflicting these plagues, and of Pharaohs divers behaviour, that is, for the diversity of the plagues: some of them were sent upon their persons, as the 6.9. and 10. some upon their cattell, as the fifth, some upon their fruits, as the selventh, some upon the water and the earth, as the rest: some continued seven dayes, as the first, some three, as the ninth, most of them but one, as is shewed before, Quest. 29. Some of them are sent without any warning given before, as the third plague, chap. 8.16. and the sixth, chap. 9.8. and the ninth, chap. 10.20. Some plagues are expresly mentioned to have beene removed by the prayer of Moses: as the second of frogs, chap. 8.9. the fourth of swarmes, chap. 8.30. the seventh of haile and lightning, chap. 9.33. the eight of the grashoppers, chap. 10.19. the other plagues have no such note. But it is like that when a new plague came the former ceased.

QUEST. XXXV. Of Pharaohs divers and variable behaviour.

2. AS touching Pharaohs behaviour, it was very variable and divers: at the first comming of Moses, he was at defiance with God, and said hee knew him not, chap. 5. At the first, the third, the fift, and sixth plague he was nothing at all mollified, but his heart was hardned still: in the second, the fourth, the seventh, the eight and ninth he somewhat yeelded, and made some semblance of repentance: yet all was but in hypocrisie.

So in dismissing the people of Israel hee was of divers mindes: first hee would give them leave only to sacrifice in the land of Egypt, chap. 8.25. then he would grant them to goe into the wilderness to sacri|fice there, but they must not goe farre away, chap. 8.28. afterward he would let the men only goe, neither the women, nor children, chap. 10. ver. 10.11. then he giveth leave for the children to goe also, but their sheep and cattell should stay behind, chap. 10.24. at the last he is content they shall all goe with all they had, chap. 12. Perer.

QUEST. XXXVI. Why the Lord sent divers plagues upon Pharaoh not destroying him at once.

NOW it pleased God, whereas he could have destroyed Pharaoh and all the Egyptians at once, yet to multiply his plagues, for these causes, 1. That Gods mercy might appeare in giving unto them time of repentance, and not consuming them together. 2. And by this variety of plagues and judgements the omnipotent power of God is set forth. 3. This also addeth to the affliction and misery of the Egyptians, that were not cut off at one blow, but by this diversity of plagues, their punishment was made so much the more grievous.

4 Hereby also Pharaohs obstinacie and hardnesse of heart is made manifest, that could by no meanes relent notwithstanding so many plagues.

Of the first particular plague, of turning the waters into blood.

QUEST. XXXVII. Why Aaron is sometime the minister of the plagues and not Moses.

Vers. 20. HE lift up the rod. That is, Aaron. 1. Not as the Hebrewes, because it was not meete that Mo/ses, who was saved out of the waters should bring a plague upon the waters: for Aaron also was the minister of the other plagues 2. Neither was it for his (as Ferus) that Moses should not be thought to doe it also by sorcery: for they might have had the like suspition of Aaron. 3. But this was God's institution and appointment that Moses should speake to Aaron in the name of God: and Aa/ron should be his Prophet, chap 7.1 both to speake unto Pharaoh and to shew the signes: which both belonged unto Prophets. And therefore whereas vers. 19. Moses is bid to take the rod, it was to deliver unto Aaron: Iun. 4. Beside also this might be some reason thereof: Aaron was minister of the plagues, and of judgement, Moses of mercie: for he specially prayed unto God to remove the plagues, as chap. 8.12. and 30. chap. 9.33.

QUEST. XXXVIII. Why the first plague beginneth in the water.

HE smot the water. The first plague beginneth in the water. 1. Philo thinketh because the Egyptians held the water to bee the beginning of all things, therefore the Lord causeth his plagues to begin there. 2. Rather, because they put their confidence in Nilus, and gave divine honour unto it, and superstitiously adored the Crocodile therein, therefore the Lord doth punish them there, where their confidence and supposed strength was: Perer. 3. As also because water is one of the most necessary things, that belongeth to mans life, and specially Nilus in Egypt, whereby their grounds were watered, the plagues begin there, to shew the power and severity of God: Simler. 4. As also this plague hath some correspondencie with their sinne of cruelty: 1. As they sinned in the water by the murdering of the innocents, so are they punished by water. 2. Because they caused the infants to dye in the water, the fish also dye there. 3. As they abhorred the Israelites, so the waters become horrible and loathsome. 4. As they shed the blood of Innocents, so they are constrained to drinke blood. Ferus. Unto this story doth the Evangelist allude in the Revelation, where the third Angel powreth out his viall, and crieth: For they shed the blood of thy ser/vants the Prophets, and therefore hast thou given them blood to drinke, chap. 16.6. 5. This turning of the waters into blood did also portend the destruction of the Egyptians, which last of all was fulfilled, but first of all threatned, Fer.

QUEST. XXXIX. The greatnesse of this first plague.

THE greatnesse of this plague appeareth: 1. Because it was generall over all Egypt, only the land of Go|shen excepted, where the water was not changed, as Iosephus thinketh: this is more than Satan can doe, for he is but in one place at once, and only worketh where he is present, but here the power of God

changeth all the water of Egypt at once, whereas Aaron stretched out his hand but over one place. Fer••. 2. Philo maketh this corruption of the waters more generall: he thinketh that all Nilus was turned into bloud, even from the first head and spring thereof: but that is not likely, for Nilus springeth from certaine Mountaines in Aethiopia, and runneth a great way thorow the Aethiopians land: then by this meanes Aethiopia should have beene plagued as well as Egypt, whereas the Scripture onely maketh mention of the land of Egypt to be thus plagued. 3. Beside, not onely the river but all lakes and poudes and vessels, where they used •o gather the water of Nilus to refine and cleanse it, and to make it more potable were corrupted. Sim. 4. The waters were changed into very bloud, such as commeth out of the body, in|somuch that many died of thirst: Philo. And they that dranke of it were exceedingly pained: Iosephus. 5. Yea, because not bloud, but water is the element of fish, they also are choked, and by them the water was more putrified, which judgement was so much the greater, because the Egyptians doe most feede of fish. Simler. 5. And this maketh the miracle more strange: that the water of Nilus running cleere along thorow a great part of Aethiopia, when it came to the coasts of Egypt, it there changed, both his colour and substance, being turned into bloud. Perer.

QUEST. XL. Whence the Sorcerers had the water which they also turned into bloud.

Vers. 23. AND the Enchanters of Egypt did likewise. Whence the Magicians of Egypt should have this water which they turned into bloud, all the waters of Egypt being converted, and altered already, much question there is, and great diversity of opinion. 1. Yet doe I not thinke with Theodore▪ that they had these waters out of the sea, which was not farre off: for that was no potable water, apt for drinke, and those kinds of waters Moses changed not: they are said to doe the like, therefore in the same kind of water. 2. Neither yet is it like, as some Hebrewes thinke, as Lyranus saith, that beside the rivers and lakes, which were changed, there were certaine fountaines of water beside, from whence they might fetch their water: for this is contrary to the text, which includeth all pooles of water: vers. 9. 3. Some admit here a synecdoche, that all is taken for the most part: and that we need not understand, that all the waters in generall were converted. Borrh. But the generall speeches of Scripture are not so to be restrayned, where no cause is. 4 Cajetan thus resolveth, that all the waters were not changed at once, but first the rivers, then the lakes and pooles, and standing waters, and last of all the waters kept in vessels of stone, and of wood: vessels of mettall are excepted: But what should let, why by the power of God, to make the wonder greater, all the waters should not be changed at once? and by these kinds of vessels named, all other are signified, unlesse it was the manner of the Egyptians to use none other vessels, than of stone or wood. 5. Iustinus Martyr, to whom consenteth Osiander, doth thinke that the Sorcerers had this water out of the pits, which they digged about the river: But it seemeth that these waters were changed also, by the generall words, and that they laboured in vaine: For if the Egyptians could so have helped them|selves, they needed not to have we •ried themselves, in assaying to drinke of the waters of the river, as it is said, vers. 8. 6. Some thinke that the Sorcerers turned some of the water changed into bloud, as it was be|fore, and then turned it againe into bloud: but this is altogether unlike, that they had power to undoe Moses worke, or to destroy his miracle. 7. Ferus thinketh that it was but water in shew, as the conversion of it into bloud was but counterfeit likewise: but as the Sorcerers rods were very rods, though the con|version of them into serpents were but imaginary: so the water here, which they used, was true water, though their worke were counterfeit. 8. Thostat. and Lyranus thinke that the Devill did minister unto them water brought from some other place, out of the land of Egypt: but in that the text saith they did the like, it must be understood of the waters of Egypt, wherein they did like unto Moses. 9. Augustine hath two solutions: the first, that the Sorcerers might stay seven dayes, till the waters returned to their first na|ture, and then they shewed their cunning also. But it is not like that they stayed so long, for then their power should have seemed to be small, and Pharaohs heart was hardned, before the seven dayes were expi|red upon this practice of the Sorcerers. 10. His other solution is, that the Sorcerers tooke this water from the land of Goshen, where the Israelites dwelt, for there the water was not changed, as Iosephus well conjectureth: and this is most like: so also Iunius, Simler. But Pererius thinketh, that even the waters in the land of Goshen were also turned into blood, and that to the Egyptians they were noisome, to the Israelites they were pleasant and sweet as before. Contra. Seeing in other plagues the land of Goshen, and the Israelites were excepted, as in the fourth, fifth, seventh and ninth plague, it is not to be doubted, but that they were privileged in the rest: and seeing the substance of the water was changed, and became very blood, a second miracle must be admitted to make it sweet, and pleasant to the Israelites: beside this would have extenuated the miracle, that it had beene but a deceit, if the one could drinke of it, and not the other. Wherefore it is most like, that the waters which the Israelites used, were not become blood, but that they had an exemption both from this, and from the other plagues.

QUEST. XLI. What shift the Egyptians made for water during the continuance of the first plague.

Vers. 25. And seven dayes were fulfilled. What shift then did the Egyptians make all this while for drinke? 1. Eusebius Cæsariensis thinketh, that this plague of bloody waters lasted but one day, and the space of seven dayes is set betweene the first and the second miracle: but if this had beene so, the Egyptians, if they had wanted water but one day, should not so greatly have beene distressed, neither needed they to have toiled themselves in digging of wells. 2. Iustinus Martyr respon. ad quaest. Orth. 26.

Page 77

thinketh, that the Egyptians dranke of the water of the pits which they digged: but it is more like that they digged in vaine for water, as Ferus judgeth: for neither could the plague sent of God, by humane wit or labour be prevented, & if the Egyptians could thus have helped themselves, their distresse & necessity had not beene so great. 3. Thostatus thinketh that they found water in the pits which they digged, not altogether pure, neither yet wholly bloody, but yet by the veines and pipes of the earth somewhat refined from the thicke bloody grossenesse, as we see that salt sea water is strained and censed by putting the same into certaine vessels: and with this water the Egyptians (necessity so compelling them) contented themselves. Contra. There is not the like reason of naturall things and supernaturall: this turning of water into blood being supernaturall, how is it like, that it could by naturall meanes be qualified? 4. Therefore I thinke rather, that the Egyptians were driven to drinke of the water of the river, they had no other shift, and therefore it is said, vers. 18. That they should be weary, or labour (as the word signifieth) to drinke of the river, which they needed not to have done, if there had beene any other shift. And as Philo writeth, it is like that many in the space of these seven dayes, some died of thirst, some were poisoned by the stinking waters, so that they lay dead on heapes, and the living scarce sufficed to bury them.

QUEST. XLII. Whether the raine that fell was turned into blood, as the Latine translator readeth.

BUt whereas Psalm 78.44. the Septuagint readeth 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, and the Latine translator following them, ^{*} interpreteth imbres, that he turned their raine or showers into blood; Augustine here moveth a question how this should be, (Moses making no mention of raine water) and resolveth, that the word 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 signifieth as well waters that flow from below, as that fall from above, and so Iansenius deriveth it of 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 and 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, to flow together: but this doubt will easily be removed, if we consult with the originall, where the word is nozli, which signifieth floods and rivers, of Nazal to flow; so Vatablus translateth, ivos; Paguin. and Montan. fluenta: for it is notoriously knowne, that in Egypt falleth no raine, as Philo testifieth, lib. 3. de vita Mosis, and Plinie lib. 6. Mela. lib.

3. cap. 9. and so much the Scripture insinuateth, Deut. 11.11. where Moses sheweth a difference betweene the land of Canaan and Egypt, where they watered their fields with their feet, as a garden, that is, they conveyed the waters of Nilus by trenches and furrowes to their fields, which overflowing their grounds serveth in steed of raine: and therefore the Egyptians did more honour Nilus than heaven Perer.

QUEST. XLIII. Whether the Sorcerers did turne the waters into true blood.

NOW whether the Sorcerers brought forth true blood, as Moses did, though it need bee no question, as is before shewed, Quest. 21. yet there are divers opinions about it: 1. Augustine thinketh that the Sorcerers, by the Devils helpe, did change the water into very naturall blood, lib. 83. qu^ost 79. But that cannot be, for the Devils have no power to change or transforme one substance into another immediatly, without naturall meanes: and seeing true blood is not ingendred but in the body, and that not immediatly, but by certaine degrees and preparations, Satan could not in truth doe any such thing. 2. Pererius thinketh, that this blood was cunningly conveyed by the Devils helpe from some other place, and not made out of the water. But this is not likely, for it was no small quantity of blood, which seemed to be changed by the Sorcerers: out of how many bodies could the Devill draw and sucke so much blood? and if the blood were brought, what came of the water that must bee conveyed away also? Beside the text saith, that the enchanters did likewise: then as Moses turned water into blood, they must, to make their worke like, turne water also into blood, or seeme to doe it. 3. Wherefore I subscribe rather to Iustinus: Sanguinem à Magis exhibitum, non fuisse verum, sed fallacem & praestigiosum: That the blood brought forth by the Magicians, was not true blood, but deceitfull and counterfeit: quæst. Orthod. 26. Ferus reason is, because naturas mutare solius Dei est: it only belongeth unto God to change natures. Osiander saith, Videntur ad breve tem|pu^o conversae: The waters seemed to be changed by the Sorcerers, but for a short time: but Moses miracle continued seven dayes, which sheweth that it was a true miracle. So Ambrose concludeth,  Si arte sua quis sublimitate astutiae aliam creaturam fingat ad horam, sicut finxerunt Iannes & Iambres: If any by his cunning and deepe deceit can faine another creature for a time, as Iannes and Iambres did, &c.*

QUEST. XLIV. How this first plague was stayed.

HOW this plague ceased is not expressed. 1. Philo thinketh, that at the supplication of the Egyptians made to Moses, and his prayer unto God, the waters returned to their first nature. But if it had beene so, it is not unlike but that Moses could have expressed so much, as hee doth in the other plagues, that were stayed by that meanes. 2. Iosephus writeth, that Pharaoh seeing the miserable state of the Egyptians, did give leave to the Israelites to depart, and so the plague ceased, but presently after hee repented him; but the Scripture seemeth to be contrary, for Pharaohs heart was hardened at the first, and not mollified at all, neither did this plague enter into his heart, vers. 23. 3. Therefore it is most like that this plague continued untill the beginning of the second, which is the end of the first, and so it ceased neither at the entreatie of Pharaoh, or the Egyptians, or by the prayer of Moses, but by the will of God. Thostat. Perer.

QUEST. XLV. Of the application and use of this first plague.

FOR the mysticall application of this plague: 1. Augustine comparing the ten plagues of Egypt, and the ten Commandements together, doth referre the first plague to the first Commandement, applyling it thus: The water out of the which commeth the generation of many things, signifieth God the beginning of all: the turning of this water into bloud, is the corrupting of the divine worship by humane and carnall inventions of flesh and bloud. 2. But I preferre rather Ferus applications; the one propheticall, that this plague did portend, the bloody end and destruction of Pharaoh and the Egyptians; the other morall: that wherein a man sinneth, thereby in the justice of God is he punished: as Adonibezek by the cutting off his fingers and toes, as he had served others; Absalon by his haire which hee was proud of: so the Egyptians are punished in the water, wherein they had destroyed so many innocent babes. Pererius.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the institution of the princely and priestly calling.

Vers. 1. I Have made thee Pharaohs God, and Aaron thy brother shall be thy Prophet. Here we have the institution of two most necessarie callings among the people of God, the princely power in Moses, whose commission was to give edicts and lawes; and the Ecclesiasticall in Aaron, to whom it appertained to interpret and expound the Law, as the Prophet saith, Aske the Priest concerning the law. Borrh.

2. Doct. Of the hardning of the heart, how it is said to proceed from God.

Vers. 3. I Will harden Pharaohs heart. Mans heart is hardened two wayes, either by it selfe internally, or by some externall accident that moveth the inward cause or the instruments thereof: the externall agents, are either efficient, and so the Devill as an efficient and working cause moveth the heart of man unto evill, being corrupt of it selfe: or they are only disposing and ordering: so the Lord is said to harden the heart: which he doth three wayes: 1. By leaving the will of man, being destitute of good, to it evill nature and disposition. 2. By some occasion given by the Lord, which in it selfe is good, the heart of the wicked becommeth more obstinate, as by the Lords commandement by Moses Pharaoh was more hardened: so the Apostle sheweth that some take occasion by the law, which is good, to bee more evill, Rom. 7. like as tender and weake eyes, by the brightnesse of the Sunne, doe dazle the more and become blinder. 3. The Lord seeing the will of obstinate men to be thus hardened and bent upon evill, he in his justice also driveth them to that end, whither of themselves they runne headlong: Iun. Like as the primum mobile, in the heavens, the utmost sphere▪ carrieth all the other inferiour orbes of the planets about, yet every one of them doe keepe their contrary course, by the which the eclipses of the Sunne and Moone fall out: yet so as by the first overruling motion, they are whirled about and brought to their Eclipse, which is properly caused notwithstanding by their owne particular motion: so there is an overruling power of God, that bringeth every thing to the end appointed: yet the defects and eclipses of our will doe proceede of our owne corrupt nature. See more of this point how the Lord is said to harden the heart, chap. 4. quest. 19.

3. Doct. That no man sinneth of absolute necessitie.

Vers. 22. HE did not hearken unto them as the Lord had said. It was necessary that Pharaoh should not hearken unto Moses, because the Lord had foretold so much, who cannot be deceived. But Pharaoh was not forced or compelled thereunto: there is then an absolute or violent necessity, which forceth and compelleth; there is a conditionall and hypoteticall necessity, when a thing is said to be necessary another thing presupposed: so Pharaohs disobedience and obstinacy was the second way necessary, upon the presupposall of Gods prescience; but the first way it was not necessary; the first necessity is coactive, but the second is voluntary, the other neither justifieth a man if he doe well being forced, nor condemneth him if hee doe evill: but the second hath place in both: both the righteous have praise, whose obedience in respect of Gods ordinance is necessary and infallible, and the wicked are justly condemned, who sinne willingly, though Gods prescience considered in some sort also necessarily. Borrh.

5. Places of controversie and confutation.

1. Confut. Against those that impugne the deity of Christ.

Vers. 1. I Have made thee Pharaohs God. Hence certaine Heretikes, as Nestorius, that did separate the humanity of Christ from his divine nature, would confirme their heresie that the man Christ was God, no otherwise than Moses is called God, as Eliphandus a Bishop of Spaine, who held, that the man Christ was onely the Sonne of God by adoption. Contra. 1. The name of God in Scripture is given unto men, as Psal. 80. I said ye are Gods; but that title is given them in respect of their office, but it agreeth unto Christ by nature: for here the Lord is said to have appointed Moses God, not to have begotten him: as Hilarie well noteth: neither is he simply called God, as Christ is, but with an addition, Pharaohs God. 2. Not onely the name of Elohim, God, is given unto Christ, but Iehovah, which is a name not communicable unto any creature, but peculiar unto God: and if Christ were no otherwise God, than Moses was, it were Idolatry to worship him. Simler. 3. Hilarie also sheweth that Christ is said to be five wayes very God, which agree unto none, but him: 1. in name, he is simply called God, as Iohn 1. The word was God, and 1. Epist. Ioh. 5.20. speaking of Jesus Christ, he saith, the same is very God. 2. By his nativity and generation, and so he is called the Sonne of God. 3. By nature hee is one with God: I and the father are one. 4. In power, all power is given me in heaven and in earth. Matth. 20. 5. By his owne profession, he profes|sed himselfe to be the Sonne of God, and therefore the Jewes went about to kill him, because he said that God was his Father, Iohn 5.18. Hilar. lib. 7. de trinitat.

Page 79

2. Confut. Against transubstantiation.

Vers. 13. Aarons rod devoured their rods. The Papists would establish their transubstantiation by this place, for as Aarons rod, being turned into a serpent, is still called a rod: not because it was so now, but for that it had beene so: so the bread in the Eucharist after it is converted into the body of Christ is called bread still, because it was so before. Contra. 1. If they could shew Scripture to warrant the conversion of the bread into Christs body, as here is an evident text for the turning of the rod into a ser|pent, they should say somewhat, but untill they can doe that, their error can have no colour from hence. 2. Beside Aarons rod is so called, not only because it had beene a rod before, but it was to returne to be a rod againe: but they will not have the body of Christ returne againe to be bread. Simler.

In the questions before handled, the 27. and 28. concerning the power of Satan in counterfeiting the spirits of the dead: one question of purpose there handled by Pererius, touching the apparition of Samuel raised by the Pythonisse, 1. Sam. 28. I of purpose there omitted, reserving it for this place of confutation.

3. Confut. That Samuel himselfe appeared not to Saul, but the Devill in his likenesse.

1. THE most of that side are of opinion, that it was the very soule of Samuel, not raised up by the wit|ches enchantments, but God interposing himselfe, did prevent her superstitious invocations, and sent Samuel to declare his judgements to Saul. sic Thostatus, Cajetanus, Pererius: and their reasons are these: First, because the Scripture saith, it was Samuel. 2. Hee saith, as the Lord spake by my hand, vers 17. which was true of Samuel, not of the Devill in the likenesse of Samuel. 3. Hee foretelleth what should happen unto Saul the next day: which the Devill could not doe. 4. In Ecclesiasticus it is written, that Samuel, after his sleepe told of the Kings death, chap. 46.20. Ferer.

Contr. 1. The Scripture speaketh according as the thing appeared, not as it was, as Pharaoh in his dreame is said to have seene kine come out of the river, Gen. 4.1, 2. which were but representations of kine. 2. As the Devill tooke upon him Samuels person, so he also counterfeith his speech: it was not true out of the Devils mouth, no more was it true Samuel; such counterfeit speech became a counterfeit Samuel. 3. The Devill might either by certaine conjectures, perceiving in what distresse Saul was, and that God had forsaken him, gesse what the successe of the battell should be: or rather God herein might force him to speake the truth, as did the false Prophet Balaam: Borrh. 4. The authority of the booke of Ecclesiasticus doth not presse us, and Augustine doubteth also thereof, affirming that it was not in Canone Hebraeorum: The Hebrewes received it not into the Canon of Scripture, lib. de cura pro mortuis, chap. 18. 5. Nei|ther is there the like reason of Gods preventing the witches enchantments and *Balaams*divinations: for that God did to his further glorie, to shew his power, in making the false Prophet to be an instrument of the trueth: but this had beene contrary to Gods owne law, who forbiddeth that any should aske counsell of the dead, Deut. 18. Borrh.

2. Some doe goe further, and thinke, that the Devill might have power also to bring up Samuels body: as Satan transported Christs body to the top of the pinnacle. Contra. 1. There is not the like reason be|tweene the transporting of the bodies of the living and of the dead, which are asleepe and at rest. 2. Sa|tan had no power over Christs body, but hee yeelded himselfe to Satans temptation, that hee might over|come him in his owne weapon: and this was permitted unto Satan to doe for the glorie of God, the com|fort of his members, the confusion and victory over Satan: but if Satan should be suffered to take up the bodies of the Saints, neither God should receive honour by it, nor the Church profit; and beside Satan thereby would strengthen his Kingdome of darkenesse. Borrh.

3. Wherefore the sounder judgement is, that it was not the spirit of Samuel, but of Satan, that appea|red to Saul: who can transforme himselfe into an Angel of light, much more take upon him the shape of a Prophet. Out reasons are these. 1. Tertullian saith, Absit ut animam cujusquam sancti à daemone ex|tractam credamus: Far be it from us to thinke, that the soule of any holy man can bee brought out by witche|ry, lib. de anima: Pererius answereth that the Witch called not up Samuel, but it was Gods worke to send him, preventing the Witches enchantments. Contra. But this is not to bee admitted; because the Scripture calleth it an abomination to the Lord, to aske of the dead, Deut. 18.12. the Lord would not be accessary to any thing which is an abomination before him. 2. The true Samuel would not have suffe|red Saul to have worshipped him with a religious worship, as the counterfeit Samuel doth: so reaso|neth Augustine. Pererius answereth, that this was not such adoration as is due unto God, but that reve|rence which may be yeelded to Angels and Saints. Contra. There are but two kindes of adoration, a civill and religious: the religious veneration is onely due unto God, and therefore refused by the Angel, Revel. 22. the civill this was not, as appeareth by Sauls submisse behaviour, and superstitious devotion. 3. This Samuel saith, Why hast thou disquieted me? But Samuels soule being at rest in Abrahams bo|some, was out of the Devils reach, he could not disquiet it. Pererius answereth that Saul did disquiet it, occasionaliter, by giving the occasion, not efficaciter, as being the efficient cause thereof. Contra. But if Samuel spake these words, then hee was in truth disquieted: the question is by whom, if not by the De|vils meanes, occasioned by Saul, than by God; but I thinke, it will not bee confessed that God disquie|teth

the soules of his Saints being at rest. 4. If the Lord vouchsafed not to answer Saul, when hee law|fully sought unto him, neither by his Priests, nor his Prophets, how is it like that the Lord should answer by his Prophet, and when he useth unlawfull meanes? Pererius answereth, that God did not vouchsafe to answer him by any such meanes, that hee might know that God had forsaken him: but now not seeking unto God, but unto a Witch, God doth send him a sorrowfull message, by that Prophet whom hee would not harken unto while hee lived. Contra. Yet is not the objection removed, that God should rather answer Saul using unlawfull meanes, than when hee used lawfull: first, if the not answering before, shewed that God had left him, then the answering now by a Prophet of Gods sending, argueth that hee was not altogether forgotten. If it bee said that Saul knew him not to bee sent of God, but raised by a Witch: then it will follow that this Samuel kept him in that error without reproofe, which the good Prophet would not have omitted. Againe, if the heavy answer and message of evill tidings, was a signe that God neglected him, why then did not the Lord vouchsafe to answer him before at all? God would answer him neither good nor evill. Thirdly, this Prophet being dead, could bring him no worse tidings now, then he did when he lived, that his Kingdome was rent from him and given to another. 5. Some adde this as a fifth argument, that Samuel would not have said, To morrow thou shalt be with mee, that is, in the state of happinesse, seeing hee knew that the Lord had cast him off. Pererius thinketh that hee did meane, he should descend in generall to hell, as all before Christs comming did, though not to that region and place of hell, Limbus Patrum, where the Fathers were. Contra. But first Pererius must shew us out of Scripture, that there be divers hels. In the parable of the rich glutton, there are but two places mentioned after this life; Abrahams bosome a place of rest, whither the Angels carried the soule of Lazarus; and a place of torment, where the rich man was. That Abrahams bosome was no part of hell, beside Augustines opinion, who cannot thinke, tae felicitatis sum membrum inferorum, &c. that a place of such great happinesse was a member or part of hell: the text it selfe evidently sheweth as much, because it was a place of comfort and joy, and of great distance from hell, and the Angels of light did minister there, who remaine not in the kingdome of darknesse. And againe, that the Patriarkes and Prophets before Christ, were in heaven, our Saviour testifieth: Many shall come from the East and West, and sit downe with Abraham, Isaack and Iacob in the Kingdome of heaven▪ Matth. 8.11. Abraham, Isaack and Iacob then were now in the Kingdome of heaven, and yet Christ in their opinion had not then harrowed hell, nor yet emptied Limbus Patrum. Some doe expound these words, thou shalt be with mee, generally of the state of the dead. Iun. But, beside the opinion of some Hebrewes, that doe take these words to bee spoken of Suls particular state, that he should be in some place of rest where Samuel was, and hereupon they inferre, that Saul died penitently; (where we receive their interpretation, but refuse their collection, as being builded upon a false ground, the testimony of a lying spirit) this place is like to that, where David saith of his infant departed, I shall goe to him, 2. Sam. 12.23. which words doe not onely signifie a generall kinde of departure, but a resolution in David, that it was well with his child. Like also unto this is that phrase, Gen. 25. that Abraham was gathered to his people; and in the same chapter, that Ismael was gathered to his people: which seemeth to insinuate, that each went unto his people, and that Abraham was associate unto the just and righteous departed. See more hereof, Quest. 15. upon Genes. 25. And hereunto the Apostle seemeth to allude, when he saith, Hebr. 12.23. Yee are come, &c. to the congregation of the first borne, &c. to the spirits of just and perfect men, shewing the society and communion which we have with the people of God gone out of the world.

6. Places of Morall use.

1. Mor. They that humble themselves shall be exalted.

I Have made thee Pharaohs God. Moses who before so abased himselfe, that hee by all meanes would have declined his calling, excusing him by his insufficiencie; now the Lord doth exalt him, making him superior to Kings: he should be as a God to Pharaoh; not whom Pharaoh should worship, but whom he should feare and stand in awe of; he should be as a God to bring plagues and judgements upon him, and his land, and to remove the same againe. Thus is that saying of our Saviour fulfilled: He that humbleth himselfe shall be exalted.

2. Mor: Gods commandements are simply without any exception to be obeyed.

Vers. 6. SO Moses and Aaron did, as the Lord commanded▪ so did they. This repetition is not needlesse, but sheweth that they most exactly performed all given them in charge: the commandements of God must be obeyed without all exception or limitation. An Emperour of Rome commanded a workman from the navy, of two mastes of a ship to bring the greater to make a battell ramme, and he brought the lesse, which he thought meetest for that worke: whereupon the Emperour commanded him to bee beaten, for disobeying him, saying that the Majesty of the Emperour would soone decay, if men might obey as they list; much more are Gods precepts (which are most just and wise, and to them can nothing bee added) to bee simply obeyed: As David saith, Thou hast commanded to keepe thy precepts diligently, Psal. 119. 4. Simler.

3. Mor: There is no fleeing from God.

Vers. 22. Pharaoh returned and went to his house, But even in his house also the judgement of God overtooke him: there is no fleeing from God, as the Prophet saith, Though they digg into hell, thence shall mine hand take them, though they clime up to heaven, thence will I bring them downe, Amos 9. 5. Ferus.

CHAP. VIII.

1. The Argument and Method.

IN this Chapter three other plagues are described: the second of the frogs, to vers. 1. the third of the lice, to vers. 20. the fourth of the swarmes of noisome creatures, to vers. 36. and accordingly this Chapter consisteth of three parts.

The first containeth, 1. the denuntiation of the plague, and the manner thereof, both what the plague shall be, of frogs, vers. 2. whence they shall come, out of the river; the place, they shall spread over all Egypt; the manner, and scrall even into their bedchambers, to vers. 4. 2. Then followeth the execution, vers. 5. 6. 3. The events are three, the like practice of the Sorcerers, vers. 7. the removing of the plague at Moses prayer, being importuned by Pharaoh, to vers. 15. and the hardning of Pharaohs heart, vers. 16.

In the second part, shewing the third plague, is set downe first the commandement of God to Moses, vers. 16. Secondly, the execution, vers. 17. Thirdly, the event, the confession of the Sorcerers acknowledging Gods power, vers. 20.

In the third part, containing the fourth plague, there is first the denouncing of the plague to Pharaoh: wherein is set forth Moses request to Pharaoh for the people of Israel, vers. 20. then a description of the plague upon his reusall, vers. 21. with a reservation and exemption of the land where the Israelites were, vers. 22. 23. Secondly, the execution followeth, vers. 24. Thirdly, then the events, which are three: first, Pharaoh relenteth to let Israel goe, with certaine reservations, to vers. 28. Secondly, the plague is taken away at Moses prayer, to vers. 32. Lastly Pharaohs heart is againe hardened, vers. 32.

2. The divers readings.

Vers. 3. Into the house of thy servants and on thy people. B. G. cum caetera and of thy people. * S. But here the preposition is wanting: and into the house of thy people. I. that is the meaning, but the preposition joyned to the word, beg•mmeca, approveth the first reading, as the next verse sheweth, on thee, and on thy people.

And into thy kneading troughs. I.C.G. better than, upon thy victuals in store. B.L. or, on thy paste. * V. P. or dow. A. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 S. misharoth rather signifieth the vessell wherein the dow is kned, than the dow it selfe, as Exod. 12.34. there is another word joyned with it, that signifieth dow, which they bound up in their kneding vessels, and carried it on their shoulders.

Vers. 5. Stretch forth thine hand over the streames. B.G. C. cum caeter. better than, Against the streames, * as Piscator: or, to worke upon the streames. I. to worke is added: the preposition ghal is in the end of the verse taken for over, or upon, cause the frogs to come upon the land of Egypt.

Vers 9. Take to thee this honour over me. I. that is, I give thee this honour, to appoint the time, * better than, glory herein because of me, B. V. or, glorie upon me, A.P. that is, because I am at hand to pray for thee, and helpe thee: or, appoint thou me the time, S.L. G. for Phaar signifieth to glory or boast, and in hithpael to take unto one glory: so Iudg. 7.2.

Vers. 13 Out of the courtyards: I. or courts, A.V.C. out of the villages. * L.S.P.G. chatzer signifieth both a village, a towne without walles, Levit. 25 31. and a court or court-yard, as 1. King. 7.4. here the latter rather: and so by degrees the frogs went away, first out of their houses, then out of their yards, and courts and enclosed grounds, and last of all out of their open fields and champion grounds.

Vers. 21. Mingled swarmes, I. V. A. not only of noisome flies, but of other venomous beasts, * as Scor|pions, Vipers. V.C all kindes of beasts. P. rather than swarmes of flies. B.G.L. or dog flies. G. ghereb signifieth any mixture of divers things: as Exod. 12.38. it is taken for a mixture of divers sorts of people.

Vers. 22. I will separate the land of Goshen. V.A.P.C. that is, except. I. better than, cause to be wonderfull. * B.G.L.G. Phalah with he signifieth to separate, so it is taken chap. 8.4. as may appeare by the construction of the preposition ben, betweene, but with aleph it signifieth to be wonderfull.

Vers. 23. I will make a deliverance, or redemption. G.V.A.P.C. I will set a signe of redemption betweene, &c. I. The sense of the words: signe is not in the originall; better than, I will put a division betweene, &c. L.G.B. Phadah signifieth to redeeme.

Vers. 29. Let not Pharaoh mocke any longer. I. deceive, lie, caeter. hata signifieth both: the first is here more proper, because Pharaoh mocked, rather than lied for a lie proceedeth from an intention to deceive: But Pharaoh when he promised to let the people goe seemeth so to have intended, but that his heart re|turned afterward to be hardened

3. The explanation of difficult questions.

QUEST. I. What kinde of frogs the second plague brought upon Egypt.

Vers. 2. I Will smite all thy coasts with frogs. 1. The Hebrewes take Zephardghim, which here signifieth frogges, for a certaine kinde of fish, that come out of Nilus, and devoured men: but here is no mention made, that these Zephardghim should devoure or kill men, but onely annoy them even in their houses, and pastries: they had heard of the Crocodile of Nilus, that useth to destroy men, and so framed their fable according to that report: Pellican. 2. Plinie writeth of two sorts of frogges, beside the com|mon sort, that liveth in the waters; one is called Rubetae, because they keepe among bushes and briers upon the land, which are the greatest among other, and venomous: strange vertues are given to this kinde, that being brought into an assemblie of people, there followeth a generall silence; the bone thereof being cast into seething water cooleth it presently; it allayeth the rage of dogs, Plin. lib. 32.5. The other sort is called Calamitae, because it keepeth among the flags and reedes, it is little and greene, and crieth not: if an oxe chance to eat it he swelleth presently: the flesh thereof applied to the eyes, doth deere them and easeth the paine. It seemeth this plague consisted most of the common sort of frogs, because they came out of the waters: yet there might be a mixture also of the other sorts, especially of the Rubetae, to make the plague more grievous 3. And in this plague, this was strange and extraordinary, that the frogs left the waters, their proper element, and scralled upon the land, and entered their houses. Simler.

QUEST. II. Of the greatnesse of this plague frogs.

COncerning the greatnesse of this plague: 1. Philo noteth that those frogs filled the high wayes, and their houses, yea crept into their Temples, and did climbe up into their upper chambers, so that they were at their wits end. 2. Ios•phus s•ith, that beside the annoyance which they brought upon the land, leaping upon their meat and drinke, that the waters were corrupted by them▪ so that it stanke of them, and was putrified and full of corruption: Some Hebrewes write also that they crept into their mouthes when they were asleepe, and entred •nto their bowels. 3. Thus the Egyptians by this plague were cum|bred, and punished, in all their senses; in their sight with the number and uglinesse of them; in their healing, with their croaking; in their taste, by corrupting their victuals; in their smell, with the stinch of them; in their feeling, with their •iting and venom: Pererius. 4. This plague was sutable to their sinne: for as they regarded not the pitifull and mournfull cries of the infants which they cast into the water, so now are they vexed with the crying and croaking of frogges. Infants, as Theodoret noteth, are herein re|semb•ed to cralling frogs, because they doe so creepe upon their hands and feete, before they are strong to goe: * Perer. 5. We reade that in time past, whole Cities have beene dispeopled by frogs, that invaded them without any miraculous worke: Plinie out of Varro reporteth of a City in France, where the people were driven away by frogs: Paulus Oro••us writeth that the Abderites were chased out of their Coun|try by frogs, and craved of Cass•nder King of Macedonia, some other place of habitation. Perer. So the Artoriitae of India, and the people inhabiting about Paeonia, and Dardania, were invaded of frogs: Egypt also out of the slime thereof, is apt to engender frogs, as Iosephus writeth, and for this cause the bird Ibis is honoured among them, because that kind destroyeth the frogs. But there is a great difference betweene this miraculous worke, and the other: first in respect of the infinite number of them, and their generall overspreading: secondly, those frogs were ingendred not all at once, but by little and little; here as soone as Aaron had stretched out his hand, this great army of frogs was raised: thirdly, they all are suddenly de|stroyed and gathered in heapes: the other as they came not all at once, so neither doe they goe away all together. Simler.

QUEST. III. From whence this great abundance of frogs came.

THis abundance of frogs: 1. Came neither out of the slime, as Iosephus thinketh, into the which hee saith they were resolved againe. 2. Neither yet altogether out of the waters: for though Egypt is full of pooles of water and lakes, yet they sufficed not to fill all Egypt with frogges. 3. Therefore they were brought forth by the power of God: neither did the frogs of any naturall instinct, leave the waters to creepe upon the land: but like as God by the ministry of his Angels, brought all the creatures to A|dam, to receive their names, and afterward unto Noah in the Arke: so were these frogs brought together and sent upon the land. Perer.

QUEST. IV. In what place and how the Sorcerers brought forth frogs.

Vers. 7. THE Sorcerers did likewise. 1. They brought not forth true frogs, but counterfeit as before, in the first plague; but the frogs that Aaron caused were frogs indeed, for afterward they were gathered into heapes, and the land stank of them, that it might appeare to be a true miracle. Pellican. 2. These Sorcerers though in shew they could bring forth frogs, yet they could not remove the plague of frogs, which was sent upon the land. Osiander, 3. The place where the Sorcerers shewed their skill, was in the land of Goshen, which was exempted both from these and the other plagues: for the Lord threatneth only to bring the frogs upon Pharaoh and his people, vers. 3. Iun. Simler.

QUEST. V. Why Pharaoh calleth now for Moses and not before.

Vers. 8. Then Pharaoh called for Moses, &c. Pharaoh called not for Moses to pray for him to remove the first plague, though both Philo and Iosephus affirme: there being no such thing expressed before, it is hard for any man to imagine that which there is no warrant for. 2. Therefore this may be the cause why Pharaoh is forced now to flee unto Moses, and not before, because this was a more grievous and intolerable plague, which is extended upon Pharaoh and his house: none are exempted from it: in the other plague they might make some shift to helpe themselves, as the richer sort with wine, the poorer with the juyce of herbes and such like; but against this plague there is no remedy. Perer. 3. But it seemeth that Pharaoh had a double meaning, he would have the frogs removed first, that afterward hee might call backe his promise for dismissing of the people. Simler.

QUEST. VI. Why Moses saith to Pharaoh, take this honour to thee.

Vers. 9. Take this honour over me when I shall pray. 1. Some refer these words to the event: that when the frogs were removed, Pharaoh should have good cause to boast of Moses, and to rejoyce that he was so neere at hand to helpe him: Vatab. 2. Some understand Moses to speake by way of comparison, that he had now no cause to boast of his Sorcerers that could not helpe, but in Moses. Simler. 3. But the meaning seemeth rather to be this, that Moses doth yeeld unto Pharaoh this honour, to appoint a time when the frogs should be taken away, that God might receive greater honour thereby. Iun.

QUEST. VII. Whether Moses tempted God in prescribing the time of removing the plagues.

AT what time I shall pray for thee. 1. Moses doth not tempt God in appointing a time for this worke, as the Bethulians did, Iudith chap. 7. that limited to themselves the space of five dayes, to expect helpe from God: for they speake doubtfully, but Moses confidently: Simler. 2. Neither herein did Moses presume, but he was assured of Gods assistance, not being so much confirmed by the successe of the miracles hitherto, as building upon Gods promise, who had made him a God unto Pharaoh, both to bind and loose, to doe and undoe Simler. Borrh. 3. And Moses leaveth it to Pharaohs choice to appoint a time, least he might have bin thought to have wrought by constellation, or other astrologically meanes. Pellican.

QUEST. VIII. Of the use and application of this plague of the frogs.

Concerning the application of this plague: 1. Augustine would hereby understand the Poets of the Gentiles, which as by the crooking of frogs, so by their vaine babling have brought in many impious and deceitful fables. 2. Gregorie Nyssen maketh these frogs a type and figure of the Epicures and licentious life, which entereth into Pharaohs house, that is, most aboundeth in the houses of Princes and great men. 3. Ferus doth take it in the better part, that hereby the conversion of a sinner is set forth: God sendeth frogs upon the land, when he sheweth a man his owne filthinesse. 4. But that other application of Ferus is more apt, who by the crooking of frogs, understandeth Hereticks, that doe open their mouth against the truth, as Revel. 16.13. the uncleane spirits that came out of the mouth of the Dragon and false Prophet, are resembled unto frogs, such crawling frogs are the popish Monkes and Friers, that are sent forth from the mouth and spirit of Antichrist, to crooke against the truth. Borrh. 5. Beside, the historicall application of this plague, is this, that these frogs are spued out of Nilus the glorie of Egypt: where their greatest delight was, from thence commeth their confusion. Simler. And as in Nilus they drowned the children, so from thence their punishment taketh beginning: and as they abhorred the sight of the infants, so they are constrained to indure the ugly sight of deformed frogs and vermin.

QUEST. IX. Why Pharaoh appointeth Moses to morrow.

Verse 10. Then hee said, to morrow 1. Some understand it of the time, when Pharaoh would let the people go: but it appeareth by Moses offer in the former verse, leaving to Pharaoh the time, when he should pray for him, that Pharaoh accordingly named the next day to that end. 2. Which time he setteth not Moses, as giving him some space for his prayer. Simler. For Pharaoh had no such devotion, to consider what time was meetest for his prayer. 3. But the very cause was this, hee might thinke that Moses offered himselfe at this time, which he saw by some constellation or aspect of the starres to bee fit for his working, and therefore putteth him to another day: or Pharaoh might thinke this to be some naturall worke, and not sent of God, and therefore would stay a while and see, whether the frogs might goe away of themselves without Moses prayer. Pellican. Perer.

QUEST. X. Why the Lord did not remove the frogs quite.

Vers. 14. And they gathered them together by heapes. 1. The Egyptians had beene able of themselves to have destroyed these frogs, but that God armed them against them, and their number was so infinite▪ that they could not resist them; like as the history of the Bishop of Ments is famous, that was destroyed of rats and mice, following him into the midst of the river of Rhene, where yet the Rats tower, so called, is to bee seene. Simler. And our English Chronicles also doe make mention of a young man, * pursued by oades, who could by no meanes bee defended from them, but being hanged in the top of a tree in a trunke, they crawled up thither and devoured him. 2. God could either have cast these frogges into the river againe, or caused them to vanish, but it pleased him they should remaine in heapes, as a spectacle to the Egyptians, both to shew that it was a true miracle, and that the stinke thereof in ⟨◇⟩ noses, might put them in mind of their sinne, that made them stink before God. Ferus.

QUEST. XI. The difference of the third plague of lice from the former.

Vers. 17. All the dust of the earth was lice. 1. In this plague there goeth no commination or denouncing before: for because Pharaoh had mocked with God and his Ministers, and had hardened his heart; he was worthy of no admonition. Simler. 2. This plague is brought out of the earth, as the two first out of the water: for the Egyptians were worthy to be punished in both, because they had shewed their cruelty in both, in destroying the infants in the water, and in oppressing the Israelites by working in clay: and therefore out of the clay and dust are they punished. Simler. 3. In the other plagues, in the first the Lord sheweth his power in changing the nature of the creatures; in the second, in commanding them; in the third, in using them as instruments of his revenge: the first plague was horrible to the sight, in seeing the bloody waters;

the second was both horrible to the sight, and troublesome; the third was both these, and brought griefe and vexation beside. Ferus.

QUEST. XII. Whether the third plague was of lice.

NOW what manner of plague this was, whether of lice or some other, shall briefly bee examined:

1. The Hebrew word is cinnim, which the Latine translateth sciniphes, and the Septuag. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 deri|ved with some small change from the Hebrew: * Origen whom Augustine followeth, taketh them for cer|taine small flies with wings that can scarce bee seene as they flie, yet with their stings doe pricke very sharpely. 2. Alber•us Magnus saith, that they have the taile of wormes, the head and wings of flies, and are ingendred in fenny places, and doe specially follow and light upon men, Lib. 26. de animalib. this description agreeth to those flies which we call gnats. 3. Suidas taketh it to be a worme that eateth wood. 4. Pe|rrierius thinketh it was a new kinde of vermine not knowne before. 5. But I thinke rather with Iosephus, that they were lice; so also Iun. Vatab. Pagnin. Montan. translate: so R. Salomon understandeth the word cinnim: and they were such lice as did cleave and swarme upon the body, that would not be killed with any oyntment, or other medicine, as Iosephus, but they did gnaw upon their flesh, much like to the lowsie disease, that Sylla and the two Herods died of. Simler. And Philo saith, they did not only sting the flesh, but entred in at the eares and nostrils, and pained the eyes: and though most of them were of this kinde of vermine, of lice, which came of the slime and dust, resembling the same in colour also; Oleaster: yet it is like that other vermine, as gnats, and other biting flies and vermine were mingled among them. Borrh.

QUEST. XIII. Why the Lord plagued the Egyptians with lice.

AND whereas God might have turned by his great power, the dust of the earth into Lions and Beares, which should have destroyed the people: yet it pleased him for these causes, to punish them with this contemptible vermine: 1. Because the Lord would not consume them all at once, but give them space to come to repentance. Philo. 2. And that by this meanes the haughty pride of the Egyptians might bee abated, seeing that God was able to punish them by such contemptible and base creatures: as proud Ty|rants are most daunted, when they are quailed by weake and impotent meanes; as Abimelech thought it a dishonour unto him to be killed by a woman, Ferus. 3. This plague also served to keepe them in awe: for if God could punish them by so small a creature, they might thinke, that if God armed the greater crea|tures against them, they should not endure it. Simler.

QUEST. XIV. Why the Lord by the stretching out of Aarons rod brought forth lice.

Vers. 17. Aaron stretched out his hand with his rod. It was not Aarons rod, or hand, that of it selfe could doe any such thing; God needed not any of these meanes, but thus it pleased him, that this plague should bee wrought: 1. To shew his great power, that is able to doe great things by weake and small meanes. 2. And that not only he hath power in himselfe to doe whatsoever it pleaseth him, but that hee can give power unto his creatures to execute his vengeance: so the Lord is able by himselfe, and by others to bring forth his judgements. 3. This hee did also to shew how much hee setteth by his elect to whom hee giveth such great power: and to countenance the ministry and calling of these his servants. Ferus.

QUEST. XV. Why the Sorcerers could not bring forth lice.

Vers. 17. NOW the Enchanters assayed likewise with their enchantments to bring forth lice, &c.

1. The Sorcerers could not bring forth lice, not as the Hebrewes imagine, (as Lyranus and Thosta|tus report of them) because they cannot bring forth any creature lesse than a barly corne: for if they could produce to the sight greater creatures, they might more easily have compassed the lesse, whose generation is not so perfect, but commeth out of corruption. Indeed in artificiall workes it is harder to worke upon a small substance: * and therefore Plini• commendeth the curious devices of certaine workemen for their smalnesse: as Cicero telleth of the Iliades of Homer written so small that they might bee put into a small nutshell. Callicrates made antes of Ivory so little that the partes thereof could not be perceived. Mir•eci/des made a ship, that a Bee might cover it with her wings. But in naturall workes the reason is contrary, the lesse workes are more easily perfected: for the force of nature worketh from within, but the artifices applieth his instruments without, and cannot therefore worke upon every small substance.

2. Rupertus hath this conceit, that the Sorcerers did indeed bring forth lice, as they did frogs before: but because they did not sting and bite, as the true lice which Aaron caused, their fraude was dis|covered: but this is contrarie to the text, which saith, they endeavoured or wrought to bring forth lice, but could not.

3. Cajetanus thinketh that the Sorcerers did erre in their worke, and did not applie their enchantments aright, and so failed: But it proceeded not from any vertue of their enchantments, that they did counter|feit the three signes before, but of the will and power of Satan, who is not tied to these enchantments, which are but a signe and ceremonie of their covenant and league with the devill: & therefore though they had failed in some circumstance, the devill would not have forsaken them, seeing they wrought under him, and for him, if it had been in their power.

4. Augustine maketh this the reason why the Magicians were confounded in this third plague (but it was the fourth signe, counting the turning of the rods into serpents, for the first) to signifie, * that the heathen Philosophers, some of them had knowledge of the Father and Sonne, but erred concerning the holy Ghost. But beside that some of the philosophers did see as in a cloud the mysterie of the Trinitie, * as both Cyrillus, Eusebius, & Theodore witnessse, & Plato in his writings maketh mention of God the Father, the Word, and the Minde: this is rather a mysticall, than historicall reason: And if to seeke the cause thereof we neede flie unto mysteries; it rather signifieth thus much, that many of the philosophers did know divers things concerning God, and his creatures; but they were ignorant altogether of the Trinitie. Perer. 5. The sorcerers then were hindred by the power of God, who suffered them hitherto to de|ceive by their Satanicall illusions, but now by a superiour commaunding power, he controlleth the po|wer of darkenes. Simler. Pererius. Pellican. Cajetan. Ferus. And Satan is hindred in his working two wa•es, either altogether, that he cannot do what he would, as in this place; or when he is permitted to doe any thing, yet the Lord so disposeth, as that he cannot atchieve that end which he intendeth, as ap|peareth in the temptation of Iob: Borrh. And the Lord confoundeth them in this small and base creature, for their greater confusion, when their mysticall working, by the operation of Satan, is there restrained, where they thought most easily to have prevailed. Ferus.

QUEST. XVI. What the sorcerers understand by the finger of God.

Vers. 19. THis is the finger of God. 1. Some by finger understand the plague it selfe, as the Chalde Paraphrast: as though in effect the sorcerers should confesse thus much, that this plague was of God, and they could not resist it: so Iob saith, the hand of God hath touched me, cap, 19.21. 2. Augustine by the finger of God understandeth the spirit of God: wheras Saint Luke saith, that Christ cast out devils by the finger of God, cap. 11. Saint Matthew saith, by the spirit of God: and fitly is the spirit compared to the fingers, that as the fingers proceed from the hand and arme, & the arme from the bodie, so the spirit proceedeth from the Father and the Sonne: and as there are ten fingers upon both the hands, so there are divers gifts of the spirit, and here are tenne plagues answering to the number of the fingers. So also Ierom saith, that the arme and strength of God is the Sonne, and the Spirit is the fingers, and with this finger did the Lord write the tenne Commandements in the Tables of stone. But this collection seemeth to be somewhat curious: neither is it like that the Sorcerers had any such knowledge of the mysterie of the Trinitie. 3. Therefore Rupertus thinketh, that the sorcerers did onely meane by this phrase the power of God, but that unwittingly also by a divine instinct, they doe give an evident testimony of the holy spirit, the third person of the Trinitie, as Caiphas did ignorantly prophesie of Christ. But it seemeth that these sorcerers being professed servants of Satan and possessed with his spirit, were not fit vessels to receive any such divine instinct. 4. Pererius thinketh that by the finger of God, they understand a great & invincible power, as the Scripture saith, the Cedars of God, a man of God, for the tall cedars and for an excellent man. But in this sense they could not denie▪ but that the other works were also excellent, & more admirable than this. 5. Liranus will have them by the finger of God to understand the power of some superiour devill that staied the working of the inferiors: But this is an insolent speech, by the name of God to understand the devill: and by this meanes Satan should strive against Satan, and the kingdome of darkenes should be divided; which argument our Saviour useth in the Gospell to shew that he did not cast out devils by the power of Satan. 6. Wherefore the best interpretation is, that by the finger of God, they understood the power of God; as the heavens (in the Psalme) are said to be the worke of his fingers: sic Thostatus, Lippoman. So also is the hand of God taken, 1 Sam. 6.9. And hereby is insinuated the great power of God: if these horrible plagues were but the worke of his fingers, that is, an effect of his smallest power, what are the workes of his arme and handes when hee sheweth his mightie power? for so that which one doth easily, or with small labour, he is said to doe with his finger, as the phrase is used of the Pharises in the Gospell, that they laid heavy burdens upon others, and would not themselves stirre them with their finger. And indeede these plagues of Egypt, if they be compared with Gods great workes, as the universall floud brought upon all the world, the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrha, they will appeare to be but workes of Gods fingers, in comparison of his whole hand. Simler. Perer.

QUEST. XVII. Whether the sorcerers had any feeling of Gods power.

BUT now it will further be inquired, whether these sorcerers thus spake as having any knowledge of God, or feeling of his power. 1. Some thinke that they used this pretence of words to satisfie Pharaoh that was angrie with them, because they could not doe now, as before, and to excuse their want of power: Cajetane. But it seemeth rather, seeing the Sorcerers were indeede hindred and controlled, that they spake as they thought. 2. Lyranus thinketh that they had no thought at all of God, but that they understood the power of some superiour devill: And his reason is, that, if they had in truth confessed and acknowledged the power of God, they would not afterward have resisted Moses, as it appeareth they did, for they were smitten with botches and biles in the sixth plague, cap. 9. Contra. But this is a weake argument: for though they had at this present some sense of Gods power, yet they might afterward returne to their former obstinacie: as Pharaoh himselfe would one while seeme to relent, and eftsoone be hardened againe: and Nebuchadnezzar, who upon the interpretation of his dreame by Daniel acknowledged the true God. Dan. 2. yet presently after setteth up Idolatrie: Perer. 3. Some, as is shewed in the former question, did thinke that the Magicians had some knowledge and speciall revelation, not only of the power of God, but of his spirit, and so consequently of the Trinitie: but such a particular knowledge cannot be ascribed unto them. 4. Therefore I thinke rather that for a time they seeing their power hindred, did indeede, and as they thought, acknowledge Gods power, that Pharaoh might thereby be left inexcusable: Iun. but this knowledge was soone againe obscured by the malice and obstinacie of their heart.

QUEST. XVIII. By what power Sorcerers do worke.

NOw, whereas they confesse that Moses wrought by the finger of God, they therein evidently bewray, that they themselves did not worke by God. This therefore shall briefly be made plaine and manifest, that Magicians and Sorcerers doe not worke wonders by any divine, humane, or naturall, or Angelicall power, I meane the good Angels, but Satanicall and Diabolicall. 1. These spirits whom they confederate with, do require of them divine worship: and that affectation of divine honour, which they began in heaven, and obtained it not, being cast downe from thence, they seeke to compass in earth: but good Angels refuse to be adored and worshipped, as the Angell that appeared to Iohn, Revel. 22. 2. Sorcerers are men of an impure and wicked life, and they use their enchantments to wicked purposes, as to theft, adulterie, murther: but good Angels do neither favour wicked men, neither will bee assistant in any wicked worke, 3. Magicians use to threaten the spirits, to enioyne them certaine impossible things, if they come not when they are called: but men can exercise no power, neither can have any command over the good Angels. 4. if it bee objected, that Magicians doe often cast out devils: but Satan doth not cast out Satan, * as our Saviour saith, for then his kingdome should be divided, and could not long stand. To this it is answered, that our Saviour speaketh of such casting out of devils, as is done with power when Satan is violently dispossessed, not of such when hee giveth way of himselfe, by some compact and contract with the Conjurer. And, as Augustine saith, our Saviour meaneth the perfect ejection of Satan, when hee is cast both out of the bodie and soule: But when any seemeth to be cast out by a Satanicall power, he goeth out of the bodie that he may more strongly possesse the soule; which is indeede no casting out. 5. That Sorcerers doe worke by the power of Satan, themselves are the best witnesses: for Porphyrius who was a great Magician, as Eusebius noteth him, doth confesse, that the devils themselves (whom he calleth gods) doe signifie unto men, * quibus rebus dii cogantur; & qua illis offerenda sunt, &c. with what things the devils are forced, and what is to be offered unto them, what daies they should chuse, what signes and images they should make, and such like. And Eusebius further setteth downe to the same purpose an epistle written by Porphyrius to Aëbonus the Egyptian: wherein he propoundeth nine inexplicable doubts, as he calleth them, about Magicall practices: 1. How Magicians doe invoke the spirits as their superiours; when they command them, as their inferiours. 2. Why the spirits of Magicians bid men to be just, when as they being called upon and sent, doe many wicked things. 3. They will not heare the Conjurer unlesse hee abstaine from venerie; and yet they being sent doe inflame to venerie, and unlawfull lust. * 4. They prescribe their disciples, when they are about invocation, to abstaine from eating of flesh; and yet themselves delight in the smell and bloud of sacrifices. 5. They will not have him that hath touched any dead thing to use any Magicall practice; and yet many magicall enchantments are practised with dead things, both beasts and men. 6. They doe terrifie the spirits in their invocations, with threats, as if they answered not, they will reveale the mysteries of Isis, and deliver Osiris members to Typhan: but how can spirits be feared with threats? 7. They use ridiculous invocations, as thus they call upon their spirits: Thou which camest forth of the sleeve of the earth, which hast thy seate in the lake, which canst change thy shape every houre: which kind of prayers spirits should seeme not to regard. 8. They use barbarous and strange words, as though the spirits understood only the Scythian, or some other barbarous tongue. 9. Seeing spirits are insensible and incorporeall, how then can they be allured with sensible and corporall things? These are Porphyries doubts: by the which it is evident that Sorcerers work by the devill, and that from him they have their directions. And Augustine also confirmeth the same: Neque potuit nisi prius ipsis doctis disci quid quisque illorum appetat, quid exhorreat; Neither could it be learned, but by their teaching, what everie one of them desireth, and what they abhorre.

BUt yet concerning some of those doubts, a solution may be found out: As why the devils will not come being called, but under certaine constellations, the reason thereof may be to make men beleieve, that there is some divine vertue in the starres, and so they should be brought to adore and worship them▪ or because they many times worke by naturall causes, it may be they are helped by such observations: and sometime they concurre in their worke with the planets, as Lunatickes are most vexed in the increase of the moone, that men might lay the imputation upon the starres, as though they were evill. Againe, why spirits being of no bodily substance yet are allured, with hearbes, and stones, and perfumes and such like; Augustine giveth the reason hereof, because these things are offered unto them, as signes of the divine ho|nour, which is given unto them, and therefore they delight in them. *Ex Perer.

QUEST. XX. Whether it be ordinary for lice to breede out of the slime of Nilus.

BUt concerning this third plague of lice, it will be objected, that it is an ordinary thing in Egypt, after the inundation of Nilus, that divers small creatures, as lice, frogs, and such like, do breed in great abundance out of the slime of the earth, which Nilus leaveth behind, as Herodotus, Diodorus Siculus, and Solinus do write: how then was this such a miraculous worke? The answe is this: that there is great difference betweene this swarming of lice, and that annuall breed of vermine in Egypt. 1. They come of the slime of the earth, these out of the dust. 2. They by the overflowing of Nilus, these at the stretching forth of Aarons rod▪ 3. Those swarmes are of divers sorts of small vermine, these were lice. 4. They are not bred in the signes of Aquarius or Pisces as these were, but after the sunne is entred into Virgo: for under the signe Leo, Nilus increaseth, and in the signe Virgo, it abateth and returneth. Sic Iun. The sunne entreth into Leo about the middest of Iune, and into Virgo, about the middle of Iuly, and into the signe Aquarius in Ianuarie, and into Pisces in Februarie, which was about a moneth before the Israelites went out of Egypt, as is before shewed, quaest. 29. in cap. 7.

QUEST. XXI. Why Moses is bid to meete Pharoah by the water.

Vers. 20 STand before Pharaoh, he will come forth to the water. 1. Because Moses had no accesse unto Pharaohs presence in his palace, he is bid to watch him at his comming forth, and so he that refused to heare *Moses*privatly, is forced to heare to his shame abroad. Ferus. 2. Pharaoh used in the mor|ning to come forth to the water, either for his health, as in the morning it is wholesome, to go forth unto rivers; or rather of a superstitious minde, because they attributed divine honour unto Nilus. Simler.

QUEST. XXII. Why there is no mention made in this miracle of Moses rod.

IN this fourth wonder, no mention is made of Moses rod, as in the former, nor of any other thing used as ashes in the sixth plague. God sometime useth such meanes, to shew that all things are directed by his will, and by these props to raise us up to consider of an higher power than can be in such weake instru|ments to effect such great things. Sometime he worketh without any such meanes, to teach vs, that he needeth not any such instruments. The like difference of working is observed in the miracles of our Sa|viour Christ in the Gospell, who sometime used externall and visible signes, as when he tempered clay to heale the blind man: sometime he used no such, but only healed by his Word. Simler.

QUEST. XXIII. What manner of swarmes were sent in the fourth plague.

Vers. 21. I will send mingled swarmes. 1. Not 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, as the Septuagint, the dogge flie, which Philo would have so called, because this kind of flie doth boldly light upon men and beasts (as the dog is noted to be among other beasts, most hardie and bold) and cannot be chased away, till he hath fet|ched blood: some call it a dog flie, because it lighteth most upon dogs about the eares and nose, and dra|weth blood: but the word *ghereb*signifying a mingled companie, sheweth, that there was more than of one sort. 2. Hierom therefore would have it read

〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , all kind of flies, as Aquilas also readeth 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 : and the Latine muscam omnis generis, flies of all sorts. But it seemeth they were not only flies, for the earth was not only corrupted by them, vers. 24. but the Egyptians also themselves devoured and consumed, Psalms. 78 45. 3. Neither yet is it like that there were no flies at all in these swarms, as Cajetan thinketh, because the Scripture maketh not any mention of any hurt they did to any man, but only annoyed their grounds, and houses, but flies are most noysome unto men: but herein Cajetan is deceived, for it is said in the Psalme before alleaged, that they devoured them, that is, the Egyptians. 4. Some thinke they were all kind of wild beasts, as Lions, Beares, Tigres, and such like; unto which opinion Iosephus seemeth to incline, and Aben Ezra and Pagnin. But because it is said that their houses should bee full of these swarms, it is not like they were those huge wild beasts: and if they had been assaulted in their houses with ravenous beasts, none of them should have escaped. And beside, it seemeth that the ground was covered with this kind of vermine: but so many wild beasts, as should cover the earth, would have soone devoured all the inhabitants. 5. Therefore it is more like that these swarms were a mixture of divers kinds of noisome creatures, both flying, as hornets, waspes, and creeping, as vipers, scorpions and such like. Si. Vatab. Rabbi Salomon: Pellican.

QUEST. XXIV. Of the name of Baalzebub the god of flies.

IT may seeme probable, that upon this and the like plague of flies and other vermine, the Egyptians, and the Philistims following them, as out of whose countrey they came, did erect the abominable Idoll of Baalzebub, which signifieth the god of flies, he was the God of Acearon, one of the chieftest cities of the Philistims: first, some thinke the Idoll was so called of the abundance of flies; which were engendred of the blood of the beasts which were sacrificed.  Vatab.* Or because the Idoll being sprinkled with much blood, did sticke full of flies. Perer. 2. But rather it had the name, because they supposed this Idoll did deliver them from the plague of flies: as Plinius sheweth how the Eleans did worship their god M•iagr••• for chasing away the flies, which brought the pestilence: as the Egyptians did honour the bird Ibis, that devoured serpents: likewise the same Author reporteth that in the Olympian games, they used to sacrifice a Bull to the Idoll Myiades, and the clouds of flies presently vanished. Perer. Iunius also alleageth out of Nazianzen that this Idoll was made in the forme of a flie. 3. Hierome also saith that the Iewes in derision of the god of the Philistims, did give the same name to the Prince and chiefe of the devils. Perer.

QUEST. XXV. Whether the land of Goshen were exempted from the former plagues.

Vers. 22. BVt the land of Goshen will I separate. 1. This immunitie of Israel from the plagues, and the differences made betweene them and the Egyptians, no doubt was seene in the former plagues: Iosephus. Iun. for otherwise if the people of God had beene in like manner afflicted, they would have murmured against Moses. 2. And this separation the Lord made betweene them, both to shew the watchfull care, which hee had over his people, as also to increase the griefe and sorrow of the Egyptians, that beheld how the Israelites were spared, while they were plagued. Ferus. 3. This exemption is now first of all mentioned, because Pharaoh did not know it before now: Simler. As also because the sorcelers before had no place, to trie their sophistrie but in the land of Goshen, mention is made of this exemption to shew that the Magicians were excluded from working their feates there, as they did before. Iun.

QUEST. XXVI. VVhat were the things that were an abomination to the Egyptians.

Vers. 26. FOr then should we offer unto the Lord, that which is an abomination to the Egyptians, &c. or the abomination of the Egyptians. 1. Some understand in the first the idolatrous sacrifices of the Egyptians, which were an abominati•ion unto God: for the heathen offered uncleane beasts;

as an Hog to Ceres, a Goose to Venus, an Asse to Priapus, a Dog to Diana, a Horse to Phoebus: Perer. Then their meaning is, if we sacrifice in Egypt, if we doe it after their rites and fashions we shall be an abom|nation to Iehovah: Ferus. But seeing the same word, the abomination of the Egyptians, in the next clause is taken for that which is an abomination to the Egyptians, it seemeth so to be taken here also. 2. Ruper/tus will not have this understood of any externall sacrifice, for as the Prophet Ieremie saith, the Lord gave them no charge, when he brought them out of Egypt, concerning any sacrifice, Ier. 7.23. And there|fore he understandeth it of the inward vertues of the minde, as of righteousness, piety, humilitie, which they should sacrifice to God, being things hated and despised of the Egyptians. But it is evident that Moses speaketh of an externall sacrifice which they should offer before the eyes of the Egyptians. And in|deed God had said hitherto nothing to Moses all this while what they should sacrifice: but he had recei|ved it by traditions from the fathers, what sacrifices were to be offered, and from Abrahams example, who offered cleane beasts, Gen. 15. an Heifer, a Goate, & a Ramme: Perer. Or rather the Prophet here speaketh by way of comparison, that they were not the externall rites and sacrifices which the Lord so much required at their hands, as feare and obedience, as Gen. 32.28. the Angell saith to Iacob, that he should no more be called Iacob (that is, not onely or chiefly) but Israel: Iun. 3. Therefore the meaning is this, that whereas the Egyptians adored sheep and bullocks▪ as they worshipped a certaine pide bull called Apis, the Israelites could not offer any of these things in Egypt because the Egyptians would ne|ver have endured it: Iun. Borrh. Ferus.

QUEST. XXVII. Whether Moses were ignorant what kindes of beastes they should sacrifice unto God in the desert.

BUt it will be demaunded how Moses did know what sacrifices they should offer unto God, seeing he had yet spoken nothing thereof unto him. 1. I neither thinke that Moses was altogether ignorant thereof, & therefore, as is shewed in the question before, he referreth the text to the inward and spirituall sacrifices. 2. Neither with Pererius, that Moses had any speciall revelation what they should sacrifice; so hee confesseth himselfe, cap. 10.27. that he knew not wherewith to serve the Lord, before they came thither. 3. Neither yet with Iunius that Moses speaketh here doubtfully, inserting into the text the word Fortassis, it may be we shall sacrifice: for Moses was not ignorant of the kindes of beasts in generall, which he had learned from the example of the fathers, which were to be sacrificed unto Iehovah, all which kinds (which were but three, bullockes, sheepe and goates) the Egyptians counted a thing abominable to kill, either to eate, or to sacrifice. 4. Therefore whereas Moses saith, Neither doe wee know wherewith wee shall serve the Lord, till wee come thither, cap. 10.27. he speaketh of the particular kind, as of bullockes, goates, and sheepe, and of the number: for that they were to sacrifice of their cleane cattell in generall, he certainelie knew, as he saith in the same place: Our cattell shall goe with vs, for thereof must wee take to serve the Lord our God.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. What manner of knowledge the wicked have of God.

Vers. 11. THat thou maist know that there is none like unto the Lord. The wicked have a certaine know|ledge of God, but not like unto the godly: they may bee said to know, and not to know, for they are forced, will they, nill they, to confesse there is a God, but this knowledge maketh them but inexcusable, it helpeth not them unto salvation: Simler. As the Apostle sheweth, that the knowledge which the Gentiles had of God tended but to make them without excuse, Rom. 2.20.

2. Doct. No man can mollifie his owne heart.

Vers. 15. When Pharaoh saw that he had rest given him he hardened his heart. Pharaoh neither by plagues, nor yet by blessings can be wonne; whereby we see that such is the naturall prauertie and euilnesse of mans heart, that unlesse the Lord doe mollifie it, it will never be brought under in obedience: Piscat. As our Saviour saith, that none can come unto him, unlesse his Father draw him, Ioh. 6.

3. Doct. God must be worshipped as himselfe hath prescribed.

Vers. 26. Then we should offer unto the Lord God the abomination. Moses here sheweth, that they were not to sacrifice unto God in any other manner than he himselfe had prescribed: for as God onely is to be worshipped, so he onely is to prescribe how he will be worshipped: Ferus. Therefore all will worship is here condemned, as the Apostle calleth it, Collos. 2.23. God will not be worshipped according to the fancies of men.

5. Places of controversie.

1. Conf. Against diffidence or doubtfulness in prayer.

Vers. 9. Take to thee this honour over me, what time I shall pray for thee to destroy the frogs. Moses promiseth to pray confidently, being assured that the Lord would heare him: for the faithfull are sure that the Lord heareth them: Ferus. Who herein crosseth the judgement of the Romanists, who ◊ call the assurance of faith presumption. But our Saviour Christ giveth this rule, that Whatsoever yee aske in prayer, if ye beleewe ye shall have it, it shall be done unto you, Matth. 11.14.

2. Conf. Against praying for the dead.

BESide, as here Pharaoh entreateth Moses, and Moses promiseth to entreate God for him: so we find in other places of Scripture, that the living have prayed for the living, and have been prayed to pray for others: but for the dead to be prayed unto to pray for the living, we have no example in Scripture: Pellican. For they are not present to heare our prayers, and succour our necessities, neither doe know our heartes: and wee have one sufficient advocate and Mediatour, our blessed Redeemer, 1. Ioh. 3.1. and therefore neither neede we the mediation of any other, neither will they assume unto themselves any part of Christs office.

3. Conf. Against repentance which proceedeth only of feare.

Vers. 15. When Pharaoh saw he had respite given him he hardened his heart. Then Pharaohs former repentance was but in hypocrisie, and proceeded only from feare of punishment: such sorrow then and repentance, which onely is caused by the feare of punishment, is no true repentance, neither continueth long: yet this slavish feare of hell is much advanced and extolled by the Romanists, as being a fruite of true obedience: against whom I will urge the testimonie of Ferus in this place, one of their owne preachers: Poenitentia ex solo timore poenae proveniens, non diu durat; quae autem ex amore justitiae oritur, haec perseverat: Repentance proceeding only from the feare of punishment cannot endure long, but that which springeth of the love of righteousness, the same persevereth. So the Apostle saith, that feare hath painfulnes, and he that feareth is not perfect in love, 1. Ioh. 4.18.

6. Places of Morall use.

1. Observ. God can arme his smallest creatures against the wicked.

Vers. 2. I Will smite all thy countrie with frogs. The Lord can arme his smallest creatures to take revenge of the wicked: as he with the sand keepeth in the sea, Ierem. 5.22. so with his smallest armies he can checke and daunt the haughtie spirit of Tyrants, as here Pharaoh is punished with frogs: there|fore feare ye not me saith the Lord, Iere. 5.22. This should make us to stand in awe & feare of God, whose armies are alwayes readie to punish the disobedient. Ferus.

2. Observ. To pray for our enemies.

Vers. 8. What time I shall pray for thee. Moses by this example teacheth us to pray for our enemies, according to Christs rule, Matth. 5. So S. Paul would have prayer & supplication made for Princes, 1. Tim. 2.2. & even then Nero that beastly Tyrant was Emperour. If it bee objected that Pharaoh sinned unto death, and therefore Moses should not have prayed for him, as the Apostle teacheth that such sinners are not to be prayed for, 1. Ioh. 5.16. The answer is, first, that though Moses saw that Pharaohs heart was hardned,* yet he did not know whether the same might be mollified afterward. Secondly, he prayeth not for everlasting salvation, but onely for a temporall blessing. Thirdly, and not so much for Pharaoh, as because it should be a benefit to the whole land. Simler.

Page 90

3. Observ. The Devils power nor his ministers is to be feared.

Vers. 18. They assaied to bring forth lice, but they could not. Therefore not the Devill, but God is to bee feared: for the Devill hath no power, unlesse God permit, to invade man or beast: he could not runne upon the uncleane swine, till Christ had given leave: Perer. If the Devill be not to be feared, much lesse his ministers, as Sorcerers, Conjurers, Witches: God bridleth both them and their master, that with|out the will of our heavenly father he cannot touch a haire of our head.

4. Observ. God will not have his servants tempted above their strength.

AGaine, whereas it was a great triall and temptation to the Israelites to see these wicked Sorcerers to contend with Moses, in working of wonders; the Lord will not trie them beyond their strength but at the length confoundeth the Sorcerers, lest his servants might have stumbled and fell. Perer: as the Apostle saith, God is faithfull and will not suffer you to be tempted above that you are able, 1. Cor. 10.13.

CHAP. IX.

1. The Argument and method.

IN this Chapter three other plagues are described: the fift, of the murrane of cattell, to vers. 8. the sixt, of the botches and sores, to vers. 13, the seventh, of the thunder, haile and lightning, to the end of the Chapter.

In the first part, containing a description of the first plague, we have first the denoun|cing of the plague, with the occasion thereof, if Pharaoh refuse to let Israel goe, vers. 1.2. the manner thereof, vers. 3. the limitation thereof, the Israelites are exempted, vers. 4. the time is appointed, vers. 5. Secondly, the execution followeth, vers. 6.3. The events are two; Pharaoh sendeth to see how it fared with the Israelites cattell, and his heart is hardned, vers. 7.

In the second part, containing the sixth plague, there is the commandement of God to Moses and Aaron, prescribing the signe of the plague, in taking the ashes, vers. 8. and the effect, vers. 9. secondly, the execution, vers. 10. thirdly, the events which are two, the plague of biles overtaketh the Sorcerers themselves, vers. 11. yet Pharaohs heart is hardned, vers. 12.

In the third part, where the seventh plague is described, there is 1. The commandment of God to denounce the plague: in which denuntiation, wee have first the occasion of this plague, Pharaohs refusall to let the people go, vers. 13. then a description of the plague in generall, vers. 14. and the end why God had not consumed them with the pestilence, and other plagues, that God might shew his power, vers. 15.16. then a particular designing of the plague, vers. 18. with advice and counsell given, how to scape the plague, vers. 19. and the successe of that counsell, vers. 20.21.

2. The execution followeth, where God commanded Moses, vers. 22. Moses obeyeth, vers. 23. the effect followeth, set forth by way of comparison, vers. 24.

3. The events are these: first, what hurt the haile and storme did, vers. 25. the preservation of Israel, vers. 26. the relenting of Pharaoh, and his request to Moses. vers. 27.28. Moses admonition, first to Pharaoh, vers. 29. (with a parenthesis, what things were smitten with the tempest, what not, vers. 31.) Moses prayer with the effect, vers. 33. the hardning of Pharaohs heart, vers. 34.35.

2. The Argument and Method.

Vers.* 3. Vpon the cattell & the sheepe: with a very great plague. I. better than, upon the cattell & sheepe shall be a very great plague. B.G. cum caeter; for the perfect distinction athnah, over sheep, divideth it from the clause following: *the Septuagint reade, a verie great death: but the word is deber; a plague.

Vers. 15. For now when I stretch out mine hand. I. or rather, I had stretched out my hand, and might have smitten thee &c. and so thou shouldest have perished from the earth. I. A reason is given, why the Lord did smite only the cattell with the pestilence, whereas he might have smitten the Egyptians also, and cut them off at once: this sense the Chalde expresseth, it was very neere mee, to send a plague to smite thee and thy people: better than for now I have stretcht my hand, that I may smite thee. V.A.P.L.S. for no such plague was now sent: or, I will stretch my hand, that I may smite thee &c. and thou shalt perish from the earth. B.G. for neither do we reade this to have been done.

Vers.* 16. I have caused thee to remaine. I. or, caused thee to stand. A. P.H. or, I have sustayned or kept thee. G. or, thou art reserved 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉. S. better than, I have appointed thee. L.V.B.G.

To shew my power in thee. I.B. S.L. better than, 〈◇〉 shew thee my power. C.A.P.G.V. that the preposition in, is to be supplied, appeareth. cap. 14.18. the Lord is said to get honour upon Pharaoh: and so the Apostle readeth, Rom. 9.17.

Vers.* 27. Thou Pharaoh sent and called B. G. cum c^oter. Then Pharaoh sent them that should observe, and called. I. Though it may bee referred to Pharaohs sending to see in the Land of Goshen: yet it is not safe to adde unto the text.

Vers. 30. I know that thou & thy servants will not yet feare. I.P.B.C.L.S. better than, I know afore I pray, that you will feare. V.A.G. terem better signifieth here nondum, not yet, than antequam, before, as the sense giveth.

3. The explanation of difficult questions.

QUEST. I. Why Pharaoh is so often sent unto, whom the Lord did foresee, that he would not hear^o.

Vers. 1. GO to Pharaoh and tell him. 1. Though God knew that Pharaoh would not heare, yet he sendeth unto him againe both that his malice & obstinacie might be made manifest, & that the judgements also of God upon him, hereby might appeare to bee most just. Simler. 2. And though it was not in Pharaohs power to mollifie his heart, yet hee is punished because neither would he, though it had beene in his power. Simler. The necessitie of Gods decree, doth not take away the freenesse of the will to evill, neither is compulsive, but only maketh the event evitable: Pharaoh then is punished, not for the necessitie that lay upon him, but for the malice and unwillingnesse, and disobedience of his heart. Borrh.

QUEST. II. Why Moses in bringing the plagues doth not alwaies use Aarons rod.

Vers. 3. BEhold▪ the hand of the Lord is &c. This plague is not brought by the lifting up of Aarons rod, as the other. 1. For, if Aaron should have alwayes used his rod, it might have been thought that there was vertue in the rod. Cajetan. 2. God therefore so wisely disposeth in the sending of these plagues, that no exception could be taken. If Moses had done all, they might have suspected him to bee a Sorcerer, and therefore most of these plagues are brought by the ministrie of Aaron. And if they two should have done all, they might have been taken for gods, as Paul and Barnabas was, Act. 14. If they had alwayes used the rod, they might have ascribed vertue unto it: If God had by his immediate hand, sent all the plagues without any meanes, it had not bin so admirable: for who doubteth, but that God of himselfe can do all things? Ferus.

QUEST. III. Why the Lord punisheth the Egyptians in their cattell.

Vers. 3. VPon thy flocke which is in the field &c. 1. The Lord never sendeth any great plague upon the world, but he giveth warning of it before: so he did forewarne the old world of the floud by Noah: the Sodomites of their destruction by Lot: the Egyptians were admonished here by Moses: the Israelites by Ieremie, of the captivitie of Babylon. 2. The cattell heere are punished for the sinne of their masters: God beginneth with smaller punishments, before he proceed to greater, Osiander. 3. This plague was lesse troublesome than the former, but more discommodious, for by the destruction of their horse and oxen, their tillage was hindred, and they should want their sheepe for cloathing, their asses and horses for burden: Simler. 4. And this plague was most just: for as they had oppressed the Israelites before, in taking their oxen to plow, their horses and asses to carrie burdens; so the Lord doth worthily punish them in their cattell. Perer. As the fish were destroyed before in the water, so now the beasts upon land: to let them know that they were worthie to possesse nothing, God might justly deprive them of all. Borrh. 5. The Latine translator readeth, as though the hand of God should be, not onlie upon their cattell, but upon their very fields and grounds, which should be first poisoned and infected: but he leaveth out the Hebrew pronoun, asher, which shall be in the fields: for it is evident by the text, that the cattell onely were infected.

QUEST. IV. Why the Lord doth not alwayes exempt his people from temporall calamities.

Vers. 4. I will make separation betweene the cattell of Israel &c. Though it pleased God in this and other plagues, for his great glory sake, to exempt his people from these publike calamities; yet alwayes the Lord doth not so deale with his servants, for the true Prophets suffered famine under Achab, as well as the rest; Ieremie was taken with the Citie; Daniel carried into captivitie; which the Lord doth for these causes: 1. To purge out the corruption and infirmities which are in his owne servants. 2. To make triall of their patience, that God thereby might be glorified. Simler. 3. And the Lord doth chastise them in the small afflictions of this life, making a separation betweene the righteous and the wicked in the great judgements of the next world, as the Lord saith by his Prophet: In a little have I forsaken thee, but with great compassions will I gather thee, Isay. 54.7. Ferus.

QUEST. V. In what sense all the cattell of Egypt are said to have died.

Vers. 6. All the cattell of Egypt died. All the cattell in generall died not, for many died afterward being smitten with the haile and tempest, vers. 27. 1. Some therefore doe thus expound it, that no cattell died but the Egyptians and all that died were theirs: Cajetan. 2. But it seemeth rather to be taken according to the phrase of Scripture, all died, that is, the greatest part. Iun. Perer. Simler.

QUEST. VI. Whether Pharaoh sent into Goshen in the other plagues.

Vers. 7. Then Pharaoh sent, and behold. 1. Some thinke that Pharaoh sent before, when the other plagues were; but the Scripture maketh no mention of it: as many matters of fact are omit|ted beside: but Thostatus refuseth this conjecture: for why should this bee onely here expressed that Pha|raoh sent, if he had done it at other times? 2. Some thinke that the other plagues all but the first, as of the frogges, the lice, and swarmes were such as Pharaoh could not send, and in the plagues following, but in the first Pharaoh did not then bethinke himselfe of any such thing: Perer. 3. But it is more likely that

Page 92

Pharaoh, though now twice he had been told so much by Moses, did neglect to trie whether the Israelites were exempted from these plagues or no. Simler.

QUEST. VII. Why Pharaoh called not to Moses to pray.

Pharaoh entreated not Moses at this time to pray to God to remove this plague, partly through envie and grieffe, to see the privilege and freedome of the Israelites which was an occasion of the hardning of his heart: partly because the other plagues continued sometime, and so might be remooved. But this plague of mortalitie and murraine came all at once, and suddenly swept the cattell away, so that no re|medie was left, neither was there place for prayer to remoove it, after this plague had suddenly smitten their cattell in all their coasts. Pererius.

QUEST. VIII. Whether this plague were naturall or supernaturall.

COncerning the kind of this plague: 1. It is evident that it was no naturall plague but supernaturall, for the text saith, the hand of God should be upon their cattell, that is, should smite them immedia|tely, no meanes being used at all: not so much as Aarons rod, whereby other plagues were called for. And beside it was not infectious as other naturall plagues are: for the cattell of the Israelites feeding among the Egyptians cattell (they dwelling in the midst of them) were not smitten at all with this plague. Simler. 2. Yet there might be some preparation unto this plague by the former, as it is menti|oned, cap. 8.14. that the land stunk of the dead frogges, and so both the aire and ground were corrup|ted, apt to breed putrefaction: Perer. But this was not the cause of the plague: for if the earth, and aire generally had been corrupted, the men had died as well as the beasts.

QUEST. IX. Why Moses is the minister of the sixt plague.

Vers. 10. And Moses sprinkled them toward heaven. 1. They both tooke the ashes out of the fornace, but Moses sprinkled them toward heaven. Philos saith, that Aaron was the Minister of those plagues, wherewith the earth and water were smitten; and Moses of those which came from heaven & out of the aire. Augustine giveth this reason, because Aarons office was to speake to the people, he wor|keth upon the earth and water; because Moses was in the things that belonged to God, hee is the mini|ster of those plagues which came from above. But these are curious observations. The reason rather was this: they stood both before Pharaoh, and therefore Moses as the chiefe whom the Lord had made as Pharaohs God, he is the minister of this wonder: Ferus. 2. As the two first signes were of the water, the two next on the earth; so this is wrought in the aire: Simler rather than the element of fire, as Ferus.

QUEST. X. Of the sixt plague of boyles, and of the manner thereof.

Vers. 10. AND there came boyles breaking out. First the handfull of ashes being cast into the aire, there was raised as a cloud of white dust like unto the ashes of the fornace over all Egypt: which dust could not be engendred of that handfull: but upon the sprinkling of the ashes, the Lord by his great power, caused that cloud of dust in the aire over al Egypt. 2. The matter which is here used is somewhat answerable to the effect, for as Moses taketh of the white ashes of the fornace, so they falling upon man & beast caused burning boyles, which at the first swelled & hoded the flesh, & then brake forth into sores: the word here used for blisters is derived of bagnah, which signifieth to boyle up as the water doth at the fire: Borrh. Perer. Philo. thinketh that these sores or boiles were over al their bodie, & grew into one being most grievous to behold. 3. This plague is answerable to the Egyptians sinne, for as they oppresse the Israeli|tes with fornace work, in the burning of brick, so they are punished with burning sores which came of the ashes taken out of the fornace. Perer.

QUEST. XI. Why the Egyptians are smitten with vlcers.

Vers. 11. AND the boyles are upon the enchanterers. 1. This sheweth that the Magitians, though before they had confessed the power of God, yet doe persist still in their malice against Moses: Simler. Hereupon Cajetan thinketh that they did not acknowledge the power of God before, but rather some superiour power of the spirits: but this followeth not, because they resist Moses still, that they did not confesse the power of God before: for like as the same aire that is illuminate by the sunne is darkened when the sunne is gone away, so no marvell, if the minds of the wicked after they have recei|ved some light be darkned againe. Perer. 2. This is the third time that these sorcerers are confounded: first when Aarons serpent eat up theirs: secondly, when their power was restrained in the third plague and now because they will not yet give over, they are punished. 3. Like unto these sorcerers are all un|faithfull counsellors to Princes, whom the Lord in like manner will plague: Borrh. And thus the Magi|tians of that Pharaoh of Rome are smitten with exulcerate consciences, which swelling with pride and hypocrisie doe bring forth most vile ulcers of impietie. Simlerus.

QUEST. XII. Of the hardning of Pharaohs heart.

Vers. 12. AND the Lord hardned Pharaohs heart. 1. The word signifieth to obfirme or strengthen, chazak, because it was a signe of strength, or rather stubburnenes to stand against God: there is another word used to signifie the same thing, cabadh, to make heavie, as cap. 8.15. Pharaoh first by his owne corrupt mind, hardning or making his heart heavie, the Lord as by casting a heavie weight upō it ma|keth it heavier: Iun. 2. Origen well noteth how sometime Pharaoh is said to harden his owne heart, c. 8.15.

sometime the Lord as in this place: the first kinde of hardning is declared by the Apostle, how it com|meth when men by their impenitencie abuse the lenitie and longanimitie of God, Rom. 2.5. But the same Apostle making mention of the other hardning by the Lord, Rom. 9. he passeth it over, and it may be thought to bee one of those high matters, which Paul heard being taken up into paradise and is not to bee uttered. Thus Origen counteth this a great secret, how God is said to harden the heart. And so it is, yet not such a secret, but that we find the same opened in scripture: how the Lord by giving wicked men over to themselves, and withdrawing his grace doth as a most just Judge punish their voluntary obstina|cie with a further degree of induration. See more hereof before, Doct. 2. in 7. cap. 3. But here God is to be considered not as in his bare prescience only foreseeing the obstinacie & hardnesse of mens heartes, but as a just Judge in leaving of them to themselves. Simler. 4. And this Augustine doth worthily wonder at, that Pharaoh is hardned by those meanes which in all likelihood should have mollified him. For if the Israelites cattell had died aswell as the Egyptians, and if the sorcerers had prevailed still, hee might have had some colour: but seeing all things doe fall out contrarie, the Israelites to be preserved, and his sorcerer▪ to be foiled, he being still hardned, bewraieth a most obstinate heart that could no way be mollified.

QUEST. XIII. What plague the Lord threatned to destroy Pharaoh with.

Vers. 15. FOr now I had stretched forth my hand. 1. Some doe understand this generallie of the plagues following, shewing that the plagues to come were greater than these which were alreadie past, and that the Egyptians had felt nothing to that which they were like to feelee: Ferus. But here mention is made of the plague of pestilence which both Pharaoh and his people should be smitten with, yet none such came. 2. Some do referre it to the plague of the first borne, and the full accomplishment of this threatning, they say, was in the red Sea: Osiander. But neither Pharaoh nor his people perished by the plague 3. It is better understood of the plague, which was alreadie past: that God might as well have destroyed them with the pestilence sent upon the cattell, but that he spared them for another end: sic Iun. Borrh. Perer. This sense best agreeth to that which followeth, vers. 16. For this cause have I kept thee &c. The Chalde Paraphrast also expresseth the same sense: as is before shewed in the divers readings.

QUEST. XIII. In what sense the Lord saith, I have kept thee.

Vers. 16. FOr this cause have I kept thee &c. 1. Not that God made Pharaoh obstinate of purpose, to shew his power on him, & thereby to get glorie to himselfe: for God needeth not mans mallice for the setting forth of his glorie. Ferus. And like as the Apostle giveth this rule, not to doe evill, that good may come of it, so neither doth the Lord give consent unto evill, that some good thing may be wrought thereby. 2. Some referre it to Gods permission: that he suffered Pharaoh to be hardened to this end, that hee might get glorie by him: but neither can this be said of God that he suffereth any evill to bee done, as it is evill: and to suffer one to be hardned, is the greatest punishment of sin that can be: and it is usually inflicted for great sinnes that were committed before: therefore, before Pharaoh had grievously sinned, he cannot be said to be permitted and suffered to bee hardned. Perer. 3. Some do understand it of Gods ordinance, that Pharaoh being hardned and become obstinate by his owne corrupt will, is ordained of God for the further setting forth of his glorie. Perer. 4. But though this exposition be sound, yet it seemeth not to be so fit and proper in this place: this verse then depending of the other, sheweth the reason why the Lord had saved and reserved Pharaoh out of the pestilence, that he might shew his power in him. Simler. Borrh. Iun. This then is the sense, though Pharaoh, being wickedly bent and obstinate, had deserved to have been cut off by the former plagues, yet the Lord was patient to him ward, and suffered him yet to continue, that the Lord might get greater glorie by him. Ferus. 5. The Apostle indeed, in setting forth this example, hath relation to Gods eternall decree, Rom. 9. yet it may very well stand also with this application to the present time of Pharaohs preservation: for that which God doth presently, he also decreed before in his eternall counsell to be done. Simler.

QUEST. XV. The plague of haile supernaturall.

Vers. 18. I will cause to raine a mightie great haile. 1. Although haile, thunder, lightning, are for the most part procured by naturall causes: yet this was a supernaturall and extraordinarie tempest: for these reasons: in Egypt there are no tempestes, or winter weather, but only in places neere the sea, in the time of winter there fall some thinne showers, but above Memphis there falleth no raine at all, Sic Philo. This tempest then of haile was unusuall in Egypt: secondly, it was generally over all Egypt as tempests use not to be: thirdly, it came at a certaine time prefixed. Simler. And this was admirable in it, that the fire and haile being mingled together, the fire did not melt the haile stones, nor the haile quench the fire, as Philo also noteth, and it is set forth, Wisdom. 16. 2. In this plague three elements together shew their force, the aire in the thunder, the water in the haile, the fire in the lightning. Perer. 3. Whereas the Grecians and Egyptians, and other heathen did imagine, some gods to be of the aire, some of the water, some of the land, the Lord therefore sendeth of all sorts of plagues upon the Egyptians, in the aire, the water, in the earth, in the fire, to shew himselfe to bee Lord of all the elements, and of all creatures. Theodore quaest. 21. 4. Concerning the application of this plague; Origen understandeth the thunder, haile and lightning, of the Word of God, the voice thereof instructeth, it beateth downe sin, as haile, & as fire burneth up the stubble of our affections. Augustine, whom Ferus followeth, compareth it with the eight Commandement, Thou shalt not steale: for as heere the fruit which the trees beare, are beaten off with haile, so, whatsoever gaine is gotten deceitfully it perisheth, and Gods curse is upon it. But such mysticall applications are more curious than profitable, every man according to his own conceit, may find out wittie conveiances. But this observation is more proper, which Ferus noteth, that this plague hath also a fit correspondencie with the crueltie of the Egyptians: for as they did cause the Israelites to wander up and downe their fields to gather straw, so now the Lord sendeth haile and lightning, which destroyeth the fruit in their fields.

QUEST. 16. Whether there useth to be no rayne and hayle in Egypt.

Vers. 18. SVch as was not in Egypt since the foundation thereof. These words do give occasion to inquire, whether raine, haile and thunder are usuall in Egypt, or not at all, as some affirme. 1. Iosephus thus writeth, that in this plague there came haile, never seene in Egypt before, and bigger than useth to bee in other countries in the time of winter. 2. Philo also writeth, that Aegyptus sola inter regiones in mediano tractu hyemem ignoret: that Egypt alone of all the South countries hath no winter. And consequently, no winter weather, as raine, haile and such like: and he giveth three reasons thereof because it is neere unto Torrida Zona, the hot & partching climate, which drieth up the clouds: aut inundans fluvius nubes absumit, or Nilus overflowing doth waste the clouds: and seeing their grounds become fruitfull by the inundation of Nilus, natura non solet in vanum operari, vt pluvias terrae non indigenti largiatur: nature worketh not in vaine to give raine to a ground that needeth it not. 3. So Plinie shewing the reason, why lightning is rare in winter, or summer, because in the one the cold vapors extinguish what fiery matter is drawne up, in the other because the heate drieth up the exhalation, giveth instance for the first in Scythia a cold countrie; for the other in Egypt a hot countrey, that thunder and lightning are not there to bee seene or heard. But in temperate countries they are usuall, as in Italy: Plin. lib. 2. cap. 50. 4. Beside the Scripture seemeth so to affirme, that it raineth not in Egypt, but they watred their fields with their feete, as one doth a garden, Deut. 11.10. See also Zach. 14.13. 5. But against this it may bee objected, that if there used to bee no haile, nor thunder in Egypt, to what purpose is this comparison made, that there was none such in Egypt since the foundation thereof? Therefore this must needs be affirmed, that Egypt is not altogether without haile and raine, but as is before alleaged out of Philo, in the northerly parts thereof toward the sea, they use to have some thinne shewers: but yet generally, for the greatest part of Egypt they have none. Perer.

QUEST. XVII. What is the meaning of these words since the foundation of Egypt.

Since the foundation of Egypt was laid. 1. Not from the foundation of the world, from whence, unto the 80. yeere of Moses, are yeeres 2453. for the text afterward evidentlie speaketh of the time since Egypt was a nation, vers. 24.2. Neither is it to be understood, since Egypt was so called: for Egyptus brother of Danaus, son of the Egyptian Belus gave that name unto it: who was about the time of Iosuah, as Augustine thinketh, following the computation of Eusebius which was 800. yeeres after the floud. But as Iosephus alleageeth out of Manethon the Egyptian Chronicle, Dana•s lived after the Hebrewes departed out of Egypt 300. yeeres: Then it is evident, that in Moses time, nor many yeeres after, Egypt had not that name. 3. The meaning then is, that since Egypt began first to bee inhabited, which was about 100. yeeres after the floud, at the division of tongues, at the building of the tower of Babel: for then Noahs sonnes were dispersed into the world, and Mizraim the sonne of Cham was the founder of this nation, of whom it is in Scripture usually so called: from thence untill this time are 697. yeeres. 4. Hence is manifest both the error of Gerardus Mercator; that the Egyptians do fetch their petigree from beyond Noahs floud; as also that fabulous fiction of the Egyptians, that before Amasis, who was King of Egypt in the time of Cyrus, affirme that there reigned in Egypt above 330. Kings: and they do boast of Chronicles of 13. thousand yeeres. Pompon. Mela. lib. 1. de situ orbis. Perer.

QUEST. XVIII. Of the greatnesse of this tempest of hayle.

Vers. 28. THat there be no more thunders of God, and haile. That is such grievous and terrible thunders. 1. The greatnes of these thunders is set forth by these foure arguments: the efficient, God was the author of them beyond the ordinarie worke of nature; the matter there was fire and haile mingled together; the effects, they killed both man and beast that were abroad, and blasted all the corne that was above the ground, vers. 31. and by way of comparison, there was never such haile in Egypt before, vers. 24. Ferus. 2. Wonderful are the effects of thunder and lightning, they make the Hinds to calve, and other cattell to cast their young: and therefore because of the terror and power of them, they are called the voices of God, Psal. 29. Borrh. 3. In this haile, this is admirable, that although it rained haile throughout all the land of Egypt, yet the land of Goshen was exempted: as the great hailestones which fell upon Ioshuas enemies and killed them, touched not the hoast of Israel Iohoua 10.4. Thus the haile and lightning destroyed all abroad, the haile the more softer and tender things, the lightning such things as were sturdie and strong, renting and breaking asunder what soever resisted. The Chronicles make mention of a most grievous haile in France, under the reigne of Lodovicus sonne to Charles the Great, about the yeere of the Lord 821. which was of such bignes that it slew both man and beast: and at that time a peece of ye of 12. foote long fell with the haile out of the aire. Perer. 11.

QUEST. XXI. How Moses knew that Pharaoh dissembled.

Vers. 30. I Know that yee will not yet feare. 1. Some make this the sense (expounding the word terem for priusquam, afore) I know that now, before the plague is removed at my prayer, that yee will make a semblance and shew of feare, but when I have prayed, and you are delivered, then you will returne to your former hardnes of heart. Vatab. But beside that to make up this sense, much must be understood and supplied, that is not in the text, the word terem rather signifieth here nondum, not yet, as it is taken, Gen. 19.4. and cap. 10.7. and thus both the Septuagint and Chalde Paraphrast interpret it negatively, as is shewed before in the divers readings. 2. Although Mosessaw some present fruits of sorrow and feare, yet he knew, that they were far from true fruits, because Pharaoh only humbled himselfe for the time, to be delivered from this plague: and Moses had experience alreadie of his hypocrisie and dissimulation: and further, he knew that Pharaoh was given over of God to hardnes of heart, and therefore no found fruits of repentance could come from him.

QUEST. X. What kind of graine was not smitten with the hayle.

Vers. 32. THE wheate and the rie were not smitten. 1. That which we here translate rie, is in the Hebrew, cusmeth, which Hierome sometime translateth vicia, a kind of fetches or tares, sometime far: some take it for a kinde of beare barley, others take it for spelta, a kinde of wheate so called, well knowne in Italie and Pannonio: so Montan. and Pagnin: but it is rather that kinde of graine which is called 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 zea, all one with 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, as the Septuagint reade, a middle kind of graine betweene wheate and barley such as rie is. Diosco•ides saith that 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 is of the kinde of 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉. lib.2. cap. 1, so also saith Hero•dotus that they used that kinde called 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 for bread, which some call 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, which is well translated rie, for it was a kinde of beead corne, therefore neither fetches nor barley, and a middle sort betweene wheate and barley, 2. Now in that the barley was smitten, and not the wheate and rie, the reason is given, be|cause the one was cared, and the other was hid, the word is aphiloth obscure, not hid in the hose, as Pel•lican, but hid in the ground: Iun.3. the Septuagint reade 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, the Latine serotina, because the wheates and ries were late sowne: but it is not like that wheat and rie were sowne after their barley, which sooner commeth up and is sooner ripe: but though they were sowne together, yet the barley lieth not so long hid in the ground, as the wheate and rie: the reason then of this difference was, the barley was growne of good length out of the ground, and so was blasted and smitten, the other not yet appearing out of the tilth, but lying hid. 4. But with us the use is contrarie, for our wheate and rie, which wee call win|ter corne, are out of the ground before the barley is sowne Some thinke that the Egyptians doe sow all their graine together in the slime and soile that Nilus leaveth behinde, about the Autumne, and then plow it in November, and sow it againe in Aprill: Borrh. in cap. 7. but that is not like: for both the moist|nes of the ground, after the overflowing of N•lus, and the warmth of the aire, which in winter time in Egypt is temperate, would have brought forth the wheate and rie sooner, that it could not have lien so long hid, as toward the spring, when it is supposed this tempest of haile came. And againe, the use of husbandmen is not first to sow their ground and then to plow it: but first they make it plaine and readie, and then cast in their seede, as the Prophet sheweth, Esay. 28.25. Therefore it seemeth more like, that the Egyptians sow no corne at all, but toward the spring, as the like use is in some parts of England, as in Cumberland, as I have been informed, where they sow not their wheate and rie before winter, as in other countries but toward the rising of the yeere, and so all these kindes being sowne much about one time, the barley might sooner appeare above the ground 5. Now by this it may be conjectured at what time of the yeere these plagues came, the corne doth begin to eare but toward the spring, when all things as it were revive and begin to flourish. But the spring in those countries is forwarder, then it is with us: for they had ripe corne in mid March when they kept the Passeover: this plague then of haile might be sent about the end of Februarie, and so all the rest within the compasse of a moneth, or in a very short time, as is shewed before, quest. 29. in cap. 7.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. The pestilence is sent of God.

Vers. 3. BEhold the hand of the Lord is upon the flocke. This sheweth that the plague and pestilence commeth not by chance, nor by naturall meanes onely, but it is sent of God: so the Prophet saith, Shall there be evill in the citie, and the Lord hath not done it? Amos 3.6. Ferus.

2. Doct. Why the Lord suffereth the wicked and is patient to them ward.

Vers. 16. THerefore have I kept thee. The Lord useth great patience and longanimitie toward the wicked and obstinate, as heere to ward Pharaoh, which the Lord doth for divers ends: 1. Hereby it appeareth how great an evil the hardnes of the heart is, w^{ch} can neither be wonne by benefits, nor yet mollified by punishments. 2. That the wicked and impenitent may bee inexcusable, having so long a time of repentance given them. 3. That Gods goodnesse & mercie might appeare in suffering so long the vesses of his wrath. 4. That God thereby may have occasion to shew his judgements in the world, and to set forth his glorie: which is the reason here touched why the Lord spared Pharaoh. Perer. 3. disput. in cap. 9.

3. Doct. How the Lord punisheth sinne with sinne.

Vers. 12. THE Lord hardned the heart of Pharaoh. Thus God in his justice doth punish sin with sin. Pharaohs former obstinacie and hardnes of heart, is punished with a greater measure and degree of obstinacie. Piscator. So Saul was punished with desertion, and being left unto himselfe, after he had committed most grievous sinnes of hypocrisie, presumption, disobedience, crueltie. Thus the Lord punished the Gentiles, by giving them over to their hearts lusts, Rom. 1.2. The hardning then of the heart, as it is evill, proceedeth of man, as it is a punishment, it is disposed and inflicted of God.

4. Doct. Of the force of the law of nature.

Vers. 27. PHaraoh said I have now sinned. Heere wee see the force of the law of nature, which infor|meth Pharaohs conscience, that he had sinned and done amisse: So the Apostle teacheth, That the Gentiles did shew the effect of the law written in their hearts, their consciences bearing witnes, and their thoughts accusing one another, or excusing, Rom. 2.15. Hence also it is evident, how the Law dif|fereth from the Gospell: the Law worketh terror, and revealeth sinne, but the Gospell worketh com|fort in the remission and forgiveness of sinne, Borrh.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Conf. That God hardneth the heart otherwise than by permission.

Vers. 12. THE Lord hardned the heart of Pharaoh. Bellarmino, and generally the Romanists do hold, that God doth no otherwise blind the mind, and harden the heart, than permittendo & de|serendo, by permission onely and desertion, or forsaking, negativè, non positivè, negatively only, not positively, that is by denying and withholding his grace, not by acting or doing any thing. lib. 2. de amission gratia, cap. 14. obser. 4.

But this text evidently doth convince him. The Lord is here said to harden Pharaohs heart, w^{ch} sheweth an action in God, not a connivence or permission only. And three waies God is an agent in hardning of mans heart, and yet he is free from all touch or suspition of evill. 1. God is to be considered as the Creator of all, from whom both the righteous and unrighteous receive al their naturall powers & faculties, where|by they live, move, worke or doe any thing, In him we move, live and have our being. Act. 17.28. So Augu|stine saith, Non peccati cujusquam author est deus, sed naturae creator: God is not the author of any sin, but the Creator of nature, which when it had power not to offend, yet trespassed of it owne accord. 2. Though the Lord willeth not sinne to bee done, neither approoveth it when it is done, yet he doth order and dispo|seth it being done, * and directeth it to such ende as himselfe pleaseth: so it is said in the Psalme, Whatsoe|ver it pleased God that did hee in heaven and in earth, Psal. 13 5.6. God would never suffer sin to be com|mitted in the world, but that he knoweth how to turne it to good, as here he useth Pharaohs hardnes of heart to his owne glorie. Augustine saith, Aliud Deus fecit & ordinavit, aliud non fecit, sed ordinavit: Some things God both doth & ordaineth, some things he doth not, yet ordaineth: that is, disposeth of them to some good end. 3. God is to be considered in the action of the hardning of the heart as a just judge that pu|nisheth sinne by sinne: so is he also an agent, and not a patient or sufferer onely. Their owne master of the sentences doubteth not to say, * that concupiscentia in quantum poena est peccati, Deum habet a|thorem: that concupiscence as it is the punishment of sinne hath God the author thereof. lib. 2. distinct. 23. So like|wise may it be said, that the hardning of the heart, as it is a punishment of sinne proceedeth from God; and his reason is, because all punishments are just. Therefore as God is a Creator giving power and life to all, as hee disposeth and ordereth evill actions unto good, as he is a just Judge and punisher of sinne, so is he an agent, in hardning of the heart, therein shewing his power, wisdom and justice: but the sinne and evill therein committed is only of man, who properly hardneth his owne heart.

2. Conf. Against the toleration of any contrarie religion.

Vers. 29. AS soone as I am out of the Ci•ie. Moses will not pray in the Citie which was given to superstition and Idolatrie, he will separate himself from the companie and presence of the superstitious and unbeleevvers, that he may give himselfe to fervent and zealous praier. And for this cause he said before, that the people could not sacrifice unto God in Egypt: Simler. By this then we see, that God cannot be purely served in the midst of Idolaters. They which will worship God aright must sequester themselves from among such. It is therefore a dangerous thing that any toleration of a contrarie religion should be admitted, God will have as the whole heart in man, so the whole worship in his Church: where Gods arke is, there Dagon shall be thrust out of his place: for there is no fellowship betweene light and darkenes, Christ & Belial, 2. Cor 6.14.15. As Iacob would suffer no superstition in his familie, but removed all the images out of his house, *Gen.*35. so will a religious prince in his kingdom.

3. Conf. Of assurance and confidence in prayer.

I Will spread mine hands unto the Lord and the thunder shall cease. Moses here prayeth with confidence, and is assured that God will heare his prayer. So ought we to aske in faith, & pray with assurance that God will heare us. S. James saith, let him aske in faith and waver not, neither let that man thinke (that is, he which wavereth) that hee shall receive any thing of the Lord, cap. 1.6.7. How then are not the Romanists ashamed thus to affirme, non requiri in oratione sidem qua certo credamus Deum absolute facturum quod petimus; that faith is not requisite in prayer; to beleieve certainly that God will absolutely do that for us which we aske? Bellarmin de bon. operib. in par•icul. cap. 9.

Indeed there is a double kind of such assurance, one is extraordinarie, which proceedeth of some specliall revelation, as here Moses building upon Gods particular promises made unto him, was sure his prayer should take effect; the other is an ordinarie assurance, which is also of two sorts▪ either when we pray for things spirituall concerning eternall life, where the faithfull have an absolute assurance to bee heard: or for things •emporall, where our assurance is but conditionall, that God will grant us such thing so faire forth as they are expedient. And even in praying for things temporall there is also an assurance <...> and determina•e, which is somewhat rare, yet often found in the children of God, when they ha•e <...> and constant perswasion, that God will heare them for their temporall blessing which they pray for: and God therein never faileth them: as Iacob was assured, that God would keepe him in his journey, and give him bread to eat and clothes to put on, Gen. 28. And of this assurance S. James speaketh th•t <...> of faith shall save the sicke, Iam. 5. they which pray with confidence and assurance, for the health of the bodie, even shall be heard therein: they which are not heard have not that f•i•h, and God giveth them not that faith and assurance, because he seeth such health not to be good for them. There is beside this a ge•nerall assurance, which every one of Gods children feeleth in their prayer: as to be fully perswaded, that either God will give them that particular temporall blessing, which they pray for, or some other gift which God seeth to be more necessary for them. As Paul was not in particular assured that the pricke of the flesh should be taken from him, yet he knew that his prayer should obtaine either that, or a more pretious gift: as the Lord said, my grace is sufficient for thee: he received the grace and strength of God, to resist and overcome that temptation, though it were not altogether taken from him. Augustine concerning this difference of assurance betweene prayer for things temporall, and for things spirituall hath this excellent sentence: Sanitatem quis petit, cum agrotat, & forte ei adhuc aegrotare utile est; potest fieri ut hic non exlandiariis: at vero cum illud petis, ut det tibi Deus vitam aeternam, securus esto, accipies: A man asketh health when he is sicke, and yet it may bee good for him to be sicke; it may bee then thou shalt not be heard here; but when thou asketh of God to give thee eternall life, be out of doubt thou shalt receive it.

6. Places of morall use.

1. Observ. Sinne the cause of extraordinary sicknesse.

Vers. 10. THere came boiles breaking out into blisters. As Pharaoh here and his people were smitten with boiles and ulcers for their sins, which they had committed against God and his people; so when the Lord sendeth strange diseases and sicknesses into the world, wee must take them as signes of the wrath and indignation of God, Simler. As the Apostle sheweth that the Corinthians for certaine abuses, which they were guiltie of, in receiving the Lords Supper, were chastised, some with sicknesse, some with death, 1 Cor. 11.30.

2. Observ. Gods judgements tempered with mercy.

Vers. 19▪ SEnd therefore now and gather thy cattell &c. The Lord remembreth mercie in the midst of his judgements: though the Lord had certainly determined to bring this plague of haile upon Egypt: yet together Moses giveth advice, how both they and their cattell should be preserved from it: thus saith the Psalmist, Mercy and truth are met, righteousness and peace shall k•ss• one another, Psal. 85.10. Gods truth and justice is accompanied with mercy, truth and favour, Pellican.

3. Observ. Confession of sins which proceedeth onely from the feare of Gods judgements is no true or right confession.

Vers. 27. PHaraoh said unto them, I have now sinned. This was no true confession, but Pharaoh was forced thereunto by this grievous plague of haile and lightning, that was upon him and his people: and beside, he simply confesseth not his sinne, but now▪ that is, in this, or at this time, I have sinned: so hypocrites doe not truly confesse their sins, but those onely they sometimes will seeme to acknowledge, that are notorious, and wherein they are manifestly convicted, Ferus. Here we have all the parts of popish penance, contrition, confession and satisfaction, for he is content to let the people goe: but yet it was far from true or sound repentance: so in Iudas there was all three, contrition, confession, and satisfaction in restoring the money, which he had taken to betray Christ: but he wanted the fruits of true repentance, the peace of the conscience, and cleering thereof before God by remission of sinnes, as the Apostle sheweth, Rom. 5.1. and 1 Cor. 7.11. Simler.

4. Observ. To hope the best of men while they live.

Vers. 29. AS soone as I am out of the Citie I will spread mine hands, &c. Though Pharaoh had deceived Moses divers times before, yet he refused not still to pray for him: he hoped the best of him, as the Apostle saith, that charitie hopeth all things, 1 Cor. 13.7. which teacheth us that we should be wan|ting unto none in our prayers but hope the best of them while they live, Ferus.

CHAP. X.

1. The method and Argument.

T His Chapter hath two parts according unto the two plagues therein described, the eight of Locusts, to vers. 21. and the ninth of the three dayes darknesse, to the end of the Chapter.

In the first part, there is, 1. the denouncing or threatning of the plague, to vers. 12. wherein we have, first Gods Commandment unto Moses to goe unto Pharaoh, with two reasons, that God might worke his great miracles, vers. 1. and that he might declare them to their posteritie, vers. 2. then Moses obedience in the execution of his charge: where he beginneth with the reprehension of Pharaoh, for his obstinacy, vers. 3. then he nameth what plague the Lord will send, vers. 4. and the effects thereof, both in devouring the fruits of the earth, vers. 5. and filling their houses, vers. 6. Thirdly, the event: Pharaohs servants move the King, vers. 7. hee causeth Moses and Aaron to be called, vers. 8. they propound their request, vers. 9. But Pharaoh yeeldeth not unto it but in part, vers. 10, 11.

2. Then followeth the execution of the judgement before denounced, where the signe, the stretching forth of Moses hand with the rod is expressed, then the instrumentall cause, the East wind, vers. 13. the plague it selfe, vers. 14. and the effects thereof, vers. 15.

3. The events are these three, Pharaohs confession of his sinne, with his supplication to Moses to pray unto God, vers. 16.17. Moses prayer, with the effect thereof, vers. 18. the third is the hardning of Pharaohs heart, vers. 23.

In the second part, which containeth a description of the ninth plague of darknesse, 1. The Commandment of God is premised, shewing Moses what he should doe, stretch out his hand toward heaven; and to what end, that there may be darknesse; and what darknesse, such as might be felt, vers. 21. 2. The execution followeth: shewing Moses obedience, he stretched out his hand, vers. 22. the sequell thereof, in bringing darknesse, which is described by the circumstance of the time, it continueth three daies, vers. 23. by the effects, none could stirre from his place; by the contrary, there was light with the people of Israel.

Thirdly, the events in Pharaoh: 1. He seemeth to relent in promising to let the people goe, with some limitation and exception of their cattell, vers. 24. Secondly his obstinacie and hardnesse of heart in refusing to let them goe upon Moses replie, vers. 25▪ 26, 27. Thirdly, Pharaohs threatning of Moses, and charge that he should see his face no more, vers. 28. with Moses answer, vers. 29.

2. The divers readings.

*Vers. 2. That I may shew these my signes in the middest thereof A.P.H. 1. In the middest of Egypt, Lo•, of his Kingdome. V. G. better than, before him. B. or in him. L. or, in the middest of them. C. or, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, upon them. S. It is better referred to the land it selfe, than either to Pharaoh or the Egyptians, as the words shew in the originall.

*Vers. 7. How long shall he be a snare unto us? I.P.B. rather than, an offence or scandall. A.V.C.L.S.G. for Moses had beene an instrument of such grievous plagues, that they feared him, even as the bird the snare: the word m•kesh signifieth both, but the first rather here, as likewise Deut. 7.16.

Doest thou not yet know that all Egypt is destroyed? I. B. C. L. better than, wilt thou know first that &c. A.P.V.G. or, wilt thou know that Egypt is destroyed? Here the particle terem is omitted, which signifieth both nondum, not yet, and ante quam, before: the first is more fitting here: see before chap. 9.30.

*Vers. 10. See to it, for evill is before your face. I.A.P. that is, he threatneth them if they will not cease to be troublesome to him, as vers. 28. better than, ye have some mischief in hand. B. so also L.S.V. the first sense is more agreeable, because of that watch word set before, se•, as vers. 28. take heed to thy selfe: the Chalde putteth both these senses together: See the evill which you intend to do, standeth against your face. G.

*Vers. 11. He cast them out of Pharaohs presence. A.P.V.C. i. Pharaoh cast them out from his face. I. bet|ter than, were thrust or cast out of Pharaohs presence. B. G. L. S. for the word •egaresh is in the singular number.

*Vers. 13. He stretched his rod over the land of Egypt. B. or, upon. G. cum c•ter, against. I. ghal more usually and properly signifieth upon, as chap. 8.5.

*Vers. 14. Locusts. I. cum c•ter: better than, grasshoppers. B. G. Arbeh is the locust, and chagabh the grasshopper, Eccles. 12.5.

*Vers. 19. The reedie sea. I.V. the sea Suph. A.P. rather than, the red sea. L. S. C. B. G. Suph signifieth a r•ed: and that sea is so called because of the abundance of reed there growing, Plin. lib. 11. cap. ult. the same is also called the red sea, for that it seemeth to be red, because of the reed or the sand.

Vers. 26. We doe not know with what we shall serve the Lord. B.G.I.P. better than, how wee shall serve. G. or what we shall serve. * S. for that is an improper phrase, or what was shall sacrifice. L. V. the sense but not the words▪ ghabadhto serve.

3. The explanation of difficult and doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. Why Moses is bid to goe to Pharaoh, notwithstanding his heart was hardned.

Vers. 1. GOe to Pharaoh, for I have hardned his heart, and the hearts of his servants, &c. 1. Moses is bid to goe still to Pharaoh, because hitherto he hath prevailed nothing: and though the ser|vants of Pharaoh, before time were obstinate as their master was, yet now they should be humbled, as it followeth, vers. 7. Iun. 2. Though Moses is told before, that Pharaoh shall not heare, yet he is sent againe to make him inexcusable, as in the Gospell Christ sendeth the leper to the Priest to be a testimonie against them: Ferus. 3. The hardnesse of Pharaohs heart, is not the effect of the signes and wonders, but the occasion of them: for if Pharaoh had yeelded at the first, then the Lord should not have needed to have contended with him by multiplying of his signes: Simler. This hardnesse of Pharaohs heart, proceeded from his owne corruption, and the Lord as a just Judge further punisheth him with his owne sinne, but disposeth of it to his glory: so then God, in respect of the immediate act of hardning Pharaohs heart, is said to harden it not positively by making his heart hard, but negatively, in not mollifying it, but leaving of him to himselfe: but as the hardnesse of heart is a punishment of Pharaoh, and as it is referred and disposed of to Gods glorie, the Lord also worketh positively, and actively. 4. So then this is the order of the causes here propounded, the end of the hardning of Pharaohs heart, is, that God may shew his signes; the end thereof, that Gods works may be knowne in Israel, and declared to their children: and the chiefe end of all, is, That ye may know that I am the Lord: Iunius.

QUEST. II. How Moses is said to be a snare to the Egyptians.

Vers. 7. HOW long shall he be a snare unto us? 1. The Septuagint put the article in the neuter Gender: How long shall this thing be an offence: but it is better understood of Moses: he was as a snare and trappe unto them in respect of these grievous plagues and afflictions, which he was the minister of: Simler. And therefore they are afraid of him as the bird is of the snare: Iun. 2. They use three reasons to perswade Pharaoh. first, in respect of themselves, they all smarted for one mans obstinacie; in respect of Moses and the Israelites, their request was reasonable, they did but aske leave to goe to serve their God: thirdly in regard of the whole land of Egypt, which was almost destroyed: Ferus. 3. Though Pharaohs servants seeme for the time to be touched, yet they were farre off true repentance and conversion unto God: and they doe not leave for all this their superstition and Idolatry, Simler. and afterward their hearts were hardned againe, when they with Pharaoh pursued after Israel to the red sea.

QUEST. III. Of Pharaohs wish, Let the Lord be so with you, &c.

Vers. 10. SO let the Lord be with you as I let you goe. 1. Some doe interpret these words as plainly spolken, that Pharaoh wisheth indeed that God were no more mercifull unto them, then they should finde him: Genevens. But this though it bewraieth an uncharitable minde in Pharaoh, yet it sheweth that he had a reverend opinion of the divine assistance, which he wisheth to be as farre from them, as his affection was. But Pharaoh had no such opinion of the God of Israel. 2. Therefore it seemeth that these words are uttered with a kind of derision: as if hee should say, you boast much, that you serve a mightie and great God, well, let him deliver you, for I will not; and so in effect he saith, as he did at the first, I know not the Lord, chap. 5. Ferus. 3. And yet unwittingly Pharaoh wisheth unto them the assistance of God indeed: for he afterwards himselfe did let Israel goe, and he wisheth God even so to be with them as he would let them goe, which indeed came so to passe, God was with them and so overruled Pharaohs heart, that he was content to dismisse them, Iun.

Of the eight plague.

QUEST. IV. Of the nature of Locusts, and whether this plague were extraordinary.

Vers. 13. IN the morning the East wind brought the Locusts. 1. Plinie writeth strange things of these Locusts, as how the female dieth of a certaine worme that choketh her breeding betweene the jawes, as soone as she hath brought forth her young: that in India there are of them three foot long: they are taken up with the wind and flie over the seas, and fetch a great compasse to seeke food; they are in such multitudes, that they shadow the sunne: where they light, they feare the grasse by touching it, and devoure up all, yea they doe eat through the roofe of the houses. They often flie over out of Africa into Italie. In the region Cyreno, there is a law thrice in the yeere to fight against them. First in destroying their egges; then the young; and after when they are growne. In the Isle Lemmis every one is appointed a certaine measure of Locusts which they shall kill and bring to the magistrate: and they doe nourish birds of purpose to take their flight against them, and so to destroy them. In Necare and Syria they embattell themselves against them. Thus much Plini, lib. 11. cap. 29. Ex Perer. 2. But although these kinds of Locusts in those parts of the South and East countries are usuall, yet this plague was extraordinarie, both in respect of the divers kinds, as Caterpillers, Grashoppers, Psalm. 78.46. and their multitudes, they covered the face of the earth, vers. 5. and as the Chalde Paraphrast expoundeth, they shadowed the beames and light of the sunne: beside, otherwise then Locusts use to doe, they did not onely consume and eat up the fields, but filled also their houses: Further these Locusts come at the time appointed, To morrow I will bring Locusts upon thy coastes, vers. 4. In so short a time for such a multitude of Locusts to be gathered, it was admirable, Simler. And lastly for them at that time of the yeere to come, in the spring, which is the breeding time, whereas they usually doe strike over into other countries in harvest, when the fruits of the earth begin to be ripe, to seeke for food, as Plinie writeth of them: Propter famem exterius a pabula petere sciunt: The inhabitants know that they seeke forren food for hunger: immensos tractus permeant dira messibus contegunt nubes: they goe over divers countries and cover them as with a cloud hurtfull to the harvest, Plin. ibid.

QUEST. V. Of the greatnesse of this plague of Locusts.

NOW the greatnesse of this judgement appeareth diversly. 1. These Locusts came upon Egypt, and the Lords royall host, and so are they called, Ioel. 2.25. the Lords great host: not in comparison of the superiour spirituall powers, but in respect of weake men, against whom the Lord can arme the least of his creatures: Rupert. and Pharaoh could better have resisted an hundred thousand men than these Locusts, Ferus. 2. The Locusts consumed all the herbes, fruits of trees, and every greene thing, whatsoever the haile had left, vers. 15. 3. They filled their houses, vers. 6. as the frogges did before, and went into every roome and chamber, their amberies, victuals, storehouses were pestered with them: for so it may be gathered by the like annoyance in the frogges. 4. And not onely so, but with their venemous teeth, they did bite and destroy men, and therefore Pharaoh desireth, vers. 17. that God would take away that death onely; and so we read, Wisd. 16.9. that the biting of Locusts and flies killed them.

QUEST. VI. Why sometime Aaron, sometime Moses stretched out the rod.

Vers. 13. NOW Moses stretched forth his rod, &c. 1. This is to bee observed, that in the bringing of some plagues, Moses commandeth, and Aaron stretched out the rod, as in the three first plagues, of the bloudie waters, frogges, and lice; in the two next of the swarmes and murrane Moses and Aaron doe nothing; in the three following Moses is the instrument to bring the botches, the haile and Locusts. 2. The reason of this difference the Hebrewes ascribe to the dignitie of Moses, who brought the plagues that came from above, out of the aire and skie, and Aaron those, which were wrought below. And herein is fulfilled the promise of God to Moses, that he had made him Pharaohs God: for so Moses commandeth the aire, fire and water, and all the elements as a terrene God. 3. Yet Moses doth not any thing by his owne power, neither is there any vertue in his rod: Moses indeed stretcheth out his rod: but is said, that the Lord brought the East wind, Simler.

QUEST. VII. What kinde of wind it was which brought the Locusts.

The Lord brought an East wind. 1. God useth the Ministrie of the wind, not as having any need of it, but that we might know, that when any wind or weather is sent, God is the author of them. 2. This was not a southerly wind, as the Septuag. read; and Philo, to whom Pererius subscribeth, affirmeth the same: but beside that the word kedem signifieth the East, it is evident by the contrarie wind, which cast them into the red sea, called the West wind, vers 19. that the East wind brought them, Thostatus. And the Latine interpreter, though missing of the sense of the word, calleth it urentem ventum, a searing wind, which best agreeth to the East wind, which is well knowne to seare and wither fruit, and to breed caterpillers and wormes. 3. Though it be usuall in those parts for Locusts to be brought with the wind, yet such an infinite number of them, and in so short a time to bee brought, was miraculous and extraordinary, Simler.

QUEST. VIII. Whether this plague of Locusts were incomparable and not to be matched.

Vers. 14. SO grievous Locusts like to these, were never before, neither after them shall be such. How then agreeth that place of the Prophet Ioel with this, where he speaking of the like plague of Locusts saith, There was none like it from the beginning, neither shall be any more after it? Ioel. 2.2. It may bee answered that it is here meant of Egypt, that in that land there were never any such Locusts neither should be, as it is said of the haile: so grievous as there was none throughout all the land of Egypt, since it was a nation, chap*. 9.24. 2. But because the words here are generall, no mention being made of Egypt, it may rather be answered: that these Locusts came all at once: but in that plague which Ioel speaketh of, these foure kinds, the Palmer worme, the Grashopper, Canker worme and Caterpillar did one succeed another: and one devoured that which the other left, Ioel. 1.2. And in that respect it is said to bee so grievous as none was before it: Simler. 3. Or rather it is said to be incomparable, for the continuance of it, which was certaine yeeres: whereas these Locusts indured not many daies.

QUEST. IX. In what sense it is said the Locusts devoured that which the haile left.

Vers. 15. THEy did eat all which the haile had left. And yet it is said before that the haile did smite all the herbes of the field, chap. 9.25. then there was nothing for the Locusts to devoure. 1. Some answer, that the haile onely touched the corne, as rie, wheate, barlie, flax, but not the grasse, then the Locusts came and devoured herbe, grasse and all: Pellican. But the text it selfe admitteth not this: for the haile is said to smite all the herbes of the fields: and so the Locusts did also eat all the herbes of the field, vers. 15. 2. Some thinke, that there was some respite betweene the haile and the comming of the Locusts, and that in the meane time the corne and other fruits, which the haile and lightning had smitten, did grow againe, and then the Locusts came and devoured it: Simler. But beside that it is shewed before that this plague of Locusts followed the other within two or three daies, quest. 9. in chap. 7. in which time there could be little renewing of the fruits by a second growth and spring; the text favoureth not this conceit: because the Locusts are said, to eat that which the haile left, but that which was then not growne, cannot be said to be left. 3. Therefore it may be better answered, that where the haile is said to have smitten all the herbes of the field, it must be understood for the greatest and most part, as it was said before, chap. 9.6. that all the cattell of Egypt died: whereas some remained for the other plagues, as for the haile, chap. 9.25. Simler. 4. But neither are we forced in this place so to restraints the generalitie of these words: but this may be said, that where the haile and lightning did smite, though all the herbes and fruits were touched, yet not the whole: there might be some greene thing remaining after the haile and lightning played the part, as wee see in the searing and blasting of corne, that some escapeth: so that which this tempest had not blasted and seared, the Locusts devoured.

QUEST. X. Why the plague of Locusts is called a death.

Vers. 17. THat he may take away from me this death onely: 1. Some thinke that be so called this plague, as if he should say, this destruction, because it brought a decay and consumption upon all things: Vatab. but death properly is understood of living creatures, as cattell and men. 2. Some referre it to the event, which Pharaoh might feare, lest that the people being offended with Pharaoh who was the cause of these plagues, might make some mutinous insurrection, whereof slaughter and death might follow: Simler. But he speaketh of death and mortalitie alreadie begun, and not feared onely. 3. Therefore some thinke that the Locusts with their biting, killed men, as it is collected, Wisd. 16.9. and that therefore it is called a death: Perer. but this is not all, for he saith, this death onely: his meaning is not, that the men in their houses should be delivered from the biting of Locusts, but generally that the land might be rid of them. 4. Therefore it is best to understand death here generally, both of the mortalitie of men, and the destruction of the fruit, and so to comprehend them both: Iun. And so Pharaoh desireth for this once to be spared, that if he keepe not promise with them afterward, then he will desire no favour.

QUEST. XI. Of the mysticall application of this plague of Locusts.

FOR the mysticall application of this plague of Locusts, first, Origen thereby would have signified obstinate and disobedient men, that cannot indure the government of God their King over them: as the Locusts are said to have no King, Prov. 30. 2. Augustine making a resemblance betweene this ninth plague, and the ninth Commandement, doth by Locusts that hurt by biting, understand the false witness and the slanderous tongue: and as the Locusts cannot flie of themselves, but are carried by the wind, so the false tongue is ruled by the spirit of Satan. 3 Gregorie findeth out other applications, * as one while he thereby understandeth the people of the Jewes, that like Locusts would leape forward, that is, make great profession of obedience, but fall againe to the ground: againe by the Locusts he understandeth the Gentiles that gathering in troupes, as Locusts, doe fight for the faith: Likewise hee doth referre it to Christ, that like as a Locust leaped out of the hands of his enemies, and by his resurrection escaped out of the bands of death. 4. In these applications we may observe three things, first the varietie, how one dif|fereth from another in their conceits, whereas Scripture is alway consonant. Secondly the multiplicity of sense, which is coined by one and the same man; but the sense of Scripture is one. Thirdly, they ac|commodate the same Scripture, to signifie contrary things, as both good and evill; whereas the Scrip|ture, as a fountaine doth not at one place send forth sweet and bitter. 5. Therefore for the mystic•ll ap|plication (leaving these fantasies and devices of men) wee will have recourse to the Scripture it selfe; which by biting flies and Locusts understandeth both the violent enemies of the Church, such as by tyran|nie and cruelty oppresse it: as the Lord saith, he will hisse for the Flie of Egypt and the Bee of Assur; and they shall come and light upon the valleies, Isa. 7.19. as also the spirituall enemies, as false teachers, Heretikes, Seducers, which are compared to Locusts that rise out of the smoke of the bottomlesse pit, Apocal. 9.4. Rupert. Simler.

QUEST. XII. How Moses turned himselfe going out from Pharaoh.

Vers. 18. Then he went out from Pharaoh. 1. Moses is here understood, though not expressed, because he was the more principall: and he at other times had removed the other plagues. 2. This may serve to expound that other place, vers. 6. that Moses turned himselfe and went out from Pharaoh, which some doe interpret according to the use and fashions of the East countries, as it is observed in Turkey at this day, that when they depart from the King, for signe of reverence they goe backward, and so they thinke that Moses did here: But if Moses had gone backward, then he had not turned himselfe at all, and the word here used, phanah, signifieth to looke backe, or turne the face: Num. 16.42. They turned their face and looked toward the Tabernacle: if Moses then departing from Pharaoh turned his face, then was his backe toward the King. 3. Wherefore the meaning of it is, that Moses either went out in haste, to dispatch that thing which he had foretold: Simler. Or hee went away in great indignation, as not sustaining any longer to talke with such a wicked man; as also by this his suddaine departing▪ signi|fying, that the Lord would deale no more with him by messages, Ferus.

Of the ninth plague, of the three dayes darknesse.

QUEST. XIII. Of the cause of the darknesse of Egypt.

Vers. 21. Stretch out thine hand, that there may be darknesse &c. Concerning the cause of this darknesse: 1. Neither was it caused by an eclipse of the sunne,* as Philo: For though the sunne had beene eclipsed, yet other starres might have given light, but they had none at all: and the eclipse of the sunne is generall; this darknesse was onely in Egypt: neither doth the sunne continue many houres in the eclipse, much lesse three dayes. 2. Neither was this darknesse in blinding of the eyes of the Egyptians, as the Soldomites were blinded: for to what purpose then should it bee said, that it was palpable darknesse that might be felt? 3. Neither was this darknesse onely a privation of the light of the sunne, as Gloss. inter. linear: but there was some impediment in the aire, because it is said, it was a thicke and palpable darknesse. 4. Neither yet was the cause of this darknesse onely in the aire, which was incrassate and thickned with darke mists. Paul. Burgens. Perer: For the stretching of Moses hand toward heaven, sheweth that the bel|ginning of this darknesse came from thence: and that as at Iosuahs bidding the sunne was stayed in his motion, so here by the power of God, in the stretching out of Moses hand, the sunne withdrew his light, as he did in the passion of Christ. 5. So that two causes here concurred: both the celestiall lights above were hindred from shining upon Egypt, and the aire also was thickned with darke mists: like as the cloud which went before Israel, on the one side gave light to Israel, and on the other it was darknesse to the Egyptians Lyranus., Thostatus, Cajetan. Simler. And unto this miracle, the Prophet Amos seemeth to allude, chap 8.9. In those dayes I will cause the sunne to goe downe at noone, and I will darken the earth in the cleare day, Ferus. Two reasons are yeelded of the darknesse, the suppressing of the light of the sunne, the privative cause, and the bringing of darknesse upon the aire, the positive cause.

QUEST. XIV. How it is said the darknesse was felt.

Vers. 21. EVen darknesse that may be felt. 1. The Chalde expoundeth the word mashash for recessit, the darknesse of the night departed, that is, the darknesse of the night was obscured by this darknesse: but the word properly signifieth to feelee, as Gen. 27.12. and so the Septuagint and Latine doe here read: Paguin. Montan. Vatabl. with the rest. 2. Philo taketh this to be spoken in respect of the effect: because it was so darke that they were faine to goe feeling up and downe: but seeing they stirred not out of their places, it seemeth that little feeling served their turne. 3. Others thinke that it is an hyperbole, onely to shew the greatnesse of the darknesse, Pellican. But where the words admit a plaine sense of them|selves, wee need not runne unto figures. 4. Some thinke they were therefore called palpable, not in re|spect of the darknesse, which is properly the object of the sight, not of the feeling, and so cannot be felt, but of the aire the subject of the darknesse, which was thickned with grosse mists and vapours, so that they might be felt, Perer. And it was so thicke, that it hindred the light of the fire, and of other artificiall lights, Iunius.

QUEST. XV. How the Israelites had light in their dwellings.

Vers. 23. BVt all the children of Israel had light where they dwelt. The Hebrewes imagine that the light followed the Israelites, whether they went, yea though they pierced into the darknesse of the Egyptians, it went with them: but the text will not beare so much: They had light in their habitations where they dwelt: but I doubt whether they could carrie it to the habitations of the Egyptians: I preferre rather the opinion of the author of the booke of Wisdome, chap. 18.1. who saith, that the Egyptians heard the voice of the Israelites, but saw not their image: but if the Israelites had brought light with them where they came, the Egyptians should both have seene them, and heard them. 2. But this may be truly affirmed, that not onely the land of Goshen had light, but even these particular habitations, where the Israelites dwelt, being intermingled with the Egyptians, had this light which was kept from the Egyptians, though dwelling by them, Simler.

QUEST. XVI. Whether the Egyptians used in the time of this darknesse any candle or fire light.

NOW concerning fire and candle light, whether the Egyptians had any helpe or comfort by them while this darknesse continued: 1. Neither is Cajetans opinion sound, that barreth the Egyptians onely of the light of the sunne, and stars, and alloweth them candle and fire light: for beside that, this is con|trarie to the text, that in affirming▪ that there was light to the Israelites, denieth all light to the Egyptians: by this meanes, this plague of darknesse, which was of all the most grievous, should have beene no great burden unto them, if they could have helped themselves with other lights. 2. Some thinke that the fire of the Egyptians was put out, and extinguished with some tempest that came with the darknesse, Thosta|tus. Which opinion the Septuagint favour, adding that there was darknesse and 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, tempest: but there being no such thing here spoken of, it is but their imagination: and beside it is unlike, for the tempest and wind would have helped to disperse the thicke mists which darkened the aire, and to have attenuated it. 3. Wherefore it is most like that the aire was so thicke, and the darknesse caused thereby so great, that the light of fire and candle could not pierce it: so Philo and Paulus Burgens. Iun. Hereunto also agreeth that collection▪ Wisdom. 17.5. No power of fire might give light.

QUEST. XVII. How it is said no man rose up from his place.

Vers. 23. NO man saw another, neither rose from the place. 1. Not that the thicknesse of the aire was such, that it hindered their going, or moving, as Paul. Burgens. For if the aire had beene so thicke, it would rather have hindered their breathing, than their moving. 2. Nor yet is it the meaning▪ that they did not move themselves by the benefit of any celestiall or externall lights, but by the meanes of such lights, as they used in their houses: for the Scripture absolutely saith, that they did not rise up from their place, that is, at all. 3. Some thinke the meaning to be this, that they did not goe out of their houses, their labour abroad, and all other kind of businesses ceased, and were intermitted, because of the want of light: but yet they might stirre up and downe in their houses, Simler. But seeing the text saith, that they saw not one another, if they were deprived of all sight, it is very like that they had no list to move or stir up and downe. 4. Wherefore it is more probable, that the Egyptians did not move out of the place where they sate, (the word is mittachtan from that which is under them) but as it is in the booke of Wisdome, They were all bound with one chaine of darknesse, chap. 17.17. And in the same place two reasons are given thereof, Sometimes they were troubled with monstrous visions, and sometime they swooned, vrs. 14. That is, either they were afraid to move from their place, because of the monstrous visions and shapes which they seemed to see, even in the darke, or their owne perplexed conscience made them afraid. And so as Philo saith, Per silentium fame cruciabantur: they in silence were pinched with famine three dayes together: one not being able to helpe another: But they sate still mourning and complaining without comfort, Sic Lyran. Thostatus. Perer.

QUEST. XVIII. When Pharaoh sent for Moses, whether after the darknesse was removed or afore.

Vers. 24. Then Pharaoh called for Moses. Here the doubt is, how Pharaoh could send for Moses, there being such a great darknesse that none moved from his place. 1. This doubt were easily removed, if Cajetans conceit be admitted, that they had the use of fire and candle light: but that is refuted before. 2. Some thinke, that they moved and stirred ••t to any ordinarie businesse, but upon such necessitie occasion they might stirre, Simler. But this were to limit and restraine the Scripture, where no need is, which saith, that none (that is, upon what occasion soever) moved from his place: and if Moses had come to Pharaoh, while this darknesse continued, he had also brought light with him. But Pharaoh of all the rest saw no light for three dayes. 3. Wherefore it is more like, that Moses was not sent for to Pharaoh till the three dayes darknesse was over; whereof this is some probabilitie, because he intreateth not Moses, as afore, to pray to remove the darknesse, which he would not have omitted to do being in such great perplexitie. And he sendeth for Moses, though the darknesse were over, because he knew that Moses would not leave him, but he feared that one plague would still follow another, Iun. Perer.

QUEST. XIX. Of the greatnesse of this punishment of three dayes darknesse.

This plague of darknesse then was a most grievous punishment to the Egyptians. Cicero maketh mention of a great darknesse for two dayes in Sicilia, about the hill Aetna, by reason of the breaking out of the flames thereof, so that one could not see another: lib. 2. de natur. deor. But this farre exceeded. 1. They were bound with this darknesse, as with a chaine every man to his place, the husband man, the shepherd, the artificer, or wheresoever any was either in the field or in the house, so they continued, as it is noted, Wisd. 16.17. 2. They had no use either of sunne light or fire light to solace and comfort themselves with. 3. They were pinched and pined with famine, not being one able to helpe another. 4. They were terrified with monstrous shapes and visions, which might appeare unto them in the midst of the darknesse: for Satan was not behind to play his part with them, being under his Kingdome of darknesse both of bodie and mind. 5. They were perplexed in conscience, and were readie to feare upon every occasion. 6. This darknesse did shew the spirituall darknesse of their soules, and was a forerunner of the everlasting darknesse of hell which waited for them: Ferus.

For the mysticall application of this Egyptian darknesse: * 1. Origen doth expound it of the unsearchable and impenetrable depth of the divine providence. Augustine doth accommodate and applie it to the tenth Commandement, Thou shalt not covet thy neighbours wife: for such (he saith) are palpably blinded even as the Egyptians were. 2. But more fitly doth the same Origen applie it, to signifie the blindness of the Egyptians, and the darknesse of their superstitious minde that were ignorant of the true knowledge and worship of God, giving themselves to most filthie Idolatrie: and it betokeneth also the grosse darknesse wherein the Gentiles were buried, before they were called to the knowledge of the Mes|siah: all the world was then in darknesse, onely in Israel was light and the knowledge of God. But con|trariwise, in the passion of Christ it was darke among the Jewes and light elsewhere, which signified that light was sprung up to the Gentiles, and blindness fallen upon the Jewes.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. The law is to be preached to the obstinate.

Vers. 4. IF thou refuse to let them goe, behold to morrow I will bring Locusts▪ Moses to Pharaoh being an obstinate and impenitent man, preacheth nothing but the law and judgement: the Gospell is not to bee preached to such, but onely to the broken hearted: as Christ saith, That the spirit of God was upon him to preach the Gospell to the poore, Luk. 4.18. This was a signe betweene the true Prophets and false: that these alwayes cried to the people peace peace, but the other told the people of their sinnes, Ferus.

Page 104

2. Doct. The difference betweene the children of God and the children of the world.

Vers. 23. ALL the children of Israel had light where they dwelt. In this difference betweene the children of Israel and the Egyptians, is shadowed forth the divers estate, betweene the children of God and the children of this world: the one are lightned with the knowledge of grace, the other sit downe in the region of darknesse and shadow of death, as the Apostle saith, Yee are all the children of the light, and the children of the day, we are not of the night nor of darknesse, 1 Thess. 5.5. Borrh.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Conf. That children are the members of the Church, against the Anabaptists.

Vers. 9. WE will goe with our young and with our old, with our sonnes and with our daughters. Both young and old belonged unto Israel and to the Church of God: which maketh against the Anabaptists that count infants no members of the Church, and therefore denie them to be baptised. But the Psalmist exhorteth not onely the ancient to praise God, but the young also: Young men and maidens, old men and children, Psalm. 48.12. Ferus.

2. Conf. Ignorance and darknesse not to be found in the Church of Christ, but among the Egyptians.

Vers. 23. BVt all the children of Israel had light where they dwelt. This externall light betokeneth the spirituall light of knowledge, that the true Israel hath the light and knowledge of God. It hath beene held as a principle among the Romanists, and their practice sheweth them to bee of the same mind still, that ignorance is the mother of devotion. And great hath beene the ignorance and darknesse which reigned many yeeres under the Kingdome of Antichrist: Borrh. And out of the darke smoke of the bottomlesse pit, this mistie darknesse, have come forth all those swarmes of Locusts, Monkes, Friars, Masse Priests, Seminaries, whose endeavour is to sow error among the people, and to settle them in ignorance of the truth; to which purpose they forbid the Scriptures to be read, or prayers to be said but in the Latin tongue; they permit them not to read any books, which may instruct them in the truth; to sing Psalmes, to conferre or reason of their faith: All this sheweth that they would still keepe theirs in the Egyptian darknesse. But thanks be unto God, that hath caused the light of the Gospell of his Sonne to shine upon his Israel in this land: that now that prophesie may be verified againe of this land which is also by the way of the Sea; The people that sate in darknesse have seene great light, and to them that sate in the region and shadow of death light is raised up, Matth. 4.15, 16.

6. Places of morall use.

1. Mor. Of the necessity of good education.

Vers. 3. THat thou mayst declare in the eares of thy sonne Hence appeareth the necessitie of the good education of children, that they should be instructed in the feare of the Lord in their youth: and so will they not forget it when they are old, Ferus. This is the Apostles counsell, that the fathers should bring up their children in the instruction and information of the Lord, Ephes. 6.3. The want of good instruction in the youth is the cause of the licentiousnesse and unthriftinesse of the young men of this age.

2. Mor. The departure of the Ministers of God dangerous.

Vers. 6. SO he turned him and went out from Pharaoh. This sudden departure of Moses from Pharaoh, and with indignation, did foreshew the fearefull condition of Pharaoh, whom the Ministers and Prophets of God forsake. It was an evident argument of destruction at hand. So their case is hard that are left destitute of the Ministers of Gods word. Worldly men consider not this, nay, they many times wish in their hearts that there were not a Minister to speake unto them. But like as the Jewes state was desperate when the Apostles left them, and shooke off the dust of their feet against them, Act. 13.51. so it fa|reth with those that are deprived of the presence of Gods Ministers, Ferus.

3. Mor. The office and part of good counsellors.

Vers. 7. Then Pharaohs servants said unto him. It is the part of good counsellors to perswade Kings and Princes to deale well with the servants of God, and to move them to the good of the Church and common-wealth: Piscator. Not to flatter the Prince, to make themselves great, or to deale unfaithfully, and onely to seeke themselves: as Shebna did, Isai. 22. but to be like the faithfull Eliak and as Ebedmelech that obtained favour for Ieremie.

4. Mor. Not one jot of Gods word to be omitted.

Vers. 26. THere shall not be an hoofe left. In those things which God hath prescribed and commanded, no the least thing is to be omitted. Moses was charged to make all things belonging to the Tabernacle even to the snuffers and ashpans, according to the paterne which the Lord shewed him in the mount, Exod. 25.9. Simler. So not one jot of the word of God must be left undone: but it must be kept exactly to an haire breadth, as wee say.

CHAP. XI.

1. The method and Argument.

IN this Chapter, there is a continuation of the narration of Moses last appearing before Pharaoh, to vers. 9. then a conclusion of the whole historie of these plagues.

1. In the continuation, there is set forth, first the Lords speech with Moses, both revealing unto him that one plague was behind, vers. 1. and repeating the first promise of enriching the Israelites by the Egyptians, vers. 2. where Moses inserteth the reason why this should be effected, because both the people in generall, and Moses specially should be gracious, in the sight of Pharaoh and his people. vers. 3. And all this the Lord spake unto Moses, before his last entrance to Pharaoh, for after that he saw not his face. Then followeth the speech that Moses had with Pharaoh, vers. 4. to vers. 9. where Moses in the name of God foretelleth, first, the last plague of the death of the first borne: expressing the time, about mid|night, and of whom the destruction shall be, of all the first borne of men from the highest to the lowest, and of beasts; and by whom, The Lord shall goe out, &c. vers. 4.5. Secondly, the events are three, first the lamentation and sorrow of the Egyptians, vers. 6. then the privilege and immunity of the Israelites, vers. 7. and the entreatie and supplication of the Egyptians to Moses, to be gone with his people, vers. 8.

2. In the conclusion of this historie there is first a repetition of that which God foretold Moses, that Pharaoh would not heare him; with the end thereof, that Gods wonders might be multiplied in Egypt, vers. 9. then the declaration of Moses obedience, vers. 10. and of the event, that Pharaohs heart was hard|ned, as the Lord had said; and of the effects and fruits thereof, the not letting of the people goe, vers. 10.

2. The divers readings.

Vers. 1. When he sendeth you away, he will at once speedily drive you hence. I. altogether drive you hence. G.S.V. or, at once drive you hence▪ G But this expresseth not the emphasis of the Hebrew phrase, in driving drive you out; that is, speedily: when he shall let you go quite, he shall utterly drive you hence. B. but the word Calah, altogether belongeth to the latter clause, as may appeare by the distinction.

Vers. 2. That every man require of his companion. A. P. or, neighbour. L. S. V. B. G. rather than, friend,* I. the word rea▪ signifieth both: but because the Egyptians were neighbours rather than friends: and an other word is used, chap. 3.22. shechenoth, which signifieth a neighbour or neere dweller, I preferre the first.

Vers. 3. Also the man Moses was very great. A. P. C. S. V. I. better than, *Moses was a very great man. L.B. for the word ish, man, is set before Moses; or, also Moses was very great. G. for here man is altogether omitted.

Vers. 5. From the first borne of Pharaoh, that should sit upon his throne. I.C. rather than, which sitteth upon his throne: cater. for he was the heire onely of the Kingdome, he did not yet sit upon the throne, Pharaoh b^eing living: the word is iosheb, sitting, a participle of the present tense, which hath also the signification of the future: as Gen. 19.14. Lot spake to his sonnes in law, which were marrying his daughters, that is, were to marrie them.

3. The explanation of difficult questions.

QUEST. I. When the Lord spake these words to Moses.

Vers. 1. NOW the Lord had said to Moses, yet will I bring, &c. 1. Some referre this to the first vision, which Moses saw in the bush, but that cannot be; for when the Lord thus spake to Moses, nine plagues were past, and there was but one to come. 2. Neither did the Lord thus speake to Moses, after he was come out from Pharaoh: for after that he saw Pharaohs face no more, chap.

10.29. and yet here, vers. 8. it is said he went from Pharaoh very angry. 3. Therefore the message, which Moses delivereth in this Chapter to Pharaoh concerning the destruction of the first borne, was done at his last appearing before Pharaoh. when he sent for him after the darknesse; and immediatly before his going to Pharaoh, the Lord thus said to Moses. Iunius.

QUEST. II. Why the overthrow of Pharaoh in the red sea was counted none of the plagues.

I Will bring one plague more, &c. 1. Thus the Lord doth all things in number, weight, and measure; the Lord sendeth tenne plagues upon Egypt, not fewer, because he would shew his power; nor more, for these were sufficient: Ferus. 2. Beside, this last plague of the first borne, there followed the overthrow of Pharaoh and his host in the red sea: but this is counted none of the plagues of Egypt, because it was done after the Israelites were gone out of Egypt, Simler. As also these plagues were not a finall destruction of the Egyptians, as the other was, but probations, and temptations, Pellican.

Of the tenth plague.

QUEST. III. Whether God used the ministry of good or bad Angels in the slaughter of the first borne.

Vers.* 4. About midnight will I goe out into the midst of Egypt. That God was the author of this plague in the slaughter of the first borne, it is no question: but the doubt is whether the Angels good or bad were the Lords ministers in it. 1. In this life it is certaine that God sometime useth the good Angels to punish the wicked, as in the destruction of Sodome; and the evill Angels some time to chastise his owne children, as Satan tempted and afflicted Iob. 2. In the next world, who shall be the ministers of the torments in hell it is not so certaine. Pererius thinketh that the evill Angels shall be the executioners of those torments: because of that text: goe into everlasting fire which is prepared for the devill and his Angels. But the contrarie rather may bee inferred out of this text, that because the Devill and his Angels also are ordained for torment; it seemeth that he shall not be a tormenter of others, who is to be tormen|ted himselfe. Therefore it is rather to be thought, that seeing the chiefe use of the ministrie of Angels is for the benefit and comfort of the elect in this world, * till they be gathered together in the Kingdome of God, Heb. 1.14. that in the next world there shall not be such imployment of the ministring spirits, espelcially of the reprobate Angels. And how the torments of hell shall be continued, the Prophet Isay sheweth: Tophet is prepared of old, &c. the burning thereof is fire and much wood: the breath of the Lord like a river of brimstone doth kindle it chap. 30.33. The Lord of himselfe by his owne power, in shewing the severitie of his justice shall hold the wicked in everlasting torment. 3. But concerning this judge|ment in smiting the first borne: some thinke that the evill Angels were used in this service; Thostatus, Lyran. Because it is said, Psalm. 78.49. Hee cast upon them the fiercenesse of his wrath, by sending of evill Angels. But this place is answered before, quest. 30. in chap. 7. that either it may be understood of Moses and Aaron, who were Gods messengers, for so Angells signifieth; or else they are called Angels of evill, i. of poenal, not morallevill, rather than evill Angels. And though they would seeme to gather by those words, chap. 12.23. The Lord will not suffer the destroyer to come into your houses, that this Angell of him|selfe had a desire to invade the people of God, and therefore was not a good Angell: yet that followeth not, but the words rather shew thus much, that the Angell being sent forth by the Lord, was to doe all things according to his direction, to strike where God bid him strike, and to forbear where the Lord pur|posed to spare. 4. Wherefore as the good Angels were the ministers of the former plagues, as is shewed before, quest. 30. in chap. 7. so they are to be held to be the Lords instrument in this, P•rer.

QUEST. IV. Whether one Angell or many were used in this destruction.

ANd for the number of these destroying Angels: 1. Though it be said in the singular number▪ chap. 12.23. the destroyer, yet it followeth not, that one Angell should be the minister: for it is usuall in Scripture, to put the singular for the plurall. 2. Therefore it is more probable, that many Angels, were employed in this service, not in respect of the multitude that were slaine, for in the host of Senacherib one Angell slew 180. thousand: nor of the distance of place, for one Angell in Dauids time smote 70000. in three dayes space from Dan to Beersheba: but in regard of the time, because all the first borne of Egypt were slaine at midnight, about the same time, it is like that many Angels in divers places of Egypt, were sent of God to strike the first borne: Perer. Cajetan.

QUEST. V. Vpon whom this plague in the smiting of the first borne was executed.

Vers. 5. ALL the first borne in the land of Egypt shall die. All the first borne of every house, as the chiefe and principall were smitten with death: even from the Kings throne unto the sonne of the poore servant, that ground at the mill, which they used in the day to doe such servile works, and in the night time kept them in hold: and therefore it is said, chap. 12.29. unto the first borne of the captive, that was in prison. So Samson did grind at the mill being in prison, Iudg. 16. 2. Beside, all the first borne of their beasts were slaine, that is of their domesticall cattell: for wilde beasts must be here excepted, which were not in their power, and such cattell as bring forth many at once, where there is no difference betweene the firstlings and the rest: Perer. 3. The third effect of this plague was, that God did execute his judgements upon the gods and Idols of Egypt, chap. 12.12.

QUEST. VI. Whether in every house the first borne were slaine.

BUt here this doubt ariseth concerning the first borne, because it is said afterward, chap. 12.30. that there was no house wherein there was not one dead: whether in every house there were a first borne. 1. Ab. Ezra thinketh all to be understood for the greater part. 2. Simler. for the houses of every sort, both of high and low, as the King and captive are named. 3. Hugo S. Victor; doth thus interpret it, that in every house, where was any first borne, there was one slaine. But it seemeth, that no house at all was ex|cepted, because all the Israelites were commanded to strike the blood upon the posts of their dores, to escape the plague. 4. Therefore Augustine thinketh that God so disposed at this time by his divine pro|vidence, that every house of the Egyptians had one first borne, quest. 44. in Exod. But we need not run unto miracles, where another exposition may be found. 5. Thostatus thinketh that the first borne is here taken, for the first borne of the feminine sex, as well as of the males, whether their parents were alive or dead, whether they were the first borne by the husband or wife. But the name of first borne is not thus taken in scripture▪ neither yet is it like that any females died, but males, as it may appeare by the law of the first borne, that are made holy unto God, upon this occasion, because the Lord for Israels sake killed all the first borne of Egypt, there onely the males that first open the wombe are set apart, chap. 13.12. 6. Therefore of all the •est I preferre the exposition of Iunius, that in every house, either the first, or if there were no first borne, the next principall man was taken in stead of the first borne: so also Cajetane.

QUEST. VII. Why the Lord destroyeth the first borne.

NOW the first borne were slaine: 1. Because they oppressed Israel, whom the Lord calleth his first borne, Exod. 4. Theodoret. 2. Rather because they put to death the first borne children of Israel, yea all the males, therefore the Lord doth worthily punish them in their first borne: Ferus. 3. And this plague was ordained for them, more grievous than all the rest, (for what can come neerer a man, than the death of his first borne, which also may bee his onely borne; as Abraham could not have a greater triall, than when he was commanded to sacrifice his onely sonne Isaack) that the Egyptians should be forced by this last and greatest plague to let Israel goe: Perer. 4. Neither was this unjust in God, to take away the life of infants, who are not innocent before God, and the Lord that gave them life may take it away, if it more serve unto his glory. And the parents also that had sinned, were punished herein by the death of their dearest children, being themselves reserved for a greater destruction, Simler.

QUEST. VIII. Why the first borne of the cattell also are destroyed.

The Egyptians cattell also are killed: 1. because this losse also was a punishment unto the Egyptians, for whose use they served: Simler. 2. And much of their substance also consisted in cattell: Perer: so that both they lost part of their substance, and wanted the use of them. 3. Beside, the Egyptians oppressed the Israelites, and wronged them in their cattell: Ferus. 4. The Hebrewes also thinke this was one speciall cause for that the Egyptians did superstitiously adore divers kinds of cattell, and therefore for detestation of their Idolatrie the cattell are punished.

QUEST. IX. How the Gods of the Egyptians were judged.

Now what gods of Egypt were judged is diversly scanned: 1. Some thinke that by gods the Magistrates and Judges are understood: Osiander. But this was said before, that the first borne should be killed, even from the Princes throne; this was a punishment to Pharaoh and all his great men to have their first borne cut off. 2. Some thinke that the Egyptian gods were judged, in that their worshippers were punished: Borrh. 3. Others, that the Temples of the Idols were cast downe: Hierom: and their Idols throwne downe: and beaten to dust, as the Hebrewes. 4. Some, that herein they were judged, that is, declared to bee vaine, because they were not able to defend their worshippers: Iun. 5. And because the Egyptians worshipped certaine beasts above the rest, as Apis or Serapis, which was a pide Oxe: that kinde was specially punished: Perer. As the last sense but one is very agreeable, so I thinke, that beside some notable accident befell the Egyptian gods and Idols, as there did unto Dagon the Philistims Idoll, in the presence of the Arke.

QUEST. X. How the Israelites escaped this destruction of the first borne.

Now the Israelites though they were intermingled with the Hebrewes, were exempt and freed from this judgement after this manner: 1. They were commanded to strike off the blood of the Lambe upon the two side posts, whereupon the doore hanged, and upon the upper doore post: because in this it was more conspicuous and in sight: and in the other rather than upon the doore, which was moveable, and sometime open and sometime shut. 2. This blood was a signe not so much for the Angell, to passe by their houses, for the Angell could have told in whose houses the paschall Lambe was killed, without seeing of the blood: but it was a signe to the Hebrewes, both presently to confirme them in the hope of their deliverance, and to be a type and figure of the blood of the Messiah, the onely unspotted Lambe, by whose blood sprinkled, on the posts of our hearts by faith, wee are saved from everlasting destruction. 3. Now whereas some of the Israelites were so poore and few, that they were not sufficient for the eating of a Lambe, they joyned themselves to other families, and returned not unto their owne houses that night, and so their houses where no Lambe was killed, were not sprinkled, and marked with blood, they stood emptie that night: and such Hebrewes as sojourned in the Egyptians houses, left their houses, and went to the houses of the Hebrewes: for it is not like, that the Egyptians would have suffered any Hebrew to kill a Lambe in their houses, which thing they counted an abomination, Perer.

QUEST. XI. The mysticall application of this last plague upon the first borne.

For the mysticall application of this last plague: 1. Origen by the first borne of the Egyptians that are slaine, understandeth the devill and his angels, the principalities of this world, whom Christ subdued at his comming, likewise Heretikes and inventers of strange doctrines, which are overcome by the truth. 2. Augustine maketh a resemblance betweene this tenth plague, and the tenth Commandement. For as they which cover their neighbours goods, doe desire them to enrich their heires and posteritie: so the Lord doth punish their covetousnesse and oppression in their heires and first borne. 3. Rupertus by the first borne of Egypt, understandeth the originall sinne of the world, which is taken away by the death and passion of Christ. 4. But leaving mens uncertaine and inconstant fansies, which are as divers, as the heads where they are forged; the Scripture thus applieth this signe of the Passeover: that we are by the sprinkling of the blood of Christ delivered from eternall death, as the Israelites were by the blood of the Lambe from a temporall▪ and that as onely those houses were exempted that were marked with the blood of the Lambe, so onely in the Church is salvation to be found, where the blood of Christ is apprehended by faith: Simler.

QUEST. XII. Of the generall application of these tenne plagues.

NOW for the generall application of all these tenne plagues of the Egyptians. 1. We have seene before how Augustine forceth a kind of resemblance and comparison betweene the tenne plagues of Egypt, and the tenne transgressions of the tenne Commandements: as the turning of the water into blood, he would have to signifie the corrupting of the true worship of God, with the inventions of flesh and blood; by the frogges, the blasphemies of the heathen against the name of God: the plague of the lice, signifie such as have a gnawing, and restlesse conscience, as the Sabbath betokeneth the rest of the minde. And so in the rest. But by these we may judge, that these allegories are but the superfluitie of mens wits, and as every mans conceit is, so he findeth an allegorie. 2. Yet Ferus application is more apt, who by these ten plagues, setteth forth the ten torments and paines of hell. 1. There water shall bee turned into blood, all things shall bee turned to the destruction of the ungodly. 2. Their frogges are horror of conscience. 3. Their lice a restlesse and unquiet minde. 4. By the flies is signified, that they shall be destitute of all helpe. 5. By the murrane of beasts, the perpetuall punishment of their bodies. 6. By the boiles the anguish of minde. 7. By the haile, continuall terror. 8. By the Locusts the want of every good thing. 9. By the darknesse, their depriving of the favour of God. 10. And everlasting death, by the death of the first borne. But neither is this allegoricall application simply to be approved: for how can any man number the plagues of hell which are endlesse, infinit, and without number? and to make the comparison hold, hee is constrained to inculcate the same thing twice or thrice. 3. Wherefore somewhat to content them which delight in such curious applications: * these ten plagues which the Egyptians indured, may seeme to decipher those ten mercies, & principall benefits, which God vouchsafed unto the Israelites being delivered out of Egypt. 1. As one had water turned into blood, so the other was blessed in their water: they received it out of the rock; and whereas it was bitter it became sweet, Exod. 17. 2. As they had their rivers and fields crawling full of frogges, so the other saw the red Sea full of the Egyptians bodies floting in the water, and rose up upon the land. 3. Their dust was turned into lice: and the Israelites had Manna, that they had in stead of dust upon the ground. 4. They had swarmes of noysome flies, and serpents: the other were healed from the biting of serpents. 5. And as the Egyptians lost their cattell by the murrane: so the other were increased and enriched with the cattell of their enemies: as from the Midianites onely they tooke 675000. sheepe, 72000 beeves, 61000. asses, Numb. 31, 32, 33, 34. 6. In stead of the Egyptians sores, and botches, their feet swelled not in all their journey. 7. They were terrified with lightning and thunder, the other received the law in thunder and lightning in mount Sinai. 8. For the Egyptians Locusts the Israelites had quails. 9. In stead of darknesse, they had a pillar of fire to guide them in the night, and Gods glorious presence in the Tabernacle. 10. And as they were punished with the death of their first borne: so the first borne of Israel are made holy and consecrate unto God, Exod. 13.

Vers. 10. The Lord hardned Pharaohs heart. For the evident and full discussing of this question how the Lord is said to harden mans heart, divers profitable questions come now in order to be handled: for seeing the Lord is here divers times said to harden Pharaohs heart: as chap. 4.21. chap. 7.3. chap. 9.12. chap. 10. vers. 10. and 20. and 27. chap. 11.10. chap. 14. vers. 14. and 8. even nine times in all, it seemeth that Moses of purpose useth this significant phrase, and doth inculcate it often that we should well weigh and consider it.

QUEST. XIII. What the hardnesse of heart is.

First, then it is requisite to be knowne, what this hardnesse of heart is. 1. It may first be described negatively, by the unaptnesse of an hard heart to any thing that is good, it is neither passive, active or apprehensive of any good thing: not the first, nec movetur precibus, nec cedit minis: It is neither moved by prayers, nor giveth way to threats, as Bernard saith. For the next, he saith it is ingratum ad beneficia, ad consilia infidum, it is unthankfull for benefits, unfaithfull in counsell, unshamefast in evill things, &c.* There is no activitie in it to any goodnesse. And for the third; praeter solas injurias nihil non praeterit, it remembreth nothing that is past▪ but wrongs, nor hath any forecast for the time to come, unlesse it be to seeke revenge. 2. It may be described also by the perpetuall companion thereof, the blindnesse of the mind: for as ignorance blindeth the understanding, so hardnesse of heart blindeth the will and affection. As the Apostle saith, speaking of the Gentiles having their cogitation darkned through the ignorance that is in them because of the hardnesse of their heart, Ephes. 4.18. Both these concurred in Pharaoh, he shewed his blindnesse, in saying▪ I know not Iehovah; his hardnesse of heart, in adding, Neither will I let Israel goe, Exod.5.2.

3. The propertie of hardnesse of heart is this, that it is not onely a great and grievous sinne, but also the punishment of sinne: that it is a sinne, the Apostle sheweth, Heb. 3.12. Take heed brethren lest then be at any time in any of you an evil heart to depart from the living God. And that it is a punishment of sinne, S. Paul also testifieth, Rom. 1.21. Because when they knew God, they did not glorifie him as God, &c. Then it followeth, vers. 24. God gave them up to their owne hearts lusts, &c. 4. Now the qualities and inseparable adjuncts of hardnesse of heart are these. 1. Blindnesse of the judgement and understanding, as Isai. 6.10. Make the heart of this people fat, make their eares heavie, and shut their eyes, lest they see with their eyes, heare with their eares, and understand with their hearts. 2. They are obstinate and wilfull, and refuse to be admonished and instructed: Who say unto God, depart from  , we desire not the knowledge of thy wayes, Iob 21.14. 3. Such are rejected and cast out of the presence of God, and left unto themselves: such an one was Saul, of whom it is said, That the spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, and an evill spirit sent of the Lord vexed him▪ 1. Sam. 16.14. 4. They delight in doing of evill, and make a sport of sinne: Prov. 2.14. Which rejoyce in doing of evill and delight in the frowardnesse of the wicked. 5. They regard not to doe things holnest in the sight of men, but contemne and despise all others: Prov. 18.3. When the wicked commeth then commeth contempt. 6. They are incorrigible, and past all hope of amendment: Prov. 1.30. They would none of my counsell, but despised all my correction. 7. They are not ashamed of most vile sinnes, Ierem. 3.3. Thou hadst a whores forehead, thou wouldest not be ashamed. 8. When the Lord smiteth them they feelee it not, neither have they any sense of Gods judgements, whom the wise man compareth to those that sleepe in the mast of a ship, and as drunken men that are stricken but know it not, Prov. 23.24.25. 9. They are growne to such an evill custome of sinning, that they can doe none other, as the Prophet saith, can the blackamore change his skinne, or the Leopard his spots? then may yee also doe good that are accustomed to doe evill: Ierem. 13.23. 10. So that the sinnes of such seeme to be inextinguishable and indeleble, as the same Prophet saith, that the sinnes of Iudah were written with a penne of iron, and with the point of a Diamond, chap. 17.1. 11. They wax daily worse and worse: of whom it is said, Revel. 22.11. Hee that is filthy let him be filthy still. 12. And as they increase in sinne, so they doe treasure up Gods judgements against them|selves, and heape unto themselves wrath against the day of wrath, Rom. 2.5.

QUEST. XIV. Whether God be the efficient and working cause of hardnesse of heart.

NOW in the next place, concerning the efficient cause of the hardnesse of heart. 1. That it cannot be imputed to God, as the worker and Author thereof, it may appeare by these reasons. First, the hard|nesse of the heart is a great sinne, as is proved in the former question; but God is no wayes the Author of sinne, seeing he neither tempteth or perswadeth unto it, for God tempteth no man, Iam. 1.13. neither hath commanded it, but hath forbidden it by his Law: nor yet worketh with them that doe evill: for all that God doth is good, and so there is none good but God, Mark. 10.19. Neither doth the Lord approve sinne being done, Psal. 8.4. Thou art not a God, that lovest wickednesse. If then God neither move to sinne, nor commends it, nor yet assisteth the committers of it, or approveth it, he is no way the Author of sinne. Secondly, if God causeth sinne, then every man should sinne of necessity, and so his punishment should bee unjust, being forced to sinne. But as Augustine saith, Deus nemini per hoc quod falli non potest, aut necessitatem, aut voluntatem intulit delinquendi: God by this, that he cannot be deceived, hath not brought upon any either a necessity or willingnesse of sinning. Thirdly, Augustine useth another excellent reason: Fieri non potest, ut per quem à peccatis surgitur, per eum in peccata decidatur: It cannot be, that by whom men rise from sinne, by him they should fall into sinne. Fourthly, Plato thus reasoneth, Deus qui bonus est, malorum causa dici non potest, &c. God that is good, cannot be said to be the cause of evill, for then hee should be contrary to him|selfe. Lastly, if God any way should be the Author of sinne, then it should be no sinne, for whatsoever God doth is good: Nay, not to doe that which the Lord willeth should be sinne: Perer. 2. Yet seeing God is said in Scripture to harden the heart, which betokeneth an action: and likewise in other termes God is said to give some over to vile affections, Rom. 1.26 and to send upon some strange delusions that they should not beleieve the truth, 2. Thess. 2.11. and to make the heart fat, the eares heavy, and to shut the eyes, Isai. 6.10. all which phrases doe imply an action and operation: it is evident that God some wayes concurr|reth, either directly or indirectly, negatively or positively, by way of working, or giving occasion in the hardning of the heart.

QUEST. XV. God otherwise hardeneth then by way of manifestation.

BUT yet God doth more than by way of manifestation harden the heart: as some doe expound it, that the Lord hardned Pharaohs heart (which interpretation Augustine toucheth. qust 18. in Exod.) that is, by his plagues and judgements declared how hard it was. 1. For in this sense God might bee said to commit any other sinnes, when he doth manifest them and bring them to light. 2. And though this expo|sition might serve here, yet it faileth in other places, as Deut. 2. it is said, that God hardned the heart of Sehon King of the Amorites; and Iosh. 10. that God hardned the hearts of the Canaanites; and Rom. 9. God hath mercie on whom he will, and whom hee will hee hardneth. In these places it cannot be so expounded, that God hardned, that is, declared their hearts to be hard.

QUEST. XVI. God hardeneth the heart not only by permission.

SOME doe expound it by way of permission, because those that are hardned, God depriveth of his grace, and leaveth them to themselves. So *Damascen: Ista non ◇ Deo agente accipienda sunt, * sed ut Deo permittente: these sayings, as God shut up all in unbeleeve, and God gave them* the spirit of slumber, eyes, that they should not see, are not to be taken, as though God did them but permitted them. So likewise the ordinarie glosse in 4. Exod. Indurabo cor Phar•onis, i. indurari permittam: I will harden the heart of Pha•raoh, that is▪ suffer it to be hardned. So also Chrysostome, Tradidit in reprobum sensum, nihil aliud est quam permisit: He gave them up to a reprobate sense, it is nothing else than that hee permitted it: as a Captaine leaving his souldiers in the midst of the battell, may be said to deliver them into their enemies hands: in Epist ad Roman. Cajetane to confirme this interpretation sheweth how sometime in Scripture, that is callled a precept which is permitted, as when Matthew said, chap. 19.8. Moses for the hardnesse of your heart suffered you to put away your wives: Marke hath, Moses for the hardnesse of your heart wrote this precept unto you: chap. 10. But although this be most true, that God suffereth such to continue in their hardnesse of heart, yet this is not all. 1. For so the Lord suffereth also other sinnes to be done: for there is nothing done in the world, nisi omnipotens fieri velit, vel sinendo ut fiat, vel ipse faciendo; unlesse the omnipo•tent God will have it done, either by suffering it to be done, or doing it himselfe. Then if this were all, the Lord might be said as well to steale, and such like, because he suffereth them to be done. 2. Wherefore Augu•stines judgement is rather here to be received: Deum ad indurationem cordis concurrere non modo secundum permissionem vel secundum patientiam sed etiam secundum actionem & potentiam, non sane per quem fiat, im•mediatè duritia ipsius cordis, sed per quem multa fiant, à quibus peccator vitio suo concipiat duritiam cor•••: That the Lord doth concur in the hardning of the heart, not only by permission, or suffering, but according to his power and action, not by the which immediately the hardnesse of the heart is made, but whereby many things are done, by the which a sinner by his owne corruption doth conceive the hardnes of heart. 3. And concer•ning the place alleaged out of Marke, a precept is not there strictly taken for a commandement, but for any order or decree that is written.

QUEST. XVII. Whether hardnesse of heart be of God as it is a punishment of sinne.

SOME doe hold, because the induration of the heart is two wayes to be considered, as it is a sinne, and a punishment of sinne; in the first God hath no part: but as thereby God punisheth former sinnes, so he as a just Judge inflicteth hardnesse of heart as a punishment; as the Apostle sheweth, Rom.2.28. As they regarded not to know God so God delivered them up to a reprobate mind. And 2. Thess. 2.11. Because they re•ceived not the love of the truth, God shall send them strong delusions that they should beleve lies. In these places the Apostle sheweth how the Lord punisheth them with blindnesse and hardnesse of heart, because of their former sinnes. This distinction is approved by Augustine, lib. 5. cont. Iulianum. Isidorus thus con•cludeth the same point:  Facit Deus quosdam peccatores, sed in quibus talia jam peccata precesserant, ut justo iudicio ejus mercantur in deter•us •re: Therefore God maketh some sinners, but in whom such sinnes are found before, that by the just judgement of God they deserve to become worse and worse.* So Cajetane upon these words, 2. Sam. 12. Behold I will raise evill upon thee out of thine owne house, which was verified in Absolon that rose up against his father: thus resolveth, Deus non est author peccati, ut sic, sed ut est poena peccati: God is not the author of sinne, as it is sinne but as it is the punishment of sinne. The same judgement he giveth of Shemei, whom David saith the Lord bid curse David, that God wrought that Shemei cursed David, Non quatenus erat peccatum, sed quatenus erat poena peccati Davidis: Not as it was sinne, but as it was a pu•nishment of the sinne of David. So Io•senius: Illa Deo tribuuntur non quatenus peccata sunt, sed quatenus poe•na peccati: they are ascribed to God, no• as they are sinnes, but as they are the punishment of sinne: in chap. 15. Ecclesiastic. But Pererius misliking this opinion, thus reasoneth against it. 1. If God be said to be the Author of the induration of the heart, as it is a punishment of sinne, then he may aswell be said to be the Author of the other sinnes, when as a man falleth into them as a punishment of his former sinnes. Contra. As though all such sinnes doe not proceede from the hardnesse of the heart that confirmeth and setleth the sinner in his wickednesse: therefore God is not said to be the cause of these sinnes, but of the hardnesse of heart, which is the cause of those sins: Man by continuing in sin hath his heart hardened by the just judgment of God, and then out of the hardnesse of his owne heart he bringeth forth other sinnes of himselfe.

2. The hardnesse of heart, as it is a great and horrible sinne, so it is a punishment of former sinnes: if God then doe cause it to be a punishment, he also causeth it as it is a sinne.

Contra. In this argument there are ambiguous termes, for in the first clause, this note of similitude (as) is taken for the being of the thing: hardnesse of heart as it is sinne, so it is a punishment of sinne: that is, it could not be a punishment of sinne unlesse it were sinne: this we grant. In the next part, the same word (as) signifieth the manner of being; therefore if the first be taken in the same sense, for one and the same manner of being, wee deny that hardnesse of heart in the same respect, is both sinne and the punishment of sinne. It is both in respect of the subject, and being, but not both in the same quality, affection, and manner of being.

*3. Hee thus proceedeth: All punishments of sinne, because they are just stand with the will of God: hardnesse of heart being a sinne, if it should stand with the will of God, then it would follow, that sinne should stand with the will of God.

Contr. 1. If sinne no way stand with the will of God, then sinne should not be committed in the world, for against his will can nothing be done. 2. Here then wee must admit a distinction of Gods will, there is his will of approbation, and the will of his providence: by the first he willeth not sinne, but by the second he willeth it to be in the world, because he knoweth how to dispose of sinne even unto good. Origen hath the like distinction: Multa sine voluntate Dei geruntur, nihil sine providentia: providentia est, qua dispensat & providet, voluntas qua vult vel non vult aliquid: Many things are done without Gods will, nothing with his providence: providence is that whereby he dispenseth, and provideth; his will, whereby hee willeth or illeth any thing. The master of the sentences saith: Mala fieri bonum est, it is good that evill should bee done▪ because thereby Gods power and goodnesse is seene in turning evill unto good. lib. 1. distinct. 46. quaest. If God then did not see how to turne evill unto a good end, he would not suffer evill to be done in the world. 3. So then retaining the former distinction, still hardnesse of heart as it is a sinne God willeth it not, but as it is a punishment of sinne, it standeth very well with the will and justice of God.

4. And further concerning the former testimonies of their owne Writers: Pererius would have them to speake of such sinnes, which are also punishments of sins in divers subjects: as that the doing of it should be a sinne in one, and the suffering a punishment in the other: as the rebellion of Absolon, and railing of Shemei, in respect of themselves they were sinne, but in regard of David, they were a chastisement upon him for his sinne, and so they were sent of God. But in other things, where the sinne and punishment are in one subject, as in the hardnesse of heart, that distinction hath no place.

Contra. But Pererius by his leave cannot fasten upon them a sense contrary to their words: for thus Cajetan writeth, as Melchior Canus citeth him: De non est ◇ peccata, ut sic, sed quum est ◇ ips peccat vel alterius: God is the author of sinne, not as it is sinne, but as it is a punishment in ◇ that sinneth, or in any other. And Can thereupon collecteth thus: Agnoscit Cajetanus maledictionem Shemei, quatenus punalem sibi procedere a Deo. Cajetane acknowledgeth, that the cursing of Shemei, as it was penall to himselfe did proceed from God: His meaning then is that even in him that sinneth, hardnesse of heart is a punishment of sinne, and not only in another. Their owne master of sentences also saith, as I cited him before: Concupiscentia in quantum poena est peccati Deum habet authorem: Concupisence, as it is a punish/ment of sinne hath God the author thereof, lib. 2. distinct. 32. But concupiscence is a punishment in him▪ that hath it, not in another.

Wherefore notwithstanding these contrary objections, because of those places of Scripture alleaged before, and the testimonies of other Writers: I approve this distinction as sound, that hardnes of heart, not as it is sinne, but as it is inflicted as a punishment of sinne is of God: and in this sense God is said to harden the heart: as Augustine well concludeth, Deus indurabit per justum judicium, Pharaoh per liberum arbitrium: God did harden Pharaohs heart by his just judgement, and Pharaoh by his owne free will: de li/ber. arbitr. cap. 23.

QUEST. XVIII. How God is said to harden the heart by patience and long suffering.

ANother way, whereby God is said to have hardned Pharaohs heart, is by his patience and long suffe|ring, because the Lord doth suspend his judgements, and not presently punish the wicked, where|upon they abusing Gods patience and long suffring are hardned. This exposition they ground upon that place of the Apostle, Rom. 2.4. Despisest thou the riches of his bountifulnesse, and patience, and long suffering, not knowing that the bountifulnesse of God leadeth thee to repentance? But thou after thine hardnesse, and heart that cannot repent, heapest unto thy selfe wrath against the day of wrath. This exposition followeth Origen;  Non aliter Deum indurare corda hominum nisi patienter eos tolerando: that God doth not otherwise harden mens hearts than by patience forbearing them.* And he maketh it a figurative locution, like as a master should say to his servant, that abuseth his gentlenesse: a lewd servant, it is I that have made thee thus, because I did not punish thee. Likewise Basil; *Obstinavit Deus Pharaonem per longam patientiam: * God made Pharaoh obstinate by his long patience.* So also Hierom; Patientia Dei induravit Pharaem: Gods patience did harden Pharaoh. And he sheweth it by this similitude; as the same Sun hardneth the clay, and mollifieth the wax: Sic bonitas Dei vasa ira indurat, vasa misericordia solvit: So the goodnesse of God hardens the vessels of wrath, and mollifieth the vessels of mercie. To the same purpose also Theodoret quast. 12. in Exod. Augustine also after the same manner saith: Pharaonem non divina potentia, sed divina patientia credenda est Deum indu/rasse: Not the divine power but the divine patience is thought to have hardned Pharaoh. This is true which is affirmed by these ancient fathers, that men by abusing the patience and long suffering of God are hard|ned: yet this is not all; this phrase, that God hardned Pharaohs heart, sheweth that God hath a further stroke in the hardning of their hearts than by connivence and long suffering toward them.

QUEST. XIX. Wherefore the Lord useth patience and long suffering toward the wicked.

YEt it is most true that God useth great patience and longanimity towards sinners, and that for these reasons: 1. That thereby Gods goodnesse and mercy may appeare, and the great malice and froward|nesse of mans heart that cannot be drawne to repentance, by the Lords rich and bountifull mercy. 2. By this meanes also Gods judgements appeare to be most just, when he punisheth the hard hearted and incor|rigible, as is evident in the example of Pharaoh. 3. God also teacheth men by his example to be patient and long suffering one toward another. 4. This patience of God, though some abuse it, yet other profit by it, and their hard hearts are mollified;

as though Pharaoh by Gods sparing of him, became more obstinate, yet Nebuchadnezzar at the length, by the Lords lenity and goodnesse, and fatherly correction was brought to know himselfe, and to confesse the true God. 5. And though the evill and wicked should reape no profit by the Lords wonderfull patience, yet the elect and such as are ordained to salvation, are thereby called and brought unto grace, as S. Paul sheweth of himselfe: For this cause was I received to mercy, that Iesus Christ should first shew on me all long suffering, unto the ensample of them, which in time to come should beleeve on him, 1. Tim. 1.16.

QUEST. XX. How God is said to harden by the subtraction of his grace.

BESide, there is another way, whereby the ancient fathers understood God to be said to harden mens heart: namely, by the subtraction and withdrawing of his grace: as Chrysostome: * God is said to give over unto a reprobate sense, to harden, to blind and such like: Non quòd hac a Deo fiunt, quippe cùm à propria hominis malitia proveniant, sed quia Deo justè homines deserente, hac illis contingunt: Not because these things are done by God, which proceed of mans malice; but because while God doth justly forsake men, these things doe happen unto them. So also Augustine; ludurare dicitur Deus, quem mollire noluerit: God is said to harden, whom he will not mollifie, & excacare dicitur quem illuminare noluerit: And he is said to blind him whom he will not illuminate. Gregorie also upon these words of the Lord to Moses▪ I will harden Pharaohs heart, thus writeth: Obdurare Deus per pos•iam dicitur, quando cor reprobum per gratiam non  : God is said by his justice to harden the heart, when he doth not by his grace mollifie a reprobate heart. So Thomas Aquinas: Excacatio & obduratio duo important, &c. The blinding and hardning of the heart implieth two things; one is the internall act of the minde, adhering unto evill, and being adverse from God; and so God is not the cause of the hardnesse of the heart: The other is the subtraction of grace, whereby it commeth to passe, that the •ind is not illuminate to see God, &c. and in this respect God is the cause of induration. This exposition also is true, but it expresseth not all that seemeth to be contained in this phrase, that God is said to harden Pharaohs heart.

Page 112

QUEST. XXI. How God is said occasionaliter▪ by ministring the occasion which the wicked abuseth to harden the heart.

There is then a sixth way of interpreting these words: God is said to harden mans heart occasionaliter▪ by way of occasion, when the wicked take occasion by such things as fall out and are done by Gods providence to be more hardned and confirmed in their sinne. 1. For as all things, as prosperity, adversity, life, death, fulnesse, want and whatsoever else doe worke together unto good to those that feare God, as the Apostle saith, Rom. 8. So on the contrary all things fall out for the worst unto the wicked and impenitent: so the wonders which God wrought in Egypt, served to confirme the Hebrewes in their faith, but Pharaoh through his owne malice was thereby hardned. 2. The things which the Lord doth, whereby the wicked take occasion to be hardned are of three sorts, either inwardly in the mind, as by stirring their affections, as of anger, feare, hope, desire, which they by their corruption turne unto evill: or else such things as are done about them, as admonitions, corrections, mercies, benefits, which they also ungratiously abuse; or they are things externall or without them, as the objects of pleasure, honour, and such like, whereby their hard heart is puffed up and swelleth. And all these things being good of themselves, they through the hardnesse of their heart pervert unto their destruction: as S. Peter speaketh of some which through ignorance and unbeleeve doe pervert the Scriptures, 2. Pet. 3.16. And S. Paul sheweth, that sinne tooke occasion by the commandement, and wrought in him all manner of concupiscence, Rom. 7.8.3. Thus Pharaoh was hardned by occasion of Gods workes, the plagues and wonders which were shewed in Egypt: by the wonders, because he saw his Magicians could doe the like: by the plagues, because they touched not him, but happened without, they came not all at once but with some respite betweene, and because he saw that they continued not long, but were soone removed. 4. To this purpose Augustine, Vt tale cor haberet Pharaoh, quòd patientia D^o non m^o vera^{ur} ad pietatem, propri^o sunt vitii; quòd vero facta sunt ea, quibus cor suo^o itio jam mal^ognum divinis jussionibus resisteret &c. dispensationis fuit divina: In that Pharaoh had such an heart, which could not be moved, by the patience of God unto piety, it was his owne fault; but that such things were done, whereby his heart being evill of it selfe did resist the commandement of God, it was of the divine dispensation: quaest. 18. i^o Exod. This exposition also of Augustine may bee received; but yet there is some|what further to be considered in Gods concurring in the hardning of Pharaohs heart.

QUEST. XXII. God <◇> s^o to harden the heart as the event is taken for the cause.

There is further a seventh exposition: for in the Scripture that is often taken for the cause of a thing▪ which is but the event of it a Chrysostome noteth upon these words, Ioh. 17. None of them perished but the child of perdition, that the Scriptures might be fulfilled: here the Scripture, Quae eventus sun^o pro causa ponit: putteth that for the cause which was the event: for Iudas did not perish to that end that the Scripture should be fulfilled: but it so fell out, that the Scripture in Iudas perishing was fulfilled. Damascen gi|veth the like instance in the 51. Psalme, Against thee only have I sinned and done evill in thy sight, that thou maist be justified in thy sayings, and cleere when thou art judged. But David did not sinne to that end, that God might be justified, God had no need of his sinne to set forth his glory. So it fell out that God spared David▪ and by his mercy overcame his sinne; yet hee sinned not to that end: like as when a man is at his worke, and one commeth and so he breaketh off, he should say my friend came to day to hinder my worke, whereas his friend had no such end in his comming. So Iacob said to his sonnes, Wherefore dealt yee so evill with me, as to tell the man, whether yee had yet a brother or no? Gen. 43.6. Iacobs sonnes in so telling intended no evill, or hurt to their father, but it so fell out. The wicked are said to hate their owne soules, and to procure unto themselves eternall death: whereas simply they hate not their soules, neither would be dam|ned: but upon their committing of sinne it so falleth out that their soules perish by their meanes, as if they hated them: unruly patients that will not obey their Physitians, whereupon followeth death, are said^o seeke their owne death, and yet they desire to live: but upon their unruly and disordered behaviour, death followeth. So God is said to harden Pharaohs heart, by the like figurative speech, because the hard|ning of their heart ensueth upon the abuse of those things, which God intendeth not to that end, but they pervert them to their owne hurt. Ex Perer: All this may safely bee received, and acknowledged; and yet somewhat more is to be added, as shall afterward appeare.

QUEST. XXIII. How diversly in Scripture these termes of blinding and hardning are taken.

BUt by the way this word, to blind, to harden, though it signifie an action proceeding from him that hardneth, yet is it not alwayes so taken: therefore we shall find that foure wayes in Scripture, a thing is said to blinde and consequently to harden: 1. Giftes are said to blind the^oes. Deut. 16. Not that they being a dead thing, can corrupt the judgement, but mans corrupt heart taketh occasion, and is thereby en|ticed to pervert justice. 2. The Devill is said to blinde the mindes of the wicked▪^o. Cor. 4.4. 3. The malice of a mans owne heart is said to blinde and harden, as Pharaoh hardned his owne heart. 4. God is said to blind the eyes, Esay 6.10. and to harden Pharaohs heart: gifts doe blinde occasionaliter, by way of occasion; the malice of mans heart blindeth merit••••, by way of desert, and meritoriously, because it de|serveth to be further blinded and hardned: the Devill blindeth incitando, by inciting and provoking unto sinne. And God as is before shewed, by withdrawing his grace and inflicting the punishment of induration upon them.

QUEST. XXIV. How divers wayes the Lord forsaketh those which are hardned.

FURther, God is said to harden mans hart in his diverse leaving and forsaking of them. 1. Hee suffereth them to follow their owne lusts and desires, not giving them power or grace to restraine them, as Rom. 1. 24. he gave them up to their hearts lusts. 2. He giveth them ease, abundance, prosperity, whereby they are intangled: therefore the Prophet prayeth, Give me not riches, lest I be full and forget thee: Prov. 3. 3. He denieth them the benefit, of wholesome corrections and afflictions, whereby they should learne to know themselves, as the Apostle saith, the Lord receiveth no child, whom hee doth not chastise. 4. God forbiddeth his servants to pray for such, and so they want the benefit of their prayers, as Ieremie is forbid|den to pray for the people, chap. 7.16. 5. God in his justice depriveth them of such as should travell for their soules, and bring them unto God: as the Apostles left the obstinate and wilfull Jewes and shooke off the dust of their feet against them, Acts 13. 6. God taketh away from them the preaching and knowledge of his word, as the Lord threatneth by his Prophet Amos, to send upon them a famine, not of bread or water, but of hearing his word, Amos 8.11. 7. God suffereth them to be deceived by flatterers and un|faithfull counsellors, as •ebobo• was by his young men. 8. And the more strongly to delude them, the Lord permitteth sometimes false Prophets to shew signes and wonders, <◇> the Apostle saith of the false Prophet Antichrist, whose comming is by the working of Satan, with all power and signes, and lying wonders, 2. Thes. 2.9. 9. The Lord permitteth Satan to invade them, and to worke upon them at his plea|sure: as the evill spirit was sent of the Lord upon Saul, and a lying spirit was in the mouth of Baals false Prophets to deceive Achab. 10. God taketh away from them all helpe, whereby they should be defen|ded against the assaults of Satan, as the Lord threatneth to doe to his unfruitfull vineyard: I will take away the hedge thereof and it shall be •aten up, I will breake downe the wall thereof, and it shall be troden downe. Isai. 5.4. 11. But the Lord doth not thus forsake any till they have first forsaken God: as Chrysostomes saith: Quod autem Deus non derelinquat nos, nisi fuerit à nobis derelictus, aperte ostendit Isaias; That God forsaketh not us till wee have forsaken him, I say sheweth, chap. 59.2. Your iniquities have separated betweene you and your God. Ex Perer.

QUEST. XXV. God hardneth otherwise than by foreseeing.

BEside these divers interpretations of the hardning of Pharaohs heart by the Lord which I have abrid|ged out of Pererius: there are three other which I will briefly set downe: first some thinke that this, (in that God is said to harden Pharaohs heart) is to be understood of Gods prescience, that he is said to harden it, because he foresaw it should be hardned by their owne malice. This seemeth sometime to be the opinion of Augustine: in that God is said to harden Pharaohs heart, Non ad operationem Dei, sed ad pra|scientiam pertinere monstratur: it is shewed to appertaine not to Gods operation or working, but to his prescience.* But this cannot be the meaning, for by this reason, whereas God foreseeeth all the sinnes of men, which are committed in the world, God might be said himselfe, to kill, steale, doe wrong, because he foreseeeth, that such things shall be done in the world.

QUEST. XXVI. Whether God may be said to doe those things which he disposeth of to a good end.

SEcondly, God may be said to harden Pharaohs heart, because he disposeth thereof, and directeth it to such an end, as he himselfe propounded: because thereby the Lord did take occasion to worke his mi|racles: as he saith to Moses, I have hardned Pharaohs heart, that I might worke these my miracles, Exod. 10.1. So as God ordained the end, he may be said also in some sort, to doe those things which helpe unto that end; as Act. 2.23. Christ is said to bee delivered by the determinate councell of God: yet was hee betrayed and delivered by Iudas: whose act is said in some respect, to be the Lords, because God disposed of it to effect and accomplish his glorious councell, in redeeming the world by the death of his Sonne. But neither can this be safely affirmed, that the Lord should bee said to doe those things, which hee ordereth and disposeth: for God so disposed of that spirituall combate which S. Paul found in his flesh, that it tended further to Gods glory and the manifestation of his power: as the Lord saith, My grace is sufficient for thee, my power is made perfect through weaknesse: yet God was not the worker of that temptation, but the Apostle imputeth it to Satan, 2. Cor. 12.7. And like as in the creation God made light, but made not darknesse, but onely made a separation betweene the light and the darknesse, Gen. 14. Whereupon Augustine groundeth this distinction: Aliud fecit Deus & ordinavit, aliud non fecit sed ordinavit: * God made some things and ordered them also: some things he made not, but ordered: as he giveth instance of the darknesse: so the workes of darknesse God cannot be said to have made, but only he disposeth and ordereth them.

QUEST. XXVII. God otherwise hardneth then as a generall mover of the heart.

THirdly, some referre that worke of God, which he sheweth in the hardning of the heart, to that generall power which he giveth unto the creature, in whom all things move, live, and have their being,

Page 114

Act. 17.28. So that the hardning of the heart as it is an action or worke, is of God; but as it is evill it proceedeth from man. * So Zuinglius: Quatenus est Dei Creatoris, opus est, crimen non est; quantum autem hominis, crimen est, scelus est: As it is of God the Creator, it is a worke, it is no faule; but as it is of man, it is a fault, it is a sinne. The Master of the sentences hath the like saying: Actus mali in quantum actus ◇◇ , boni sunt & à Deo authore: Evill acts as they are acts are good, and (proceed) of God the Author, lib. 2. distinct. 35.

But this solution doth not take away the doubt: for as God is the Creator, and so generall worker, hee only giveth power to move the heart: this moving being the generall action, is divided into two parts, for there are good motions, of the heart, and evill, the mollifying of the heart, and the hardning: in the good motions God concurrerth two wayes, as a generall mover by his creating power, and as a particular directer by his regenerating grace: but in the other motions he only hath a stroke as a generall mover, in the particular action of hardning as it is evill hee concurrerth not. Therefore according to that generall power the Lord is said only to be a mover, not an hardner of the heart. Some other way therefore yet must be found out, whereby the Lord is said to harden the heart.

QUEST. XXVIII. How the Lord is said indeed to harden the heart.

TO conclude then this question, of all these wayes before rehearsed, which are ten in all, I make choice of these three, which may fully satisfie every doubt, namely the third in the 17. quest. before, the fift in the 20. quest. and the sixt in the 21. The first is, that God is said to harden the heart, by leaving it to it selfe, and depriving it of his necessary grace, as God is said to have given over the unbelieving Gentiles to their hearts lusts, Rom. 1.24. The second, that beside this, God causeth many things to be done, which are not in themselves causes of the hardning of the heart, yet the wicked take occasion thereby further to bee indurate and hardned: as S. Paul sheweth how the wicked abuse the patience and long suffering of God, thereby to be further hardned. Thirdly, God by his just judgement, Cum suum in malum, quod ipse ultro ruit amplius ad finem usque impellit, doth force him to his owne hurt, whither hee runneth headlong himselfe, even unto the end: Iun. A. a. ys. n 7. cap. Exod. God as a just Judge, seeing a mans heart to bee bent upon wickednesse, doth as a just Judge, inflict upon him the spirituall punishment of induration. To this purpose Augustine handling that place, Rom. 1. how the Lord gave up the Gentiles to their owne lusts, useth this distinction: that some things there rehearsed are sinnes and no punishment, as the pride and vanity of their mindes, ^{*} vers. 21. They were not thankfull but became vaine in their imagination: Some a punishment and no sinne, as eternall death which they were worthy of, vers. 31. the rest that came betweene, are both sinnes and punishments. By this distinction Augustine in another place answereth this objection of the Pelagians: God, say they, should not take such punishment of sinne, Vt peccator per vindictam plura committeret: ^{*} That the sinners thereby commit more sinne: Augustine answereth to this effect: Sic ostendit ista esse peccata, ut etiam poenae sint peccatorum: he sheweth these so to be sinnes, as that they are also punishments of sinnes; as the Apostle there saith, vers. 27. Man with man wrought filthinesse and received to themselves such recompence of their error as was meet. So the meaning of Augustine is, that God did not send them upon the Gentiles, as they were sinnes, but they are to be considered as punishments of their sinnes, as God hath an hand therein. ^{*} Likewise, whereas Iulian the Pelagian objected, that Per patientiam divinam sunt, non per potentiam desiderii traditi: That they were delivered over to their lusts, not by the power but by the patience of God: Augustine to shew the contrarie giveth instance of that place, Ezech. 14.9. When it is said, If the Prophet be deceived I have deceived him: Patientia an potentia est? Is it the patience or the power of God that doth this? ^{*} And concerning the hardning of Pharaohs heart Augustine concludeth thus: Deus ejus voluntatem proprio suo vito malam, in hoc peccatum judicio suo justo & occulto inclinavit: God did incline his will▪ being evill by it owne fault, into this sinne, by his just, yet secret judgement: If God did incline it, he did more than suffer it, or minister the occasion only, whereby it was inclined. Hierome expresseth as much by this similitude: Vnus est solis calor, & secundum essentias subjacentes, alia liquefacit, alia indurat; liquatur cera, induratur lutum: there is but one kinde of heate in the Sunne, and according to the matter which it worketh upon, some things it melteth, some things it hardneth; the wax is melted, the clay hardned. Origene also useth the same similitude, ^{*} and applieth it thus: Sic indurasse dicitur Deus cor Pharaoni, quia cor ejus secundum ea, quae cogitabat, luteum & limosum erat: So God (as the Sunne hardneth the clay) is said to have hardned Pharaohs heart, because his heart according to those things, which he thought, was earthly and muddy. And in another place he bringeth in this Simile: ^{*} Vt eodem opere pluviae terra diligenter exculta affert bonos fructus, inculta tribulos: as by the same worke of the raine, the earth being well tilled bringeth forth good fruit, and the untilled thistles. Like as then the Sun hardneth the clay, the raine bringeth forth weedes, not of it selfe but by reason of the nature of the thing concurring, whereupon it worketh; so by the working of God, after a most secret and hid manner, the hearts of the wicked are hardned, but the cause thereof is in themselves. And thus much shall suffice of this question: see it handled before, 2. Doct. chap. 7. and chap. 8 quest. 12. and confut. 1.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. God overruleth mens affections.

Vers. 3. The Lord gave the people favour in the sight of the Egyptians. Hereby wee learne, that God hath the ruling and turning of mens affections: he can worke them either to favour or disfavour: Piscat. So the Wiseman saith: As the rivers of waters, the Kings heart is in the hand of the Lord, & tenneth it whither soever it pleaseth him, Prov 21.1. Like as the husband man maketh furrowes in his ground, and draweth the water which way it pleaseth him; and as the sternes man in the vessell doth move it which way he listeth: so can the Lord order and governe the streames of mens affections.

2. Doct. Godly men have their passions and affections.

Vers. 8. SO he went out from Pharaoh very angry. Even wise and godly men have their affections: it is not as the Stoikes taught, that there is a vacuity and absence of them in wise and perfect men. They are not without affections, but they rule them by reason, and their reason is sanctified by grace. The Apostle saith, be angry, but sinne not, Ephes. 4.26. He alloweth to be angry, but not to sinne in anger: Christ the most perfect man that ever was, had his affections, as of anger, Marke 3.5. He looked round about him •ngerly: of joy, Luk. 10.21. Iesus rejoyced in spirit: of sorrow, Matth. 26.38. My soule is heavy unto death; of love, as Ioh. 13.23. The disciple whom Iesus loved.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Against Purgatory.

BEfore in the third question where it is disputed what Angels God used in bringing the last plague of death of the first borne upon Egypt; Pererius sheweth the difference betweene the ministry of the Angels in this life, and in the next, falling to make mention of purgatory (for they cannot doe otherwise for ther lives, but upon every occasion broach their owne fansies) leaveth it as uncertaine and undiscussed, whether the good Angels or the bad should be ministers of purgatory: he thinketh not the bad, that they should exercise power over them, which in their life time did conquere the Devill; neither yet will hee have them to be the good: It is an unmeet thing, saith he, that they which shortly should become the fel|lowes and partakers of the blessed Angels in heaven, should bee punished by them: Perer. 1. disput. in cap. 11.

Contra. 1. Let any reasonable man judge, whether it be not like, that purgatory should be a meere fan|sie, where there is supposed to bee torments, and yet no tormentor. In that hee thinketh, that neither good Angels nor bad, are the ministers of those torments, I condescend to him: who then? not Christ I am sure, for he hath redeemed them; nor yet God himselfe, for the Apostle saith, Who shall lay any thing to the charge of Gods chosen? it is God that justifi•th, who shall condemne? Rom. 8.33.34. God hath justified them by faith in Christ, and being justified there is nothing further to be laid to their charge. If then there be no tormenter in purgatory, there is no torment in purgatory, and so purgatory fire is quite quenched and put out.

2. Beside this uncertainty, who should be the tormenters, there be other maine points not yet resol|ved of among them concerning purgatory: as of the place, where it is; of the fire, what it is, corporall or spirituall; of the time, how long it shall last, whether hundred yeeres or thousands; of the greatnesse of the paine, whether it exceed all the torments and punishments of this life. These articles are not yet del|fined and determined among them, as Bellarmino sheweth lib. de purgat. from chap. 6. to chap. 14. Therefore we will leave them to their uncertainties, and as they make question of the circumstances of purgato|ry: so we will not onely make question of purgatory it selfe, but are most sure, that it is but an inven|tion of their owne; for all they which dye in the Lord (that is, in the faith of Christ) are pronounced bles|sed, and to rest from their labours, and their workes follow them, Revel. 14.13. Here are three arguments against purgatory They which dye in the faith of Christ are blessed; but they which are in hell torments (for purgatory they make part of hell) are not blessed. They doe rest from their labours; but they which are in purgatory, are in labour and paine. Their workes follow them for their reward; but they which are tormented •nd punished are not rewarded: Therefore wee acknowledge no other purgatory but in this life, a perfect purgation of our sinnes in Christ, Heb. 12.3. and an imperfect, which is by the fiery pro|bation of affliction: as S. Peter calleth it: Thinke it not strange concerning the fiery triall, which is among you to prove you, 1. Pet. 4.12.

2. Confut. Against the Manichees which reject the old Testament.

Vers. 10. BVt the Lord hardned Pharaohs heart. Hence the Manichees tooke occasion to utter their blasphemies against the God of the old Testament, and to reject the Scriptures themselves of the old Testament, as proceeding from a God that was a worker of evill, in hardning mens hearts. These Augustine confuteth at large, hom. 88. de tempore, shewing how God is said to harden the heart, without any touch of sinne: for thus he writeth, Non Pharaonem Dei violentia sed propria impietas obduravit: Not any violence from God but Pharaohs owne impiety did harden him. And these words, I will harden Pharaohs heart, he expoundeth thus; Cum abfuerit ei gratis mea, obduret illum nequitia sua: when my grace is from him, then his owne wickednesse shall harden him. 2. Then he doth illustrate it by this similitude; as the water is frozen, till the Sun shine upon it, then it resolveth, and so soone as the Sunne is departed, it is bound with cold againe: the Sun is not the cause of the freezing of the water, but the coldnesse of the water bindeth it selfe: so properly God causeth not the heart to be hardned, but by the absence of his grace it is hardned. 3. But if the question be asked, why the Lord suffereth any to be hardned; he maketh this answer: Aut illorum iniquitati qui obdurari merentur adscribendum aut ad inscribilia Dei judicia referendum, quae plerunque sunt occulta, nunquam autem injusta: This must be ascribed to their iniquity, which deserve to be hardned, or it must be referred to the judgements of God, which are often hid but never unjust. It sufficeth ◊ to know and beleve, as the Apostle saith, Rom. 9. Is there iniquity with God?

Page 116

3. Confut. Against Pererius that thinketh none in this life to be without hope of grace and repentance.

NOW further whereas Pererius in the treatise of induration moveth this disputation, whether any man can be so hardned in this life, as that he become altogether impenitent and incorrigible, and with|out hope of grace; and resolveth upon the negative part, that none in this life are in such desperate state: it shall not be amisse, first, to examine his reasons, and then to confirme the truth.

1. He urgeth these and such like places, That God would have all men to be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth: And, I will not the death of a sinner. If mercy be offered to all, then the way is open for all to returne unto God.

Contra. 1. God indeed offereth himselfe unto all, and denieth not the externall meanes to any, if they had grace to apprehend them. The Gospell hath beene preached to all the world, and is many times to the impenitent and reprobate; so God offereth grace to all, but all will not receive it.

Augustine hereof thus writeth:  Correctio medicinabiliter omnibus adhibenda est, etiam si salus aegrotantis sit incerta, &c. The wholesome medicine of admonition must be ministred to all, though the health of the sicke be uncertaine: that if he which is admonished belong to the predestinate, it is unto him a wholesome medicine; if he doe not, it is a penall torment.* 2. The argument then followeth not; God calleth all to repentance, therefore all may have grace to repent:  The Scripture saith, many are called, but few are chosen. Ambrose saith, In aliis praevaluisse gratiam, in aliis re•iluisse natura•: That grace prevaieth in some, in others their obstinate nature resisteth.*

2. So long as men are in this life, they are in the way, and are not deprived of all grace, nor utterly forsaken till they come into hell.

Contr. Everlasting punishment in hell is the end and execution of damnation, but men in this life may be in the state of damnation, and be utterly forsaken of Gods grace, as Saul and Iudas, and they whom the Apostle saith, God gave them over to a reprobate sense: Rom. 1.28.

3. If any had beene in this life wholly excluded from grace, Pharaoh of all other was most like; yet his state was not desperate, seeing he was in the same case with Nebuchadnezzar, who repented and confes|sed God.

Contr. 1. He reasoneth flatly against the Apostle, who propoundeth Pharaoh as a vessell of wrath prepared to destruction, Rom. 9. Now if there be hope for the vessels of wrath to come to grace, then there was hope for Pharaoh. The Apostle maketh these two distinct things, God hath mercy on whom he will, and whom he will he hardneth, Rom. 9.18. As God hardneth not those on whom he hath mercy, so neither sheweth he mercy on those whom he hardneth. 2. Nebuchadnezzar and Pharaoh were most unlike, for the one had not so many wonders shewed, as had the other, neither so often dallied and made shew of repentance, as did the other: this sheweth their state to be most differing, for if Pharaoh had beene no more hardened than Nebuchadnezzar was, he would likewise have repented.

4. We are to despaire of none in this life, therefore it is possible for all to repent.

Contr. 1. Such as wee see and know commit a sinne unto death, which is the irremissible sinne against the holy Ghost (which I confesse is a rare thing now to be discerned) such wee may despaire of, because the Apostle forbiddeth us to pray for them, 1. Ioh. 5.16. And those for whom the Lord did forbid Ieremy to pray, chap. 7.16. what hope, I pray you, was there of them? 2. Though wee in charity are to hope the best, even of the greatest sinners, yet this followeth not, that all of them may have grace to repent: wee judge according to that we see: but the Lord seeth the heart and knoweth from the beginning who are his, and who are not.

But on the contrary side: that some in this life are so hard hearted that they cannot repent, and so are incorrigible and without hope of remission of sinnes, it is proved thus:

1. Sinne against the holy Ghost is irremissible, as our Saviour saith, He that blasphemeth against the holly Ghost shall never have forgiveness, Mark. 3.29. Therefore there are some in this life that cannot repent, neither can have their sinnes forgiven them. And because Bellarmino and Pererius, and the rest here answer, that the sinne against the holy Ghost is said to be irremissible, not because it cannot at all be forgiven, but because it is hardly forgiven: therefore to prevent this objection, that place of the Apostle is also urged: that it is impossible for such to be renewed by repentance, Heb. 6.6. that which is impossible is not only hardly done, but not at all.

2. The foreknowledge and decree of God concerning the rejection of some is unchangeable and cannot be altered: but God hath foreseene some to be damned, and decreed them to be rejected, as Iudas is called the childe of perdition, Ioh. 17. therefore it is not possible for such to come to repentance to be saved: * therefore Gregory saith well, Qua non sunt praedestinata obtineri non possunt: Those things which God hath not predestinate cannot be obtained. But God hath not decreed repentance for them that are rejected and reprobate.

3. There is no hope of forgiveness for that sinne for the which it is not lawfull to pray, but there is a sinne unto death, for the which we are forbidden to pray, 1. Ioh. 5.16. Ergo, &c. Pererius answer here is, that by sinne unto death is meant that sinne, wherein a man continueth unto death, and so dying therein he is not afterward to be prayed for. Contr. 1. It would follow by this reason, that no sinne of any is to be prayed for while hee liveth, for how doth any know whether a man may continue in a sinne till his dying day? 2. The Apostle speaketh of such sinnes, which a man seeth his brother to sinne: now

sinnes are onely seene to be done in this life: neither is a mans repentance knowne which God may give him in his very passage out of the world. 3. Let them shew us any place, in all the Scriptures, that autho|rizeth prayer for the dead if they can: wherefore they are not to give a sense of Scripture that cannot be warranted by Scripture. 4. The Apostle therefore calleth it a sinne unto death; for the which there is no forgiveness, and so is there no sinne but blasphemy against the holy Spirit. And thus Ambrose expoundeth it, Non potest ibi exoratio esse veniae, ubi sacrilegis est plenitudo: there can be no intreating of pardon, where there is fulnesse of Sacrilege.

4. Where there can bee no repentance, there can be no remission of sinnes: but some have such hard hearts that they cannot repent, Rom. 2.4. therefore the sinnes of such are irremissible.

5. Hereunto may be added the testimonies of Cyprian: Non posse in Ecclesia ei remitti, qui in Deum deliquerit; that he can find no forgiveness in the Church that sinneth against God, lib. 3. de Quirinum cap. 28. Of Ambrose: Cassa erat proditoris poenitentia, qui peccavit in spiritum sanctum: The betrayers repentance was in vaine, having sinned against the spirit of God in Luc. 22. Of Hierome: Nihil ita repugnat Deo quom cor impoenitens; solum crimin est, quod veniam consequi non potest: Nothing is so against God, as an impenitent heart: it is the only sinne that cannot attaine pardon.

6. Places of morall use.

1. Obs. By the suddennesse of Gods judgements we are taught to watch.

Vers. 6. ABout midnight will I goe forth into the midst of Egypt. God smiteth the Egyptians at midnight, when they were most secure: and the Apostle sheweth that the comming of Christ should be sudden, even like the comming of a theefe in the night, 1. Thess. 5.2. And therefore this doth admonish us alwayes to be watchfull, as our Saviour said to his Apostles: These things that I say unto you, I say unto all men, Watch, Mark. 13.37. Ferus.

2. Obs. To be zealous in Gods cause.

Vers. 8. SO hee went from Pharaoh very angry. God would have us to be zealous in his cause, and not to doe the worke of God negligently: Simler. The Wiseman saith, that hee which is slothfull in his worke, is the brother of him that is a great waster, Prov. 18.9. And the Lord threatneth the Laodicean because they were luke warme, to spue them out of his mouth, Revel. 3.

3. Obs. The heart of the wicked is hardened to set forth Gods glory.

Vers. 9. PHaraoh shall not heare you, that my wonders may be multiplied. God hardeneth the heart of the reprobate, that his glory thereby might be the more set forth, as the Apostle saith, Rom. 9.17. For this same purpose have I stirred thee up, that I might shew my power in thee, and that my name might bee declared through all the earth. Genevens.

4. Obs. God foresheweth his servants of their troubles that they should not be offended.

Vers. 10. AND he suffered not the children of Israel to goe. Like as the Lord had foretold unto Moses so it commeth to passe: and this the Lord did, that Moses being forewarned before, should not be offended, to see the malicious obstinacy of Pharaoh. So our Saviour saith unto his Apostles, These things have I said unto you that you should not be offended, Ioh. 16.1. The Lord acquainteth his servants with <◇> troubles and afflictions aforehand, that when they come they should be prepared for them.

1. The method and Argument.

IN this Chapter, containing the deliverance of the children of Israel out of Egypt, with the signe and assurance thereof the institution of the Passeover, there are three things principally handled: The institution of the Passeover, to vers. 29. then the manner of the deliverance and departure of Israel out of Egypt, to vers. 41. Lastly, the perpetuall Law of the Passeover repeated, to vers. 51.

1. In the first part: first there is the commandement of God to Moses concerning the Passeover, to vers. 21. then the relation thereof by Moses to the people, to vers. 29.

The commandement is either concerning the Passeover to be solemnized and kept at that time, to vers. 4. or the perpetuall observation thereof, to vers. 21.

In the first there is prescribed, 1. the preparation of the Passeover, both when, in the first moneth, vers. 1. and the tenth day. 2. By whom the preparation shall be made, vers. 3▪ 4 and what: a lambe without blemish of a yeere old, vers. 5. 2. The killing and eating of the lambe: to the killing belongeth the description of the time, at even, vers. 6. and what they shall doe with the bloud, strike it upon the dore-posts, vers. 7. To the eating belongeth▪ both how it shall be eaten, with unleavened bread and sower herbes, vers. 8. how it should be dressed, rosted with fire, vers. 9. what they should eat, even all, reserving nothing, vers. 10. and in what manner and habit, vers. 11.

3. The use, to be a signe upon their houses of their deliverance, where is shewed, what shall befall the Egyptians that night, vers. 12. and how the Israelites shall escape the plague, vers. 13.

In the commandement for the perpetuall observation: 1. The solemnity of the time is prescribed, of the first day, vers. 14. of seven dayes to be kept with unleavened bread, vers. 15. and of the first and seventh day, in abstaining from all kinde of worke, with an exception of the labour about their meat and drinke, vers. 16. and the reason of this solemnity, their deliverance, vers. 17.

2. The manner of keeping it with unleavened bread is more fully described, both how long they shall eat it, vers. 18. the danger, in not observing this ceremony, vers. 19. and it must bee kept generally of all, vers. 20.

In the relation of Moses to the people; 1. he repeateth the manner, where and how they shall strike the bloud, vers. 22. 2. To what end, because by this meanes the Angel of God will passe by their houses. 3. The celebration of the day is commanded, with the end, for a perpetuall commemoration thereof to their children, vers. 27. 4. The obedience of the people is shewed, vers. 28.

2. In this second part, which containeth the history of the peoples deliverance and departure▪ 1. The occasion is set forth, which shewed how the Lord destroyed the first borne in Egypt, vers. 29. then Pha/raoh in haste called for Moses and Aaron, and bad them goe with all they had, vers. 31. 32. and the Egyptians forced them, vers. 33. 2. The manner of their going forth is described, they went in hast with dow trussed upon their shoulders, vers. 34. 35. and they went out richly, having received jewels of gold and silver of the Egyptians, vers. 35. then the reason thereof is shewed, the Lord gave them favour, vers. 36.

3. The circumstances belonging to their departure are expressed. First, of the place from whence and whither they went. Secondly, of the persons, by their numbers, vers. 37. and divers kinds, vers. 38. Thirdly, the time, after the space of 430. yeeres.

3. In the 3. part concerning the law of the Passeover, there is the prescription, then the execution, and in the prescription three things are described: 1. Of the persons that shall be admitted to eat thereof, or not admitted, vers. 44, 45. 2. Of the place where it shall be eaten, vers. 46. 3. The manner required in the thing, a bone must not be broken, vers. 47. in the persons, they must be circumcised that eat thereof, vers. 48, 49. then followeth the execution by the people, vers. 50.

2. The divers readings.

*Vers. 3. A small beast. I.V. rather than a Lamb. B.G. cum caeter. she signifieth either a Lambe or a Kid▪ for they might take of either, vers. 5. they could not take a Lambe of Kids or Goats.

*Vers. 4. Both he himselfe shall take, and his neighbour. I. C. better than, he shall take his neighbour. B. G. cum ceter. for here the conjunction (and) his neighbour is omitted, and the distinction over (he) himselfe, doth sever it from the clause following: the meaning is that hee and his neighbour should joyne together to take a Lamb: the word achak used before, vers. 3. shall take unto him a Lambe, is here better referred to the Lambe, which is understood to be taken, than to his neighbour.

*Vers. 6. Shall kill it in the twilight. B. beewene the two eventides. I.V.A.P. better than, at eventide, G.L.S.C. for the word ghereb in the singular is put for the eventide, vers. 18. but here it is in the duall number, and is taken for the twilight betweene the setting of the Sunne and the beginning of the night.

*Vers. 11. It is the Lords pasch. I.S.P.V. the Lords Passeover: cater. Pasch. H. which signifieth the passing over; but the originall word is better retained, as the Apostle saith: Christ our pasch is sacrificed for us, 1. Cor. 5.7.

*Vers. 13. When I shall smite in the land of Egypt. S.V.A. that is, smite the first borne in the land of Egypt. I. Slay in the land of Egypt. C. better than, smite the land of Egypt. B.G.L.P. for then the preposition in should be superfluous.

*Vers. 16. Notwithstanding, that which every one must eat, only shall be done of you. V.C.S.A.P. or prepared for you: better than, excepted those things which every one must eat. L. for the last clause shall be done of you is here wanting; or save about that which every one must eat, that only may yee doe. B.G. for the verbe is in the passive, that shall be done.

*Vers. 23. He will not suffer the destroyer to come into your houses to smite. I.C. cum cater. that is, to smite the first borne. V. to plague you B.G. but the word (nagaph) signifieth to smite.

Vers. 25. And it shall be when yee are come into the land. I.V.C.A. P. rather than, when yee shall come into 〈...〉. B.G.L.S. for here the word vehajah is wanting.

*Vers. 26. What meaneth this your service. I. what is this service to you. C.A.P. rather than, what manner of service is this yee doe. B.G. so also L.S. for they aske rather the meaning, than manner of it, as the next verse sheweth.

*Vers. 28. They bowed themselves. I. or humbled. A. P. rather than worshipped. B. G. cum cater. shacah signifieth to bow downe: it is a signe of adoration, but properly it doth not signifie to <◇> or worship.

*Vers. 32. Take your flockes and your dro•es, or heards. I. V. rather than sheepe and cattell. B.G. and sheepe and heards. L. or sheepe and •xen. C.S. <◇> and bacchar are here rather names collectives, and are taken for the heards of small and great cattell: for they had flockes of goates as well as of sheepe.

*Vers. 34. Their kne•ding <...> their <◇> . I.C. rather than, their <◇> bound. G.S. or that they had in store. B. L. V. mishar•th rather signifieth the kneading vessell, than the kneading: see before chap. 8.3.

Page 119

Vers 36. They spoiled the Egyptians. I.G.A.P.L.S. tooke from the Egyptians. V. left the Egyptians emp•y. C. robbed the Egyptians. B. natzal signifieth to spoile.*

Vers. 38. A great mingled company went up. I. great mixture. A.P. rather than many strangers. C. or a great mixed multitude of people. L.S. or a great multitude of sundry other nations. B. G. Much is here inserted to make the sense full.

Vers. 26. Ye shall not breake a bone in it▪ I.A.C.P.V. rather than from it. S. or thereof. B.G. the Hebrew pre|position signifieth (in)*

Vers. 51. And so it was the same day Iehovah brought &c. A. P. C. S. rather than, the selfe same day did the Lord bring, for the word vajehi, (it was) is omitted; or, And this was the same day wherein Iehovah brought &c, that is, the Passeover was kept that day. I. for (wherein) is added.

3. The explanation of difficult questions.

QUEST. I. When the Lord thus spake to Moses.

Vers. 1. ANd Iehovah had said to Moses. Not as it is usually read, Then the Lord spake to Moses; for it is evident, in that the lambe for the Passeover was prepared upon the tenth day of the moneth, and eaten the 14. day, that the Lord thus spake unto Moses foure dayes before the Passeover was eaten, which might bee upon the tenth day, then followed the three dayes darknesse, the 10.11 and 12. dayes, upon the 13. Moses appeared the last time before Pharaoh, and upon the 14. day they eat the Passe|over: So then the history is here transposed, because Moses would not interrupt the former story of the plagues: and for the better evidence and perspicuity of the institution of the Passeover, he setteth downe both the preparation and the institution thereof together. Iun. in Analys.

QUEST. II. Whether this were a new i•stitution for the beginning of the yeere or the old renewed.

Vers. 2. THis moneth shall be unto you the beginning of moneths. 1. Simplicius in his Commentary upon Aristotles Physicks, sheweth how diversly the account was taken of sundry nations for the beginning of the yeere. The Athenians began their yeere from Midsommer, the Romans from the mid|dest of winter: the A•ians from the Autumne; the Arabians and they of Damascus from the spring. The Egyptians also accounted the beginning o• the yeere from the Autumne, because then Nilus was retur|ned within his bankes, and so tillage and seed time began. Iun. 2. Some thinke that this was a new insti|tution to make this moneth, which was in the spring, answering for the most part unto our March the first of the yeere, and that the Hebrewes alwayes before this time, held the seventh moneth to bee the first moneth, as they did afterwards for the computation of Jubile, and for other civill matters: so osep^{us}, to whom consenteth Pererius: Simler. But this is not like: Indeed the Israelites, while they were in Egypt followed the custome of the Egyptians, that began their yeere in the Autumne; but before they account|ed their yeere from the spring, as the Persians and Chaldeans did: and at that time of the yeere it is held that the world was made, as more at large is proved, Qust. 16. upon the 1. of Genes. 3. Therefore this ralther was a renovation of the former account of the moneths which the Hebrewes had discontinued in Egypt: both to make a difference betweene them and the Egyptians, and to call to their remembrance the benefit of the creation: Iun. And this may be the occasion thereof, because that moneth of the Au|tumne from whence they accounted the beginning of the new yeere, and the end of the old, Exod. 34.22. was in number not the first but the seventh moneth, Levit. 25.27. Whereas Moses then in the story of the floud maketh mention of the first and the second, the seventh and the tenth moneth, hee must be un|derstood to reckon from the first moneth in the spring: unlesse they will say that the seventh moneth is so called there after one account, and in Leviticus after another: which cannot bee: the seventh moneth shall be the seventh still.

QUEST. III. How it is said to be the beginning of moneths.

The first moneth of the yeere. 1. Not only the principall and chiefe moneth as Vatablus: but the first in order from whence all the rest should be numbred. 2. Divers nations have had a divers custome in the accompt of their yeeres: the Egyptians in their Hieroglyphikes counted every moneth a yeere; the Arabians three moneths, as from the spring to the Autumne, from thence to midwinter. The Acarnani|ans counted six moneths to a yeere, as from the spring to the Autumne: the Romanes and the He|brewes reckoned twelve moneths, and so is the yeere to bee taken here. 3. It was the first moneth, for matters ecclesiasticall, and belonging to religion: But the civill yeere began in the seventh moneth, Levit. 25.9. As the Egyptians began their ecclesiasticall yeere from Midsummer, and their civill from the Autumne: Iun. From thence also they began their Jubile, and the account of the seventh yeere of rest which if it had begun in the spring, they should have wanted two yeeres fruits: for the seventh yeere of rest and Jubile should begin before they had reaped the fruits sowne in the sixt yeere: and in the se|venth it was not lawfull for them either to sow or reape. 4. As it was the first moneth of the yeere, so was i^o the chiefe and most famous: in respect of the deliverance of the Israelites: and in this moneth they went over Jordane and came into the land of Canaan, the 10. day of the first moneth, Iosh. 4.19.

Page 120

Perer. And now all things began to flourish and revive in the spring, so that the earth did also as it were seeme to rejoyce for the liberty of the people of God: Ferus. From hence the Israelites, for the remem|brance of so glorious a deliverance had great cause to begin the computation of their yeere, as Christians now doe from the nativity of our Lord for a commemoration of their spirituall deliverance. Perer.

QUEST. IV. Of the name of this first moneth called of the Hebrewes Abib, of the Chaldes Nisan.

The name of this first moneth is not here expressed, but chap. 13.4. it is called the moneth Abib, so call|ed, because in that moneth corne began to be ripe. 1. But here I cannot subscribe unto the opinion of Pererius, therein following Paulus Burgensis, that the Hebrewes had no names for their moneths before the captivity of Babylon, but by their number, as the first, second, third, and after the captivity they borrowed the names of the moneths of the Medes and Persians and chiefly of the Chaldeans, as it is to be found in the bookes of Nehemia, Esther, and the prophesie of Zacharie, and the bookes of the Maccha|bees. 2. But this appeareth to be otherwise, for in divers places of Scripture, wee finde the names of some of the moneths after the calling of the Hebrewes before the captivity of Babylon, as the second moneth Zif, 1▪ King. 6.1. and the 7. moneth Ethanim, 1. King. 8.2. Pererius saith, that these were not the proper names of these moneths, but onely appellatives, signifying the properties of those moneths: as the first was called Zif of the opening, because the flowers began then to open and shew: the other signified strong, because in that moneth fruits were gathered whereby mans heart was comforted and made strong: Vatab. Or because they were of strong constitution, which resisted and overcame the diseases incident to that season of the yeere about the fall of the leafe: Cajetane. Contra. 1. This is no good argument, these names have some speciall signification, therefore they were not the proper names of the moneths: Abib signifieth an eare of corne, Levit. 2.14. Was it not therefore a name of the first moneth which was so called because the corne then eared and began to be ripe? So Bul was the name of the eight moneth, 1. King. 6.38 so called of the inundation of waters which fall in that moneth. 2. It is very probable, that those Chaldee names of the moneths, as Adar, Cisleu, Elul, were not taken up of the Hebrewes till after the captivity: as the first is mentioned, Nehem. 6.19. the second, Zachar. 7.1. the third 1. Ma•chah. 14.27. But the Hebrew names were in use before, as appeareth by these already given in instance.

3. Now the proper names of the moneths, as they were used after the Captivity were these; the first Nisan, answering to our March, the second Tiar, answering to Aprill, the third Sivan, which is our May, the fourth Tamuz, our June, the fifth Ab, which we call July: then Elul, agreeable to August, the seventh Tisri, sorting to our September, the eighth Marches•an, with us October, the ninth Cisleu, our November, the tenth Tebeth, the same with December, the eleventh Sebath, named with us January, the twelfth Adar, which is correspondent to our February: Ex Pererio.

QUEST. V. When the first moneth of the Hebrewes tooke beginning.

NOW to know when to beginne the first moneth of the yeere: 1. Some give this rule, that whereas the Hebrewes alwayes count their moneths from the new Moone as Psalm 81.3. Blow up the trum/pet in the new Moone: they will have that to be the first moneth, whose full Moone is nearest to the equinoctiall. But this rule sometime faileth, for it may fall out that two full Moones are equally distant from the equinoctiall, and then it would be uncertaine, which Moone to take. 2. Some say that was the first moneth with the Hebrewes, whose new Moone was nearest to the equinoctiall, whether it were before or after: Ferus. But this rule doth not hold neither: for it may bee that one new Moone falleth out as upon the 7. day of March, another upon the fifth of Aprill, and so further off from the equinoctiall (that is, when the night and day is of equall length) and yet this shall rather be the first Moone than the other. 3. Therefore this is a more certaine observation, that the first moneth should be that, whose fourteenth day, falleth out either upon the Equinoctiall, or presently after it, and so the new Moone of the first moneth will fall out, neither before the eight day of March nor after the fifth day of Aprill. 4. Now hence it is evident, that the first moneth of the Hebrewes is never all within March; it may sometime be all without March, though not all without Aprill; as when the Hebrewes every third yeere put in a moneth to make the yeere to agree with the course of the Sunne, so that they had two Adars, as it might be two Februaries together: then the latter Adar being mensis intercalaris, the moneth put betweene, concurring with March, the first moneth began with April, but for the most part their first moneth tooke part of March and part of April.

QUEST. VI. Why the Lambe was commanded to be prepared foure dayes before.

Vers. 3. IN the tenth of this moneth, let every man take unto him a lambe, &c. They were commanded to set apart the paschall lambe foure dayes afore for these causes. 1. Lest that if they had deferred it till the instant of their departure, they might by reason of other businesse have forgotten it. 2. That in this while they might see whether there were any blemish or defect in the lambe. 3. That they might by the sight of the lambe be stirred up to a thankfull remembrance of their deliverance expected. 4. To confirme them in the assured confidence of Gods assistance, against the Egyptians, that whereas they abhorred all these which did kill sheepe, either for meat or sacrifice, or any other cattell which they superstitiously adored▪ yet the Israelites did foure dayes set apart their paschall lambes, to that end, without any danger, or hurt intended by the Egyptians: Pererius, Ferus. 2. This preparation of the lambe foure dayes before was peculiar only for this time and first passeover: because afterward the cause was taken away:

Page 121

for neither was there feare lest they should forget to take a Lambe for the Passeover; and beside they needed no time to examine the wants and defects of the Lambe, being experienced by their daily sacrifices, how to make choice of the fittest beasts: therefore where the law of the Passeover is repeated, as Levit. 23. Deut. 16. the rite of preparing the Lambe foure dayes before is omitted. 3. Iosephus is here found to be in an error, that saith the lambe was to be prepared upon the 13. day against the 14. when as it is manifestly expressed, that it was to be set apart upon the tenth day: Perer.

QUEST. VII. Whether a Lambe were killed in every house, and how many went to the eating of a Lambe.

LEt every man according to the house of the fathers▪ &c. 1. This name of house in Scripture is diversly taken: sometime it signifieth all the nation of Israel, which is called the house of Iacob, Psal. 114. sometime for a whole tribe, as the house of Iudah, the house of Levi. But here it is taken more strictly, for every family contained in their severall houses, as appeareth, vers. 4. where one houshold or family was too little for the eating of a lambe, there two neighbours were to joyne together. 2. Every particullar man is not charged to provide a lambe, but the masters of the families onely: Ferus. 3. Yet not every housholder did provide a lambe, as where the houshold was too little, for in that case they were to joyne with their neighbours; which was done in two respects, both in regard of the povertie of such as were not able to provide a lambe; and lest that if in every small family, they should kill a lambe, somewhat thereof might remaine untouched, which was against the law of the Passeover: neither were there more than one lambe killed in any one house. 4. What number was allowed to the eating of a lambe is uncertaine: The Hebrewes thinke that tenne were allotted to a lambe; but that seemeth not to be generally observed: for the lambs were not all of one bignes, nor every mans stomacke and eating alike: yet Iosephus seemeth to confirme this opinion of the Hebrewes, who writeth, that Cesarius the Governour of Judea being desirous to certifie Neroof the number of the Jewes, dealt with the high Priest, who by the number of the paschall lambs which were killed, amounting unto two hundred fiftie and six thousand, and counting ten to every lambe, he gathered the whole summe of thirtie hundred thousand▪ and seventie thousand, that were gathered together at the celebration of the Passeover, Ioseph. lib. 7. de bello Iud. cap. 17.

QUEST. VIII. Whether beside the paschall lambe there were any other solemne sacrifices.

NOW whether beside these particular lambes which were slaine in every house, there was beside some publike solemne sacrifice, it may be questioned. But it is not like that there was any such at this time, because Moses did so propound his request unto Pharaoh, that they might goe three dayes journey to offer sacrifice unto God in the wilderness: therefore it is not like that they kept any publike solemne service of God in Egypt: afterward in the time of Hezekiah and Iosias there were many solemne sacrifices offered at the Passeover, but they must be distinguished from the Passeover it selfe, which was eaten on the 14. day at night; but these solemne sacrifices were offered on the 15. day, the first solemne day of the Feast, Simler.

QUEST. IX. Of the divers acceptations of the word evening.

Vers. 6. They shall kill it in the twilight, or betweene the evenings. It is to be considered, that the word vespera, evening, is taken two wayes: 1. properly for the space betweene the Sun set and the shutting in of the day light altogether, as Iudg. 19.9. it is called the lodging of the day, and vers. 14. the going downe of the Sunne: and this may appeare both by the derivation of the Latine word vespera, which is derived of vesper; which is Venus starre, and both goeth before the Sunne rise, thereof called Lucifer the day starre, and followeth immediatly his setting, and is also called Vesper, or Hesperus, after the Greeke: beside, the Hebrew word ghereb signifieth a commixtion, when as the day light and the darknesse seeme to be mingled together: so that properly the evening signifieth the twilight: which at Jerusa|lem where the pole is elevated almost 32. degrees, continueth about the space of an houre and 5. minutes. Or the evening is taken more generally, and so sometime it signifieth all the time from the declining of the Sunne in the afternoone, till the setting thereof: some time it signifieth the whole night, as Gen. 1.5. the evening and morning were of the first day; the beginning of the day and the night are taken for the whole: Thostat. Iun. It signifieth also sometime the latter part of the night toward the morning, as where it is said, Matth. 28.1. that in the evening, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, of the Sabbath when the first day of the weeke began to d•wne, Mary Magdalene and the other Mary came to see the Sepulchre: Marke readeth, that they came 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, very early in the morning.

But Pererius taketh exception here to Thostatus, affirming that in the first place the evening is taken for the day, being the end thereof, and the morning for the night, being the end also thereof: and in the other place the word 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, dawning, signifieth the beginning of the next day, which the Jewes did begin to reckon from the evening: as Luke 23.54. the same word is used where the Evangelist saith: That day was the preparation and the Sabbath appeared, or dawned, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉.

Contra. 1. The evening is rather taken for the night, both because there was darknesse before there was light, and so the night was first and then the day; as also because in Scripture the civill day is counted from evening to evening: Iun. and the beginning of a thing is more properly taken for the whole than the end. 2. It is not denied, but that the word dawning is sometime taken for approaching or drawling neere: but seeing S. Marke expoundeth S. Matthewes 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, evening, by the word 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, morning, it cannot be avoided, but that S. Matthew meaneth the morning; and till the morning of the third day Christ was not risen: therefore Pererius without cause findeth fault here with Thostatus: yet notwithstanding in this place, the eventide or twilight is not taken any of these three waies, but properly for the shutting in of the day.

QUEST. X. Of the time when the Passeeover should be killed, betweene the two evenings.

BUt what should be here meant by the two evenings, there are divers opinions. 1▪ Some take these two evenings for the two twilights of the evening and morning: Lippoman. But that cannot be, for so he alloweth the whole night for the killing of the paschall lambe, which was to bee counted with the fifteenth day following▪ whereas they are commanded to kill the Passeeover on the 14. day at even. 2. Mas•u• in 5. Iosua, reporteth this to be the opinion of most of the Hebrewes, that the evening is to be taken from the first declining of the sunne in the afternoone untill it set: and they are the two evenings, the first when the sunne beginneth to turne in the afternoone, the other when it is in the setting; so also Rabbi Salomon. But this seemeth to be somewhat hard to take halfe the day for the evening: for after the sunne beginneth to decline, there is much day behind, as it is called Gen. 29.7. (haio• gadol) which can|not be said to be any part of the evening. 3. Some doe take these two evenings, the one to begin at the sunne set, the other when it beginneth to be night, and the space betweene which we call the twilight to be those two evenings: Aben Ezra, Oleaster, B•rrh. Which space they define to containe about an houre and a third part: Pellican. But this interpretation cannot hold, for after the sunne set, began the 15. day to be counted, when they were first to eat unleavened bread, Levit. 29.9. which was upon the eve of the fourteenth day, chap. 12.18. that is, presently following the 14. day: but they were to kill the paschall lambe upon the 14. day, before the 15. day came, so the times must be distinguished betweene the killing of the lambe, which was betweene the two eventides upon the 14. day, and the eating thereof with unleavened bread, which was in the evening following after the sunne set: Perer. 4. Wherefore there remaineth a fourth exposition, which is this: They divided the naturall day, from sun to sun into foure parts, which each of them containeth three houres, and the first part was from the breake of day, for the three first houres, and was called of the last houre, tertia, the third houre, the second part, sexta▪ the sixth houre, the third nona, the ninth houre; and the fourth from thence unto night, and was called ve/spera, the evening: the first evening was toward the sunne set, some two houres before, Cajetanus, or three, and the other at the sun set: in this space they were to kill the paschall lambe: of this opinion is Iosephus, a most expert and skilfull man in the Jewish rites and observations: who writeth that the Priests used to kill the paschall sacrifice, from the ninth houre to the eleventh, lib. 7. de bel. Iud. c. 17. and it seemeth that in the twelfth houre, which was the last, they did rost and dresse the lambe, and after sun set eat it. And this interpretation may be thus further confirmed: 1. Because they were to kill the paschall lambe on the 14. day; but after the sunne was set the fifteenth day began: Perer. 2. If they should not have killed the lambe till the sunne set, they should not seeme to have sufficient time, the night then comming upon them, to kill the lambe dresse and prepare it 3. The example of our Saviour doth warrant it, who sent his Disci|ples before the evening to prepare the Passeover, and when even was come he sate downe with the twelve to eat it, Matth. 26.14. The Passeover was killed and made readie before the evening came: Masius. 4. Beside, the phrase of Scripture doth also approve and justifie this interpretation; for when as our Sa|viour fed the five thousand, before they sat downe, it is said, the even was come, Matth. 14.11. when the sun was not yet set: for the time would not then have served to have placed them all upon the ground, and gi|ven them all bread, there being so few servitors, none but Christs Disciples; and beside S. Marke saith this was done when the day was farre spent, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, chap. 6.35. This then was one evening when the sunne began to draw low: then afterward it is said, When the evening was come, Christ was in the moun|taine alone, Matth. 14.23. this was the other evening when the sunne was set: Perer. Iun. Simler.

QUEST. XI. Whether the Passeover was killed in the first evening when the foureteenth day began or the latter.

BUT whereas the Hebrewes counted the dayes, and so observed their Feasts, from evening to evening, so that every day civill had two evenings, the one where it began, the other where it ended, the que|stion is, whether the paschall lambe were to be killed on the evening, when the 14. day began, or when it ended. But it doth evidently appeare, that was to be killed in the end of the 14. day, and so in the latter evening, and not in the first. 1. Because they were commanded to eat unleavened bread in the end of the 14. day at even, chap. 12.18. when the fifteenth day began, for they were not to eat unleavened bread till the fifteenth day, Levit. 13.6. But if they were to take the first evening, when the fourteenth day began, then they were to eat unleavened bread all the 14. day. 2. Againe, it is said that they should eat the flesh the same night with unleavened bread: that is, the same night after they killed the Passeover; but if they killed it the evening before, when the 14. day began, then they did eat unleavened bread upon the 14. day, and so eight dayes in all: for from the evening before the 14. day, till the evening after the 21. day, are eight dayes: but they were commanded onely to eat unleavened bread seven dayes, from the 14. at even, till the 21. day at even, chap. 12.18. 3. Beside, the practice of our Saviour Christ sheweth how the Passe|over was to bee kept according to the law: hee did eat the Passeover the same night

wherein he was be|traied, 1 Cor. 11.23. and the next day he suffered, which was the 15. day of the moneth: for it is the gene|rall received opinion that Christ suffered upon the 15. day of the first moneth, insomuch that *Bedasaith, Nulli licet dubitare Christiano: No Christian ought to doubt thereof: it must be then of all confessed, that

Christ in all respects observed the law: if he suffered upon the 15. day, and the eve before eat the Passe|over, being immediatly before prepared and made readie for him, then the Passeover was killed, not on the eve that began the fourteenth day, but on the evening that ended it. This onely doubt there is in one Saviours example, that the Passeover is said to be prepared for him, upon the first day of unleavened bread, which was the 15. day, Matth. 26.17. which if it were so, then did he not eat the Passeover upon the 14. day. But here the answer is, that because the same night began the Feast of unleavened bread when they did eat the Passeover, and the Romans used to count the night with the day before going, it is therefore according to that common account, then in use among the Jewes, called the first day of unleavened bread, because of the evening following: Beza.

QUEST. XII. Whether it were not indifferent to use a Lambe or a goate for the Passeover.

Vers. 5. YE shall take it of the lambs, or of the kids. 1. Some thinke that it was lawfull to offer not onely lambs and goates for the pasch, but calves also and bullocks, as it is prescribed, Deut. 16.2. Thou shalt offer the Passeover unto the Lord thy God of thy sheepe and bullocks; and they give this reason further, because some families might be so great, that one lambe would not suffice them, and therefore it is like they would chuse a beast according to their eating. Cont. 1. If any other beast beside a lambe or goate had beene permitted, the Lord would not in the institution of the Passeover, which is commanded in every respect so precisely to bee kept, have omitted it. 2. In the place, Deut. 16. he meaneth not the paschall lambe, but other sacrifices, which they offered during that solemnitie, that they might take them of their sheepe or bullocks. 3. Though the familie were never so great, one lambe might suffice for every one to have a part: it was not provided to fill their bellies, it was lawfull for them afterwards to eat other meat: but it was prescribed to be used as a sacramentall commemoration of their deliverance, and so to be a food rather for their soules than their bodies. 2. Paulus Burgensis is of opinion, that it was not law|full for the Hebrewes at any time, neither then nor after to take a goate for their Passeover, but onely a lambe. 1. For in that moneth, the sun being in that signe Aries, the Lord by staying of an hee or ram lambe would signifie that he would therein judge the Egyptian gods, who superstitiously worshipped rammes and sheepe. 2. This also better shadowed forth Christ, who is called the lambe that tooke away the sinne of the world, not the goate. 3. Therefore the meaning of the words is, that they shall take a lambe, from the flocke, where there were mingled together both sheepe and goats, to signifie that Christ tooke his flesh both from righteous and unrighteous progenitors, that no man should despaire of forgive|nesse. Cont. 1. If that were the reason, why a lambe was appointed, a ramme had beene fitter, that was growne, to shew the judgement of God upon the rams the Egyptian gods, than a lambe. 2. Christ is call|led the lambe, because of his innocencie, and for that, though at this time, he that had not a lambe might take a goat, yet afterward they did altogether use lambe for the Passeover. 3. And to what end should the sheepe and goats bee mingled together in one flocke? what if the lambe were taken out of a flocke, where no goates were, was it therefore unfit for the Passeover. 4. Against this conceit of Burgen. are all both the Hebrew and Latin expositors, and which is most of all, the Scripture it selfe, which willeth the paschall beast to be taken either from the lambs, or of the kids, vers. 5. there are three severall words here used, sheh, which generally signifieth a small beast either lambe or kid; then ebesh, the proper name for a lambe, and ghez a goat: If the meaning were, that a lambe should be taken onely, what needed any mention be made of goats at all?

3. Some were of opinion, that both a lambe and a kid were killed, the one in every private familie upon the tenth day, the other generally of the whole congregation upon the 14. day. But this is contrary to the text, which prescribeth, that every man should take unto him a lambe, sheh, in the singular, not two, but one, and that it should bee kept untill the 14. day at even, neither at this time was there any publike sacrifice, as is shewed before, quest. 8.

4. The opinion of the most then is, that it was simple indifferent, in every Feast of the Passeover, for the Hebrewes to take a lambe, if they had it, or for want thereof a kid: Lyran. Th^ostat. Perer. Fer. Simler▪ But this libertie seemeth not to have beene generall for every Passeover: for Christ who was the substance of this Sacrament is in the new Testament called < in non-Latin alphabet >, the lambe, as Iohn 1.29. 1 Pet. 2.19▪ Apocal. 5.6. which sheweth that the type answering to the bodie and substance was ordinarily of a lambe.

5. Wherefore I thinke rather and therein subscribe unto Iunius, that this was a libertie onely at that time, in that confused estate: but that afterward they used onely to kill a lambe for the Passeover; and this generally is agreed upon among the Jewes themselves. There were divers other rites here prescribed▪ which are peculiar onely to this first Passeover, as the preparing of the lambe 4. dayes before, the striking of the blood upon the doore posts, the eating thereof with their loynes gi^t, and their staves in their hand, for neither are these rites prescribed in the repetition of the Passeover, vers. 14. and Numb. 9. and our Saluour did not use these ri^es at the eating of the Passeover, who in every respect would have observed the paschall rites, if they had beene perpetuall: sic Iⁿ. in Matt. 26.

QUEST. XIII. Why it is added vers. 5. a male.

Vers. 5. A Small beast without blemish, a male. But whereas the usuall reading is, a lambe, &c. a male: ag^ous, < >, as the Latine: Augustine moveth a doubt, why that <...>, *a male, is added, seeing the Latine terme agnus is of the Masculine gender: 1. To thi^o question Augustine < > three answers: First he saith that the Septuagint <...>, a s^oeepe, which is in the Neuter g^onder, and so all the rest will agree; but if it be translated < > a sheepe, < > of the < >, the < > doubt remaineth still: Secondly, he saith it might be read pecus which is in the Neuter gender; but then saith he, Aliud intelligeretur nec servaretur sacramentum; Another thing should be understood, and so the Sacrament or type would not hold: because a lambe best resembleth Christ. Thirdly, he saith that it is expressed, a male, for the more full signification, all things being referred to Christ; and this answer may be well received, because the male signifieth strength and perfection, which fitly agree unto Christ.

2. Some other say, that agnus doth not here signifie the sex but the kind, as many times we say, a man hath oves and vaccas, sheepe and kine, both which words are of the Feminine Gender, and yet our meaning is, that he hath of both sexes: Thostatus. 3. But all this question is moved without cause: for the originall word sheb, signifieth not agnus, a lambe, either male or female, but pecus a small beast, noting not the sex but the kind: and so Vatab. and Iun. translate.

QUEST. XIV. The generall signification of the rites of the Passeover.

Vers. 8. They shall eat the flesh the same night. The rites and ceremonies of the paschall lambe did betoken these things in generall: 1. The great haste and speed that they were to make, which was signified both by the meat which they did eat, it must be rost with fire, which was sooner done than to be boyled or sodden in water: they must eat their bread unleavened, because they had no time to leaven it: neither were they to breake a bone of it, they should have no time to picke the bones, and sucke the marrow. As also by their manner of eating, with their staves in their hand, and shoes on their feet, as readie for their journie; neither were they to carrie any thing forth of the doores, vers. 46. the time would not serve them one to visit another, and to send part thereof to their neighbours. 2. The other thing generallly signified, was that hard servitude, which they had endured in Egypt, which is insinuated by the sower herbs and unsavory leavened bread, and the roasting of the lambe. 3. So then the celebrating of the Passeover, did put them in minde of two great benefits, which they had received, of their deliverance from the plague, when the first borne of Egypt were smitten, and of their freedome from the bondage in Egypt: which later as being the more principall is oftner spoken of in Scripture: and as some have observed it is mentioned 50. severall times: Perer.

QUEST. XV. The particular application of the rites and ceremonies of the paschall lambe.

* For the particular application of these rites: 1. They were to eat the flesh the same night, not the flesh without the sinewes, as some Hebrewes have strictly taken the word, but whatsoever was apt and fit to be eaten, those parts excepted which because of their uncleannesse, and unaptnesse for nourishment use to be cast away, as the guts and entrals; and they were to eat it the same night, after the sunne was set, which was the beginning of the 15. day.

* 2. It must not be eaten rawe: 1. That is, not throughly dressed or prepared, as Rab. Salomon: for they needed not to be admonished, not to eat raw flesh. 2. Oleaster hath here a conceit by himselfe, that a, which is here translated of all raw, should signifie rather broken or cut, of the word nava, and the meaining to be, that they should not cut it in peeces to be boyled. But beside that, both the Chaldee and Sep|tuagint doe interpret rawe and all other interpreters, and Oleaster hath this conceit alone by himselfe: this is expressed afterward, that it should bee dressed whole, with the head, feet and purtenance, vers. 9. neither were they divided into peeces, but as they did eat it, after it was rosted, for they were forbidden to carrie any of the flesh out of the house, vers. 46. Iun. 3. And for two reasons were they commanded to rost it rather than to boile it, both because of more haste, and rosted meat is held to bee stronger food: for in the boyling much of the moisture and substance of the meat goeth out into the water; and they were not to eat it, not thorowly dressed, lest they might in the eating cast it forth againe, Perer. 3. They must eat it also with unleavened bread: * 1. Because it was sooner prepared, as Abraham in haste, caused unleavened cakes to be made, Gen. 18. and so did Lot likewise, Gen. 19. to entertaine the Angels. 2. By this was signified, that they should leave and forsake all the Egyptian superstitions and corruptions, which are understood by leaven, as in the same sense our Saviour biddeth his Disciples to take heed of the leaven of the Pharisies. 3. It is to be considered, that in this first Passeover they were not commanded to eat un|leavened bread seven dayes, neither did they intend so much: but they carried their dow forth unleave|ned, not for any religion in abstaining from leavened bread; but for their haste, as it is expressed, vers. 19. Therefore that prescription to abstaine from leavened bread seven dayes, vers. 14. belonged to the perpe|tuall observation of the pasch: but all the other rites prescribed unto vers. 14. appertained to the first Passeover: Iosephus thinketh that they did eat unleavened bread 30. dayes for want of other, and that they had all that time no more sustenance, than they brought out of Egypt: and eat thereof very sparingly onelly for necessitie: and in remembrance of their penurie and want, they keepe the Feast of unleavened bread eight dayes, lib. 2. antiquit. cap. 5.

In the which speech of Iosephus some things are very probable, as that they lived of the provision which they brought out of Egypt thirtie dayes, untill Manna fell, which was upon the sixteenth day of the second moneth; for in the fifteenth day they came to the wilderness of Sin, where they murmured for meat, and the next day in the morning the Manna was sent, chap. 16.1. and 8. It is also very like that their bread was unleavened all this while, because they made it of that unleavened masse which they brought out of Egypt▪ vers. 39. But it is not like that they kept the Feast of unleavened bread, in remembrance of that penurie and want, for then they should have kept it thirtie dayes; but rather it was kept for a commemoration of a benefit, which they received in their deliverance out of Egypt upon the fifteenth day, and the overthrow of the Egyptians in the red Sea the one and twentieth day, seven dayes after, which was the reason of that observation of the Feast of unleavened bread seven dayes; and beside they are not commanded to keepe it eight dayes, but onely seven.

Vers. 8. With sower herbs shall they eat it. 1. The Latine translator readeth lactu• is agre••ibu•, with wild l•••ice*; so also Rab. Salomon. 2. The Septuagint 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, which are a certaine kind of bitter herbe, whereof Theophrastus writeth, histor. plane. lib. 7. cap. 11. and Plini•. lib. 19. cap. 8. Theodorus Gaza doth sometime interpret it endive, sometime wild lettice. 3. But it seemeth rather generally to be understood of sower herbs, not of any speciall kind: Lyranus: as the Chalde also readeth; so also Vutab. •un. in remembrance of their bitter affliction in Egypt. 4. The Hebrew word is meror•m, bitternesse, which sometime is taken for the bitter sorrow of the mind, as 〈◇〉 . 3.15. and so Oleaster taketh it to be mean•here. But because of the word before going with unleavened bread, it seemeth rather to be understood of some sower or bitter thing, to bee eaten with the flesh: Iun. Perer.

Vers. 9. Both his head and his feet and his purtenance. 1. That is, the whole should be roasted together,* all the parts thereof, for it was not lawfull afterward when it was roasted to carrie it by peecemeale out of the house: Iun. 2. Then this was the order, they first killed the lambe, and did strike the posts of the doore with the blood, then pulled off the skinne and tooke out the inward parts and washed them▪ and put them in againe, and so roasted the lambe whole: Thostat. Which is more like man as Cajetane thinketh, that they onely pulled out the gall and the entrals, but washt not the inwards at all. 3. So this manner of roasting of the paschall lambe was unusuall and unlike all other, for they usually neither rost the feet, with the rest, but cut them off, lest they should bee parched and scorched, no• yet the inward parts, as the heart and liver, but by themselves: but this lambe was commanded to be roasted whole because of the haste, Perer.

Vers. 10. Ye shall reserve nothing to the morning. Of this ceremonie these reasons may be yeelded: * 1. Because this was the perpetuall law of the eucharisticall sacrifices and peace-offerings, of the which sort, this was one, that they should bee eaten the same day, and nothing should remaine till the morning, Levit. 7.15. Perer. 2. Because the holy flesh should not be prophaned nor put to another use, or lest any uncleane person should eat thereof, it was (whatsoever remained of the skin, flesh or bones) to be burned with fire: Iun. 3. This also was prescribed because of their haste, that nothing should be an hindrance or impediment unto them in their journey, Perer. 4. To avoyd superstition, lest they might make an Idoll of the reliques of the lambe, as they did of the brasen Serpent: Simler. This ceremonie seemeth to be peculiar unto this first celebration of the Passeover, Iun.

Vers. 11. Thus shall ye eat it, your loynes girded, &c. 1. This was commanded,* that they should all be in a readinesse for their journey: for so they used to gird their loynes, and take a staffe in their hand, when they were in haste; as Elisha said to his man Gehezi: Gird thy loynes and take my staffe in thine hand, and goe thy way: for they used long garments in those countries, which they had need for more speed to trusse up. 2. They are bid to have their shooes on their feet, not as some thinke, because they used to put off their shooes, when they reposed themselves to their meat, because they would not soile their carpets, and cloths whereon they sat, and from their meat they went to bed, for of old time they used to leane upon their beds, when they did eat: Calvin. But rather because in Egypt they used to sit down, rather than to lie at their meat, as may appeare in Iosephs Feast w^{ch} he made to his brethren, Gen. 43.33. It is rather like that it is understood of these kind of shooes which they used for their journey: Perer. And that they used divers kinds of shooes at home and in their journeys appeareth, in that in one Evangelist, the Apostles are forbid|den to take any shooes for their journey (such as travellers carefully provide) Matth. 10.9. and other per|mitteth them to bee shod with sandales, that is, with light kinde of shooes, Mark. 6.9.* 3. These cere|monies of girding their loynes and putting on their shooes, and taking their staffe in their hand, were pel|culiar onely for that time, for they are not repeated afterward, vers. 14. no•Numb. 9. not observed by our Saviour, when he did eat the Passeover, Matth. 26. who would in no point have transgressed the law: Iun. 4. But here it is a question, whether they were also required to stand at the eating of the Passeover, Pererius thinketh that this was none of the ceremonies enjoined, because our Saviour Christ did sit at the Passeover, who did most exactly keepe the law. Contra. 1. The judgement of Philo is somewhat to be credited concerning the rites of the Hebrewes, who, as Pererius citeth him,* thinketh that they stood at the Passeover: lib. de sacrif. Cain & Abel. 2. The other rites doe shew as much, the girding of their loynes, and the holding of the staffe in their hands, and the reason added, because they did eat in haste▪ but he that standeth is more readie to goe, than he that sitteth, and he which sitteth hath no need to stay his hand upon a staffe. 3. Beside, the Apostle saying, Stand therefore and your loynes girded about, Ephes. 6.13. seemeth to allude to this ceremonie. 4. And though our Saviour did sit at the Passeover, this sheweth not that the Hebrewes did not then stand, but that it was no perpetuall ceremonie, onely pre|scribed for that time, as the rest belonging to their habite, which were likewise omitted by our Salviour. 5. It is the opinion also of the Hebrewes, that they were first to stand in the eating of the Passe|over, in token of their servitude in Egypt, for so servants use to eat their meat standing. And Simlerus is of opinion, that Christ first stood till the Passeover was eaten, and then sate downe at the rest of the Sup|per: for it was lawfull after the eating of the Passeover to use other meats to make an end of the Feast, as our Saviour did; and as the Christians used afterward after the receiving of the Lords Supper to have their Feasts of love. But it appeareth to be otherwise by the Evangelist, that our Saviour did sit at the ealting of the Passeover, as Matth. 26.20. When the even was come he sate downe with the twelve: wherefore it is not otherwise to be judged, but that standing at the Passeover was a rite onely prescribed at this time.

QUEST. XVI. Whence the name pasch is derived.

Vers. 11. IT is the pasch of Iehovah. 1. This is neither a Chalde word, as Philo thinketh, who erroneously maketh the Hebrew and Chalde all one. 2. Neither is the Hebrew word pascha, as Nazianzen, or phas•k, as Theodoret, but pesach, which signifieth a passing over. 3. Neither as some thinke doth it come of the Greeke word 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 to suffer, as though the pasch should signifie the passion of Christ; which opinion Augustine confuteth in Psal. 68. which application Nazianzen misliketh not, using these reasons, Cum usus tam recepisset &c. assentientibus ipsis auribus, utpote sanctiori nomini; Vse hath received it, it hath a good sound to the eares, and it seemeth a more holy name. Perer. 4. But howsoever the Christians pasch may be very well so called in that sense, yet it is evident that the Septuagint reading 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 derived it from the Hebrew pasch, which name is better retained, than the translation thereof, transitus, the Passeover, because the Apostle readeth 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, our pasch Christ is sacrificed for us, 1 Cor. 6.7. Iun. Vatab.

QUEST. XVII. Wherefore it was called the pasch or passeover.

NOW it was called the Lords pasch. 1. Not because of the passing or going over of the Israelites through the red Sea, as August. seemeth to thinke: quòd tunc primum pascha celebravit populus Dei quando ex Egypto fugientes mare rubrum transierunt, because then first the people of God kept the pasch when they fled out of Egypt, and passed over the red Sea, Tract. 55. in Evang. Iohan. For the people kept the pasch, and it was so called before they came to the red Sea. 2. Neither as Philo thinketh, because it was migrationis publicae festivitas, a Feast of the publike passage of the Israelites out of Egypt, as Nazianzen also thinketh. 3. But the reason is given in this place why it is called the pasch: for I will passe thorow the land of Egypt the same night, and smite all the first borne: it was therefore so called of the passing of the Angell over the houses of the Hebrewes, and sparing them, Perer. 4. But it is here to be noted, that there are two words used that signifie to passe over, pasach and ghabar, but that betokeneth a passing over in mercie to spare, the other a passing over the Egyptians houses in judgement to smite, Simler.

QUEST. XVIII. The divers significations of the word pasch.

NOW the word pasch is taken to signifie three things in Scripture. 1. It betokeneth the paschall Lambe it selfe, as 2 Chron. 35.11. They slew the pasch; and vers. 13. they roasted the pasch at the fire. 2. It is taken for the solemnitie it selfe of the pasch, for the whole seven dayes of unleavened bread, as Act. 3. then were the dayes of unleavened bread, then it followeth vers. 4. intending after the pasch to bring him (i. Peter) forth to the people. 3. It is used also to signifie the very sacrifices, which were offred at the pasch, as Deut. 16.2. Thou shalt offer the pasch unto the Lord thy God, of thy sheepe and bullocks. Perer. 4. But here it is taken in a divers sense from any of these; it is called the pasch, because it signified and re|presented unto them the Lords passing over, as the next words do shew in the 12. verse. Genevens. So cir|cumcision is called the Lords covenant, Genes. 17.13. My covenant shall be in your flesh, being onely a Sa|cramentall signe and seale thereof.

QUEST. XIX. What things are generally commanded concerning the keeping of the day of unleavened bread.

Vers. 15. SEven dayes shall yee eat unleavened bread. 1. The Hebrewes had foure kinds of ceremoniall observations, the first their sacrifices wherein they offred bullocks, sheepe, goats, lambs, calves: the second were the holy things, which belonged to the Sanctuary, as the vessels, curtaines, Priestly gar|ments; as also to this sort belonged their festivals and solemnities: the third sort was of their Sacraments, which were circumcision and the paschall lambe: the fourth more certaine ceremoniall rites, which be|longed to the cleansing and sanctitie of their persons, as in their washings, and legall purgations, in the choice of meats and garments, and such like. This observation of unleavened bread, belongeth to the fourth sort, for it was a principall member and part of the paschall solemnitie, Pererius. 2. Foure things are here prescribed, concerning the eating of unleavened bread: First how long they should observe it, for seven dayes: secondly, of the speciall preeminence and solemnitie of two dayes above the rest, the first and the seventh, with the manner how they should keepe them, in abstaining from all worke; saving about their meat: thirdly the danger and punishment of him that should not observe this rite: lastly the cause, to put them in mind of their deliverance out of Egypt, Simler.

QUEST. XX. Why they were enjoined to eat unleavened bread.

THE reasons of this observation of unleavened bread were these: 1. They then of necessitie were forced to eat unleavened bread, because they had no time to lay leaven, as is shewed, vers. 39. Calvin. Perer. 2. But afterward this ceremonie was enjoined to put them in remembrance of their deliverance out of Egypt, when for haste they could not leaven their bread, Simler. 3. As also to call to their remembrance, the great power of God in bringing them out of Egypt, when they had no provision for their journey▪ for when men are best provided of secundarie meanes, Gods grace is more obscured, Calvin. 4. As also to put them in mind of sodaine deliverance, even before they had thought, that God made such speed to deliver them, that they had no time to provide bread: for God is more readie to bestow his benefits, th^o we are to aske them: Pellican. 5. This also did put them in mind of their bitter and unpleasant servitude in Egypt, as unleavened bread is not so pleasant to the taste, as leavened, Calvin. And so God did deliver them from their former sorrow. Vatab. 6. It also did move them to consider of Gods providence, who nourished them 30. dayes (even untill Manna came) with that provision of unleavened bread & dow which they brought out of Egypt: Iosephus. For like as the Manna ceased when they did eat of the fruit of the land, so when their provision was done, it is like that Manna came. Pererius.

QUEST. XXI Why seven dayes are limited for the keeping, of the Feast of unleavened bread.

BUT why they were commanded to eat unleavened bread seven dayes, the reason is not; 1. Either because a finite number is taken for an indefinite, as the number of seven is sometime used in Scripture; and so these seven dayes did bring to their minde those thirtie dayes wherein they did eat unleavened bread. Ioseph. Perer. 2. Neither doe these seven dayes so much signifie; that at all times they should remember their deliverance even all the yeere long. Pellican. 3. But this is more likely to have beene the reason thereof, because there were so many dayes from the going out of Egypt, untill the overthrow of the Egyptians in the red sea, untill when, their deliverance was not perfect, nor they wholly out of danger, for then the Lord is said to have saved or delivered Israel from the hand of the Egyptian, chap. 14.30. Iun. And that this destruction of the Egyptians in the red sea followed seven dayes after the going of Israel out of Egypt, shall be shewed in the 26. quest.

QUEST. XXIII. Whether the 14. or 15. day were the first of the seven.

CONCERNING the number of these dayes of unleavened bread: 1. Neither is Iosephus opinion to bee received, who saith, Festa per octo dies celebramus quos vocamus azymorum: We doe celebrate the Feast eight dayes, which we call of unleavened bread: for the direct words of the text are against him, vers. 15. Seven dayes shall yee eat unleavened bread. 2. Nor yet is Rupertus reason any thing worth, because they did begin to eat unleavened bread on the 14. day at even, and so from the 14. day till the 21. day, numbring the first day, there are eight dayes: for the 14. day was ended, when at eve after the sunne set they began to eat unleavened bread, and then entred the 15. day: wherefore it is said, Levit. 23.6. In the 15. day of this moneth shall be the Feast of unleavened bread, the 15. day then was the first, and not the fourteenth. 3. Wherefore according to the words of the text we hold that there were onely seven dayes of unleavened bread kept: as is evident Exod. 12. Levit. 23. Numb. 28. Deut. 26. And whereas Rupertus alleageth this text, the first day shall bee holy unto you, likewise the eight day shall be aequè venerabilis, as well observed, no such place can be found: but the contrary; in the first day shall be an holy assemblie, likewise in the seventh day, chap. 5.16. So that it is to be wondred at how Rupertus was so much overseene to alleage a text no where extant. 4. And as there were not more than seven dayes, so neither was there lesse: For whereas it is said, Deut. 16.8. Six dayes shalt thou eat unleavened bread, and the 7. day shall be an holy assemblie: the seventh day is not excluded, as being none of the seven dayes of unleavened bread, but is named by it selfe as being a principall and solemne day among the rest. Perer.

QUEST. XXIII. Why he which did not eat unleavened bread was to be cut off.

NOW as touching the festivall dayes of unleavened bread in particular: first there ariseth a question about the first day of the seven; whether the 14. or 15. day should be the first. 1. Here we refuse the opinion of Rupertus seene before, that they began to eat unleavened bread upon the 14. day of the moneth: for then there should be eight dayes of unleavened bread, and not seven onely, as the Scripture saith: and where it is said, vers. 18. In the first moneth, and the fourteenth day of the moneth at even, yee shall eat unleavened bread: there the even is joyned with the fourteenth day, not as a part thereof, but as immediatly following, for then in just account began the fifteenth day, the first of unleavened bread, Levit. 23.6. 2. Neither doe we here receive Thostatus opinion, who thinketh that the even when they began to eat unleavened bread, was part of the fourteenth day, but because it was but a small part, it may be counted with the 15. day, and so much was taken out of the 21. day, for before Sunne set they began to eat unleavened bread. Contra. 1. The evening began after Sunne set, and then the day was ended, that time then that followed was part of the 15. day, and not of the 14. and that the evening began after the Sunne went downe is evident, because betweene the first evening, which was before the Sunne set, and the latter evening, at and after the Sunne set the lambe was to be killed, as is shewed before, quest. 10. 2. That before Sunne set on the 21. day they brought leaven into their houses cannot be shewed, but the contrarie rather, that till the even of the 21. day, which was after Sunne, they were to eat unleavened bread, till about the same time when they began. 3. Therefore we thinke, that not the 14. day, but the 15. was the first of unleavened bread, for these reasons: 1. Because otherwise there should be 8. dayes of unleavened bread, and not seven. 2. Iosephus saith, that the Jewes kept no festivall day without burnt offrings, and ceasing from labour: lib. 3. antiquit. cap. 15. but not on the 14. but the 15. day were they commanded to abstaine from worke, vers. 16. 3. The same day when they began to eat unleavened bread the Lord brought them out of Egypt, vers. 17. but they went out not upon the 14. day, it was the morrow after the Passeover when they went out, Numb. 33.3. for upon the 14. day, which ended at Sunne set, they did not goe out, seeing about midnight following, the first borne of the Egyptians were slaine before the Israelite departed. Perer.

QUEST. XXIV. In what sense the first day of the seven was called holy.

Vers. 16. IN the first day shall be an holy assemblie. 1. It is called an holy day, because it was sequestred and set apart from all prophane use, and consecrated as peculiar unto God. In which sense, both certaine places, as the sanctuarie, and vessels, as they which belonged to the Sanctuarie, and certaine persons, as the first borne (which were afterward redeemed) were holy and consecrate unto God. 2. This day was holy in three respects: First, because they were not to prophane it with any bodily worke: secondly, because there were peculiar sacrifices appointed for this first day of the seven, as two bullocks, one ramme, seven lambs of a yeere old, Numb. 23. Thirdly, because upon this day, as likewise on other festivals, they fared better and put on their festivall robes: as Nehemias prescribed to be done in another festivall day, chap. 8.10. Goe and eat the fat, and drinke the sweet, and send part unto them, for whom none is prepared, for this day is holy unto our Lord. 3. But here is to be observed a difference betweene the rest of this day, and of other festivals: upon this day, though all other worke be forbidden, yet it was lawfull to prepare their meat and drinke, and so it was lawfull also upon the Feasts of Pentecost, and of the Feast of Tabernacles, but upon the Sabbath it was not lawfull to doe so much: as they were forbidden to gather Manna upon the Sabbath, chap. 16.5.23.19. and it was not lawfull to kindle a fire upon the Sabbath day for their necessarie use, Exod. 35.3. Iun. But if this first festivall day did fall out upon the Sabbath then they were to rest therein simply from all labour, Perer. 4. It is also called holy in respect of the holy convocation, because the people were therein to bee called together to attend the service of God, leaving all other works, Iun.

QUEST. XXV. Of the second solemne day of the pasch.

COncerning the second day of the paschall solemnitie, this was peculiar to that day, that therein they brought a sheafe of the first fruit of their harvest unto the Lord; this was the morrow after the Sab|bath, Levit. 23.11. Wherein is to be considered: 1. That then all their harvest was not ripe in Palestin▪ but onely they culled out certaine principall eares, and out of the forwardest grounds: for these first fruits the Hebrewes hold to have come all out of the tribe of Nepthaly. 2. They were not eares of wheat, which was not ripe till Pentecost, seven weekes after, Exod. 34.21. but eares of barlie which was first ripe. 3. Nei|ther were they fully ripe and hardned, for they did drie the eares at the fire, and then rubd out the corne, Levit. 2.14. 4. The word Sabbath doth not here signifie the Sabbath which was the seventh day, but it is taken for any festivall day of rest, and may here bee translated, the morrow after the rest: Iun. because upon the first day of the pasch they were commanded to rest. 5. This they did in presenting their first fruits unto God both for remembrance of that time, when they came out of Egypt, which was in the moneth Abib, the moneth of new fruits, as also to stirre them to bee thankfull unto God, and to acknow|ledge him to be the giver and author of their abundance and plentie, Pererius.

QUEST. XXVI. Whether the seventh day were more solemne than the first.

Vers. 16. ALso in the seventh day shall bee an holy assemblie. Here the solemnitie of the first and seventh day seeme to be alike. But Levit. 23.8. the Latine translator readeth thus, Dies septimus erit celebrior & sanctor: The seventh day shall bee more solemne and holy. Unto this objection divers an|swers are framed: 1. It is called holier, because this day is by speciall words called a day of restraint or of a solemne assemblie, Deut. 16.8. Wherein it being the last day of the Feast, there was a great assemblie of the people gathered together to praise God. So in the same sense the last day of the Feast of Tabernacles is called the great day, Ioh. 7.37. 2. Others answer that it was greater, not in comparison of the first day, but of the other comming betweene: Lyrans. 3. But the best answer is, that in the originall there is no degree of comparison: but as it is said of the first day, there shall be therein an holy convocation, so it is said of the seventh; Th••e shall bee an holy assemblie or convocation: Perer. So here a question is moved questionlesse and needlesse. 4. Now the reason why the first and the seventh day were more solemne than the rest, may be this, because on the first day of the Passeover they went out of Egypt, and on the seventh day they passed through the red sea, and these two dayes in remembrance of these two great benefits, they kept with greater solemnitie: this generally is the opinion of the Jewes, and the reasons to confirme it may be these two: first, because as in the first day there was an holy convocation, so also was there on the last, when Moses and all Israel gave solemne thanks unto God, Exod. 15. And beside the manner and order of their travell agreeth thereunto: for on the 15. day they came to Succoth, on the 17. to Ethom to Pi|hahiroth, or the mouth of Chiroth, on the 18. day there they staid, where Pharaoh overtooke them the 20. and the night following they went over the red Sea, Iunius.

QUEST. XXVII. Why the seventh day is called a day of restraint, Deut. 16.8.

BUT whereas it is said, Deut. 16.8. on the seventh day (of the paschall solemnitie) shall be a restraint o• solemne assemblie, where the Latine translator readeth, collecta, there shall be a collection▪ here ariseth a question about the meaning of these words: 1. They which defend this translation, some doe ex|pound it of the collection, which was made toward the expences of the temple: Thomas. But against this sense both Lyrans his reason may bee urged, because the morrow after the pasch it was lawfull for the people to returne home, Deut. 16.7. and therefore it is not like that collection was made after their del|parture: as also Paulus Burgensis sheweth out of the sentence of the Hebrewes, that collection was used to be made for the temple throughout all Palestina upon the first day of the twelfth moneth: Pererius also alleageth that place, 2 Chron. 7.8. that Salomon, Fecit die octava collectam: Made a coll•ction upon the eight day: but (saith he) it is not like that so rich a King as Salomon made any collection of mony: Therefore Pererius interpreteth it of the solemne collection and gathering together of the people upon that day, to give God thanks solemnely and publikely for their mightie and glorious deliverance out of Egypt. But all this businesse will soone be at an end, if the vulgar Latine interpretation be refused, as not so agreeable to the originall word, which signifieth rather a restraint, as even now shall be shewed.

2. The Septuagint also are as wide, which doe translate the word 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, the going out, because then the Feast was at an end: but this is not the meaning of the word, though it be true that then the people were dismissed, as Salomon upon the eight solemne day of the Feast of Tabernacles sent away the people, 1 King. 8.66. having kept that day as a time of restraint, 2 Chron. 7.7. at even he gave them leave to depart; for so these places are reconciled.*

3. Therefore the meaning rather is, that it was a time of restraint, the people were kept and restrained from worke upon that day: so the word ghatzersignifies to forbid, or restraine: Lyran. Montan. Iun. And though the first day also were a day of restraint, wherein they were forbidden all worke, save about their meat, yet it seemeth that this was the greater day, being the conclusion and determination of the Feast; as these two are joyned together, the last and great day of the Feast, Iohn. 7.37. as i• shewed before.

QUEST. XXVIII. Why he which did not eat unleavened bread was to be cut off.

Vers. 19. THat soule shall be cut off from the congregation of Israel. 1. Some doe expound this onely of the capitall punishment, that such as neglected or contemned this observation of unleavened bread should be put to death: and so is this phrase taken, Exod. 30.33. and 31. vers. 14. and in other places▪ Simler. Piscat. But though it be not denied that in some places this phrase to bee cut off from Israel, signifieth onely the taking away of the life of the offender, as in the places given in instance, yet alwayes it is not so taken: for Genes. 17.14. it signifieth the cutting off from the societie and the communion of the Saints, both in this life and in the next, as may appeare by the reason there given, because he hath transgressed my covenant. 2. Neither is it referred onely to the spirituall punishment, as Osiander expoundeth this place by that of the Apostle, that he which eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh his owne damnation, 1 Cor. 11.29. for under the law the punishment of death was used in the like transgressions in the contempt of the law: as for violating the Sabbath. 3. Therefore this sentence pronounced against such contemners includeth a penaltie both upon the bodie and the soule: and of this strict severitie two reasons may be given: the one from the authoritie of the law-maker: God that gave us both bodies and soules, and all other good things beside, hath power to make lawes both to binde the bodie and the soule: and the contempt of his Commandements is worthie of capitall punishment: the other reason is taken from the constitution it selfe: the eating of unleavened bread did both call to their remembrance the benefit of their deliverance received, and was a type also of their deliverance hoped for in Christ, as the Apostle applieth it, 1 Cor. 5. The contempt of this rite then did both bewray an unthankfull heart for the benefit received, and an unbeleeving heart for the benefit of salvation expected, and so was a renouncing of God and his religion: Iun. in Analys.

QUEST. XXIX. Why none uncircumcised were admitted to the pasch.

43. NO stranger shall eat thereof. 1. Such as either were not of the posteritie of those which were delivered out of Egypt, or were strangers from the faith and religion of Israel: Iun. 2. All such must be circumcised as well servants and bondmen, being strangers, or such as were free strangers, and sojourned among the Israelites, with whom mercenary men and hirelings are joyned, because they were in some sort free: Iun. 3. These two reasons may be given why none uncircumcised person should bee partaker of the Passeover: because the circumcision was a seale of their profession▪ which they that were strangers from Israel had no part nor interest in the mysteries and rites thereof: and seeing the pasch was a commemoration of the deliverance of the circumcised people, they who belonged not to that people, had nothing to doe with the commemoration: Perer. 4. And whereas the stranger is charged to circumcise all the males that belonged unto him, vers. 48. this must be understood of such strangers as sojourned among the Hebrewes, and had their families there; otherwise it sufficed for themselves alone to be circumcised: Simler. 5. Now in that strangers being circumcised were admitted to the pasch, it sheweth that it had a manifest reference to the Messiah: for the stranger for all his circumcision gained no part nor inheritance among the tribes: he was not counted as one of the seed of Abraham: therefore if such received no temporall privilege, they hoped, in being thus joyned to the people of God, to be partakers of their spirituall blessings: Calvin. 6. But where it will be objected, that whereas there were none circumcised in the wilderness for the space of 40. yeeres, Iosh. 5. and yet the Passeover was there kept, that it should seeme, that some that were not circumcised did eat the Passeover: the answer may readily bee made to this objection: that the Passeover was kept but once in the wilderness, •n the second yeere of their departure out of Egypt, Numb. 1.1. and 19. & all that came out of Egypt were circumcised, Iosh. 5.5▪ so that onely the infants of a yeere or two old were uncircumcised, who did not receive the Passeover, Perer.

QUEST. XXX. Whether the servant might be compelled to be circumcised.

Vers. 44. EVery servant that is bought for mony, when thou hast circumcised him, &c. Here a question is moved, whether the Hebrewes might force the servants against their will to be circumcised. 1. Thostatus thinketh they might compell their servants and bondmen to be circumcised▪ but not the free men; and so the text seemeth to make a difference: so also Calvin▪ But this is not like: for though their masters had power over their bodies, yet could they not force their minde and will: as now no man is to be compelled to bee bapti•ed, so neither then to be circumcised: Perer. The children indeed of bond|men and strangers, which were <...> circumcised: Gen. 17.12. But there was a divers reason for those that <◇> of yeeres of discretion: neither doth the <◇> make any difference for circumcision, betweene the bond and free strangers for all strangers there was one law, vers. 49. 2. Cajetane thinketh that <...> bee considered in circumcision, the outward signe in the flesh, and the inward profession therein signified, that the servants might bee forced to take upon them the one, but not the other. But as now a man cannot bee forced to take the Sacrament of Baptisme, and leave the profession of Christianitie, for the one dependeth upon the other; so neither then could the outward signe be severed from the inward profession: Perer. 3. Cajetane hath yet another an|swer, he thinketh it was sufficient for the servant, if hee did not resist, but suffered himselfe to be circumcised, but the free stranger was to shew his desire to be circumcised. But no such difference appeareth in the text, it is but his conjecture. 4. Therefore a• it is expressed of the free stranger, if he will observe the Passeover of the Lord, let him circumcise: hee must be willing to the one as well as to the other: so it is to be understood of the servant, that if he will eat the Passeover, hee must be willing to bee circumcised, his will must stand to the one as well as to the other: Osiander. Perer.

QUEST. XXXI. Why none of the flesh was to be carried out of the house.

Vers. 45. IN one house shall it be eaten, thou shalt carrie none of the flesh out of the house. 1. Lyranus judgeth this to bee the cause of this precept, for that they were not at leisure one to visit another, because of the businesse about their journey: for they did one visit another, when they were commanded, if the houshold were too little for a lambe, to take their neighbour. 2. But rather these reasons may bee yeelded thereof, to represent unto them the state of the people dispersed before, and now gathered in one: and because they were to roste the lambe whole, no part thereof was to be divided: Iun. As also they are forbidden to carrie any part abroad, lest the flesh should bee prophaned, therefore what remained was to be burned: Perer. 3. This sheweth that without the Church of God is no salvation, as the lambe was not to be eaten without the house, Osiander.

QUEST. XXXII. Why a bone of the paschall lambe should not be broken.

Vers. 46. NEither shall yee breake a bone thereof. 1. As this shewed their present haste, that their leisure served them not to stay by it, to eat the flesh, and to examine the bones: Cajetan. Calvin. 2. So the special signification of it was to be a type of Christ, who had not a bone broken by Gods singullar providence, whereas the theeves bones were broken, as the Evangelist applieth it, Ioh. 19. 3. But their collection is too curious that doe thus interpret it, that Christs vertue (signified by his bones) decaieth not, though we dayly eat his flesh. 4. It may also in some sort be applied to the members of Christ, that though they suffer many troubles in the world, yet their bones are not broken, nothing shall hinder their salvation: as the Apostle saith; We are persecuted but not forsaken; we are cast downe, but perish not. 2 Cor. 4. 19. Osiander.

QUEST. XXXIII. What rites of the Passeover might be dispensed with, and what not.

Vers. 24. YE shall observe for an ordinance. The question is, whether the Hebrewes were strictly tied un|to the observation of the pasch, as it is here prescribed: for the solution whereof these things are to be considered. 1. Divers rites were injoynd in the celebration of the first pasch, which were not perpetuall, such was the preparing of the lambe foure dayes before, Perer. And the indifferent choyce of a lambe or kid: Iun. in Analys. Likewise their girding of the loynes, eating with a staffe in their hand, their standing, were onely signes of readinesse for that time: which usages and rites, they did not hold them|selves tied unto: insomuch that it was an ancient tradition among them afterward to sit at the Passeover, in signe of their deliverance obtained: so that our Saviour sitting at the eating of the pasch is found to be no transgressor of the law: Iun. in Matth. 26. 20. And so generally the rites of the first Passeover are set downe unto the 14. verse of this chapter, and afterward the perpetuall law of the pasch is prescribed. 2. In the perpetuall observation of the pasch, some things might be dispensed withall, some not upon necessarie occasion, the generall time of the moneth they might keepe it in the second moneth if any were uncleane, or in a long journey, Numb. 9. 10, 11. As it was practised in Hezeki^hs time, 2 Chron. 30. 1, 2. The King with his Princes consulted to keepe the Passeover upon the 14. day of the second moneth because the Priests were not sanctified, neither were the people gathered together to Jerusalem. But concerning the particular time, namely of the day, it could not be altered, but still they kept the pasch upon the 14. day of the moneth, though the moneth were changed, as is evident in these places before recited: therefore the opinion of them hath no probabilitie, that thinke our Saviour Christ did eat his pasch upon the 15. day at even. So likewise the place, where they should keepe the pasch was necessarie, even where the Tal|bernacle and Sanctuarie was, the place which the Lord should chuse, as Deut. 16. 6. for all their oblations and sacrifices must be brought thither, Levit. 17. 4. and Deut. 12. throughout the chapter. And this is the cause why the Jewes to this day use no sacrifices nor ablations, Perer.

QUEST. XXXIV. What ceremonies the Iewes doe hold themselves tied unto at this day.

BUt here further it will be demanded, what legall observations might be kept out of that place where the Sanctuarie was: •. Here the Rabbines doe use this distinction, that such legall rites, as had ne|cessarie relation to the place of the Sanctuarie, as their sacrifices, •blations, tithes, offerings, which were all to be brought to the place, which the Lord should chuse, such could not be observed in any other place• as it is commanded, Deut. 12.13. 〈...〉 offerings in every place which thou 〈...〉 ▪ And in the same chapter vers. 17. Thou mayst not eat within thy 〈...〉 of thy 〈...〉 the first borne if thy 〈...〉 observe wheresoever, and to this day they doe, as the dayes of unleavened bread, circumcision, abstinence from certaine meats, fasting, resting upon the festivals, and all their judicials they hold themselves bound unto, if they had Judges of their owne. So they keepe their festivals in part, in respect of resting from worke, but in part they keepe them not, because the sacrifices and oblations, which were prescribed upon their Feast dayes, are necessarily omitted, being limited to a certaine place. 3. Iustinus Martyr hereupon very well collecteth, that seeing the Lord did tie the legall sacrifices to the place of his sanctuarie, which he did foresee in time should bee destroyed, his intent also was that all such sacrifices and ceremonies should cease at the time appointed: Dialog. cum Triphon. And if the Jewes had any grace to consider this, they might thinke that the wrath of God is upon them▪ and that they worship him not aright, seeing that they are deprived both of the Temple, Priesthood and sacrifices: so that their case is harder now than it was in Egypt, where they did eat the Passeover, which now it is not lawfull for them to doe.

QUEST. XXXV. Whether the sprinkle were of Hysope or Rosemary, or some other thing.

Vers. 22. Take a branch of Hyssope. 1. Some have taken this for mosse, as Tremelius and Iunius in their first edition▪ because, 1 King. 4.32. it is said to spring out of the wall, and is set against the Cedar, the tallest tree, as the vilest plant. But Iunius hath reversed his first opinion, and taketh it for Hysope: because comparisons are not of unlike things, but of the same kind: the Cedar as being the highest tree that groweth upon a bodie, is set against the Hysope, which is one of the smallest things that riseth upon a stalke or shaft, as the bodie thereof. 2. Piscator doth thinke it to be Rosemarie, both because for the divers branches it is fittest to sprinkle with, and it delighteth to grow in stonie places; and beside, that which the Evangelist calleth Hyssope, wherewith they reached unto Christ the sponge of vineger, Ioh. 19.29. is in Matth. called a reed, Matth. 27.48. which best agreeth to Rosemarie, which hath a stiffe stalke like a reed. Contra. All this here alleaged agreeth to the Hyssope, as well as to Rosemarie: for it hath many sprigges apt to disperse and sprinkle water; it groweth also upon walls, and in those countries it ariseth up to great bignesse, that the stalke thereof might well serve to make a reed of to reach up the sponge; so the mustard seed in Palestina groweth to a tree: and Herodotus saith, that he hath seene milium, millet, which is a kind of wheate in Babylon, of the bignesse of a tree: Beza annotat. in Matth. 27.48. 3. Though it be no great matter, whether it bee taken for Hyssope or Rosemarie, for the word generally signifieth such herbes as are good against rheumes and fluxes, and so it comprehendeth as well Hyssope as origanum, marjeram, saturai, savor•e, thyme &c. and this libanotis, rosemarie, among the rest: yet I thinke with Iunius, that it most properly signifieth Hyssope: both because of the similitude of the name (eezob) the consent of interpreters, the Chaldee, Septuagint with the rest, and most of all, the Apostles authoritie, Heb. 9.19. who calleth it Hyssope, having relation to the ceremonie, Numb. 19. of sprinkling blood with Hyssope.

QUEST. XXXVI. Whence they tooke the blood which they laid upon the doore posts.

And dip it in the blood that is in the basen. Because the Latine translator readeth, in the blood that is on the threshold, or by the doore: Augustin moveth a qu•stio•, what blood that should be.

1. He will not have it so to be taken, as though the lambe were killed hard by the doore: but that the bloud was saved in some vessell, and set by the doore to be there in a readinesse, to sprinkle upon the doore, quest. 48. in Exod. hereunto subscribeth Perer: 2. But what need so many superfluous questions, seeing in the originall, it is, in the basen, not on the threshold or doore? all this labour might bee spared in seeking such shifts to excuse the oversights and scapes of the vulgar Latine text: what though therein it follow the Septuagint? yet the originall is of more authoritie than both, according to the which all other translations must be corrected.

QUEST. XXXVII. Why they are forbidden to goe forth of their doores.

Vers. 22. LEt none of you goe out of the doore of his house. 1. This was injoynd them, lest not trusting to Gods promises, and being incredulous, they should mingle themselves with the Egyptians, and so perish with them: Simler. 2. God could have made a separation betweene them as well abroad, as in the house, but thus the Lord would have them to thinke, that they should bee preserved under the safeguard of the bloud of the lambe: but seeing the bloud of a beast was but a simple meane to defend them from Gods wrath, the speciall intendment of this ceremonie was, that they should with the eyes of faith looke unto that unspotted lambe, the shedding of whose bloud should make a perfect attonement betweene God and them, Calvin. 3. And thus God in commanding them to keepe the house, and so to be free from danger, dealeth with that rude people human • more & modo: after an humane manner: Pellic. 4. And beside, considering that the darknesse is the Minister of Gods wrath: as Abraham put his enemies to flight in the night, Gen. 14. S•nacheribs host was smitten by the Angell in the night; Babylon was delivered into the hand of the Persians in the night: the Lord would also in the night execute his judgments upon the Egyptians: and have his people expect their deliverance in the morning, that they should not seeme to steale away in the night, but to goe forth with an high hand, Borrh.

QUEST. XXXVIII. How the ordinance of the Passeover is said to be for ever.

Vers. 24. YE shall observe it for an ordinance for ever. But seeing that now this paschall solemnitie with all the rites thereof, are now ceased and determined, the question is, how they are commanded to keepe them for ever. 1. Augustine giveth this solution, that the pasch is said to be eternall, not in respect of the signe and outward ceremonie, but of the thing signified, which is Christ the paschall lambe, whom the elect shall enjoy for ever: quest. 43. in Exod. But Thostatus against this answereth, that some legall rites are prescribed to be kept for ever, whereunto nothing in the new law is answerable that should make them perpetuall or eternall, as the seven dayes of unleavened bread, the feast of tabernacles, of blowing the trumpets, and such like. 2. Therefore he findeth out this solution: that is said to be eternall, which continueth so long, as agreeth to the nature thereof to be kept: now seeing it is against the nature of ceremonies to be kept, when the bod•e is come, in this sense they might be said to be perpetuall, though determined in the Messiah. 3. But further he saith that in Scripture the terme of perpetuall and eternity, is taken sometime not for that time which hath no end, but for a long season: as for the terme of 50. yeeres, untill the Jubile returned: for so the servant whose eare the master boared thorow, is said to serve his master for ever, Exod. 21.6. So all the time of the servitude of the law may be said to bee for ever, untill the true and perfect Jubile began in Christ. 4. Or it is said to continue for ever, because the Hebrewes should not intermit the pash, or change it by their authoritie; but this eternitie or perpetuall should not prescribe unto God, but that he might change those rites at his pleasure: August. quaest. 43. 5. Some take the time of eternitie to be understood for an indefinite terme, whereof there is no limitation set: and so because those ceremonies were to continue a long time, even fiftene hundred yeeres, untill the comming of the Messiah, it is said to bee an ordinance for ever: Perer. 6. But there is another sense of this word, which I preferre before the rest: a thing is said to be eternall in respect of the subject spoken of: as that which continueth all a mans life time is said to be for ever, as the Prophet Dauid saith, I will sing the mercies of God for ever; Psalm. 89 1. that is, as long as I live. And Anna promised that Samuel should abide before the Lord for ever, 1 Sam. 1.22. So these ceremonies are said to bee an ordinance for ever, in respect of that people who are injoynd to observe them, during that policy and common-wealth, and as long as the sanctuarie should stand: and so in another phrase they are commanded to keepe it through their generations: But now seeing their politicke state is dissolved, their temple destroyed, where these solemnities were to bee kept; that terme of perpetuities by the comming of the Messiah, who hath brought a new law, is expired. Sic fer Pellican, Osiander Piscator.

Of the mysticall application of the Passeover and the rites thereof.

QUEST. XXXIX. Of the divers applications of the sense of Scripture.

WE must first understand, that there are two generall wayes of interpreting Scripture: first, there is the simple interpretation, and then the compound sense. The first is of two sorts, either concerning the fact or thing done, and this is called the historicall sense: or the reason or cause thereof, which the fathers termed aitiologia, the shewing of the reason. The compound interpretation or sense is likewise twofold: either in comparing of the words with the thing signified, divers and differing from the words, which is called an allegorie, such are the parables of Christ, as of the sower, where the meaning is not according to the words of one that soweth seed in the ground, but of the spirituall seed of Gods word sowne in the heart: or else in comparing the things historically signified, with the things typically shadowed forth: as the serpent signified Christ, and is called of the fathers the anagogicall sense: Iun. in Analys.

Now concerning the historicall and literall sense of the Passeover, it hath beene hitherto opened: now I will proceed to the mysticall and allegoricall sense. If this first be observed, that these are not properly divers senses, but divers accommodations and applications of one generall sense: And besides, that it is not lawfull for every Interpreter according to his owne imagination, to draw, or rather wrest the Scripture into allegories, but that therein we must follow the direction and warrant of the Spirit. Now I will descend to the particular mysteries, which are fitly gathered from the paschall lambe, with the rites thereof.

QUEST. XL. Of the particular mysticall applications of the paschall Lambe, and the rites thereof.

First concerning the time when this paschall lambe was to be slaine, which was in the first Moneth on the 14. day,* in the full of the Moone; and at even: these speciall references are made to Christ, the true paschall lambe: 1. That as then the light overcommeth darknesse, and the dayes begin to be longer than the night, so then Christ brought light to the world, the light of righteousness, which chaseth away the darknesse of our sinnes: Rupert. 2. As in March, all things began to revive and spring againe, so Christ brought life and refreshing to the world: Ferus. 3. It was a generall received opinion among the Jewes, that the same time that the Israelites were delivered out of Egypt, the deliverance which they expected from the Messiah should be accomplished. A•doe. Masius in 5. Iosh. And so accordingly Christ the true paschall lambe was slaine in the Feast of the Passeover. 4. The fulnesse of the Moone sheweth the fulnesse of time when the Messiah should come: Rupert. 5. The eating at even signifieth that Christ should suffer toward the end of the world, Simler.

Secondly, in the tenth of this moneth let every one take a lambe. Like as the lambe was set apart foure dayes before,* upon the tenth day of the moneth; so our Saviour came to Jerusalem upon the tenth day of the moneth, five dayes before his Passion: for upon the sixth day before Christ came to Bethanie, Ioh. 12. and the next day he went to Jerusalem, Ferus.

3. The lambe signifieth Christ, as Iohn Baptist calleth him the lambe of God,* that taketh away the sinnes of the world, Ioh. 1.29. unto whom all the properties of the lambe doe most fully agree: 1. The lambe is taken from the flocke, so Christ tooke the nature of men, in all things like unto us, sinne only excepted: Ferus. It was a lambe without blemish, so was Christ without sinne: Simler. A male, to shew his strength: Iun. of a yeere old (not above, but under it might bee) to shew that Christ died at a full and perfect age: Pellican. Beside, Christ is resembled to a Lambe for his patience, he was as asheepe before the shearer; not opening his mouth: Simler. for his innocencie: Ferus. And as a Lambe cloatheth, so are wee cloathed with Christs righteousness: Hierom. As the Lambe feedeth, so are wee nourished spiritually by the body and bloud of Christ. Simler.

4. The bloud of the Lambe was a most lively type and figure of the bloud of Christ:* 1. As they were delivered from the temporall death of the plague of the first borne, so are wee redeemed by the bloud of Christ the undefiled Lambe, 1. Pet. 1.19. Iun. 2. The bloud was sprinkled or stricked with hyssope upon the doore postes: so the bloud of Christ doth not profit us, unlesse it be sprinkled upon our hearts by faith: Calvin. 3. It was stricked upon the doore postes, that we should at all times, both going out of our houses, and entring in, thinke upon the passion of Christ: and it was laid upon the upper doore poste▪ to shew that we should not be ashamed of Christ. Pellican.

5. The Lambe must be eaten whole, so whole Christ must be received and acknowledged, God Christ,* and man Christ, perfect God and perfect man consisting of body and soule: both the doctrine and life of Christ▪ Pellic. Ferus. The Arrians divided the Lambe that denied his Deity, the Maniches that impugned his humanity, the Apollinarists denied Christ to have a soule: or rather it signifieth our perfect conjunction with Christ: Iun. 2 The eating of unleavened bread signifieth the laying aside of the leaven of mallice and wickednesse, and that we should keepe our feast with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth, as the Apostle expoundeth it, 1. Cor. 6.8. 3. The sower herbes signifie the afflictions that accompany the crosse of Christ. Iun.

6. Vers. 11. *Thus shall yee eat it. 1. By the girding of the loynes some understand the bridling of the affections: Gregor. Pellican. rather it sheweth we should be ready for the Lords service, as they which are prepared for their journey: Philo: as the Apostle saith, Stand therefore your loynes girded up, Ephes. 6.12. Borrh. 2. The putting on the shooes with Gregory signifieth the imitating of the examples of the Saints departed: as the shooes are made of dead skinnnes: but this is too curious: Pellican would have it to signifie our passing thorow this world where we have no abiding City: rather it sheweth, that wee should be armed and prepared to walke through the crosses of this life, and not to bee offended with the troubles, which follow the Gospell, but, as the Apostle saith, wee should bee shod with the preparation of the Gos|pell of peace: Borrh. 3. By the staffe in hand Pellican understandeth the enduring of labour, Philo direction to guide us in the way: Ferus and Iunius better, the word of God, whereby we are both guided and strengthened in the way: Gregory, the pastorall duty: but the use is more generall than to belong to one calling. 4. They are bid to eat it in haste, which with Gregory signifieth, ad solemnitatem patriae caelestis a●●lare, to long for our heavenly country, as they made haste to goe to Canaan: as the Apostle saith, I desire to be dissolved and to be with Christ. Some understand it of that feare, which they are in, which doe things in haste: and there it is good, semper pavid●m esse ne in presumptione & secur●tate p●rielitatur; alwayer to be fearefull lest b● security and presumption

we should be indangered: Pellican. Some doe thus apply it: Celeriter relinquendum esse Satana regnum: that the kingdome of Satan must speedily bee left: Borrh. Ferus, beside the two first collections: Festinare nos faciant duo, desiderium & timor: Two things cause us to make haste, desire and feare: addeth a third, that as they were bid thus to be in readinesse at what houre of the night soever there should be a cry raised in Egypt: Sic semper parati simus, quasi omni hora nobis ex hoc mundo exeundum sit: So we should be alwayes ready at what houre soever we are to depart this world. But this ceremony betokeneth generally our readinesse and promptnesse to Gods service: violentes esse & rapere regnum Dei: that wee should as it were take the Kingdome of God by force, as our Saviour sheweth, Matth. 11. Iun. in Analys.

QUEST. XLI. How Pharaoh is said here to have called unto Moses.

Vers. 31. AND he called to Moses and Aaron. 1. Ferus here well noteth, Impii non evigilant nisidum iudicium Dei sentiunt: The wicked awake not till they feelee the judgements of God. Pharaoh is not so much awakened out of his sleepe as his hard heart is awakened. 2. Now he granteth whatsoever they had said before, making no reservation or exception of any thing as he had done: Simler. So wee see that terror and feare are the invincible weapons of God whereby Tyrants are constrained: Pellican. 3. This was, Sera sed non seria animi demissi: This submission of his minde, though it came at the last, it came not in truth: Borrh. for Pharaoh repented him afterward. 4. Not onely Pharaoh thus called to Moses and Aaron, but likewise Pharaohsservants submitted themselves and besought them to be gone, as Moses had said before, chap. 11.8. Iun. 5. But whereas Moses here told Pharaoh, chap. 10.29. from hence will I see thy face no more: it is not to be thought that Moses and Aaron were now called into Pharaohs presence: he is said to call unto them, dum pro imperi suo procures ad cum ablegavit; while hee sendeth by his commandement his Nobles unto him. Calvin.

Here follow such questions as concerne the manner of the departure of the Israelites out of Egypt, and first of their spoiling of the Egyptians of their Jewels.

IN this part of the Chapter, which containeth the memorable and famous history of the departure of the Hebrewes out of Egypt, and their mighty deliverance from their long and grievous captivity: there are three things principally to be expounded, first touching that act of the Hebrewes, in demanding of the Egyptians jewels of gold and silver, and detaining of them and carrying them away: Secondly, of the great numbers of the Israelites, and others mingled with them, that went out of Egypt: Thirdly, of the time of their sojourning in Egypt, which is here affirmed to be 430. yeeres, vers. 41.

QUEST. XLII. Whether the Israelites asked to borrow of the Egyptians their jewels.

Vers. 35. AND they asked of the Egyptians, jewels of silver. The first question here, is, whether the Israelites did aske to borrow these things, and in so doing how they can be excused from lyling, seeing they did not restore them againe. 1. One answer is, that God only commanded the Israelites to aske these things of the Egyptians, but the manner to aske to borrow, was not prescribed them, yet they were permitted so to doe: so Augustine: Fortasse secundum voluntates suas magis permissi sunt ista facere quam iussi: It may be, that according to their owne mindes, they were rather suffered thus to doe, than commanded. And so sometime in the Scripture, a thing is said to be bid to bee done, which is onely permitted: as Christ said unto Iudas, What thou doest, doe quickly: Ioh. 13. which was no commandement or bidding of him to doe it, but a permission onely, and giving of way to his working: Perer. But this answer is not fit in this place, for the Israelites doe here no other thing than Moses bad them, They did according to the saying of Moses, vers. 35. and Moses said none other thing than God commanded him, chap.

11.2. To speake to the people that every one require or aske of his neighbour; &c. they were not bid then to doe one thing, and they did another: and to what end should they aske to borrow, beeing simply bid|den to aske? for they needed not to doubt to have their asking, seeing God gave them favour in the eyes of the Egyptians.

2. Another answer is, that they did but aske to borrow, but afterward when the Egyptians brake their faith and pursued after the Hebrewes, they did not thinke themselves bound to restore them. Perer. But it is evident, that the Israelites when they carried these things out of Egypt, had no minde to restore them againe, for the text saith that even then, when they went out, before the Egyptians set forward after them, they spoiled the Egyptians, vers. 36.

3. Some answer, that the Israelites craving these things to borrow them for the service of God, and to use in their sacrifices, lied not, for afterward a great part of them was converted to the use of the Taber|nacle. Calvin. But yet this excuseth not their pretence of borrowing, for howsoever after they were im|ployed, they brake their promise in withholding them still, and not restoring them.

4. Some say further, that in their borrowing this condition must be understood, that they would re|store them at their returne, now seeing they returned not, (most of the Egyptians being drowned in the red sea, to whom they should have restored them) they were freed of their promise. Simler. But all this helpeth not the matter, for if they promised to restore them at their returne, and never purposed or thought to come againe into Egypt, as they did, then was it a fraude in them: neither is it like, that all those Egyptians of the meaner sort, of whom they borrowed, perished in the sea, and though all had there died, yet they had children or friends remaining to whom they might have made restitution.

5. Ferus thinketh that they did not borrow them at that very instant of their departure, but had asked them before, for it is not like that they would have lent them at their going away. But there need no question be made of the Egyptians willingnesse to lend them, seeing the text saith that God gave the peo|ple favour; now if they had borrowed them before, which is not like, yet at their going away not to re|store them, had beene no faithfull dealing.

6. Therefore to put this matter out of doubt, the Israelites did not aske to borrow of the Egyptians, but simply asked of them to give such things as they required: for both the word here used, shaal, signifieth to aske: not to borrow, or to aske to borrow: and beside whereas the Egyptians, as most doe translate, commodabant eis, are said to have lent unto them: yet the word properly signifieth petitum dare, to give the thing asked, as Vatab. or petentibus dare, to give to them that aske: Iun. And the same word is used, 1. Sam. 1.18. where Annah saith she had given or lent Samuel unto God: she did not give him, to require him againe, but absolutely bequeathed him unto God during his life Piscator. And so here the Egyptians doe frankly give unto the Hebrewes those things which they demanded.

And say that the Egyptians did purpose but to lend them, yet the Israelites did simply aske them, and they upon their asking gave them. Perer. Beside, whereas it is said, that the Lord gave them favour, this spe|ciall grace and favour which the Lord wrought for them, is rather seene in franke gifts than in loanes.

QUEST. XLIII. Whether the Israelites did any wrong in spoiling the Egyptians of their jewels.

Vers. 36. SO they spoiled the Egyptians. That the Israelites did no wrong unto the Hebrewes, in carrying away their ornaments and jewels, now it shall be made manifest.

1. Iosephus thinketh that the Egyptians did voluntarily give these things unto the Israelites unasked, honorabant Hebraeos donis, they did honour the Hebrewes with these gifts, Some to hasten them to bee gone, some because of their acquaintance and neighbourhood. But the words of Scripture both in this place, and before chap. 3. and chap. 11. doe shew that the Israelites first required and asked them.

2. Tertullian lib. 2. contra Marcion. maketh mention of a certaine tradition, that after the Hebrewes were gone over the red sea, the Egyptians sent messengers to the Hebrewes, to require of them their jewels and ornaments, which they had lent them: And that Moses with the Elders of Israel returned this answer, that they would so doe, so that the Egyptians would pay and recompence them for all their labour and service in their brick-workes, in building of them houses and Cities: whereupon the Egyptians casting up their account, and finding that their wages, at a very meane rate, would farre exceed the value of their jewels, were contented that the Hebrewes should enjoy them. Now if this were so, then the equity of this fact will easily appeare: but because this tradition is uncertaine, neither is there thereof any mention made in Scripture, it is not to be stood upon, a better satisfaction may be found out.

3. Therefore first of all: this is sufficient to excuse the Israelites▪ that they did herein as they were commanded: and whatsoever the Lord biddeth it is no sinne to doe, nay it is sinne not to doe it, as Augustine well saith, Quod sane faciendo Moses us{que} adeo non peccavit, ut non faciendo peccaret: Moses in doing so was so farre from sinning, that in not doing of it he had sinned: thus also answer Calvin. Simler. Iun. with others.

4. But the equity of this fact may further be evident, though it sufficeth only to stand upon Gods will, which is alwayes just, Et rectissimum est quicquid facit, and it is most right whatsoever hee doth: Calvin. or willeth to be done: yet divers other reasons may bee yeelded, to justifie this fact of the Israelites: beside, I say the authority of the Lord in commanding, which excuseth the Israelites, who were bound to be obedient in whatsoever was commanded: as Augustine sheweth by this example; like as in a commonwealth the minister or executioner of the Judge in putting him to death that is adjudged to dye, offendeth not, who if he should doe it of himselfe were a man-slayer: so, saith he, Deo jubenti ministerium prae-buerunt: they did but yeeld their service and ministry to the commandment of God. Beside this justification, other reasons may be alleaged, both on Gods behalfe and on the peoples.

First on Gods behalfe: 1. He is the supreme and chiefe Lord of all, and may by his imperiall right not onely give the substance of one to another, but remove and dispossesse Kings, and transpose Kingdomes from one to another. Simler. And therefore as Calvin saith: Quae Deo placuit ad suos transferri, aliena censeri non debent: What God thinketh good to convey over unto his, are not to be counted as belonging to another. 2. The Egyptians abused their gold and other jewels, in serving their idols therewith: and so as Augustine saith, Dei creatura male utentes ad Creatoris injuriam: they wickedly abused the creature to the wrong of the Creator: and therefore the Lord might most justly deprive them of that which they abused to his dishonour. 3. Their intolerable contumacy and disobedience in refusing so often to obey the Lords commandement, to let his people goe, deserved no lesse, than that they should bee punished with the losse of their precious substance: seeing the Lord for the like stubbornnesse and obstinacy of the Cananites, dispossessed them of their country, and gave it to the Israelites. Perer.

Secondly, in respect of the Israelites, these reasons also may be rendred: 1. The Israelites might detaine these things, which the Egyptians gave them as their wages, for their long labour and service in Egypt, as it is said, Wisdom. 10. 17. she gave the Saints the reward of their labours: and as Philo further amplifieth: Nec par est jactura libertatis & pecuniae; there is not the like reason of the losse of liberty, and the losse of money: the Israelites lost their liberty, the Egyptians lost but part of their substance. So the Lord promiseth unto Nebuchadnezzar, Egypt, for the wages of his army, for the service they did in subduing of Tyrus, Ezech. 29.18. Thus Israel had the substance of the Egyptians given them for their service. Iun. 2. Beside the labour and toile of the Israelites in Egypt, they were most cruelly oppressed, their children most pitifully slaine and murdered, therefore this was in stead of some recompence and satisfaction made for the wrongs which they had done them. Perer.

3. Philo addeth this reason also, Vt in bello victores victos bonis spoli-v-rant, as being conquerers in bat|tell they spoiled their enemies of their substance:* for they were as conquerers of the Egyptians, not by stroke of battell, but by the stroke of the Lords hand, in these mighty miracles plagues and judgements, whereby the stout and stubborne heart of Pharaoh was subdued. Simler.

4. Irenaeus saith further: Debitores erant Hebraeis non solùm rerum, s-d & vitae suae, propter patriarchae Ios-phi praecedentem benignitatem: They were debtors to the Hebrewes, not only of their substance, but of their life also, for the former kindnesse and goodnesse of the patriarke Ioseph shewed unto them: who delivered the Egyptians and their land from perishing by famine, and governed the country 80. yeeres in all justice, peace and tranquillity.

5. But the best reason on the behalfe of the Israelites is, that the Egyptians did voluntarily give them these things as a redemption of their lives, and did wage them thereby to bee gone, as Iosephus saith, they gave them these things, quo celerius discederent, to hasten their departure the sooner: this also may be galthered out of the text, chap. 11.8. and 12, 13. Iun.

QUEST. XLIV. When the Israelites asked the jewels, before the last plague or after.

ANother question is, when the Israelites asked these jewels of the Egyptians, at the very instant of their departure, or before: 1. Augustine, and Cajetane consenting with him, Ferus, Pererius, all these are of opinion that this was done before the last plague of the first borne; Augustines reason is this, Quomodo fieri posset, ut in tanto luctu, ex mortibus suorum commodarent ista filiis Israel? How could it be that in so great heavinesse for the death of their children they would lend these things to the Israeli-es? quaest. 45. in Exod. But this might be a reason to make them willing to let them have what they desired to bee rid of them, for they were afraid all of them of their lives, if the Israelites had stayed still, for they said, we dye all. vers. 33.

Page 136

Cajetane would gather that they had borrowed these things before, (and the Egyptians through grieffe forgetting to demand them againe, the Israelites also being in haste carried them away) because it is said they spoiled the Egyptians, that is, by carrying away the things, which they had formerly borrowed. But these words rather make against him, for in that the Israelites are said then at their going away to have spoiled the Egyptians, it sheweth, that then they received the things of them, whereof they spoiled them, for otherwise they had spoiled them before, when they received the things, not purposing to restore them againe.

Ferus reason is, because it is not like they would lend the Israelites their jewels, at their going away. But this doubt is removed, because the text saith, That God gave them favour in the sight of the Egypti/ans, neither did the Israelites borrow these things, but they simply asked them, and the other frankly gave them.

Pererius thinketh, that the Israelites asked these things between the ninth and the tenth plague, because when there was one plague yet behind, the Lord bad Moses to speake to the people to aske of the Egyptians, chap. 11.2. But in that place only it is shewed what the Lord commanded Moses to doe; hee spake to the people then to doe it, but it was not acted then: as likewise in the same place, mention is made how the Lord would goe forth at midnight and smite all the first borne, which was not done then, but afterward.

2. Wherefore I rather thinke with Calvin and Iunius, that the Israelites asked these things of the Egyptians after the last plague, immediatly before their departure: the reasons are these: 1. The Egyptians seeing their first borne slaine, were afraid of their owne lives, and therefore in respect thereof they regarded not their substance: Tanquam si hoc pretio animas redemissent: As if they had redeemed their lives with this price: Iun. And as Calvin: Hinc clamor ille desperationis index, omnes mortui sumus, hinc facilitas illa in dando supellectile: Hence came that desperate cry, wee are all dead men: hence that facility in giving their house-hold stuffe.

2. That this asking of the Egyptians came after all the plagues it is shewed chap. 3.20. I will smite Egypt with all my wonders, &c. after that shall he let them goe: then it followeth in the next verse, I will make this people to be favoured of the Egyptians, &c. for every man shall aske of his neighbour &c.

3. The text saith that they shall put the jewels and raiment upon their sonnes and their daughters: that is, shall load them with them and lay them upon their shoulders: it is like then they were upon going, when they made their burthens.

4. If they had asked them before, it had beene only to borrow them, not to have them of gift; but it is shewed already that they did not borrow them, quest. 42.

5. They had no colour to borrow their jewels and costly rayment before, for they asked them to set forth the service of God which was upon their going, for Pharaoh said, Goe serve the Lord, as yee have said, vers. 31.

QUEST. XLV. What kind of favour it was which the Lord gave the Israelites in the sight of the Egyptians.

Vers. 36. And the Lord gave the people favour; &c. 1. Some thinke that this favour was by reason of some supernaturall grace, and amiable quality, which was given unto the Israelites whereby the Egyptians were allured unto their love, as the booke of Iudith saith, was given unto Iudith, an extraordinary comelinesse whereby she was commended to all that saw her, Iudith chap. 10.

2. Another opinion is, that this favour was wrought rather in the hearts of the Egyptians toward the Israelites, that the Lord who overruleth mens hearts did incline the affections of the Egyptians toward his people: and this is the truer opinion: as both may appeare by the use of the same phrase elsewhere: as it is said, that Ioseph found favour in his masters sight, Gen. 39.3. which was not caused so much by Iosephs amiable person, as by the working of his masters affection: for the reason is there shewed of this favour: his master saw that the Lord was with Ioseph: so that the cause of this favour was not the externall object of Iosephs person, but the internall effect of his masters affection: likewise this is evident by the contrary, for as it is said, He turned their hearts to hate his people, Psalm. 105.25. so their hearts were turned againe to love and favour his people.

3. Yet was it not such favour as Cajetane supposeth, that the Egyptians prevented the peoples asking, and forced them to aske, as he would inferre upon the signification of the word Vajashilum, which in hiphil, he saith, signifieth to cause or compell to aske. But neither is the word so taken in hiphil, but rather signifieth to lend, or give one his asking: as Anna using the same word, 1. Sam. 1.28. saith, shee had given or lent her sonne unto the Lord, where hishilti in hiphil cannot be translated, Shee had caused the Lord to aske. And beside, what needed that circumstance, for the Egyptians to have forced the Israelites to aske, and then to have given them their asking? they might at once have given them unasked.

4. Neither was this a worke of regeneration of the Egyptians, whereby they suddenly of wolves became lambes, as Master Calvin very well noteth, but it was a speciall worke of Gods power onely at this time, thus to sway their affections, for they were soone changed againe when they pursued the Israelites with all hostility.

Page 137

5. And although this inclining of the Egyptians hearts and bending of their affections was Gods spelciall worke: yet it pleased the Lord to use some subordinate meanes to procure it, and give occasion there|of, as namely these two: the one was the great reputation and estimation which Moses was in both with Pharaoh and with his people, which reason is yeelded of this favour, chap. 11.3 Calvin. The other be|cause the Egyptians by the death of their first borne, were in such perplexity and feare, that they were glad to give them any thing to redeeme their lives: Thostatus. So it is said in the Psalm. 105.38. Egypt was glad at their departure.

QUEST. XLVI. Why the Lord enriched his people with the Egyptians substance.

NOW the reasons wherefore the Lord gave the Israelites such favour, and thereby enriched them were these:

1. To accomplish the promise made to Abraham, Gen. 15.14. That the people should come out with great substance: Osiander.
2. For the comfort of the Israelites, whom the Egyptians before had stripped of that they had, and di|vers wayes oppressed: now some amends is made them, by possessing the precious jewels of the Egypt|tians. Ferus.
3. As also by this meanes, the Egyptians were animated to pursue and follow after the Israelites to their owne confusion and destruction. Ferus.
4. And hereby the Israelites were furnished with many rich ornaments, which afterwards served for the adorning and beautifying of the Tabernacle. Ferus.

QUEST. XLVII. Of which Egyptians they asked, and who of the Israelites and what.

Vers. 35. THEY asked of the Egyptians. 1. These were not the Egyptians inhabiting out of the land of Goshen, as some thinke: because it is like if any had inhabited among the Israelites, they should have beene exempted from the plagues of Egypt which is not to be thought. But this followeth not, for such plagues as befell either the persons of the Egyptians, or their proper substance might as well be laid upon the Egyptians dwelling among the Israelites, as upon others, as is shewed before, quest. 33. in 7^a chap. And that these Egyptians of whom the Israelites asked these things were such as cohabited among them, it is evident, both because every one is bidden to aske of his neighbour, chap. 11.2. and for that they being in haste could not upon the instant of their departure goe farre to fetch any thing. 2. Nei|ther yet is Oleasters opinion probable, that few of the Israelites had their proper and severall houses and dwellings, but most of them were servants in the Egyptians houses, as the Saracens and Mores are in Spaine, and so they asked jewels of their mistresses, as the use is in Spaine in their festivals, to attire themselves with jewels and other ornaments: and so Oleaster would expound these words (chap. 3.22. Every woman shall aske of her neighbour, and of the stranger or sojourner of her house) of her, in whose house shee was a stranger, not of the stranger in her house. Contra. 1. It is not unlike but that many Hebrew men and women were servants with the Egyptians, and that they also had favour with their masters and mistresses: but that most of them had their proper houses, it may thus appeare, both because it is said, Gen. 47.27. that they dwelt in Goshen and had their possessions there: and beside, where|as they were commanded to take a lambe for every house, this could not have beene done convenient|ly in the Egyptians houses, that would not have suffered them to kill a lambe or goate for sacrifice, which thing they abhorred: and to what purpose served that note of distinction to marke their houses with bloud, if the Israelites and Egyptians had for the most part cohabited together in one house? 2. The word gerah, sojourner of her house, may be either taken for the neighbour or dweller next the house, as the Chalde Paraphrast, and as Augustine taketh it for cohabitation, not in the same house, but in the same place, quest. 39. in Exod. or else it may bee taken for cohabitation in the same house, as the Septuagint read 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, shall aske of the cohabiter in the house: as the word is taken for an inhabitant, Iob. 28.4. So that they had two sort of neighbours to aske of, either they which dwelt in the next houses, or that sojourned with them in the same house. But it cannot be understood of the Hebrewes sojourners and servants in the Egyptian houses, for mention is made of their sonnes and daughters, whom they should put their jewels upon: it is not like that being servants, they had sonnes and daughters borne in the E|gyptians houses.

3. Therefore the Egyptians, of whom the Israelites asked these Jewels, were their neighbours chiefly, and acquaintance, as they are called by the name of reagh, a companion, a friend: yet other Egyptians also might give them, to hasten them away, as Iosephus sheweth, that the Egyptians bestowed upon them for these two reasons: Alii quo celerius discederent, alii propter vicinitatis consuetudinem: Some that they might be gone the sooner, other because of their neighbourhood and acquaintance.

4. As they were the Egyptians their neighbours, whom they chiefly asked of, so, they that asked were both men and women, chap. 11.2. but the women are only mentioned chap. 3.22. because the Jewels and ornaments which they asked specially belonged to the care of women: Simler.

5. And though jewels of silver and gold, and rayment only be mentioned, yet they had other precious things beside, as scarlet, purple, silke, fine linnen, precious stones: for whence else should the Israelites have those things which afterward they bestowed upon the Tabernacle? Simler. And they received these precious things in such abundance of the Egyptians, that they did put them upon their sonnes and daugh|ters: that is, not only adorne them therewith, but loaded them: Calvin.

QUEST. XLVIII. Of the mysticall application of the Israelites spoiling of the Egyptians.

*NOW for the mysticall sense and spirituall application of this enriching of the people of God with the ornaments of Egypt. 1. Augustine understandeth it of the liberall arts, and commendable hu|mane sciences which were invented by the heathen, but taken from them as the spoile of Egypt, and con|verted to the true service of God, and the setting forth of Christian religion. The idolatrous and supersti|tious inventions of the heathen, hee resembleth to the lumber, and cumbersome things of Egypt, which the Israelites did not meddle with; the Artes and Sciences to the jewels and ornaments which were conveyed over from the superstitious Egyptians to the people of God. As hee giveth instance, of Lactantius, Victorinus, Hilarius; and before them, of Cyprian, Quanto auro & argento & veste suffarcinatus exierit ex Egypto? With how much gold and silver and raiment was he laden when he came out of Egypt? that is, when he was converted from Paganisme to the Christian faith.* 2 This Porphyrius, as Eusebius writeth, objected against Origene, that he borrowed of them, to set forth the fables of his religion, as he impiously calleth them: Graecorum doctrinam ad peregrinas & commentitias Iudaeorum fabulas confirmandam tanquam subsidium sibi comparavit: He tooke as an helpe unto him the learning of the Grecians, to confirme the strange devised fables of the Jewes. As hee sheweth how he was conversant in the writings of Plato, Numenius, Chronius, Apollophanes, Longinus, Modestinus: that of Nicomachus, and other Pythagoreans, of Cherinus, the Stoike, and Corneilius, hee learned to allegorize. Thus hee imputeth that to Origene as a fault, which shewed his great learning and wisdom, that knew how to grace the Christian faith even with the ornaments of such as were adversaries unto it. 3. Hereupon Julian the Apostate knowing what a benefit unto the Christian religion, the liberall Artes and Sciences did bring, seeing that by cruelty the Gospell of Christ could not be suppressed, did by this subtil practice seeke to hinder it: Sancivit legem (as Socrates writeth, ne Christiani literis humanioribus instructerentur: he made a law that no Christians should be instructed in humane artes: and his reason was, that they should not be able by the helpe of Logicke or other humane learning to defend their faith. 4. Thus wee see at this day, that whereas the Heathen were the first inventers almost of all humane artes: * as Socrates, Plato, Aristotle, of Philosophy; Euclides, Archimedes, Ptolomaeus, of the Mathematikes; Isocrates, Demosthenes, Cicero of Rhetoricke; Homer, Pindarus, Virgil of Poetrie; Herodotus, Thucydides, Livius, of Histories; now none of these professions are to be found among the Pagans and Infidels, but they flourish only among Christians. The learned bookes and writings of Austinus Marcy, Tertullian, Clemens Alexandrinus, Origene, Arnobius, Lactantius, Cyprian, Hierome, Augustine, with the rest doe evidently shew how the spoiles of Egypt are now possessed onely by the people of God.* 5. And not onely these learned Fathers, and teachers of the Church, have made use of the Egyptian ornaments, but even the holy Prophets also and Apostles have taken of those spoiles, as Moses was instructed in all the Egyptian learning: And so was Daniel in the wisdom of the Chaldeans: S. Paul in his Epistles citeth the saying of Aratus, Epimenides, and Menander: Perer.

QUEST. XLIX. Of the number of the Israelites that went up out of Egypt.

Vers. 37. About six hundred thousand men of foot. 1. Because the Latine translator readeth ferè, almost six hundred thousand, Pererius thinketh that there wanted some of this number: But that is not like: for seeing within one yeere, they were numbred to six hundred thousand, three thousand, five hundred and fifty men, Exod. 38.26. it is like that at their comming out of Egypt, they were not under that number. 2. Neither yet doe I consent unto Thostatus, who thinketh there were about 635000. and odde: for he to justifie this number, alleageth the corrupt Latine text, which readeth, Exod. 32.28. that there fell of the people, which were slaine of the Levites, viginti tria millia, three and twenty thousand (which number he would have added to this summe here set downe:) whereas in the originall mention is made only of three thousand; and so also the Chalde and Septuag. reade: and it must be admitted for a great oversight in the Latine interpreter to reade three and twenty thousand, for three thousand: to say that Hierome followed the true Hebrew copy, which might since be corrupted, and that the Latine is in many places more perfect now than the Hebrew, as Thostatus alleageth, is to ground an uncertaine conceit upon meere imaginations and supposals: for is it not like that the Hebrew Scriptures should be kept freer from corruption, than the Latine, seeing that the Jewes, which are otherwise adversaries to the Christian faith, have beene most diligent keepers of the old Testament? and if this be admitted, that the fountaines are corrupt and impure, there will be no certainty of the Scriptures. And further, that place of the Apostle, 1. Cor. 10.8. That there fell in one day, three and twenty thousand, doth not helpe Thostatus: for there the Apostle speaketh of those that were slaine for the fornication committed with the daughters of the Midianites at Baal Peor, Numb. 25. where though the number agree not in shew with the Apostles account; for Moses maketh mention of 24. thousand, the Apostle nameth 23. thousand,* the right solution is, not to say with Thom. Aquin. that it is the fault of the writer, or with Lyranus and Cajetane, that the number of 24. thousand includeth also 23. thousand, as the greater number containeth the lesse: but the Apostle only comprehendeth those, which were slaine with the sword, where|as Moses putteth together not only them, but those also of the chiefe which were commanded to be han|ged, which might bee about a thousand: Iun. 3. Therefore I thinke rather with Iosephus, that there were full out 600. thousand not fewer, but rather more, for as Thostatus therein well collecteth, there were numbered not long after, within a yeere and 14. dayes in the first day of the second moneth, 603550. men of warre from 20. yeeres and upward, Numb. 1.46. in which number the Levites were not counted, who from 30. yeere old to 50. yeere made 8580. Numb. 5.48. 4. This number also is only of these which were fit for warre as appeareth in the summes of the people taken afterwards, Exod. 38.26. and Numb. 1. so that the women and children are excepted out of this number. Now according to the common esti|mate, they that are fit for warre in any country, are as two first partes of the whole, as forty is to an hun|dred, then •y this proportion as 40. is to an 100. so six is to fifteene; there being then 600. thousand fighting men, the whole summe comprehending women and children will amount to 1500. thousand: beside the great numbers of other people, and strangers among them, which might make the whole num|ber above 2000. thousand. 5. Herein appeareth the wonderfull blessing of God, in increasing seventy persons to such a multitude in the space of 215. yeeres: for so long was it and no longer from the com|ming downe of Iacob into Egypt, unto their going out. And thus the Lord made good his word unto Iacob: I will there make of thee a great nation, Gen. 46.3. Iun. 6. And further, as God herein abundantly shewed his mercy, in so greatly multiplying the Israelites, so his justice and severity appeared, that of all this great multitude, which came out of Egypt, only two of them, Caleb and Iosua entred into the land of Canaan, all the rest, because of their idolatry and disobedience, died in the wilderness, as the Lord threatned them, Numb. 14. 7. Hence also appeareth the error of Manethon, and Cheremon, two ancient Writers, who affirmed, as Iosephus reporteth, lib. 1. cont. Appionem, that the Israelites at their comming out of Egypt were but 250000. men, whereas they were six hundred thousand, as Moses here writeth.

QUEST. L. Of Rahmesis from whence the Israelites went.

Vers. 37. Then the children of Israel tooke their journey from Rahmesis to Succoth. 1. This Rahmesis•s the same which is mentioned Gen. 47.11. divers from that spoken of Exod. 1.11. For the first Rahmesis is with shevah under ain, the other Rahmesis with p•tach under ain; and beside, the first is call|led the land of Rahmesis, the other the City of Rhamesis. Rahmesis then seemeth to be the name of the whole country from the which the Israelites went, not of a City, for one City could not containe such a multitude. Pellican: and whether that country were capable of them, is uncertaine: it is like the Israe|lites were dispersed into some other parts of Egypt before, but hearing that they were shortly to goe out of Egypt, they might gather into this country: the other Rahmesis seemeth to have beene a chiefe Ci|ty of this province: see before quest. 11. v. 1.

QUEST. LI. Of Succoth where the Israelites pitched their tents going out of Egypt.

TO Succoth. 1. This Succoth is a divers place from that which Iacob so called when hee came out of M•sopotamia Gen. 33.17. Piscator. 2. Yet both that place and this have the same derivation of the name, so called of Boothes and Tents, which Iacob there, and the Israelites here pitched: as Levi. 23.43. Iun 3. But this place is so named by anticipation, for it was not yet called Succoth, before the Israelites came thither; it afterward had that name given of the rearing of Tents and Tabernacles there: Piscator. 4. It is thought to be a part of the region Troglodytis by the red Sea: Simler. 5. Iosephus calleth it Laopolis, where he saith Babylon was afterward built, when Cambyses invaded Egypt: Ioseph. lib. 2. Antiq. cap. 5.

QUEST. LII. What this mingled company was that went out with the Israelites.

Vers. 37. And a great mingled company. 1. These were not like to come of those servants which Iacob might bring downe with him into Egypt: for it is like the famine being so great, that Iacob had no great number of servants in his family, beside his children: as Abraham had who was able to army three hundred and eightene persons of h^s owne house, Gen. 14. Simler. 2. It is probable this mixed company consisted partly of Egyptians and other nations sojourning in Egypt, that were conver|ted to their religion, partly of their servants: Calvin. 3. This mingling of divers other nations with the Lords people, was a lively type and evident demonstration of the calling of the Gentiles: Borrh. Osian|der. And beside, whereas this confused company seemed to consent with the Israelites in their religion, and come out of Egypt with them, yet were they not truly called: for they afterward fell a lusting and murmuring, Numb. 11. 4. This sheweth that many are called to the outward society of the Church, but few are chosen. Ferus.

QUEST. LIII. What moved those divers sorts of people to goe out of Egypt with Israel.

THis confused company came forth with the Israelites: 1. not so much because of the tyranny and oppression of the land, which being chiefly intended against the Israelites, might be grievous also un|to others. Simlerus: nor yet being weary of Egypt, which now in a manner, of a fertile and pleasant coun|trie, became barren and desolate with the late plagues laid upon it. Calvin: as for that they being moved and prepared with those mighty wonders and miracles, which they saw in Egypt, were thereupon resol|ved to joyne themselves to the people of God: Iun. 2. And it need not seeme strange that the Egyptians suffered so many to goe out with Israel: for either they through feare and grieve minded it not: or else these having a long time dwelled among the Israelites, and so skilfull in their language, could hardly bee discerned from the Hebrewes. Perer.

QUEST. LIV. Whether the Israelites went out of Egypt in the evening, in the night, or in the morning.

Vers. 42. THis is a night to bee diligently kept unto Iehovah, &c. 1. Sometime the Scripture seemeth to say, that the Israelites went out of Egypt in the night, as in this place: and Deut. 16.1. In the moneth of Abib, the Lord thy God brought thee out of Egypt by night: yet did they not goe out in the very night, for they were charged that none should goe forth of their doores till the morning, vers. 22. Caje|tane thinketh, that Moses gave this charge, not then knowing what time would be spent in the slaughter of the first borne, nor at what houre the Israelites should be bid to goe out: but afterward when the first borne were slaine, and Pharaoh called to Moses in the night to be gone, and the Egyptians hastned them forward, then Moses gave the people liberty not onely to goe out of their houses, but to addresse them|selves to depart out of Egypt. Conr. 1. It is not like that Moses, when he gave that charge, was ignorant of the counsell of God: for the time was assigned when the Lord would smite the first borne, about mid|night, which worke the Lord would not be long about: neither is it to be thought, that Moses would re|verse the first charge, neither is it safe so to imagine, the Scripture affirming no such thing. 2. Therefore Rupertus solution is rather to be received, that because the night was now spent, and it was toward day, when the Israelites set forward out of Egypt, therefore they were bid not to goe forth of their houses untill the morning.

2. Sometime the Scripture seemeth to affirme, that the Israelites went out of Egypt in the evening▪ about the Sunne set, when they killed the Passeover, as Deut. 16.6. There shalt thou offer the Passeover a• even about the going downe of the Sunne, in the season that thou camest out of Egypt. But this could not be, that they departed in the evening, both because they were charged not to goe out of their houses till the morning, and afterward about midnight the first borne were slaine, till which time the Israelites were not dismissed by Pharaoh. And therefore the word (mogned) which signifieth an appointed time or searson, is not to be restrained to that very instant of the killing of the Passeover, but generally it betokeneth the time of their going out, and so comprehendeth the whole night, in the beginning whereof they eat the Passeover, and in the end thereof they departed. Perer.

3. Therefore the truth is, that it was toward day, the night being well nye spent when the Israelites departed, as it is evident, Numb. 33 3. where it is said that they departed the morrow after the Passeover, and in the sight of the Egyptians, and while they were burying of their dead, which it is like they did not before the day appeared. Beside, the order of the history sheweth as much, for it was midnight before the first borne were slaine, then there was a crie in Egypt, and, as Iosephus writeth, they ranne unto the Kings palace unto Pharaoh, and he called to Mos•s and Aaron, and the Egyptians then hastned them, and gave them their precious jewels, and they trussed them up and laid them upon their sonnes and daughters: while all this was in doing a great part of the night must needs be spent. Further, that the type and shadow may be answerable to the body: as our blessed Saviour arose for our redemption out of the grave beltimes in the morning, when it was yet darke, Ioh. 20.1. before the Sunne was risen, Mark. 16.2. so the Israelites did about the same time rise as it were out of the grave and prison of their servitude, and were redeemed about the same time. Pellican. Ferus.

4. Now how the Israeli•es could bee ready themselves with their cattell and substance upon so short warning, Ios•phus well sheweth, that Moses had before willed them to be in a readinesse for their journey, and thereupon they were gathered as neere as they could into one place. Perer.

Of the time of the dwelling of the Israelites in the land of Egypt.

QUEST. LV. Whether the Israelites dwelt in Egypt more than 430. yeeres.

Vers. 40. SO the dwelling of the children of Israel while they dwelt in Egypt was foure hundred and thirty yeeres. First it will bee questioned whether the Israelites dwelled no longer in Egypt than foure hundred and thirty yeeres, seeing the Lord said unto Abraham, Thy seede shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs foure hundred yeeres and shall serve them, Gen. 15.13. For if the Israelites were in servitude foure hundred yeeres, which time of their servitude began not untill after Iosephs death, who lived after the comming of Israel into Egypt 71. yeeres, being then 39. yeeres old, and he lived in all an hundred and ten yeeres, then the whole summe will make 471. But this doubt is easily removed: for that prophesie delivered unto Abraham concerning the hard usage of his seed, consisting of three branches, shall bee a stranger in a land, and shall serve there, and be evill entreated, must be understood, conjunctè, not disjunctè, joynly together, and not sunderly: that they should not all that time be in servitude, but partly all that while sojourne, and partly be in servitude: Pererius. And so Augustine giveth the solution of this place: Non itaque, quod ajit, in servitutem redigent eos, &c. ad quadringentos annos referendum est, &c. In that it is said, they shall hold them in servitude, it must not bee referred to the foure hundred yeeres: as though they kept them in servitude so many yeeres, but the foure hundred yeeres must bee referred to that which is said, thy seede shall be a stranger in a land not theirs. August. quaest. 47. in Exod.

QUEST. LVI. That the Israelites dwelt not 430. yeeres in Egypt only.

SEcondly, it is not to be supposed that the Israelites dwelt in Egypt all this space of 430. yeeres, which is the opinion of Genebrard, who thinketh that this terme taketh beginning from the comming of Iacob into Egypt, and expireth with the time of their deliverance and departure thence; his reasons are these: 1. Because in this place it is so affirmed that the Israelites dwelt so long in Egypt. 2. As also, that it is not like that in the space of 215. yeeres, which is the time according to the common opinion of their abode in Egypt, of seventy persons they could increase into so great a multitude.

Contra. 1. In this place a figurative speech must needes be admitted: for wee must understand not only the time of Israels sojourning in Egypt, but of their fathers also in the land of Canaan, as Augustine saith these words must be expounded: Manifestum est computandum esse tempus Patriarcharum Abrahā, &c. It is manifest that the time of the Patriarks, Abraham, Izhak, Iakob, must bee accounted when they began to sojourne in the land of Canaan: quæst. 47. in Exod. But of this more afterward. 2. Neither is it impossible or improbable, even without a miracle, for so many thousands in the space of 215. yeeres, to bee multiplied as is shewed before at large quest. 5. in chap. 1. And Augustine giveth two reasons thereof: Si fecunditas hominis consideretur, adjuvante illo, qui illos valde voluit multiplicari, reperietur non esse mirum: The fecundity of men considered, God also helping, who would have them exceedingly to increase, it will bee found not to be strange.

Now that the Israelites could not continue 430. yeeres in Egypt, these two arguments doe evidently convince. 1. Whereas Caath was one of those which came with Iacob into Egypt, who lived 133. yeeres, and his sonne Amram 137. yeeres, and Moses his sonne was 80. yeere old at the departure of Israel out of Egypt; all these yeeres put together make but 350. from which summe must bee deducted, the yeeres wherein they lived together. Genebrard answeres, that their yeeres are only reckoned after they begat children: and that some may be omitted that came betweene, as S. Matthew leaveth out in his genealogy three Kings, Ahaziah, Ioas, and Amasiah. This answer of Genebrard may easily be taken away; for nei|ther is it the use of Scripture, when it setteth downe the yeeres of a mans life, to name onely the yeeres when he begate children; and seeing in that line from Levi to Moses no other persons, are elsewhere na|med that came betweene beside Caath and Amram, it is a conjecture without ground to imagine any other. But the omission of these three in S. Matthewes genealogy, is evident, because wee finde them else|where in the stories of the Kings to be set downe: Perer.

2. S. Paul beginneth these 430. yeeres from the promise and covenant that was made to Abraham, Galath. 3.17. Therefore Israel stayed not all those yeeres in Egypt. Genebrard here answereth, that where the Apostle saith, the law which was 430. yeeres after; this word after, is not referred to the covenant, but to the law that came 430. yeeres after, that is, from the departure of the Israelites.

Contra. But this is a manifest wresting of the Apostles words, who of purpose maketh a comparison betweene the law and the covenant of grace, shewing that salvation dependeth not of the law, but of the grace and promise of God, which came 430. yeeres before. And whereas the Apostles words, in that order which hee set them downe are these: This I say that the covenant in non-Latin alphabet , confirmed afore of God, the Law made after foure hundred and thirty yeeres could not disanull: what other sense can be made of these words, but that the law was given so many yeeres after the promise? for after must of necessity have relation to that which is said to have been before, which was not the departure of the Israelites, not here so much as mentioned, but the covenant said to be before ratified and confirmed of God. Pererius.

QUEST. LVII. The Israelites dwelt in Egypt 215. yeeres only.

FURTHER, that the Israelites neither stayed in Egypt under 200. yeeres, as Chrysostome thinketh, nor yet 210. only, as the Hebrewes, to whom Lyranus and Cajetanus give consent, nor yet 230. yeeres, as Calvin, but 215. yeeres only, it may be thus made to appeare:

First from the first promise made to Abraham, unto the going of Israel out of Egypt, are 430. yeeres, according to the Apostles account: of this summe there were 215. yeeres gone, before Iacob descended into Egypt: Abraham at 75. received the promise, 25. yeeres after; when Abraham was 100. yeere old, was Isaack borne; he at 60. begate Iacob: Iacob at 130. went downe into Egypt; these yeeres put together, 25.60.130. make in all 215. yeeres: there remaineth then the other halfe of the summe, 215. yeeres more for the sojourning of Israel in Egypt: Thus Augustine reckoneth, approving Eusebius account, quaest. 47. in Exod.

Secondly, whereas the yeeres of Coath, Amram and Moses, when Israel came out of Egypt, doe make, as is before shewed, all together 350. yeeres: but from this summe must be subtracted the yeeres wherein they lived together, as from Coaths age of 133. yeeres, who at 65. yeeres begate Amram, as Epiphanius thinketh, the residue, wherein he lived together with Amram, that is, 68. yeeres, must bee deducted: and from Amrams age of 137. who at 70. yeeres begat Moses (as Epiphanius) the residue must likewise bee defaulted, which are 67. yeeres: adde unto these yeeres 65. of Coath, and 70. yeeres of Amram, 80. yeeres of Moses life, and wee shall have the said summe of 215. yeeres, all the time of the sojourning of Israel in Egypt.

QUEST. LVIII. That the Israelites were not in bondage and servitude in Egypt all the foresaid terme of 215. yeeres.

THIS being then made plaine, that the Israelites after Iacobs comming downe thither, continued in Egypt 215. yeeres, yet were they not so long in servitude and bondage. 1. Augustine thinketh that they served in Egypt 144. or 145. yeeres, for from the whole summe of 215. yeeres hee onely deducteth 71. yeeres of Iosephs life, after Israel came into Egypt, after whose death hee thinketh their bondage immediately began. But that cannot bee, for not onely Ioseph, but all his brethren also were first dead, Exod. 1.6. of the which Levi being about foure yeere elder than Ioseph, who died at 110. yeere, and Levi at 137. survived Ioseph 23. yeeres: all which time the Israelites were not oppressed with servitude. 2. Rupertus thinketh that the Israelites served 144. yeeres after the death of Ioseph, untill the going forth of the Israelites, so recompensing tenfold the 14. yeeres of Iosephs servitude in Egypt, who was 16. yeere old when hee was sold into Egypt by his brethren, and there served till he was 30. yeere old. But Rupertus is in two things deceived, for Ioseph was not sixteene, as the vulgar Latine corruptly readeth, but 17. yeere old when he was sold into Egypt, Gen. 37.2. so that hee served but 13. yeeres in Egypt, neither was the time of their servitude so long, as is shewed before. 3. Some thinke that after Levi his death, who lived 23. yeere after Ioseph, their affliction began, which continued 121. yeeres. Neither can this be so, for not onely Levi and the rest of Iosephs brethren, but all that generation also died before their servitude and affliction entred, of which generation Pharez being one, supposed to bee one yeere old, when hee went downe with Iacob into Egypt, and to have lived 130. yeeres according to the usuall age then, it will bee found that their affliction indured not an hundred yeeres, if the age of Pharez being supposed to be 130. be deducted from the summe of 215. the full time of the Israelites sojourning in Egypt. See before quest. 12. in chap. 1. Exod.

QUEST. LIX. Moses understandeth all the time of the sojourning of Israel and of their fathers in Egypt and in Canaan.

NOW then for the right understanding of these words of Moses. 1. A double figure called Synecdoche is to be admitted, both in the persons, and in the place, a part being taken for the whole: for not only the sojourning of the Israelites, but of their fathers also, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob must be understood, and not only the sojourning in Egypt, but in Canaan also and other places: Thus the Septuagint very well interprete this place: The dwelling, which the children of Israel dwelt in Egypt, and in the land of Canaan, both they and their fathers, was 430. yeeres: so also Augustine expoundeth it, quaest. 47. in Exod. and Iosephus lib. 2. de Antiquit. Iudaic. cap. 6. 2. Eugubinus doth disdainfully reject this opinion, with this reason, that if it be taken for the time of their sojourning, not only in Egypt, but elsewhere, there will be found to be many more yeeres. Contra. 1. It shall even now appeare that in a precise and strict account, there are just so many yeeres, from the first promise made unto Abraham, when hee came out of Chaldea into Canaan, unto the returne of Israel out of Egypt. 2. This figure Synecdoche, to name part for the whole, is not unusuall in Scripture, as Gen. 35. 26. all the sonnes of Jacob, Benjamin being also reckoned among them, are said to have bene borne in Padan Aram, because most of them were there borne. Iunius.

QUEST. LX. Why the dwelling only of Israel in Egypt is named, the rest being also understood.

THE reasons why their sojourning and dwelling in Egypt is only mentioned, the other being also understood, are these: 1. Lyrano• giveth this reason, because their dwelling in Egypt was the last, and things doe commonly take their denomination from the end. 2. But these reasons rather may be yeilded, first because their sojourning did not only end in Egypt, but there it began, for thither Abraham at his first comming into Canaan was constrained to flee in the time of famine, Gen. 12. 2. there was the longest time of their sojourning, the other Patriarkes at divers times sojourned in Canaan 295. yeeres, and Jacob in Mesopotamia 20. yeeres, but in Egypt Israel continued 215. yeeres. 3. Their habitation in Egypt was more famous than any of the rest, both for the honorable advancement of Ioseph in Egypt, the wonderfull multiplying and increase of the Israelites, and the strange signes and wonders there wrought for their deliverance. Perer.

Some question also there is, when this computation of 430. yeeres should begin. 1. Epiphanius would have them begin, at such time as the Lord told Abraham what should befall his seed, and how hardly they should be intreated: so also Ferus, Pellican. But that cannot be, for both in that place the Lord nameth another summe of 400 yeeres. And S. Paul counteth this space of 430. yeeres from the promise made to Abraham, unto the giving of the Law.

QUEST. LXI. Where the 430. yeeres must take beginning.

2. ZEiglerus in his Commentaries beginneth this terme of 430. yeeres from the tenth yeare after Abrahams comming into Canaan, when he saith the Lord made a covenant with him. But this computation cannot stand. 1. We doe not find that Abraham received any promise about that time, but then, when he had bene ten yeeres in Canaan, Sarah gave unto him his maid Agar; Gen. 16. 2. 2. Also by this account wee shall want ten yeeres of the whole summe of 430. from Abrahams 75. when hee first came into Canaan, unto the 80. yeere of Moses when the Israelites went out, are just 430. yeeres, as is shewed before: if then this terme should begin ten yeeres after, in the 85. yeere of Abraham, wee shall want ten yeeres of 430.

3. Beside, Zeiglerus to make this computation good, committeth apparent errors in Chronology, as that Jacob went downe into Egypt 207. yeeres after the covenant, which was 215. yeeres, and if it began 10. yeeres after, as he reckoneth, then it could be but 205. yeeres; further he saith, that Ioseph died 285. yeeres after the covenant, which cannot be after his owne account, for Ioseph lived 71. yeeres after Iacobs descending into Egypt, being then 39. yeeres old, which two summes of 71. 39. make up the whole age of Ioseph an 110. if then there were but 207. yeeres gone after the covenant made at Iacobs comming into Egypt, then at Iosephs death 71. yeeres after, there were but 278. yeeres runne, not 285. as he collecteth; here then he addeth 7. yeeres too much to make his account agree. 3. Procopius, as Peregrinus collecteth, thinketh that the 430. yeeres should begin at the birth of Isaack. But that cannot bee, for from thence the other summe of 400. yeeres taketh beginning.

4. Genebrard reckoneth them from the time of Iacobs going downe into Egypt, whose opinion is re|futed before, quest. 55.

5. Iunius and Borrhaius account these 430. yeeres from the departure of Abraham out of Vr of the Chaldes, from whence to the birth of Isaack were thirty yeeres, and Iunius supposed that hee stayed 5. yeeres in Haran. Contra. 1. It is not like that Abraham being called of God to goe out of his country, would stay 5. yeeres in Haran, but that he made all haste to obey the calling of God. 2. If the account of 430. yeeres should begin 30. yeeres before Isaacks birth, we shall have 435. yeeres in all; for from the 75. yeere of Abraham, which was but 25. yeeres before the birth of Isaack, untill the time of Israels departure out of Egypt, are just 430. yeeres, as is shewed before, quest. 56.

6. Wherefore the best computation of all is to begin the 430. yeere from the 75. yeere of Abrahams age when hee came into the land of Canaan: both because, while hee remained with his father and kindred in Haran, he could not be said to sojourne, or be a stranger: and for that, if we begin the account before the 75. yeere of Abrahams age, there will arise more than 430. yeeres. Thus Iosephus reckoneth these 430. yeeres, Postquam Abraham in Canaan venit: After Abraham came into the land of Canaan: so also Eusebius: A septuagesimo quinto anno Abrahæ us{que} ad egressum Hebraeorum ex Aegypt• supputan•ur anni quadringenti triginta: From the seventy five yeere of Abraham, unto the going of the Hebrewes out of Egypt, are counted foure hundred thirty yeeres; and this computation Augustine followeth, quaest. 47. in Exod.

QUEST. LXII. When the terme of 430 yeeres ended.

AS we have seene where this terme of 430. yeeres must take beginning, so it is to be considered, when they were to determine and end. 1. Epiphanius hath here a singular conceit by himselfe, who exten|deth these 430. yeeres unto the time of the Israelites entring into the land of Canaan, as Pererius thus collecteth. Epiphanius terminat in eo tempore, quo terram promissionis intrant: Epiphanius doth determine them at that time, when they entred into the land of promise. But this cannot be: for the Israelites continued 40. yeeres in the desert, before they were admitted to the possession of Canaan: (Epiphanius saith they were in the desert 50. yeeres, but he is therein also deceived) if this terme of 40. yeeres be comprehended in the 430. yeeres: it will follow that from Iacobs comming downe into Egypt, untill the Israelites returne from thence, are not above 175. yeeres, which were indeed 215. yeeres, as is shewed before, quest. 56. 2. Therefore these 430. yeeres doe determine and expire, at the very time of the Israelites departure out of Egypt, as Moses here saith: When the 430. yeeres were expired, even the selfe same day departed all the hostes of the Lord out of the land of Egypt. And S. Paul also extendeth these yeeres but unto the giving of the Law in mount Sinai, Gal. 3.17. Thus Eusebius, and Augustine following him, quaest. 47. in Exod. de|fine these yeeres; so also Iun. Simler. Osiander, Pererius, Ferus, with others.

QUEST. LXIII. How the terme of 400. yeeres foretold to Abraham and Moses summe of 430. yeeres, doe agree together.

NOW whereas the Lord telleth Abraham that his seed should be a stranger in a land not theirs, and be evill entreated 400. yeeres, Gen. 15.13. and the same is repeated by S. Stephen, Acts 7.6. that summe of yeeres very well agreeth with this number of 430. for this summe beginneth at

Abrahams first coming into Canaan when he was 75. yeeres old, 25. yeeres before the birth of Isaack: for there the Lord speaketh of the sojourning and hard usage of his seede: and even then the first manifest affliction of Abrahams seede in Isaack began by Ismael of Agar the Egyptian. 2. But from Isaacks birth unto the going downe of Iacob into Egypt are in precise account 220. yeeres, and so the whole time is 405. yeeres from Isaacks birth unto the going out of Israel from Egypt: for if from Abrahams 75. yeere: there are 430. yeeres from Abrahams 100. yeere when Isaack was borne, are 405. yeeres: to make the summe even, the odd 5. yeeres are omitted: which thing is not unusuall in Scripture: as in one place David is said to have reigned in Hebron 7. yeeres, and 6. moneths, 2. Sam 5.5. in another place, the yeeres of his reigne in Hebron, are counted 7. yeere, even, and in Jerusalem 33. yeeres▪ 40. yeere in all, 1. King. 2.11. the odde moneths are omitted. Augustine also hereof thus writeth: Non mirum si quaringentos & quinque annos sumae solidae quadringenes voluit appellare scriptura, &c. No marvell if the Scripture call 405. yeeres in one round summe 400. yeere which useth so to set downe the times, that what is over or under the perfect number is not counted, quæst. 47. in Exod. Hence then both Lyranus and Cajetane are found to bee in an error, who therein following some Hebrewes, doe account but 210. yeeres for the time of the Israelites abode in Egypt, reckoning but 400. yeeres strictly from Isaacks birth unto the departure of Israel out of Egypt. 3. But Procopius would thus reconcile these two summes, he would have both the 400. yeeres and the 430. begin together, and that the Lord saith not, that after 400. yeeres expired, the Israelites should returne, but simply after 400. yeeres, so that the other 30. yeeres also may bee included. M. Calvin also somewhat to the same effect saith, Restabant plures anni quàm quadringenti, nempe viginti, vel circiter: There remained more yeeres than foure hundred, as twenty or thereabout: but because the Lord purposed onely to prepare them unto patience, he defineth not a certaine number of yeeres. But herein is their error, they would extend these 400. yeeres beyond the time of their deliverance out of Egypt: whereas the Lord setting the end of this time saith: The nation whom they shall serve will I judge, and afterward shall they come  with great substance, Gen. 15.14. then immediately after the expiration of these 400. yeeres, the Israelites must come forth of the land of their bondage with great substance.

QUEST. LXIV. When the 400. yeeres prefixed to Abraham must take their beginning.

NOW concerning the beginning of these 430. yeeres, here commeth to be examined and discussed, a singular and private opinion of Zeiglerus, who beginneth the account of these 430. yeeres, from the 10. yeere of Abrahams sojourning in Canaan, 15. yeeres before the birth of Isaac, and he endeth them in the tenth yeere of Moses exile in the land of Midian, where he continued 40. yeeres, when hee saith the captivity of Israel should have ceased: but because Moses would have prevented the time, and delivered Israel ten yeeres before, when he slew the Egyptian, the Lord did punish his presumption with 40. yeeres exile, and deferred the deliverance of Israel 30. yeeres longer, both to fulfill the 40. yeeres of his penance, and because the Lord purposed to appoint no other Captaine of his people, but Moses. Thus we reade that the Lord hath observed this proportion and number of forty at other times, also for the time of penance, as the Israelites wandred 40. yeeres in the wilderness: it rained 40. dayes upon the old world: 40. dayes are set for the repentance of Niniveh: sic Zeigler.

Contra. 1. This terme of 400. yeeres limited for the sojourning and servitude of Abrahams seede, can not begin before Abraham had seede, and therefore not 15. yeeres before the birth of Isaac. 2. Gods purpose and determination altereth not, mans infirmity cannot make the counsell of God of none effect: therefore seeing the Lord, who foreseeeth all things, did set unto Abraham this terme of 400. yeeres, •ee no doubt most faithfully kept his promise, and as he had decreed, so after 400. yeeres expired he delivered his seede from their oppressors. 3. Moses act in killing the Egyptian was an act of faith, not of presumption: as both S. Stephen witnesseth, Acts 7.25. Hee supposed ◇ brethren would have understood, that God by his hand should give them deliverance: as also the Apostle to the Heb. 11.25. By faith Moses when hee was come to age refused to be called the sonne of Pharaohs daughter, and chose rather to suffer adversity with the people of God: and againe vers. 27. By faith he forsooke Egypt, &c. If Moses then of faith shewed him|selfe to be the deliverer of his people, as when he killed the Egyptian, and cares not for the favour and ho|nour of Pharaohs court, then was it not a presumptuous act, for the which he should be punished. 4. And how standeth it with Gods justice to punish all the people of Israel with the captivity of 30. yeeres longer for the sinne and presumption of one man, if Moses had offended and trespassed therein? 5. Nei|ther is that observation of forty perpetuall: neither David for his sinne, nor Peter for his deniall of Christ, nor the incestuous young man among the Corinthians were injoynd any such time of penance: and Ne|buchadnezzars time of repentance farre exceeded this proportion which continued seven yeeres, Dan. 4.20. for true repentance is not measured by the number of dayes, but by the weight of the contrition and sorrow of heart: neither is it found in Scripture, that any one man had 40. dayes penance imposed upon him. There was another reason of the 40. yeeres wandring of Israel in the desert: for according to the time wherein the spies searched the land, which was 40. dayes, they have a yeere set for a day for the pulnishment of the sinne of the spies in raising a slander upon that good land (all but Caleb and Iosuah) and of the people in giving no credit unto them: see Numb. 14.34.

QUEST. LXV. The time of the Hebrewes departure out of Egypt compared with the Chronology of the Heathen.

NOW in the last place it shall bee declared how this time of the departing of Israel agreeth with the •orren computations, according to the Chronology of the Heathen. 1. They therefore observe five notable periods of times, from whence they use to make supputation of their yeeres: from the monarchy of Ninus and Semiramis in Abrahams time: from the floud of Ogyges, and from Inachus, and Ph•r•neus, about the time of the Patriarke Iacob: from the battell of Troy, which fell out in Sampsons dayes, or un|der Hel• the high Priest: from the beginning of the Olympiades which began in the 8. yeere of the reigne of Ahaz: from the building of Rome in the 1. yeere of the seventh Olympiade, which concurrerth with the 16. yeere of the reigne of Hesekiah.

2. According then to these divers kindes of computations, there are also divers opinions concerning the time of Israels departure out of Egypt. Apion the Gramarian a professed adversary to the Jewes, against whom Iosephus wrote two bookes, will have Moses to bring the Israelites out of Egypt, in the time of the seventh Olympiade when the City Carthage was built by the Tyrians in Africa: thus Iosephus reporteth the opinion of Apion in his 2. booke. But this to bee apparantly false Iosephus sheweth, proving that the Temple of Salomon was built 143. yeeres before Carthage, and the Israelites came out of Egypt 480. yeeres before that, 1. King. 6.1. so that their leaving of Egypt was above 600. yeeres before the building of Carthage.

3. As Apion commeth farre short in his computation, so Porphyrus goeth as much beyond: who in the fourth booke of those which hee wrote against the Christians, will have Moses to be before the times of Semiramis, which is a grosse error: for it is without all question, that Abraham was borne under the monarchy of Ninus▪ and from Abrahams birth untill the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt are 505. yeeres, whereof an 100. are counted from Abrahams birth to Isaacs: and 405. from thence unto Israels redemption, as hath beene shewed.

4. Lactantius lib. 4. cap. 5. thinketh that Moses was 900. yeeres before the battell of Troy: whereas it will be found, that he was only 356. yeeres or thereabout elder than those times.

5. Manethon an ancient Writer of the Egyptian affaires maketh Moses more ancient by 393. yeeres▪ than when Danaus went to Argos, that is, about a thousand yeeres before the battell of Troy. But that cannot bee, seeing the Trojan warre is held to have beene in the time of Sampson or Hel•, not above 356. yeeres after the returne of the Hebrewes out of Egypt.

6. Some Christian Writers thinke that the Hebrewes were delivered out of the Egyptian Captivity in the time of Ogyges flood, as Iustinus Martyr, Clemens Alexandrinus, 1. lib. Stromatum Iulian Africanus. But that is not like, for the same Iulian African. by the testimony of divers Heathen Writers sheweth that Ogyges flood was 1020. yeeres before the beginning of the Olympiades. But from the departure of Israel out of Egypt, untill the Olympiades began, which was in the 8. yeere of the reigne of Ahaz, are counted but 760. yeere, or thereabout: so that Moses should bee above two hundred and fifty yeeres after Ogyges flood.

7. This is then the right computation, compared with the Chronology of the Heathen, that the deli|verance of Israel out of Egypt was 356. yeere before the Trojan battell: and 764. yeeres before the Olympiades: 788. yeeres before the building of Rome: 910. yeeres before the Captivity of Babylon: 980. yeeres before the reigne of Cyrus: 1200. yeeres before Alexander the Great: 1496. yeeres before Herod, under whose reigne Christ was borne. And according to the sacred Chronologie, this redemption of Israel from the Egyptian bondage was 2453. yeeres after the creation of the world: 797. yeeres after Noahs flood: 505. yeeres after the death of the Patriarke: Ioseph 480. yeeres before the building of Salomons Temple; and 1536. yeeres before the birth of our blessed Lord and Saviour Christ Jesus. Ex Perer.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. How the Lords holy dayes should be kept.

Vers. 16. IN the first day shall be an holy convocation. The word is mikra, which also signifieth reading: which sheweth how holy and festivall dayes ought to be spent, in assembling the people toget|ther, and in reading and preaching unto them the mercies and benefits of God: Pellican. And this was the use among the people of God, as S. Peter saith: Moses hath of old time, them that preach him in every City, seeing he is read in the Synagogues every Sabbath.

2. Doct. A particular application of our redemption by Christs death needfull.

Vers. 21. CHuse out of every of your households a lambe. God would as it were by a speciall application have every private house and family admonished of this singular benefit and mercy: Calvin: whereby we learne, that it sufficeth not onely to have a generall apprehension of our spirituall redempt|ion, but a particular application is necessary: as the Israelites every one in particular eating of the paschall lambe in their private families, had a proper and particular sense and feeling of the benefit, as they severally did eat and taste of the lambe. This particular application of the redemption of Christ, S Paul sheweth, saying, I live by the faith of the Sonne of God, who hath loved mee and given himselfe for mee, Galath. 2.20.

3. Doct. How the paschall Lambe prefigured Christ.

Vers. 21.12. TAke a lamb and kill the passeover &c. Take a bunch of hyssope and dip it in the bloud, &c. Be|cause Christ was prefigured in the paschall lambe, as is evident Ioh. 9.36. 1. Cor. 5.7. the particular resemblances are to be considered, wherein the lambe prefigured Christ. 1. The lambe was with|out blemish, vers. 5. and Christ was without sinne, and so the unspotted lambe, 1. Pet. 1.19. 2. The lambe must be killed; so Christ was sacrificed for us, 1. Cor. 5.7. 3. As the postes of the house must be sprinkled with the bloud of the lambe; so our hearts must bee dipped by faith in Christs bloud to deliver us from eternall death, as they were from a temporall, Heb. 12.24. 1. Pet. 1.2. 4. As the lambe was to be rosted with fire; so Christ did feele the wrath of his father for our sinnes, being made a curse for us, Galath. 3.13. 5. As they were to eat unleavened bread with the lambe; so wee that eat Christ by faith must study for newnesse of life, 1. Cor. 7.8. 6. As they were to eat it with sower herbes▪ so wee must frame our selves to suffer affliction for the faith. 7. As the Lambe should be eaten whole, so wee must receive the whole doctrine of Christ, omitting nothing, Heb. 1.1, 2, 3, 4. 8. As no stranger was to eat of the lambe, being uncircumcised, so no unbeliever can be partaker of Christ: Piscator.

4. Doct. Divers sorts of men in the visible Church.

Vers. 38. AND a great multitude of sundry sorts of people went out with them. As among the Israelites there were many other people mingled, which were to have no part in the inheritance of Canaan: so there are many hypocrites and carnall men in the visible Church▪ which shall have no part in the Kingdome of God: for many bee called but few are chosen. And as there were fewer companies in that great multitude: the first of those which were fighting men: the second, of weake persons, as wolmen and children: the third, of strangers: the fourth, of their beasts and cattell: so in the Church of God there are, first, such as are strong in the faith: secondly, the weake and fraile: thirdly, Hypocrites, which in outward shew joyne themselves to the Church, as those strangers did: fourthly, carnall and worldly, which may be compared unto beasts. Ferus

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Against reservation of reliques.

Vers. 10. YE shall reserve nothing of it untill the morning. This was commanded to take away all occasion of superstition, lest they might have superstitiously abused these reliques of the paschall lambe: which charge given unto the Israelites may reprove the superstition of those professing Christia[n]ity, which doe reserve the reliques of Saints, and doe fondly yeeld adoration unto them. So in time past a superstitious use was taken up in reserving part of the Sacrament, and carrying it about unto sicke folkes. The Lord therefore foreseeing what inconvenience might arise by such reservations, forbiddeth any thing at all to be kept of the lambe: Iun. in Analys.

2. Confut. That the bread in the Sacrament is not the body of Christ carnally but only a seale and pledge of it.

Vers. 11. FOR it is the Lords Passeover. That is, it did signifie it: for Sacraments are not the things which they represent, but signes and seales of them: Genevens. So in the Gospell the bread is called the body of Christ, being a signe and representation of it: Pellican. So is circumcision called the Lords covenant, Gen. 17.11. yet was it only a signe and seale thereof. Then as neither the lambe was the Passeover it selfe, nor circumcision the covenant it selfe: so it is but weakely inferred by the Romanists upon these words of our Saviour, that the bread should be the very body of Christ.

3. Confut. Against the carnall or raw eating of Christs flesh in the Sacrament.

Vers. 9. EAt not thereof raw. Ferus upon these words hath this note: Crudem comedunt qui tantum astimant id quod viderint, & quia solum panem viderint, solum panem redunt: They eat the lambe raw, which only esteeme that which they see, and because they see nothing but bread, they beleeeve nothing but bread. In which words he seemeth to glance at the Protestants, that doe not beleeeve the bread to be turned into Christs flesh, and yet they beleeeve that there is more present than bread, that the very flesh of Christ is exhibited to the faith of the worthy receiver. But upon this point Pellicans note is more agreeable: Non crudus, id est Christus non est carnaliter, substantialiter vel sensibiliter comedendus: Christ the paschall lambe is not to be eaten raw; that is, carnally, substantially, sensibly. For who may be better said to eat Christ raw, they which deny the carnall presence of Christs body, or they which hold that they doe eat with their mouth and teeth the very flesh, body and bones of Christ? they most properly may bee said to eat Christ raw: both in respect of their owne opinion, of the carnall presence, and for that they come not prepared with a true lively faith to the Sacrament, but with an erroneous perswasion. All they therefore that come unprepared, and so doe eat and drinke unworthily, may be said to eat Christ raw: for as raw flesh is offensive to the stomacke, and hee may bee said to eat his owne death: so they that eat and drinke in the Sacrament unworthily, are said by the Apostle to eat and drinke their owne damnation, 1. Cor. 11.28.

4. Confut. Against the Anabaptists that allow no allegories in the old Testament.

Vers. 46. YE shall not breake a bone of him. In that the Apostle, Ioh. 19. applieth this unto Christ, it is evident that he was the true Lambe of God, shadowed and prefigured by the paschall lambe, and therein divers wayes represented and resembled, as is before shewed doct. 3. This therefore maketh against the Anabaptists, which will not have any proofes alleaged out of the old Testament, for confirmation of any thing in the new: and take away the use and explication of the types and figures of the old Testament, allowing no sense of any place, beside the historicall and literall sense: whereas it is evident, that Saint Paul doth allegorically apply the histories of the old Testament, as that of Sarah and Hagar; Galath. 4. and the paschall lambe he maketh a figure of Christ, 1. Cor. 5.7. Iun. in Analys.

6. Places of morall use.

1. Observ. To cut off the occasion of sinne.

Vers. 16. IN any case yee shall put away leaven the first day out of your houses. As they were straightly charged not to eat unleavened bread, so they must also avoid the very occasion, lest they might trespasse unawares. So wee must not only flee from manifest sinnes, but beware of every occasion, as our Saviour bid his Apostles take heed of the leaven of the Pharisies. There is another kind of leaven of corrupt manners, as the Apostle sheweth, 1. Cor. 5.7. Both these kindes of leavens, we must not only forbear to eat our selves, but we must cast them out of our houses: wee must both abhorre them in our selves, and remove all occasions which any might stumble at: Simler. and so, as the Apostle saith, abstaine from all appearance of evill, 1. Thess. 5.22.

2. Observ. Favour in the lender toward the borrower commeth of God.

Vers. 36. AND the Lord gave the people favour. As the Egyptians affections were inclined by the Lord to lend, or rather to give unto the Israelites what they asked: so when a man is driven to borrow of his neighbour, if he finde favour in his eyes, he is to acknowledge it as a mercie from God: if the Lord doe shut up his affection toward him, he must thinke, that some sinne of his hath made a barre and stopped the way: Pellican. Thus was the heart of righteous Iob wrought toward the poore: If I restrained the poore of their desire, or caused the eyes of the widow to faile, Iob. 31.27.

3. Observ. God can turne mens affections to hatred, or favour, as it pleaseth him.

AGaine, as it is said in the Psalm. 105.25. He turned their heart, so that they hated his people: like as the Lord so worketh, that the patience of his servants is tried by the disfavour and hatred of men: so he can turne their affections to love and favour. This teacheth us, that wee should depend upon God, and when we see the countenance of any to be estranged from us, that wee pray unto God, who hath the rulling of all mens hearts, to incline their heart toward us: as Iacob prayeth for his sonnes, God almighty give you grace in the sight of the man, Gen. 43.14. Calvin.

4. Observ. We must be as pilgrims and dwellers in tents in this world.

Vers. 37. THEy tooke their journey from Ramesis to Succoth: Succoth signifieth tabernacles: So they that goe out of the Egypt of this world to the heavenly Canaan, must dwell in tabernacles here. Pellican. We must be as pilgrims and strangers in this world, 1. Pet. 2.11. and the Apostle saith▪ that here we have no abiding City, Heb. 13.14.

5. Observ. No unbelievers to be admitted to the Sacraments.

Vers. 43. NO stranger shall eat thereof. That is, no uncircumcised person, that is a stranger from the faith of Israel: so neither are the mysteries or Sacraments of religion to be given unto Infidels, or prophane persons. Calvin. As our Saviour will not have us to cast holy things unto dogs, or pearles among swine, Matth. 7.2.

6. Observ. The Gospell is to be professed not for lucre or honour sake, but for love to the truth.

Vers. 45. AN hired servant shall not eat thereof. As they which served the Israelites only for their hire and wages, were not true members of Israel, and therefore not fit to bee partakers of their mysteries, for they joyned themselves unto them, rather for a reward, than for love of their religion: So neither are they true professors of the Gospell, which doe professe the same for any love of lucre or pre|ferment, rather than of conscience, and good will to the truth. Pellican. Likewise, it sheweth, that neither is God to be served onely for hope of reward, but for love and true filiall affection: for as they which obey for feare, are servants, and not children; so they which doe all for hope of reward, are hirelings and mercenaries, rather than domesticall: God therefore is to be served and loved for his owne sake, without any other respect.

CHAP. XIII.

1. The Method and Argument.

IN this Chapter, there is a prescription of certaine solemne rites to be observed of the people, in remembrance of their deliverance out of Egypt, unto verse 17. and a de|scription of their manners of proceeding in their journey, to verse 22.

In the prescription two things are enjoyned the people; the annuall keeping of the Passeover, and the consecrating of the first borne: which are briefly propoun|ded, vers▪ 2. and 3. and afterward more at large declared.

In the ample declaration: 1. The Passeover is prescribed: both the place where they should keepe it, in the land of Canaan, vers. 5. the time, for seven dayes, vers. 6. the manner, with unleavened bread, verse 7. the use, which is double, in respect of their children, to instruct them, vers. 8. of themselves, to be a signe of remembrance unto them, vers. 9. the perpetuity, they must keepe it yeerely.

2. Concerning the consecration of the first borne: the place is assigned where they shall set them apart, when they are come into the land of Canaan, vers. 11. what they shall set apart, all their first borne of man and beast, vers. 12. with an exception of two kindes, of the asse among the uncleane beasts, which must be redeemed or killed, and the first borne of man, which must be simply redeemed, vers. 13. then the reason of this institution is shewed, because the Lord for his peoples sake killed all the first borne in Elgypt, v. 14, 15. Lastly, the end of this institution is to call to their remembrance that the Lord brought them out of Egypt, vers. 16.

Then followeth the second part of the Chapter, shewing the proceeding and going forward of the Israelites in their journey: wherein is declared: 1. Which way they went, not by the way of the Philistines, and why but by the way of the wilderness, vers. 17, 18. 2. How they went out, well appointed, vers. 18. 3. What they carried with them, Ioseph's bones, vers. 19. 4. Whither they removed, unto Etham, vers. 20. 5. How they were guided both by day and night, vers. 21.22.

2. The divers readings.

*Vers. 3. Out of the house of bondmen. I.V.A.P. rather than, of bondage. G.S.L.B.G. the word is ghabadi, of servants: though the sense much differ not in either.

*Vers. 5. And it shall be when the Lord hath brought thee. I.A.P. C. S. not, when the Lord hath brought thee. B.G. cum caeter: for here vehajah, it shall be, is wanting.

*Vers. 6. And in the seventh day shall be a feast unto the Lord. A. P. cum caeter: not, and in the seventh day being an holy day to the Lord. I. as though the meaning should be, that they should eat unleavened bread upon the seventh day also: for that is said before, in that they are commanded seven dayes to eat unleavened bread: but the seventh day rather is enjoined to be a principall feast day unto the Lord, <◇> chap. 12.16.

*Vers. 8. For this cause did the Lord this unto me, when he brought me. I.V.C. or, that he brought me, &c. S. This is that which the Lord did unto me, where &c. L. but here the word baghabur, for, or, because, is omitted: this is done, because of that which the Lord did. A.P.B.G. This last seemeth to be the best reading. See the 6. question following.

*Vers. 12. Thou shalt s^ot over unto the Lord. I.V. cause to passe. A.P.C.H. separate. L.S. set apart. G. appoint. B. The first rather best agreeth: that is, he shall deliver it out of his hand unto the Lord, as having now no more power over it.

*Vers. 15. Therefore I doe sacrifice unto Iehovah. B.G. cum caeter: macte. I doe kill. I. but the other word is more fit, because things holy unto God are rather said to be sacrificed than killed: Zabach more usually is taken to sacrifice.

*Vers. 13. Thou shalt cut off his necke. I.A. better than kill it. C. L. or, breake his necke. B. G.P.V. gharaph signifieth to strike off the necke, as Deut. 21.4.6.

Vers. 18. The children of Israel went up well appointed, or girded, P. not, armed. A.B.G.C.L.V. for whence should they have so much armour? nor, in battell order. I. that is, five in a ranke. I. for the word signifieth fived: they would so have taken up a great length of ground: nor, in the fifth generation. S. for that is contrary to the Lords promise, Gen. 15.16. that they should come forth in the fourth generation: the word chamushim is derived of chomesh, taken for the fift ribbe, 2. Sam. 2.18. The meaning then is, that their loynes were girded up, as they were commanded to eat the Passeover, chap. 12.11. and so they went forth as appointed for their journey.

3. The explanation of difficult questions.

QUEST. I. How the first borne were accounted that were consecrate unto God.

Vers. 2. Sanctifie unto the Lord all the first borne. 1. What the Lord meaneth by the first borne, is expressed in the next words, that which openeth the wombe: so that here the first borne are so accounted in respect of the mother, but in the right of the first borne there was respect had unto the father as Iacob calleth Ruben the beginning of his strength: for Ioseph, though he were Rachels first borne, yet was he not Iacobs: but here that is called the first borne which openeth the wombe of his mother: as Christ, according to this law, was the first borne of Mary: Simler. Though Ioseph her espoused husband had, as some thinke, other children by a former wife; so that if a man had divers wives, the first borne of every one was holy unto God. 2. It is added, among the children of Israel, as well of man as of beast: because those beasts are excluded, which were wilde and not serviceable among them. Calvin.

QUEST. II. In what sense the first borne are said to be the Lords.

Vers. 2. FOr it is mine. 1. The first borne are said to be the Lords, not onely by a common right, as all things are said to be the Lords, the earth and the fulnesse thereof: 2. Nor yet only because the encrease of every thing is thankfully to bee acknowledged to proceed and come of God: Pellin. 3. But the first borne of Israel both of man and beast were the Lords by a peculiar right, because he preserved them in Egypt, when all the first borne of Egypt were destroyed: Iun. in Analys. 4. God might have commanded all to be offered unto him, but he would not challenge or expect of them his full right and due, lest it might have seemed grievous unto them, but only hee requireth that, which hee had more specially preserved. Ferus.

QUEST. III. Why the law of the Passeover is repeated.

Vers. 3. THerefore no leavened bread shall be eaten. This institution of the passeover is now againe repeated, and the caveat concerning leavened bread is often inculcate and urged: 1. Both because mans corrupt and crooked nature had need to be often admonished, being ready to forget the precepts of God, and to wrest and deprave them. Ferus. 2. As also to put them in minde of that, which was signified hereby, to take heed both of the leaven of corrupt doctrine, and of corrupt manners: Pellican.

3. The Hebrewes give this reason of this double institution, because of the double sense of the Law, one the plaine and open sense, the other, the hid and secret sense: which reason we also approve, but not in their meaning, which wrest the Scripture with fabulous glosses and ridiculous collections: but this wee affirme, that in the passeover was a double sense, the one concerning that outward ceremony, which belonged to the paschall lambe, the other hath relation unto Christ, the true paschall lambe by whose blood we are redeemed. Simler.

QUEST. IV. Whether Abib were the proper name of a moneth.

Vers. 4. THis day came ye out in the moneth Abib. 1. Some take this to be no proper name of the moneth, but a description of it by the fruit, that began to ripe then, and so they translate, Mense nova/rum frugum▪ the moneth of new fruit: so the Chaldee, Septuagint, Latine, Pagni. Simler. Pelican. and M. Calvin giveth this reason, because the Hebrewes had no proper names of their moneths, but such as 2000. yeere after they borrowed of the Chaldes. Contra. 1. It was not 2000. yeeres untill the Captivity of Babel, when the Hebrewes borrowed those Chaldee names, nor full out 1000. as is shewed before, quest. 46. in chap. 12.2. And further, that other names of the moneths are found in Scripture, beside the Chaldee names, as Zif, the second moneth, Ethanim the seventh, Bul the eight, is likewise declared afore, quest. 4. in chap. 12.3. And if Abib were here no proper name, it would bee uncertaine which moneth hee meaneth, the first or the second, for in both there were ripe eares, of barley in the first, and of wheate in the next, for they were to offer of their first fruits also in the feast of weekes; Levit. 23.20. Numb. 28.26. 2. Yet they are deceived that tooke this moneth Abib, for the same with the moneth Ab, which answereth to our

July, as Pagnine: for it is evident by the keeping of the passeover, on the 14. day of the first moneth, that the Israelites came out in the first moneth.

3. Therefore it is more probable that Abib is here the proper name of the first moneth, so called because then the corne was spindled and began to be eared, for Abib signifieth the spindle with the eare, as Exod. 1.9.3.1. Iun. Vatab. Not that the fruit was ripe this moneth, but it began to flower and shew: Calvin. And thus the Hebrewes in all their feasts had relation unto the fruits of the ground: the passeover was kept, when the corne eared, Pentecost when it was ripe, and the feast of the Tabernacles in the end of the yeere, when they had gathered in the fruits of the yeere: Simler. And this moneth when all things began to revive and spring, was answerable unto the state of the Israelites, who now were revived by their joyfull deliverance from the winter, and boistrous stormes of Egypt. Borrh.

QUEST. V. Why the Israelites are charged to keepe the Passeover in the land of Canaan and not before.

Vers. 5. Now when the Lord hath brought thee into the land of the Cananites. 1. Hence it is evident, that the Israelites were not bound to keepe the passeover in the wilderness, neither do we reade, that they kept it more than once there, in the second yeere, Numb. 9. and the next passeover was kept under Iosuah, Ios. 5. eight and thirty yeeres after. Simler. The reason whereof might be this, because they were not circumcised after they came out of Egypt for the space of 40. yeeres, and the law was, that no uncircumcised person should eat of the passeover: this also signifieth that we shall not keepe our full and perfect passeover, till we come into our heavenly Canaan: Pellican. 2. The reasons why they are charged to keepe the passeover in that plentiful land, that abounded with milke and hony, was partly to stirre them up to be thankfull unto God for his benefits and abundant liberality. Calvin. As also to admonish them, that they should remember God in their prosperity, and take heed, that their full estate did not make them forget him. 3. But now in that so fruitfull and pleasant a country, as Palestina was, is become barren and desolate, this judgement hath befallen the Jewes and their country for their sinnes: Pellican. 4. Five nations only are here named, that inhabited Canaan, the Cananites, Hittites, Amorites, Hivites, Jebusites, but the rest also are understood. Iun.

QUEST. VI. Whether the keeping of the passeover was the cause of their deliverance, or that the cause of the other.

Vers. 8. Because of that which the Lord did unto me. 1. Some doe make this the sense of the place: and read thus: For this did the Lord doe so unto mee. Septuagint, Chaldee, Iun. Vatab. and would have this to be the meaning, that God did shew all these wonders in Egypt, and deliver them from thence, to the end that they should keepe a memoriall of them. 2. Others doe reade thus, as is set downe, supplying the word which: and make this the reason of keeping the passeover, because the Lord delivered them out of Egypt: Simler. Calvin, Latine, Genevens. Pagine, Montan. And this seemeth to be the more agreeable exposition: both for that the cause of a thing goeth before the use thereof: the wonders which the Lord did were first done, and then the passeover commanded in remembrance thereof, this was because of the other, rather than the other because of this. And againe, the children aske not a reason of those things which the Lord did for them; but they demand the cause of their service, which they performe unto God, as is shewed, chap. 12.26. and chap. 13.14. Piscator.

QUEST. VII. How these things should be as signets upon their hands.

Vers. 9. It shall be for a signe upon thine hand, &c. 1. This phrase is not only used as a similitude, that they should alway have the benefits of the Lord in remembrance, as a thing alwayes in their sight, and that the passeover should as a signet on their head and as a frontlet betweene their eyes call to their remembrance their deliverance out of Egypt. Sic Simler. Pellic. though in the Proverbs this phrase is used in that sense, by way of similitude, as Prov. 1.9. They shall be as ornaments to thy head, and as chaines to thy necke: and chap. 6.21. Bind them to thy heart, and tye them to thy necke. And by these three to put it on the hands, and forehead, and to have it in the mouth, are signified the faith in the heart, the confession in the mouth, and the operation of the hands, whereby we expresse our thankfulness unto God: Borrh. 2. Yet this is not all the meaning of this place, but it is like also that they used some externall signe, as in wearing signets upon their hands, and frontlets upon their browes, to put them in minde of the Law of God: as for the same cause they were commanded to make fringes upon their garments, Numb. 15.38. And as they were commanded to write the Law upon the postes of their doores, so also to binde them ⟨◇⟩ signets to their hands, Deut. 6.6. for like as the Idolatrous nations did weare earings and frontlets in holnour of their Idols, as the Romane Gentry were knowne by their rings, and their Priests and their wives by their tutuli, their foretops; so the Lord would have the Israelites to use these ornaments as ensignes of their profession: Simler. Thus M. Calvin approving the first exposition, yet assenteth also unto this; if any man thinke that Moses alludeth unto those, Qui tarditatis suae conscii subsidia memoriae sibi conficiunt, non repugno: Which because of their dulnesse doe use these things as helpes to their memory, I will not gainsay. Iunius also giveth this note, Deut. 6.8. upon these words, Thou shalt bind them as a signe to thine hand: Typus accurata observationis atque perpetuae: This was a type of the exact and continuall keeping of the Law: Therefore there is no inconvenience to thinke, that as they used fringes upon their garments, so also frontlets and signets that should be alwayes in their eyes to put them in minde of the Law of God; as reverend Beza very well noteth also: Erat hic ritus (quem postea Iudaei suis superstitionibus contami[n]arunt) a Domino constitutus ut esset veluti ⟨in non-Latin alphabet⟩ legis & beneficiorum: This rite (which afterward the Jewes corrupted with their superstitions) was appointed of God, that it should be as a remembrance and monu[m]ent of the Law, and of the benefits which the Lord had bestowed upon them; Annot. in Matth. 23.5. 3. Yet this being admitted, I cannot see how the Jewes out of this place, can prove that use and custome of writing some part of the law in scroules of parchment, and so binding them to their foreheads, and to the wrests of their hands, as they doe at this day: Simler. For whereas they write in those parchments certaine sacred lections which they call parashoth; Beza: which are the foure places, where mention is made of these signes upon their hands and frontlets betweene their eyes: two out of this Chapter, vers. 9. and 16. two out of Deut. chap. 6.8. and chap. 11.18. what warrant can they shew for the excerpting of these foure texts, rather than any other? this seemeth then to be a tradition of their owne without any ground in Scripture. * 4. But that superstitious use of the Jewes, who doe place the greatest part of their religion in carrying about with them, their tephillim, and zizim, their frontlets and fringes, as they call them, thinking that thereby they are preserved from evill spirits, hath no shew of any warrant at all in the Scripture, which Pharisaeicall superstition is reproved by our Saviour, Matth. 23.5. for while their chiefe care was to bind such monuments unto their foreheads and hands, in the meane time the law went out of their hearts. The like superstition hath much prevailed in time past among Christians, who by writing some parcell of Scripture, as the beginning of the Gospell of S. Iohn, and by hanging it about their necke, or an Agnus Dei, and such like, thought themselves sufficiently garded against spirituall as[saults]: Simler. 5. Augustine is farre wide in the application of this ceremony; for upon these words, It shall be as a signe upon their hands, thus collecteth, Super manus, id est, super opera: that is, upon their workes: and so inferreth hereupon, that fides praeponenda est operibus, that faith is to bee preferred before workes▪ which assertion and conclusion of his is most true, yet not proper or peculiar to this place: August. quaest. 48. in Exod.

QUEST. VIII. Of the redeeming of the first borne of uncleane beasts.

Vers. 13. EVery first borne of an asse, &c. 1. The first borne, which were peculiar unto God, were either of men, or beasts: the firstlings of the beasts were either cleane or uncleane, the cleane were to be sacrificed, the uncleane were either to be redeemed, or else to be beheaded, as the asse and other beasts of service, but some could not be redeemed, but they must be killed, as the dog: Simler. 2. By the first borne of the asse all other uncleane beasts are signified, this kind is put for the rest, because there were great store of them in that country. Iun. 3. The neck must be stricken off, lest that which was holy unto God, should bee put to prophane uses. Iun. and by the horror of this sight to testifie the ingratitude of the owner of the beast, who had rather his beast should be killed, than redeemed. Pellican. This breaking or cutting off the necke, did signifie also the hard and stiffe necke of the people, which in time the Lord would bend and breake: Borrh. 4. God would have the first borne of uncleane beasts also to be peculiar to him, although they were not ordained for sacrifice, yet were they otherwise necessary and profitable for mans use: and to let them understand, that to God nothing was uncleane, which he had made: but he saw all things to be exceeding good. Pellican.

QUEST. IX. Of the conditions required in the first borne of cleane beasts.

Vers. 12. The males shall bee the Lords, &c. 1. Three things are required in the first borne of beasts, which should be offered unto God. 1. That they should bee of cleane beasts, for it was not lawfull to present any uncleane thing unto God: Vatab. 2. Then the first borne, to acknowledge God the giver and author of all things which we have: Pellican. 3. They must be males, because the best and most perfect things must be given unto God: and this was a type of that perfect man Christ Jesus, whereunto the Apostle alludeth, when he saith, Till we all meet together, &c. unto a perfect man and unto the measure of the age of the fulnesse of Christ, Ephes. 4.13. Borrh. 2. Elsewhere in the law there are three other rules set downe to be observed in the consecration of the first borne: as first, that the first borne should bee selven dayes with the damme, and upon the eight day it should bee given unto God, Exod.22.30. which time was set both to prevent the fraud, which might bee used, in offering things soone taken from the damme, which were of no use nor service, and so the Lord should be defrauded: also in this perfixed time of 8. dayes, there was a correspondency to the law of circumcision, which was limited to the eight day, Gen. 17.12. Calvin. Secondly, in voluntary oblations, they were forbidden to dedicate unto the Lord any of the first borne, because it was the Lords already, Levit, 27.26. which was to prevent, and to meet with mens hypocrisie, that would pretend devotion in offering somewhat unto God, but yet would give him nothing, but that which was his owne already: Thirdly, they were commanded, Neither to doe any worke with the first borne bullocke, nor to sheare their first borne sheepe: Deut.15.19. this was commanded to stay mens covetousnesse, that although they would not defraud the Lord of his first borne, yet would take so much profit of it as they could: therefore they are charged to offer unto God his first borne without any diminution, neither to present a first borne bullocke, worne out with labour or a shorne sheepe. Calvin.

Page 151

QUEST. X. Of the law of redeeming the first borne of men.

Vers. 13. Likewise the first borne among thy sonnes shalt thou buy out with money. 1. The reason of this exception was, both because it was an impious thing to offer any humane sacrifice unto God: Simler. such were the impious sacrifices of the Heathen to consecrate their sonnes through the fire unto their abominable Idols, which the Lord forbiddeth his people to doe: That they should not give of their children to Moloch, Lev. 20.2. Another reason was, because the Lord had determined that the Levites should be consecrate to his peculiar service in stead of the first borne. Calvin. 2. There are two kinds of exchanges made for the first borne, one was for that time only, when the Levites were taken for the Lord, in stead of the first borne; as the males of the Levites from one moneth old being 22000. were gi|ven unto God out of all Israel, for their first borne, which came to 22270. persons: and the odde 270. persons were redeemed for money, every one being set at 5. shekels, Numb. 3.47. The other redemption was perpetuall, which was made with money: for every one of their first borne, they were to give five shekels, Numb. 18.16. 3. The first borne also were two wayes to be redeemed: one was peculiar unto the first borne, to redeeme them with money: the other was common, not only unto the first borne, but unto all males which should be borne: that the mother at the time of her purifying should offer a lambe, or a paire of turtle doves, or of young pigeons, Levit. 2.6.8. but this offering served rather for the purifying of the mother, than for the consecrating of the child. Both these lawes were fulfilled in the birth of our Saviour Christ, for both hee was presented unto God as the first borne, and his mother brought an oblation according to the law, Luk. 2.23, 24. Ferus. 4. There were also two kindes of consecrating the first borne, the one wherein the Lord had a right unto them, as unto the first borne of cleane beasts, which were to be sacrificed, in which case the first borne were to be redeemed: the other when they were consecrate unto Gods speciall service in the tabernacle, as Annawowed Samuel unto God, or to a more strict kind of life, as Sampson tooke upon him the vow of a Nazarite; and in this case there was no redemption allowed: Ferus. 5. And as the first borne were thus to be redeemed: so there was a generall redemption of all the people of Israel, who were every one to pay from twenty yeere old and above halfe a shekel, Exod. 30.13. which was as it were their acknowledgement or recognition money, that they were the Lords people, and under his protection: Calvin. That as the Levites were taken to redeeme the first borne in Israel, so all Israel in respect of other nations, were as the Lords first borne, as they are called, Exod. 4.23.

QUEST. XI. The spirituall application of the law of the first borne unto Christ.

NOW concerning the spirituall application of this law of the first borne: 1. It calleth unto our mind, what wee are all by nature, even the children of wrath and of destruction, without the mercie of God: like as the Israelites had beene all the children of death, as well as the first borne of Egypt, if the Lord had not in mercy spared them. 2. We are againe to consider, how we are delivered from the wrath of God, and redeemed from hell and destruction, even by the first borne of God Christ Jesus, who was conse|crate unto God, and made a sacrifice of atonement for us: who was indeed the first borne of God in these three respects: First, because he is the only begotten Sonne of God from the beginning, called therefore the first borne of every creature, Coloss. 1.15. Secondly, as he tooke upon him our nature, and was borne of the Virgin Mary, so he was also her first borne, Matth. 1.25. Thirdly, he was the first that rose out of the grave, and made a way unto everlasting life, and therefore by the Apostle he is called the first borne of the dead, Coloss. 1.17. And as the first borne was first set apart, and then sacrificed unto God: so Christ was separate from sinners, Heb. 7.26. as the unspotted Lambe of God, holy and acceptable, and then made a perfect oblation of himselfe for the sinnes of his people, Heb. 7.27. Osiander.

QUEST. XII. Whether the nearest way from Egypt to Canaan were by the Philistims country.

Vers. 17. GGd carried them not by the way of the Philistims country, though it were neerer. That the way out of Egypt into Palestina thorow the land of the Philistims was neerer, doth evidently appeare: 1. Because Gerara and Gaza, which were Cities of the Philistims, were part of the land of Canaan, as it is bounded, Gen. 10.19. and Ios. 13.5. The five principall Cities of the Philistims, Azzah, Ashdod, Askelon, Gath, Ekron, are counted of the Cananites: the Philistims country then bordering upon Canaan, and being a part thereof, was the readiest passage into Canaan. 2. Isaack being purposed to goe into Egypt, because of the famine, went first to Gerara, as being in the way, where he was stayed by the Lords speciall commandement, and forbidden to goe into Egypt. 3. Beside, Ab. Ezra affirmeth that from Canaan into Egypt is not above ten dayes journey. But Philo lib. de vita Mosis writeth, that the utmost bounds of Canaan, are but three dayes journey from Egypt: which seemeth to bee more probable: for the other way which the Israelites went from Horeb to Cadesh barnea, to fetch a compasse by the moun|taines of Edom, was but an eleven dayes journey, Deut. 1.2. 4. This also doth further appeare, because the other way which the Israelites tooke, was thorow the great and terrible wilderness, Deut. 8.16. thorow the which if the Lord had not beene their guide, they could not have found the way: in comparison whereof, the other was the more compendious and easie journey. Ex Pererio.

QUEST. XIII. Why the Lord consulteth to prevent dangers.

Vers. 17. FOR God said, lest the people repent when they see warre. God could if it had pleased him have carried his people the neerest way, even thorow the midst of their enemies country: but God doth not alwayes shew his omnipotency, and extraordinary power, whereas ordinary meanes may be used: 1. Because the Lord, where no necessity is, will not infringe the law of nature, and ordinary course of things, which he hath set: Non sunt sine necessitate multiplicanda miracula: Miracles are not to be multiplied without cause: Pellican. 2. Rationem sequi voluit, quae populi infirmitati esset commodior; Hee would follow a way, which was best agreeable to the infirmity of the people: Calvin. who could not so well depend immediatly upon God, as when they saw ordinary meanes before them. 3. And by this the Lord shewed the tender care which he had over his people, omitting nothing for their good: Calvin. 4. And this was done to teach us, that wee should in every enterprise follow the ordinary course, and use the meanes ap|pointed: Iun. as Augustine well collecteth upon this place: Hinc ostenditur omnia fieri debere quae consilio rectè fieri possunt, ad evitanda qua adversa sunt, etiam cum Deus apertissimè adjutor est: Hereby it is shewed that all things ought to be done, which can be well compassed by counsell, to avoide all dangers, yea when God apparantly helpeth: quaest.40. in Exod. So Moses though God were their guide, yet is desirous of H/babs company to direct them their way in the wilderness, Numb. 10.29. And for the same cause they sent spies before to search out the land, Deut. 1.22. when as notwithstanding they were assured that the Lord would give them that land. Iun.

QUEST. XIV. Whether the like danger of warre, feared with the Philistims, did not befall the Israelites with Amaleke.

LEst the people repent when they see warre. 1. The Lord speaketh here doubtfully, not that hee was ignorant what would fall out, but he speaketh after the manner of men, taking upon him the person of a wise man, as consulting prudently and providently to meet with all occurrent dangers. As also by this manner of speech, shewing that there is no repugnancy betweene Gods prescience and mans free will in such things, that there is no necessity imposed upon it: Thostat. 2. But it will be objected, that this in|convenience fell out in their other journey: for the Amalekites did encounter with the Israelites. For answer whereunto it is to be considered, that the case is much unlike, betweene that battell with the A|malekites, and the encountring of the Philistims: 1. Because the Philistims would presently have set upon them, but they did not meet with the Amalekites till forty dayes after their departure out of Egypt, for the next mansion or staying place, when they went from Rephidim, where Amaleke fought with them, was in the wilderness of Sinai, Numb. 33.15. and to Sinai they came 47. dayes after their comming out of Egypt: for in the third day, after which was the 50. day, the law was given them in Sinai. 2. Before they had this combat with Amaleke, they had experience of Gods assistance, both in the destruction of the Egyptians in the red sea, and of his mercie in sending them Manna from heaven, and water out of the Rocke, whereby they were confirmed against their enemies: this experience should they have wanted, if they had gone the other way. 3. Now if they should have purposed to flee from Amaleke, they could not, because they had the sea on their backs, which would have beene no let unto them to escape from the Philistims, if they had beene afraid of them. 4. The Amalekites did but set upon the Israelites by the way, and cut off the hindmost and feeblest of them, Numb.

25.18. but if they should have gone thorow the middest of the Philistims countrey, they should all have beene in danger; they were also a stranger and more warlike people than the Amalekites.
Perer.

QUEST. XV. Of the reasons why the Lord lead his people about by the wilderness.

The reasons then, why the Lord thought good to lead his people about, partly here and in other places of Scripture expressed, are these: 1. Because he would not yet put his people (being weake, and not confident upon the Lords helpe) to such hard combats, as they were like to have with the Philistims: but first he would teach them and prepare them, even as the Eagle first teacheth her young ones to flie, before they altogether forsake the nest, and trust to their wings: So Moses saith, hee led him about and taught him, as an Eagle stirreth up her nest flattereth over her birds, Deut. 32.11. Like as the infant first is fed with pappe, before hee eat strong meat, and as a souldier first exerciseth himselfe with the weapon at home, before he goe to battell against his enemy: so the Lord would have his people first exercised and prepared before they should bee employed in the Lords battels against the Canaanites: Perer. 2. Another reason is here touched, lest they might have repented and turned backe into

Page 153

Egypt: for if afterward having no such occasion, yet they often purposed to have retired into Egypt, much more, now the way being so ready and easie to returne: Simler. 3. Therefore the Lord to cut off all such purposes, and after thoughts of theirs, did lead them thorow the red sea, that it might have stopped their flight backe againe into Egypt: Ferus. 4. Beside, the sinne of the Amorites, and of the other Canaanites, was not yet full, and therefore the Lord purposed to bring his people about and to stay till their wickednesse was come to their height: Simler. 5. The Lord also would have the Philistims spared, both because of their kindnesse shewed to the Patriarkes: Pellic. as also to keepe them in store for the exercising of his people, and chastising of them, when they transgressed: Ferus, Rupertus. 6. If they had gone the neerer way by the Philistims countrey, the Egyptians might more easily have overtaken them, and joyning with other nations have put them in greater danger: Calvin. 7. Further, then the Lord had not gotten himselfe such honour in the overthrow of the Egyptians in the red sea, if the Israelites had not gone that way. 8. But the chieftest reasons of all were these two, that the Lord might shew his wonderfull and miraculous workes in feeding and leading his people in the wilderness, and that he might try and prove them, whether they would be obedient: both these reasons are shewed, Deut. 8.2. Thou shalt remember the way which the Lord thy God led thee forty yeeres in the wilderness, for to humble thee, and to prove thee, what was in thine heart, whether thou wouldest keepe his commandements or no, &c. he made thee hungry and fed thee with Manna, which thou knewest not, &c. thy rayment waxed not old upon thee, neither did thy foote swell those forty yeeres.
Perer.

QUEST. XVI. Whether the Israelites came up armed, or five in a ranke.

Vers. 18. And the children of Israel went up well appointed, &c. 1. Here we refuse the translation of the Septuagint, that they went up 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, in the fift generation: for howsoever some goe about to justifie this translation, because they came out in the fifth hundred yeere, foure hundred and thirty yeeres being already expired, as Augustine, or in counting five generations from Iacob; Levi, Coath, Amram, Moses, and Iacob himselfe to make the fift: as Augustine also quaest. 44. in Exod. or in making the computation by Iudah, where we have five generations, Pharez, Ezrom, Aram, Aminadab, Naasson, who was the Prince of the tribe of Iudah, when the Israelites came out of Egypt, as hee is named among the Princes, Numb. 7.

though, if the count be made by Levi, there are but foure generations, from the comming of Israel into Egypt, and their going out: Coath, Amram, Aaron, Eliezer; who divided the land: Hierom. epist. 125. Notwithstanding these excuses and devices, the interpretation of the Septuagint is neither here agreeable to the Hebrew, which hath not the word (doth) or any such that signifieth a generation, and chamushim signifieth quinque, five, not quinta, the fift in the singular, as Hierome well obser|veth in the foresaid place: neither is it consonant to the Scripture, which saith, they should returne into Canaan in the fourth generation, Gen. 15.16. for from Coath to Eleazer, who helped to divide the land, Iosuah 14. are foure generations.

2. Neither doe I approve their opinion, that read they went up armed: for, as Oleaster gathereth, it is not like that the Egyptians would suffer them to have any armour: and they being but servants in Elgypt, how should they get so much armour? If they say, as Pererius answereth (to justifie the Latine translation herein) that when they asked of the Egyptians their jewels, they might receive of them ar|mour likewise, it is not like that they would cumber themselves with such carriage, but rather take the most precious things: beside, it doth more set forth Gods glory, that the people were defended having no weapons or armour, but being protected by God only; Borrh. Pererius further answereth, that they were not without weapons, because presently after their departure they fought with Amaleke.

Contra. This sheweth indeed, that some weapons they had (and yet their victory was obtained not by their weapons, but by the prayer and lifting up of Moses hands) but this proveth not, that all of them had armour, even six hundred thousand, for a few only chosen from the rest did fight with Amaleke: Therefore Iosephus opinion is probable, that the Israelites came forth of Egypt unarmed, and that after the Egyptians were drowned in the red sea, their armour and weapons being driven to the shore were di|stributed by Moses among the people.

3. If then it be not like they went up armed, then their construction seemeth lesse probable, that be|cause the word chamushim signifieth five, they were appointed with five severall kinds of weapons: for this had beene sufficient to have loaden them, whereas they carried their dow on their backes, and ray|ment with vessels of gold and silver, which the Egyptians had given them.

4. Some doe reade, that ascenderunt quintati, they went up fived, that is, five in a ranke, as Theodotion readeth, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉; so also Montanus: and some understand it strictly that they went up five and five in a ranke, as souldiers use to march; Oleaster: or that they went up orderly, as Iun. militari ordine, in battell array; dispositi in certos ordines per quincurias, decurias; disposed into certaine rankes by fives and tennes, &c. Simler. Some thinke they went up by fifties together, as a signe of their Iubile (which afterward was every fifty yeere) in being now delivered from their long servitude: Borrh. Contra. 1. If their meaning bee, that they went up by fives in a ranke, the whole number being one with another not much under 2000. thousand, the people would have taken up not much under one hundred mile in length, if (as Oleaster thinketh) they went by fives in single rankes, because they could not conveniently go in the way in a greater breadth, for feare of treading their vines and corne. 2. If it bee generally understood of battell array, and orderly marching, how could the women and children, which were a great number, be ranged in such battell order? and if they went by tennes and twenties, how then is it said they went by fives? And as for the Jubile, which they would have here relation unto, it was not yet instituted nor spok|ken of.

5. Wherefore the best reading is, that they went up accincti, undergirded, or trussed up, as Pagine: and the Septuagint, Iosu. 1.14. doe translate the same word 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 : for the word chamushim may be derived of chomesh the fift ribbe so taken 2. Sam. 2.18. where the place of the girding is: and further, the word chamushim, used of the Rubenites and the rest, that they went up girded, or well appointed before their brethren, Iosuah 1.14. is expounded by another word chalutzim, Numb. 32.28. which the Latine translator and Iunius interpret expediti, ready furnished; which word chalutzim hath great affinity with challatzim, which signifieth the loynes, because the armour or garments are trussed about the loynes: and challatzim is the same with mateaim, as appeareth by the same phrase, Isai. 32.11. as Exod. 12.11. they are said to have mainecem chagurim, their loynes trussed up. So the Prophet saith to the careless woman, chagorah ghalehalatzim, gird upon your loynes.

This then is the meaning, that they went up well appointed, girded, and prepared, not as men flying in feare, but as men taking their journey; which also includeth a signification of their orderly going, not hudling together, but as they which goe a journey, or into battell doe so dispose themselves, as that one be not an hindrance to another. And so Aben Ezra doth touch both these senses, who interpreteth thus: Hebreos processesse accinctos per quinos; that the Hebrewes went forward trussed up and girded by fives. This then sheweth the peoples obedience how they went out with their loynes girded, as Moses had before commanded them to eat the Passeover, chap. 12.11.

QUEST. XVII. Whether the rest of the Patriarkes bones were removed with Iosephs.

Vers. 19. AND Moses tooke the bones of Ioseph. 1. Not only Iosephs bones but the rest of the Patriarkes also were removed out of Egypt, and buried in Sechem, as S. Stephen sheweth, Acts 7.16. Iun. It is not like they were left behind in Egypt, as Ferus. But mention is made onely of Ioseph as the chiefe, and because of the oath which was made unto him for this matter, Gen 50. 2. It may be also con|jectured, that the rest of the Patriarkes gave the like charge concerning their bones, being thereunto moved by the example of Ioseph. Calvin. 3. And this Ioseph did, both to testifie his owne faith concer|ning the land of promise therein consenting with his fathers the patriarkes before him, as also to bee an encouragement unto the Israelites with patience to expect the accomplishment of Gods promise: Simler. 4. This also is to be considered, that whereas Iosephs brethren sold him into Egypt, they did not only follow him into Egypt, but their children brought his bones againe out of Egypt upon their shoul|ders. Ferus.

QUEST. XVIII. What it was that appeared in the cloud and who.

Vers. 21. AND the Lord went before them by day. 1. The Lord could by other meanes have testified his presence and guided his people, but hee for their great comfort doth shew them visible signes of his presence. Ferus. 2. And in saying that the Lord went in the cloud hee doth not pull God out of heaven, and conclude him in the cloud: for the Lord filleth both heaven and earth: but by this phrase he sheweth, that it was not a naked signe, but a most lively representation of Gods presence indeed: Calvin. 3. Moses afterward chap. 14.19. calleth him the Angell of God, who is here named Iehovah: for the Lord by the hand of his Sonne, the Angell of his presence, did lead his people. Calvin, Iun.

QUEST. XIX. Of the divers properties of the cloud.

BY day in a pillar of a cloud, &c. This cloud wherein the Lord went before his people had these proper|ties: 1. This pillar of a cloud by day and of fire by night did alwayes accompany the people, they did never leave them, till they were come to the borders of the land of promise, as is here shewed, vers. 22. 2. The use of these pillars was to guide them, and shew them the way, that they should not wander or erre in that vast unknowne and unwayed desert, vers. 21. 3. This cloud sometime moved, and then the host of Israel removed, sometime it stood still, and the campe also pitched and went not forward: Numb. 9.17, 18. 4. When the cloud moved, it went before the host, when it stood still it rested upon the Tabernacle and did as it were fit upon it, Numb. 9.19. 5. This cloud was of such an height and bignesse, that both by day and night, it might be seene round about in all the host of Israel, Exod. 40.38. It was in the sight of all the host of Israel: Perer. And therefore the Lord made choice of such signes as might easily be seene, as of a cloud in the day, and of fire in the night: Ferus. 6. These pillers did interchangeably one succeed another, that as the night followed the day, so the fire the cloud, it was a cloud in the day and fire in the night, Exod. 40.38. 7. The Lord spake unto Moses out of this cloudy piller, when it descended upon the Tabernacle, and out of the same delivered his oracles unto him, Exod. 32.9. Ex Perer. 8. As it was common both to the cloud and the piller, to guide them the way, so it was peculiar to the fire to give them light in the night, and to the cloud to defend them from the heate of the Sunne, as Psalms. 105.35. he spread a cloud to be a covering: Iun. whereunto the Prophet alludeth in saying, Vpon Mount Sion, shall bee a cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of flaming fire by night, &c. and a covering shall be for a shadow in the day for the heate, &c. Isai. 4.5.6.

QUEST. XX. How this cloud differed from other clouds.

THIS piller of the cloud was much differing from all other cloudes. 1. In respect of the substance, it was cleere and lightsome, not darke and thicke as other cloudes are. 2. It was in figure and shape as a pillar, the nether part thereof descending unto the Tabernacle, the upper part reaching aloft unto heauen; whereas other cloudes descend not as low as the earth. 3. It alwayes kept this figure and fashion of a pillar; whereas other cloudes doe alter and vary in shape and appearance. 4. This cloud moved of it selfe, whereas other cloudes are moved by the wind, and of themselves have no motion this way or that way, but only as they ascend and goe up in vapors: but this cloud both ascended and descended. 5. Other cloudes are made of naturall causes, as of vapors and exhalations; but this cloud was raised by the Lord, beside the ordinarie course of nature. 6. The effects were divers: for other cloudes are apt to engender raine and drop downe moisture: but this was not ordained for that end, but to shew them the way in going before them. 7. This cloud differed in motion from all other cloudes: for they are carried all one way with the wind; this sometime went forward when the camp removed, sometime it came backe and stood upon the Tabernacle: it went sometime to the right hand, sometime to the left, according as the journeyes of the people were appointed out. 8. The motion of it was alwayes certaine, it went before the campe, as they were able to endure to follow; whereas other cloudes, are carried swiftly, that they cannot bee followed. 9. The situation of it was divers, not carried aloft as other cloudes, which can be no direction to leade a man in his journey: but this cloud was of such equall distance as it did part out their way before them, like as the starre that guided the Wise men, appeared below in the aire to conduct them, Matth. 2.10. Lastly, whereas other cloudes are not durable, but are soone dissipated and dissolved by the wind and weather: this cloud remained firme and so continued for the space of 40. yeeres. Ex Perer.

Page 155

QUEST. XXI. When the cloud began first to appeare.

BUT concerning the time of the first and last appearing of this cloud,* it is not like as Hierome thinketh, that it went not before them till they came unto the third station in Etham, because mention is first made of it there. 1. For they had need as well before of a guide to direct them the way as afterward: and therefore it is like that they had this direction, in their first setting forth out of Egypt. 2. As it is in the Psalm. He made his people to goe out like sheepe, and led them in the wilderness like a flocke, Psal. 78.52. where the Prophet alludeth unto the fashion of those countries, where the shepherd goeth before and the sheepe follow after, as our Saviour saith in the parable, Ioh. 10.27. So the Lord went before his people as a shepherd in the cloudy and fierie piller, even when he brought them out of Egypt. 3. The Prophet Esay also alluding unto this cloud saith, That upon every place of mount Sion and the assemblies thereof shall be a cloud. Esay 4.5. So that hence it may be gathered that the Israelites in every place and in all their assemblies and camps had the presence of this cloud. 4. Then like as the Wise men saw the starre that brought them to Christ in the beginning of their journey: as they say, Wee have seene his starre in the East, and are come to worship him, Matth. 2.2. they first saw the starre and then came forth: so it may bee thought that the Israelites saw this cloud in their first setting forth. 5. The people had need to have had all encouragement in their first going forth, and to be animated in their journey: and therefore it is like, that the Lord did at the very first shew these comfortable signes of his presence.

QUEST. XXII. When the cloud and fiery piller ceased.

AND as the cloud appeared not so late as Hierome supposeth, so neither was it taken out of their sight so soone as the Hebrewes imagine: for they say that after Aarons death (who died on the first day of the first moneth in the 40. yeere after their departure out of Egypt, Numb. 33.38.) the piller of the cloud and of the fire were no more scene; and their reason is, because that after that time no more mention is made of them. Contra. First, this is no sufficient reason, for neither is there mention made of them a good while before. 2. The words of the text are against their opinion: for it is said, That the Lord tooke not away the piller of the cloud by day, nor the piller of fire by night from before the people: Vers. 22. So then as long as they had need of this direction, the Lord failed them not. 3. Seeing the use of these pillers was to leade them the way, that they might goe by day and by night, it is like▪ so long as they were in the way and travelled in the wilderness, they had the presence of the cloud: the same cause remaining, the meanes are like to have beene still continued. But from the mount Hor, where Aaron died, untill they came to the plaine of Moab, in the borders of the land of Canaan, there were many solitary, desert and waste places, thorow the which they passed: for divers of their stations were yet behind, as appeareth Numb. 33. that they had after they came from Mount Hor, eight severall stations: therefore it may well bee gathered, that as they had the direction of the cloud in their other stations, so also in these. Perer. 4. Then like as the starre left not the Wise men, till it had brought them to the very house, where the holy ⟨◇⟩ was, Matth. 2. So we may judge that the cloud left not the Israelites till they came into the land of Canaan, whither the Lord intended to bring them.

QUEST. XXIII. Of the foure great miracles which the Lord wrought for the people in the desert.

THIS extraordinary leading of the people by the going before of the piller of the cloud and fire was one of the great miracles, which the Lord wrought for his people in the desert: for as foure things are chiefly necessary for those that travell, strength and health of body, foode, rayment, and a guide▪ so the Lord in every one of these wrought wonderfully for them. 1. Their feet did not swell for the ⟨◇⟩ of forty yeeres, Deut. 8.4. And of all that great multitude (there being not so few in all as 2000. thousand, seeing the third part of this number even 600. thousand were fighting men above twenty yeere old) there was not one feeble person among them: Psal. 105.37. 2. Their raiment during the said terme of 40. yeeres waxed not old, Deut. 8.4. 3. The Lord fed them with Quails and Manna, even that great host, which could not pitch their tents in a lesse circuit and compasse of ground than of ten or twelve miles, and he gave them water also out of the rocke. 4. Beside, the Lord was their guide by these visible signes of his presence both by day and night.

FURther a question is moved, whether this cloudy piller served not onely to direct them by the way but to keepe them and defend them from the heate of the Sunne. 1. Thostatus is of opinion, that this cloud that guided them could not keepe them from the heat of the Sunne: upon these reasons, because if this cloud were a covering to the whole campe, then could it not goe before them to guide them, as it did stand betweene the host of the Israelites, and of the Egyptians: and if it had sheltred them from the Sunne, it should have beene as discommodious another way in shadowing from them the comfortable light of the Sunne: and if it bee said this cloud did not shadow the whole campe, but hung aloft in the aire, and turned with the Sunne to slake the heat thereof, then could it not have guided the host, but must have followed the course of the Sunne. Contra. Herein is Thostatus error; he imagineth that this cloud was straight thorowout like a piller, and so keeping that fashion still, it could not performe both these offices, to direct them in the way, and to shelter them from the heat of the Sunne. But by the like phrase elsewhere, as Iud. 20.40. where the flame of the City of Gibeah, ascended as a piller of smoke, wee may conjecture what fashion this cloud was of: that it ascended upright and straight like a piller, yet as the smoke which mounteth upright, when it commeth aloft disperseth it selfe as it were a cloud: so this be|ing both a piller for the straight ascending, and in the top as a cloud dispersed might both by the rising and moving of the piller goe before the Israelites to direct them, and with the upper spreading part sha|dow them from the Sun: so that we need neither imagine this shadowing part of the cloud to be so high, as it should still follow the Sunne, nor yet so low as to cover all the camp in the length and breadth there|of. And thus by the resemblance of this piller, to a piller of smoke which is narrow below, and spreading above, all Thostatus objections may bee answered. But whatsoever mans wit can object to the contrary, the truth of the Scripture must stand, which saith: He spread a cloud to be a covering, and fire to give light in the night: Psalm. 105.39. By the which text that is made plaine, which is affirmed before, that it was both a piller and a spreading cloud.

2. Thostatus then his opinion is, that the Israelites were indeed defended from the heat of the Sunne, which is vehement in those parts, especially in the sandy and barren deserts of Arabia: yet the cloud shadowed them not, but God by his power did so qualifie the aire round about the campe, as they were not parched with heat, which operation is ascribed to the cloud, because the Lord that caused it, there shewed himselfe visibly present. Contr. But the Scripture overthroweth this conceit: which saith, that the cloud did stand over them: Numb. 14.14. and that he spread a cloud for a covering; Psalm. 105.39. God therefore used the cloud, as a meanes to cover and defend his people from the drought and par|ching heat.

3. Pererius to take away the former objections imagineth that there were two cloudes, one below as a piller to direct them, the other above, as a covering to shelter them. Thostatus reasons are sufficient against this imagination, because the Scripture speaketh still but of one cloud: for as there was but one piller of fire to give light, so but one cloudy piller that did shelter them: it was common to both to guide and lead them. And againe, one cloud, as is shewed before, being sufficient to performe both these ser|vices, another cloud had beene superfluous.

4. Wherefore it is agreeable and consonant to the Scripture, that this cloud did as well shelter them, from the heat, as lead them in the way: as is evident in the places before alleaged, Numb. 14.14. Psalm. 105.39. And unto the cloud the Prophet Esay alludeth chap. 4.5. The Lord shall create upon every place of Mount Sion, a cloud and smoke by day, &c. and a covering shall be a shadow by day for the heat. Of this opinion are Lyranus, Ambros. in Psal. 118. and Iustinus Martyr: Nubes contra aestum appansa est pro um|braculo, simul & à frigore protegens in itinere. The cloud was spread as a shelter against the heat and as a safegard from the cold in their journey; Dialog. cum Tryphon. So then there were three speciall uses of this cloud as Genebrard well noteth upon the 105. Psalme, the first to direct them and shew the way: for in that sandy desert there is no way to be seene, by reason that the wind bloweth about the sand, which cove|reth the tract of the way, and therefore they that use to travell doe use mappes and cards to point out the quarters and coasts, as sailers doe upon the sea. A second use was to defend them against their enemies: as the cloud came betweene the host of the Israelites and of the Egyptians, giving light to the one, and castling darknesse upon the other: Thirdly, it served to shadow them from the parching heat of the Sunne. Ex Perer.

QUEST. XXV. Whether the cloudy and fierie piller were two in substance or but one.

BUt whether this cloud and fiery piller were all one in substance, and onely divers in use, or whether they were divers the one succeeding the other, it is a question. 1. Iunius seemeth to bee of opinion, that they were two severall pillers, giving this annotation upon this place: Vtriusque columnae ◇ fuit: It was common to both the pillers to bee a guide of their journey, but peculiar to the piller of the cloud to protect them from the heat, &c. But I rather approve the opinion of Simlerus, who thinketh it was but one cloud: Fuit columnae hujus multiplex usus, &c. interdiu defende eos ab astu solis, noct•

Page 157

lucbat illis: There was a divers use of this cloud, &c. by day it defended them from heat, by night it gave them light: and this opinion is evidently confirmed, Numb. 9.21. Though the cloud abode upon the Tabernacle from even unto morning, yet if the cloud was taken up in the morning, then they removed: here the fire which abode all night upon the Tabernacle is called the cloud, and the same cloud that abode there also in the day. But it will be objected, that it is here said, that he tooke not away the piller of the cloud by day, nor the piller of the fire by night from before the people: Here are two pillers mentioned, one of the cloud, the other of fire: and againe they alwayes went before the people, but it is said in the next chap. 14.19. that the piller of the cloud went from before them, and stood behind them: it seemeth then that there was another cloud beside, that went before them and shewed them the way. Contr. 1. They are called the piller of the cloud and the piller of fire, not because they were divers in substance, but in use: as the same starre is both the evening starre, and morning starre: it setteth and riseth with the Sunne, yet but one starre. 2. Wee read at that time onely that the cloud came behind them, to make a separation betweene the host of Israel, and of the Egyptians: yet it so came behind them, as that it might by streames in the aire direct the Israelites to passe on before: and further, because of the stretching out of Moses rod the sea was parted, and so a way made for the people to follow, they needed no other direction before for the way, but rather protection behind from the enemy.

2. Lyranus thinketh that neither of these can certainly bee concluded out of Scripture, whether these clouds were one or two, and therefore holdeth it indifferent to beleieve either the one or the other: his words are these: Quid verius sit, non bene apparet ex ipso scripturae textu, certum est tamen quod utroque modo potuit esse: Which is the truer, doth not well appeare out of the text, yet it is certaine that it might be done both wayes: Contr. 1. There is but one truth, therefore if they were two clouds, it cannot be true that there was but one, and so on the other part. 2. It shall even now appeare that it is evident out of the text, that there was but one cloud in substance, though divers in offices. 3. The truth then is this, that this cloud was one and the same, which guided them by day, and gave light unto them by night: they were not two divers clouds one succeeding another; and this is evident both by that place before alleaged, Numb. 9. as also chap. 14. vers. 24. where it is said that the Lord looked unto the host of the Philistims out of the fierie and cloudy piller: by this it appeareth that the one and the same, was both the piller of fire and of the cloud. And againe, vers. 19. it is said that the piller of the cloud went from before them and stood behind them: this being in the night, it is cleere that the piller of the cloud served for their use then also, and did not give place unto the piller of fire. But yet this matter is made more plaine, vers. 20. It was both a cloud and darknesse, yet gave it light by night: the same cloud then gave light in the night, which went before them in the day: which was on the side toward the Israelites lightsome, but toward the Egyptians darknesse. Of this opinion is Thostatus, Cajetane, Hugo S. Victor. Simlerus. Philo also here|of thus writeth: Pracedebat populum nubes in magnae columnae speciem solari splendore lucens interdin, noctu autem flammea: A great cloud went before them in the likenesse of a great piller shining by day with a brightnesse as the Sunne, and in the night of fire. He thinketh that it was one and the same cloudy piller: but that it did shine in the day as the Sunne, it is not like, because there was no use of that light by day, and then could it not have sheltered them from the heat of the Sunne; and beside the Scripture sheweth, that the use of this cloud was to lead them in the day, and to give light in the night. Now seeing it is made manifest, that there was but one cloud that both guided them by day, and did lighten them in the night, as Pererius also thinketh in this place, then his other opinion that there were two clouds by day, one as a piller to direct them, another as a covering to shelter them, can have no probability: unlesse he will say, that both those clouds also gave light in the night, which neither the Scripture sheweth speaking but of one fire piller in the night that abode upon the Tabernacle: and it had beene superfluous, seeing, that one fire sight that abode on the Tabernacle was in the view of all the campe, and sufficient to give light unto them all, Exod. 40.33.

QUEST. XXVI. Whether it were a true naturall fire that gave them light by night.

NOW whether this were a true naturall fire, which gave light unto the Israelites in the night, or onely a shining brightness, which the Lord caused to bee in the cloud in the night, it is a disputable question: 1. That it was a true fire, these reasons may perswade: 1. Because in most places of the Scripture it is called a piller of fire, as Exod. 13.22. and chap. 14.20. and Psalms. 105.39. Fire to give light in the night. 2. Againe, as the one is called a cloud, so the other is said to be fire: but the one was a true cloud, therefore the other also was a true fire. 3. Like as that which appeared to Moses in the bush was a flaming fire, yet burned not, so is it like this was. 4. In the booke of Wisdome, chap. 18.3. it is said, thou gavest them a burning piller of fire. But these reasons may easily be answered. 1. It is called fire, and a piller of fire, in respect of the fire light which it gave: it is called the light of fire, Psalms. 78.14. for that resemblance, which that light had with the light of fire. 2. As the one was a cloud, so I confesse the other was a fire: but the one was no naturall cloud, as is shewed before, quest. 21. but did differ much from the clouds: so neither was this naturall fire, yet a kinde of fire, as shall be declared afterward. 3. And such a fire we acknowledge it to be, as that fire was which appeared in the bush, which was no naturall or elementall fire, for it burned not, but a supernaturall and extraordinary, and so was this. 4. That it was a burning piller of fire the Scripture speaketh not, but the contrary rather: for as the fire was in the bush, yet it burned not, so the fire sate upon the Tabernacle, and consumed it not.

2. Now that it was no naturall fire it may thus appeare: 1. The naturall and elementall fire coveteth to ascend upward; but this piller of fire kept his proper place. 2. The ordinarie fire is of the fashion of a Pyramis, which hath the name of fire, broad below and narrow upward: but this fire being in the cloud, was straight as a piller below, and spreading above. 3. Our fire cannot continue without nourishment, but so did this. 4. Our fire heateth, so did not this, for then the campe had never beene able to have indured it, being so great a fire, as that the whole campe was lightned by it. 5. Our fire burneth, but the fire sitting upon combustible matter, as the covering of the Tabernacle, the Curtaines and such like, yet devoured them not.

3. Beside these reasons the Scripture giveth testimonie hereunto: Numb. 9.16. it is called March, the shew or appearance of fire: it appeared as naturall fire, yet was no such fire: if it had beene properly fire, it could not properly be called the appearance of fire. 2. It is before shewed out of the Scripture that this fierie piller, and the cloudie piller were all one: but a cloud is no fit subject or receptacle of naturall fire, being rather inclined to moisture.

4. Then, this we affirme, that it was a fire not onely so in phantasie and imagination, but a fire indeed, because it had the light of fire, but yet no naturall ordinarie or elementall fire. There are three sorts of fire: a grosse thicke fire, such as is in coales, and red hot iron, which burneth much but giveth small light: there is another, which both giveth light and burneth, as a flame of fire: a third which giveth light and burneth not, such as is the starres, which are usually called both by Ecclesiasticall and prophane writers, coelestes ignes, heavenly fires: and of this sort was this fire, which gave light but neither burned, or gave heate: God who first gave unto the fire his qualities, to burne and give light, can restraîne the same operations, and transferre them into another subject: as the Lord in the beginning could cause the light to shine, that made the day, before the sunne was created, and as he gave afterward this glorious light and shining brightness to the bodie of the sunne, so it was an easie matter with God, to give unto this cloud the light of fire being no naturall fire: naturally the fire hath three properties, to give light, heate, and to burne: these properties the Lord can separate the one from the other, and so suspend them from the fire: the fire in the bush gave light but burned not: the Egyptians fire in the time of the three dayes darknesse burned but gave no light: the fierie oven gave light but gave no heate, for their garments did not so much as smell of the fire, Dan. 3.27. As in the naturall fire God can restraîne the naturall properties, so God can give the naturall properties thereof to that which is no naturall fire, as here the light of fire was in this cloud, which yet was no naturall fire.

QUEST. XXVII. Whether the piller of the cloud were moved by any naturall motion.

Concerning the motion of the cloudy and fiery piller, that it was not naturall, nor yet procured by any naturall cause, it is evident by these reasons. 1. Vapors and fire have either naturally a motion of their owne in ascending upward, or in being violently forced by the aire and winde, which motion is alwayes certaine that way, which they are driven. But this cloud when the campe stood still neither ascended nor descended, neither was carried one way or other, but continued steadie all in one place. 2. This cloud pointed out the Israelites journey, so can no other cloud being of an uncertaine motion. 3. It was beyond the ordinarie and naturall motion of a cloud, that sometime this piller went before the Israelites, sometime it came after, as when the Egyptians pursued them, sometime it staid in the midst of the campe upon the Tabernacle. 4. This cloudie piller moved no faster, than the campe could follow, wherein were both women and children: this could not a naturall cloud doe. 5. This cloud was alwayes of one fashion like unto a piller, but other clouds varie and alter their forme, according either to the varietie of the matter, whereof they are made, or as they are forced together of the wind. 6. But that this piller was not moved by any naturall cause, but by the Lord himselfe, the Scripture it selfe testifieth, as chap. 14.19. The Angell of God which went before the host of Israel, removed, and went behind them, also the piller of the cloud went from before them and stood behind: the piller then moved and removed as the Angell of God, called before Iehovah, chap. 13.22. directed it, and therefore it is said, Numb. 9.18. That at the commandement of the Lord they journied, and at the commandement of the Lord they pitched: They removed when the cloud removed, and the cloud removed at the commandement of God, and so consequently they removed or made stay at the commandement of God: Perer.

QUEST. XXVIII. Of the times of the removing and staying of the cloud.

Now as touching the times of the removing and staying of the cloudie and fierie piller: 1. It is not directly expressed, that the fierie piller removed more than once in the night, and that was when the Egyptians pursued after them: Perer. because the night was the fittest time for rest, and it seemeth that the campe journeying all the day, did ordinarily take their rest in the night: the speciall use then of the fierie pillar, was to give them light in the night, that they might bee defended from the inconveniences, which the darknesse of the night might have brought upon them: it might also serve to direct them to travell in the night, if they had occasion, as when they went through the red Sea.

2. Neither is it to be supposed, that when the cloud removed, the campe followed and rested not till they came to a place to pitch their tents in: for whereas they sometime went forward a whole day togelther, they could not hold out without some repast, which could not bee done without stay: for neither could they have time to dresse their owne meat, which they did sometime seeth, sometime bake (for beside Manna, it is certaine they did eat of other meats, as of the flesh of their sheep and cattell, for part of their sacrifices their Priests did eat, and the Offerer had part: and to what end else served the heards and flockes of cattell than part for sacrifice, but more for food?) likewise their Manna asked time to grind, and bake it, and prepare it as they thought good, Exod. 16.23. Beside, their cattell must have time sometime to feed; all this could not be done without some stay: therefore at the least once in the day, if not twice, it is like that the cloud staid, that the people might refresh themselves, and so goe forward againe.

3. Therefore the cloud made three kind of staies, one was but for a short time, while the campe might refresh themselves: the other was longer, when they staid all night in a place, but pitched no tents: as they went three dayes journey from the red Sea, till they came to Marah; they pitched no tents, neither had any mansion place, till they came to Marah: Exod. 15.22. and Numb. 33.7. yet they had their time of rest during this three dayes journey: Perer. But when they removed from the wilderness of Sinai they went three dayes together without any stay, the Arke still going before them to find out a resting place, Numb. 10.13. till they came to Kibroth Hatavah, which was their next mansion place, Numb. 33.16. The Lord still animating and strengthning his people to go forward: Iunius. The third manner of staying was when the cloud remained still upon the Tabernacle two or three dayes, and then they pitched their tents: and thus the cloud staid in 40. yeere not above 42. times, for so many mansion or camping places they had as they are set downe, Numb. 33.

4. Now how to know, when they were to pitch their tents: Pererius conjectureth at it, and giveth these three rules: First, if the cloud stayed about noone, then they knew, that it onely rested, till they had refreshed themselves: but if it staid in the afternoone before night, that they journeyed no more that day, they tooke it that then they were to stay there some while, and so pitched their tents: But if it made no stay till the evening, they pitched no tents till the next morning, and then if the cloud went not forward, they then set up their tents. These are onely Pererius conjectures, and uncertaine. And it otherwise may be gathered out of the Scripture, that they did not pitch their tents till the cloud had staid two dayes at the least, as we read, Numb. 9.20. When the cloud abode a few dayes in the Tabernacle, they pitched their tents at the commandement of God: and afterward vers. 22. If the cloud tarried two dayes, or a moneth or a yeere upon the Tabernacle, the children of Israel pitched their tents. It seemeth then by this, that this was a rule unto them, not to pitch their tents or settle their campe till after two dayes. Beside, they had Moses to give them direction also in this case, when to encampe themselves, who continually consulted with God.

5. Now the manner of their removing was this: when the cloud arose from the Tabernacle, the Priests and Levites tooke up the Arke and carried it, and when they went forward with the Arke, Moses used this prayer, Rise up O Lord and let thine enemies bee scattered, and let them that hate thee flee before thee: And when the Arke rested, hee said, Returne O Lord to the many thousands of Israel, Numb. 10.35. Hereunto the Prophet alludeth, when hee saith, The Lord shall arise and his enemies shall be scattered: Perer.

6. This cloud began not onely now to appeare, when they were come to their third mansion place in Etham. as Hierome thinketh, but straightway upon their setting forth from Ramesis: though mention be made first of it here, that proveth it not now first to have appeared; as Moses is said first in this place to have taken Iosephs bones with him, which was done notwithstanding at his first comming out of Egypt: the Scripture observeth not alwayes the order of time in setting downe matters of historie, but the coherence of the argument. So neither did the cloud leave them at Aarons death, as is the opinion of the Hebrewes: for seven moneths after Aarons death (who died in the fift moneth immediatly before Moses death, when Iosuah was consecrated to succeed him) mention is made of the pillar of the cloud, wherein the Lord appeared to Moses, Deut. 31.15. See more of this, quest. 22. before.

7. Gregorie maketh the appearing of the bright cloud by day a signe of Gods favour and mercie to his obedient people, and the appearing of the terrible fire by night, as a signe of his severitie and justice against the wicked and unbelievers: Gregor. hom. 21. in Evangel. Ex Perer.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the lawfull use of ceremonies.

Vers. 9. THis shall be as a signe unto thee upon thine hand, &c. As this place sheweth that there were then in the Church, and so are still commendable ceremonies, which the Lord hath instituted to be •membrances of spirituall things, as these were of their deliverance out of Egypt: so their superstition is reproved that dwell in the externall ceremony, not looking unto the spirituall sense: Ferus; as the Pharises did which did weare their phylacteries and fringes, yet forgot the law represented and signified by them.

2. Doct. Christ the Mediatour both of the old and new Testament.

Vers. 21. IEhovah went before them. He that is here called Iehovah, is chap. 14.19. called the Angell of God, which was none other but Jesus Christ: Iun. the Prince and Captaine of his Church, the Mediatour both of the old and new Testament, according as the Apostle saith, Heb. 13.9. Iesus Christ yesterday and to day, and the same also is for ever.

3. Doct. Christ sheweth us the way to the heavenly Canaan, as the pillar did direct the Israelites toward their Canaan.

Vers. 22. THE Lord went before them by day in a pillar of fire. This pillar divers wayes represented Christ: 1. He is the pillar and upholder of his Church. 2. He leadeth us the way unto eternall life, as he himselfe saith, I am the way, the truth and the life, Ioh. 14. 3. Aperit nobis viam maris rubei, id est, gratiam baptismi sanguine suo rubentes: He openeth to us the way of the red sea, that is, the grace of baptisme died red in his bloud: Rupertus. 4. Christ is both a fire and a cloud, that is, both God and man. 5. In noct• veteris testamenti paucis lucebat, &c. He did shine but to a few in the night of the old Testament: as this fierie cloud gave light by night: Ferus. 6. But the most lively signification is this: that Christ is that covering cloud under whose shadow wee are defended from the heate and stormes of temptation, as the Prophet sheweth, Isai. 4.6. Simler.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Conf. Against the theatricall Pagean of the Masse.

Vers. 9. They shall be a signe unto thee upon thine head. These externall signets upon the head, and frontlets betweene the eyes, instituted at the first to a good end, to put them in minde allwayes of the law of God, they afterward superstitiously abused, onely glorying in the outward ostentation of them: so in Poperie, the right use of the Supper of the Lord, is turned into theatricum quondam actum Missa, into a theatricall shew of the Masse: calling men à communione ad spectaculum, from the communion of the bodie and bloud of Christ to a gazing spectacle. Simlerus.

2. Conf. Against the adoration of reliques.

Vers. 19. MOses tooke the bones of Ioseph. This maketh nothing for the adoration of the reliques of Saints, which idolatrous use is still retained and practised in Poperie: for Iosephs bones were carried to be buried; they tooke up the bones of Saints and Martyrs, after they have beene buried: these were true bones; they shew counters and ducks bones and such like trash for the bones of the Saints, as hath beene found by search: these were the bones of Ioseph certainly knowne, they shew the bones and parts no man knoweth of whom: for they in divers places offer to the view of the people, divers bodies and heads, foure or five armes of one Saint: neither were these bones of Ioseph carried in the fight of all Israel, adored, as theirs superstitiously are. Simler.

3. Conf. Against the heresie of Servetus.

Vers. 21. The Lord went before them by day in a pillar of a cloud. Servetus held this execrable heresie, that this, increata nubes Christi fuit Deitas, that this uncreated cloud was the Deitie of Christ, which he calleth filium figurativum▪ the figurative Sonne: which detestable heresie is not worthy of any confutation, but with all indignation to be rejected and detested: for he maketh the Deitie of God corporall, contrary to the Scripture, which saith, God is a spirit: and maketh a visible substance to be without beginning, whereas all things visible are created, Coloss. 1.16. and directly this heresie impugneth that saying of the Prophet Esay, chap. 4.5. where he alludeth to this place, The Lord shall create upon every place of Mount Sion a cloud and smoke by day, &c. It was then a created, and not an uncreated cloud.

6. Morall observations.

1. Observ. As the Lord worketh for us redemption, so of us he requireth obedience.

Vers. 2. Sanctifie unto me all the first borne. As the Lord had for his part delivered and saved their first borne, so he requireth of them their first borne. As God hath dealt mercifully and graciously with us, so he expecteth somewhat againe of us, namely our obedience: we must not looke unto that onely which God hath done unto us, but consider also what is to bee done by vs. As our Saviour saith to his Apostles, As my father sent me, so send I you. As Christ was sent for our redemption, so we must also bee employed in Gods service, to testifie our thankfull obedience. So our Saviour bidding his Apostles to preach the Gospell, addeth, teaching them to observe all things, which I have commanded you. As the glad tidings of salvation is published unto men, so of them is required againe obedience: Ferus: not as an helpe unto their salvation, which is perfited without our service, but as a true and lively testimonie of our faith whereby we apprehend salvation.

2. Observ. How we must offer our first borne unto God.

AGaine, as they were commanded to consecrate unto God their first borne: so we must offer our first and best things unto God: the Lord will have the prioritie of our service: Simlerus. As our Saviour biddeth us first to seeke the Kingdome of God and the righteousness thereof, Matth. 6.

our first studies, our first times must be consecrated unto our God: as the Apostle exhorteth to give up our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God, Rom. 12.1.

3. Observ. God tempteth his children according to their strength.

Vers. 17. LEst the people repent when they see warre. God hath respect unto his childrens infirmities, and suffereth them not to be tempted above their power: Piscator. But Gregorie doth notably amplify this point: Tres modi sunt hominum ad Deum conversorum, inchoatio, medium, perfectio: inchoatione inveniunt blandimenta dulcedinis, in medio tempore certamina tentationis, ad extremum perfectionem plenitudinis, &c. There are three degrees of men that are converted unto God, the beginning, the midst, and the perfection: in the beginning they finde pleasant allurements, in the middle hard tentations, in the end a full perfection. Like as first a man entertaineth his spouse with sweet perswasions, afterward being married to her, hee trieth her with sharpe reprehensions, being thus tried he soundly enjoyeth her: So this people being brought out of Egypt, primò accepit blandimenta signorum, first receiveth alluring signes, afterward, probationibus exercetur in òremo, they are exercised by tentations in the wilderness; and lastly in the land of promise, virtutis plenitudine confirmatur, they are fully confirmed. Sic Gregor. lib. 14. moral. cap. 13.

Page 161

4. Observ. The will of the dead must faithfully be performed.

Vers. 19. FOR he had made the children of Israel sweare. Moses most faithfully causeth the last will and Testament of Ioseph to be fulfilled, whereby we are taught, that the last minde and will of the dead in honest and lawfull things ought by no meanes to be violated: Osiander: as the Apostle saith, the Testament is confirmed when men be dead, Heb. 9.17. God will surely revenge their quarrell, whose soules he hath received to his protection, whose godly bequests are reversed, and their last minde not fulfilled. Such as are unfaithfull to the dead, will be much more to the living. And as God profeseth himselfe the speciall protector of the fatherlesse and widow, so he will maintaine the cause of the dead, that are fatherlesse to the world, and their soules as it were widowes for a time absent from their bodies.

5. Observ. We must alwayes bee watchfull.

Vers. 22. THat they might goe both by day and night. The people were to take their journey whether by day or night, when the cloud was lift up from the Tabernacle▪ they were therefore dilligently to take heed both by day and night, that they might be readie, when the Lord gave them a signe to goe forward, wherefore they are said to keepe the Lords watch, Numb. 9.19. So our Saviour biddeth us also to watch, and alwayes to bee in a readinesse, because we know not when the master of the house will come, at even or at midnight, at the cocke crowing, or in the dawning, Mark. 13.35. Pellican.

CHAP. XIV.

1. The Argument and method.

IN this Chapter is described the most miraculous and admirable passage of the children of Israel over the red Sea: there are two parts of the Chapter, the bringing of the Israelites unto the Sea, to vers. 14. their passing over the Sea, with the destruction of the Egyptians, to the end of the Chapter.

In the first part is set forth, first the counsell of God unto Moses▪ containing first a commandement where they should campe, vers. 2. then a reason thereof taken from the vaine consultation and opinion of Pharaoh, that they were tangled in the land, vers. 4. then the execution thereof, in following after them, which is amplified by the overruling cause, Gods pro|vidence and justice in hardning his heart, and the end thereof, the glory of God, vers. 4.

2. Then followeth the execution, first in the behalfe of the people, they did as the Lord commanded them: secondly, on Pharaohs part: 1. Both in pursuing and following after them, with the occasion thereof, the report that was brought, and their repentance in letting the people goe, vers. 5. The manner thereof, he made readie his horse and chariots, vers. 6.7. and the ordering and disposing cause, Gods justice in hardning his heart, vers. 8. 2. As also in overtaking them, vers. 9.

3. Afterward the events hereof are declared: 1. The feare of the people, vers. 1. 2. The crying of the people unto God, vers. 10. 3. Their murmuring and expostulating with Moses, because hee had brought them out of Egypt; amplified both by their present feare of death, and their former foolish pre|diction in Egypt, vers. 11 12. 4. The confident answer of Moses, wherein he exhorteth them not to feare, with a promise of deliverance, and destruction of the Egyptians, grounded upon Gods assistance, vers. 13.14.

In the second part there is first the counsell of God to Moses, containing both a commandement, that they should goe forward, vers. 15. and a promise both of the safe passing of the Israelites thorow the red Sea, with the instrumentall meanes prescribed, the stretching out of Moses hand with the rod over the Sea, vers. 16. and the destruction of their enemies, with the end thereof, Gods glorie, vers. 17. and the effect, the confession and acknowledgement by the Egyptians themselves of Gods power, vers. 18.

2. The performance and execution followeth: first on the part of the Israelites, where the causes are expressed of their safe conducting thorow the Sea, both the principall, Gods presence, and working, testified by the removing of the cloud, vers. 19.20. and the instrumentall, either voluntarie in the stretching out of Moses rod, or naturall, which was the East wind, vers. 21. then is expressed the manner of their passing thorow the Sea, vers. 22. Secondly, the other part of Gods promise is effected concerning the Egyptians: where we have first the occasion, the pursuit of the Egyptians, vers. 23. 2. The causes of their subversion, first the hand of God upon them in striking them with feare, and taking off their chariot wheelles, vers. 25. with the efficient thereof, the Lord looked toward the host of the Egyptians, vers. 24. and the effect, the flight of the Egyptians, vers. 21. Secondly, the returning of the waters, with the prin|cipall cause, the power of God in commanding, the instrumentall cause, the ministerie of Moses. Thirdly, the effect followeth, Pharaoh and his host are drowned, vers. 28.

3. The events follow: first, the saving of Israel in passing safe thorow the red Sea, vers. 29. Then the overthrow of their enemies, whose carkasses they saw upon the Sea banke, vers. 30. Lastly, the people beleeve God, and reverence his minister Moses; with the cause thereof, the beholding of the great power of God, vers. 31.

2. The divers readings.

Vers.* 2. Campe before the streits of Chiroth. I. Piscat. not, before Pihahiroth. A.P.B.G. cum cater. for (pi) is here no part of the proper name, as is evident. Numb. 33.8. where (pi) is omitted: mippe•e hachi/roth, from the face or sight of Hachiroth, where also Ha is the article prefixed, no part of the name, as the Septuagint read Eroth, and the Chaldee in that place Hiroth.

Vers. 5. and 11. What is this that we have done? I.C.V. rather than, why have we done this. A.P. cum caeter. as Gen. 42.28. What is this that the Lord hath done unto us?*

Vers. 9. All the horses and chariots of Pharaoh. B. G. cum cater. rather than, the chariot horsemen. I. for seeing the horses were the chiefe strength of the chariots, ^{*} who had not every one a rider, but chariot men to guide them, the originall word and sense is better retained.

^{*}Vers.. 12. Is not this the thing that we said unto thee? V. or, did we not tell thee this thing? B.G. is not this the word or saying. I. cum caeter. dabarsignifieth both a word, or thing: their meaning is, that the thing now answereth to their words then.

^{*}Vers. 17. And concerning me, behold I will harden. I. Piscat. rather, And I behold I will harden, B.G.A.P. cum caeter. vaani, and I. He the nominative case, is put absolutely, though in this place it agree with the construction following, yet elsewhere it doth not, as Gen. 17.4. And I, behold my covenant is with thee: where unlesse it be read, concerning me, or some such word supplied, the nominative case (I) will not agree with the sentence following.

Vers. 30. And the Israelites saw the Egyptians dead upon the Sea banks. B.G.C.V. cum caeter. rather than; the Israelites saw the Egyptians dying, in the Sea banke. I. that is, the Israelites standing upon the banke saw the Egyptians dying in the Sea: for the word meeth signifieth dead, rather than, dying, as chap. 12.33. we are all meet him, dead men: and the Hebrew comma, or imperfect distinction, at Egyptians, sheweth that the last words, on the shore, are referred to the Egyptians dying, not to the Israelites beholding: and further, the preposition ghal signifieth on, or upon, rather than in: and the Sea useth to cast up the dead bodies on the shore: Also if the Israelites saw the Egyptians yet alive, how should Moses speech be true, that they should never see them againe? vers. 13. that is, alive.

3. The Explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. Of the place where they are commanded to pitch.

Vers. 2. THat they returne and campe before the streits of Chiroth. 1. The reason why they are bid to returne, or turne aside, was, as is shewed before chap. 13.17. because the Lord would not have them goe thorow the Philistims countrie. 2. They are commanded to campe in a most incommodious place, where they were hemmed in on every side: betweene the Sea before them, and on one side the Tower or Citie Migdol, which was the Citie Hero, a Garison of the Egyptians, and the mountaines on the other side: so that they had no way to passe, but by the straits whereby they entred, and so to returne upon the face of the enemies that pursued them: Iun. Iosephus. 3. This Chiroth were certaine craggie mountaines which run along unto the hill Casius: Iun. and reach even to the Sea: Iosephus: which might be so called either of Chur, because they were full of dens and caves, or of Charath, which signifieth to cut, of the craggie rocks, that seemed as hewne or cut: Calvin. 4. Baalzephon, was a certaine plaine neere unto the Sea, where the Idoll so called of the place was worshipped which hath the name of espying, or looking: there might be some watch Tower to observe the wayes that they might bee safe for the tra|vellers. Simler.

QUEST. II. Why the Lord would have them pitch in so discommodious a place.

Vers. 3. FOr Pharaoh will say of the children of Israel. 1. The Hebrewes thinke that the Egyptians had great confidence in this Idoll Baalzephon, whereof they had this opinion that hee could fetch againe fugitives that were run away, and that therefore they hearing that the Israelites were inclosed there, thought them to bee in sure keeping of the Idoll: Ex Simler. But there is no such cause here touched, the onely reason that moved Pharaoh to pursue them, was to take advantage of the place, thinking they were so hemmed in, that they could by no meanes escape. 3. The Egyptians might have pursued and overtaken them, if they had pitched elsewhere, but not so easily or readily as now, the Israelites being thus enclosed, who were three dayes journey before the Egyptians: Iun. Analys. 4. By this meanes also the Lord setteth forth his mercy and wonderfull power in saving his people, when they had no way to escape. Simler.

QUEST. III. How Pharaoh had word where the Israelites camped.

Vers. 5. Then it was told the King of Egypt. 1. Either some spies, which Pharaoh had set to watch which way the Israelites went, or some fugitives of the strange people which were among the Israelites might carrie this newes to the King: Simler. Or (as Iosephus thinketh) Obvium quemque rogantes, quò tenderent: They asked of every one they met, which way they went. 2. Pharaoh was not ignorant of the Israelites departure, but word was brought him of their state, where they pitched, and in what streit they were: Calvin. 3. They say, they fled either because they were gone above three dayes journey, and purposed not to returne againe, or because other people of the Egyptians, and other nations were gone away with them: Ferus. Or rather because they made such haste in travelling both day and night. Iun. 4. Thus they foolishly imagine them to flee, and reason the case among themselves, why they let them goe, when it was not in their power to hold them, for they were forced through the grievous plagues sent upon Egypt, to send them away, and to give them leave to depart.

Page 163

QUEST. IV. Of Pharaohs chariots and horsemen, and whether there were any footmen in his host.

Vers. 7. And tooke sixe hundred chosen chariots. 1. 600. chariots seeme to have beene no great preparation to goe against 600000. people: for Sisera, Iabins Captaine, went against Israel with 900. chariots, Iudg. 4. and David tooke 1000. chariots from Hadadezer King of Soba, 1 Chro. 18. Therefore it is like that there were more chariots, but these were the principall and choice chariots, such as Iabins iron chariots; and the words which follow shew as much, that beside these 600. chariots, he tooke all the chariots of Egypt. Simler. 2. Yet not all in generall, but all which could be made readie on such a sudden: and the horse which remained and were left after the morraine of cattell and other plagues: Iun. 3. Iosephus writeth, that beside 700. chariots, there were 50000. horsemen, and 200000. footmen: but it seemeth unto some more probable, that there were no footmen, but all horsemen, as Piscator; both because the footmen could not make such speed after them, nor keepe pace with the horsemen, and for that mention is made afterward onely of the horsemen, that followed after them into the Sea, vers. 23. and Moses in his song speaketh of the horse and rider which were overthrowne in the Sea. But because there is expresse mention made of Pharaohs host, beside his chariots and horsemen, So the waters returned, and covered the chariots and the horsemen with all the host of Pharaoh, vers. 28. it seemeth that there were other beside horsemen. Iunius thinketh that the footmen are understood thereby: Piscat. that it is the generall name, and the other the parts and members of the host. But it is more likely that those which did ride in the chariots and did fight out of the chariots are comprehended in this name. 4. And the rather because it is said, that there were shalshim, triari Captaines, that is, set over threes, over every one of the chariots: which Captaines were so called, because in every chariot as Cajetanus thinketh, there were nine, three before, and three of each side, over whom a Captaine was set. Therefore it is most probable, that there were no other footmen than those which did ride in the chariots for more speedy pursuit after the Israelites: so that Pharaohs host did consist of these foure, of horse, horsemen, chariots, and chariot men.

QUEST. V. How the Israelites are said to come with a strong hand.

Vers. 8. The children of Israel went out with an high hand. 1. Which is neither to be referred to the arme of the Israelites, that they came forth with a strong arme: Simler. Or in battell aray well pre|pared, Iun. for seeing they were a naked people without armour, as Iosephus, and they were greatly afraid at the sight of the Egyptians, it seemeth that they were not so strongly appointed. 2. Some thinke that hereby is meant their securitie and carelesnesse that they feared nothing, but were of good courage: Calv. In which sense the Chalde readeth, they went out bareheaded, (which is not in the originall) that is, cou|ragious and bold. But neither is this like, for presently after it is said, they were afraid. 3. Therefore this high hand is best referred unto God, that he brought them forth with an high hand, as chap.3.19. it is said that the King of Egypt would not let them goe but by strong hand; as the Lords strong hand brought them out of Egypt, so his high hand and outstretched arme now leadeth them: Osiander. Deus ex Egypto gloriosè eos eduxerat: God had most gloriously brought them out of Egypt. So then here Gods high hand, which was all the strength of Israel, is set against the power of Egypt: Excelsi videbantur currus Pharaonis, sed revera manus domini fortior & excelsior: Pharaohs chariots seemed to bee very high, but the Lords is stronger and higher Ferus.

QUEST. VI. Whether the Israelites cried unto God in faith.

Vers. 10. Therefore the children of Israel cried unto the Lord. But presently after they murmur and con|tend with Moses: how then could they pray unto God? 1. Some therefore thinke that the faithfull among them prayed unto God, as Caleb, Iosua, and such other, but the hypocrites among them and carnall men expostulated with Moses: In ultimis malorum clamant ad Dominum fideles, infideles autem in rabiem vertuntur: The faithfull crie unto God in their extremities, but the unbeleevvers became mad. Pellican. But the text seemeth to speake of the same that cried unto God, and that did strive with Moses, as it followeth, vers. 11. And they said to Moses: that is, these whom hee spake of before. 2. Therefore they cried unto God, but rather out of the present sense of their calamitie, as men in their necessities will flie unto God, as is shewed, Psal. 107. Calvin. than of faith, as it appeareth afterward by their contempt|uous speech against Moses: Iunius. 3. Wherefore this was no prayer of faith, which they made: for then they would not have so soone forgotten themselves: Mercenaria charitas non durat in adversis: It is no true, but mercenarie charitie that faileth in adversitie: Confuso impetu clamor extortus fuit: It seemeth this crie was confusedly forced: not advisedly made: Calvin. H•c primum facere debuerunt, quod vix ultimò faciunt: They should have done that first, which they scarce doe in the last place: Ferus.

QUEST. VII. Of the great sinne of the people in expostulating with Moses.

Vers. 11. And they said unto Moses. The sinne of the people doth here diversely appeare. 1. In for|getting at once all those wondrous works, which the Lord had done for them in Egypt. 2. In their great unthankfulnesse for so great a benefit of their deliverance, which they had received, in preferring the miserable servitude of Egypt before it. F•rus. 3. In their murmuring against God, and contempt of his ministers. Calvin. 4. In their prophane scoffing, saying, Because there were no graves ◇ ◇ Egypt. 5. In their impatience, not waiting the Lords leisure. Gen•vens. 6. In their prophane impietie, in justifying their former incredulitie and ungratious words in Egypt. Simler.

QUEST. VIII. Whether Moses did suffer the people at this time to passe without reproofe.

Vers. 13. Then Moses said to the people, feare ye not. 1. Some thinke that Moses did not suffer the peop|ple to goe without sharpe reprehension here. Calvin. But it is more like that Moses did for|beare them at this time, the present necessitie so requiring: Simler. wherein he both sheweth his mild|nesse in not answering the people roughly againe, and his loving care, in that he, notwithstanding this their perversenesse, laboureth to comfort them in this perplexed hate. Ferus. 2. He doth encourage them, by promising them certaine deliverance from God. Iosephus more at large here doth amplifie Moses ex|hortation: which consisted upon two principall perswasions: the experience which they had already of Gods goodnesse toward them, that had omitted nothing needfull for them: that like as a wise man, which hath hitherto well compassed all his businesse, should not be mistrusted for the rest: so they should not doubt of Gods mercie toward them, who never yet failed them: the other was in communicating un|to them Gods counsell, that the Lord had therefore brought them into this streit, to get himselfe greater honour by their deliverance: to this purpose, Ioseph. lib. 2. cap. 6. He saith they shall never see the Egyptians againe, that is, in that manner, as they saw them that day, insulting against them and pursuing after them, as the Septuagint doe well interpret, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 : after what sort ye have seene them: for they saw them afterward, but drowned and lying dead upon the shore.

QUEST. IX. When the Lord spake these words to Moses.

Vers. 15. AND the Lord said▪ 〈◇〉 1. Some doe read had said, thinking that the Lord had thus spoken unto Moses, as it is set downe in the 5. verses following, before he had thus encouraged the peop|le: Neque enim testis & pra••salutis esse poterat non accepta promissione: for he could not be a proclaim•• of their safetie, having not first received a promise: Calvin. 2. But it is more like that the Lord spake unto Moses after he had exhorted the people, both because Moses cried unto God, which crie of his was oc|casioned by the same imminent danger, which moved also the people to crie; as also he might pray unto God to forgive this sinne of the people, which hee might justly feare would provoke the Lord to wrath, and so hinder his intended worke. Ferus. And though as yet Moses had received no particular promise, how the Israelites should be delivered, yet hee resteth upon Gods generall promise before, that he would get him honour upon Pharaoh and his host. Simler.

QUEST. X. When Moses cried unto God, and how, and for what.

VVHy criest thou unto me? 1. This is neither referred unto the crie of the people before spoken of, whose person Moses did represent, and therefore he is said to crie, because the people cried: for the crie of the people was disordered and tumultuous, and not much accepted. 2. Neither is this under|stood of Moses privat prayers, which at that time he made unto God, when as all the people cried beside, as Calvin: for though it be like that Moses omitted not then to pray also, yet this prayer was after his ex|hortation to the people, which came betweene: •lam•rem hunc ingratis|simus populus extorsit: for not onel|ly the enemie in sight, but the unthankfull and grudging people did draw the crie from Moses. 3. The Lord doth not find fault with Moses because he prayed, but for that he went not forward with the people as he was commanded, vers. 2. therefore that charge is here againe renewed: and though Moses voyce was not heard, nor no words uttered, yet hee is said to crie, because hee prayed unto God in his heart. I•n. 4. But Iosephus is here deceived, who thinketh that Moses in his prayer preventeth Gods speech unto him, and first desired of God, that the waters upon the striking them with his rod might be divided, and that upon his prayer, without any other direction or commandement from God the waters parted. But this report of his as we see is oppositely contrarie to the Scripture.

QUEST. XI. How the Angell is said to remove.

Vers. 19. AND the Angell of God, which went before the host of Israel removed. 1. This Angell is called before Jehovah: Vri{que} natura Iehova Dei filius, officio Angelus: By nature Iehovah the Sonne of God, and Angell in office: Simler. Calvin, Osiander. 2. Not that God removeth from place to place: Sed signa prasentia in alium locum transierunt: but the signes of his presence went to another place, and there|fore the Angell is said to remove. Simler. 3. This cloud both cast darknesse upon the Egyptians, that they were not able to pursue the Israelites, and it gave light to the Israelites that they went on still forward. 4. Here the Lord useth these three, the water, fire, and the cloud, as instruments of his judgements upon the Egyptians. So the old world was destroyed by water, Sodome by fire, and the Sonne of man shall come in the clouds to judge the world. Borrh.

Of the most miraculous worke of God in dividing the waters of the red Sea for the passing of his people.

QUEST. XII. What winde it was which did blow upon the red Sea.

Vers. 21. The Lord caused the Sea to runne backe by a strong East wind. 1. What manner of wind this was, seeing it is here expressed, there is no place for their opinion that thinke it was either a Northwind or a Southwind, as the Septuag. read < in non-Latin alphabet >, with a strong Southwind, whom Philo followeth, who thinketh that the waters were parted asunder by a strong Southwind, and brought together by the Northwind. But there is no mention made of any wind, which the Lord used in causing the waters to returne: and as for the wind which was sent at the dividing of the waters, the text saith it was an East wind, and so the Chalde translateth: and this was the fittest wind to part the waters on each side, rather than a side wind North or South, which would have driven the waters all one way. 2. Neither is it to be thought that the winde could thus divide the waters: for though the wind may sever the waters, yet not so, to emptie the very chanell: it bloweth upon the upper part of the waters onely. Againe, if it had beene the worke of the winde, the waters would have beene driven all one way: and the wind could not have so parted the waters, as to make a way in the midst: beside, if the wind had caused it, then when the wind ceased, they would have returned againe, but so did they not till Moses lift up his rod againe: wherefore it was the Lords miraculous worke, beyond the power or strength of any creature. 3. Yet it pleased the Lord to use this creature to shew his power over all things which he hath made. Calvin: and this winde served not for the dividing of the water, but rather for the drying of the ground after the waters were parted, Cajetan.

QUEST. XIII. At what time of the night the Sea was divided.

NOW at what time the Sea was thus divided, it may be thus gathered. 1. It is evident that this was done in the night, because the fierie cloud did give light onely in the night, as it did now, vers. 20. and it was darke among the Egyptians. 2. Whereas they used to divide the night into foure parts which they called watches of the night, after the phrase of militarie discipline, giving unto each watch three houres: it seemeth also, that the Sea was thus parted in the first watch in the beginning of the night, for after the fierie cloud had changed his place, Moses presently stretched his hand upon the Sea, vers. 21. 3. But whereas Pererius thinketh, ^{*} that it was past midnight in the beginning of the third watch before the Israelites descended into the Sea, and that they staid on the shore till the wind had dried the ground for them to goe on, which he thinketh was ceased before they entred, for otherwise the wind would have beene troublesome unto them: this his opinion seemeth improbable. 1. As soone as the Sea was divided, and a way made for the people, it is like they followed and staid not on the shore, because the Egyptians still pursued them, they would therefore slacke no time. 2. The Lord bid Moses that they should goe forward vers. 15. it is like then they staid not five or six houres on the shore. 3. The East wind did blow all night, vers. 21. therefore it was not laid before the Israelites went in, for after that the Egyptians wheeles were taken off, vers. 25, as may be conjectured, by the violence of the wind. 4. Neither was this wind discommodious to the Israelites, the walles of the water might keepe it from them, or the Lord knew how to qualifie it toward them, and to turne the rage thereof upon their enemies. 5. Neither needed they to stay so long, till the ground were dried for them: hee that could make a way in the water for them to passe, could also prepare the ground. 4. Neither was it so long as Pererius imagineth before the Egyptians entred after the Israelites, as about the end of the third watch, which was toward the morning: for seeing in the beginning of the fourth watch the Egyptians were overwhelmed by the returning of the waters, vers. 24. and before that the Egyptians were gone into the midst of the Sea, vers. 23. we must allow them more than two or three houres to reach so farre into the Sea•• it may therefore rather be supposed, that the Israelites going in, in the first watch, the Egyptians might follow them in the second: for they were not farre from them, as vers. 9. it is said that Pharaoh and his host overtooke them camping by the red Sea: and they were so neere, that the Lord caused an extraordinary darknesse among the Egyptians to keepe them from the Israelites, vers. 20.

QUEST. XIV. Whether one way were made in Sea, or twelve for every tribe one.

Further it is a question whether there were one onely way and path made for the Israelites in the red Sea, or for every severall tribe, a severall way, so that in all there should be twelve divisions of the red Sea, for the twelve tribes. Origene in his homilie upon this place writeth, that this was an ancient tradition among the Hebrewes: quod propria unicuique in mari aperta est via: That every tribe had a peculiar way made for them in the Sea: To this opinion subscribeth Thostatus, divisum esse mare in duo decim sectiones pro numero tribuum; That the Sea was divided into twelve parts according to the number of the tribes. Ab. Ezra upon this Chapter testifieth that this was an ancient tradition amongst them, and Epiphanius Heres. 64. This opinion both Origene and Thostatus doe ground upon that place, Psalm. 136.13. Which divided the red Sea into divisions; Secuit mare in segmenta, as Iun. translateth. But Thostatus doth fully answer this objection, that here the word translated divisions or parts in the plurall is so used according to the phrase of Scripture, that useth the plurall sometime for the singular; or else they are called divisions, because of the greatnesse and largenesse of the division which sufficed, as if there had beene many. Cajetan• also addeth, that they are called divisions in respect of the Sea, which was divided into two parts:

Page 166

Nam una incisio plures facit incisiones: For one incision maketh many incisions; as he giveth instance of a loafe being cut or divided, with one cutting there are made two parts. So the red Sea with one division was parted in twaine. Origene urgeth also that place, Psalm. 68. There was little Benjamine with their ruler; and the Princes of Iudah with their assemblie, the Princes of Zebulon, and the Princes of Neptalie, whence he would inferre, that all the tribes went thorow the Sea in their order. But this may rather be referred to the publike and solemne thanksgiving afterward, as mention is made of the singers and players of Instruments, that went before, vers. 25. then to their marching thorow the Sea: And the Prophet seemeth (rather than both) to describe the manner of their publike thanksgiving in the Sanctuarie, as vers. 24. They have seene O God thy goings in the Sanctuarie: And he speaketh of those times when Benjamine in respect of the slaughter at Gibeah, Iudg. 20. and of the civill warres with the house of David and with Iudah, was much wasted, that it was a small tribe in respect of the rest.

2. Wherefore it is more consonant and agreeable to the Scripture that there was but one way made thorow the red Sea for the people to follow: 1. Because if there had beene twelve sundrie paths it would have much amplified the miracle, and it is not like the Scripture would have beene silent therein: yea the Scripture affirmeth the contrarie, that there was but one way made for all Israel, as vers. 12. The waters were a wall unto them on their right hand, and on their left hand: which sheweth that the water stood up betweene them but on two heapes, and they walked betweene them. 2. Divines doe hold that miracles are not to be multiplied without cause: seeing then that one large way sufficed for the whole host of Israel, so many divisions had beene superfluous. 3. This dividing of the tribes into severall quadrants had beene discommodious unto them: for both they had no time to doe it, the Egyptians so eagerly pursuing them, and beside it would have weakned them to have beene divided into so many parts. 4. And by this meanes they could not all have had Moses to bee their guide to goe before them, which would have beene a dis|maying unto them if the host had beene quartered out into so many parts. And of this opinion that they all went one way thorow the Sea, are Thostatus, Lyranus, Cajetane▪ Ex Perer.

QUEST. XV. Which of the tribes first entred into the red Sea.

BUt this being made manifest, that all the host of Israel went together the same way, there is another doubt, which of the tribes went first: 1. Hierome upon the 12. of Hoshea saith, that the Hebrewes doe hold that the tribe of Iudah entred first, and that thereupon that tribe deserved to have the principallitie over the rest, according to the prophesie of Iacob, Genes. 49.10. and to this purpose they alleage the words of the Prophet, which they translate thus: Iudah a faithfull witnesse descended with God into the Sea, and is faithfull among the Saints, Hosh. 11.12. But in this translation somewhat is added: for in the Originall there is no mention at all of the Sea: and the rest is corruptly translated: for the word gh•dh signifieth here not a witnesse, for then it should be ghedh, but, adhuc, yet; and the other word radh com|meth of rudh, to rule, not of jaradh, to descend: so that this is the right translation of the words, Iudah yet ruleth with God: that is, though Ephraim were fallen away from God, yet Iudah continued upright and stedfast in the worship of God.

2. Lyranus reporting the same opinion of the Hebrewes, saith, that they also affirme that Aminadab the Prince of Iudah was the first that went downe into the Sea, and that the rest being animated by his ex|ample went in after him: to which purpose they cite that place, Cantic. 6.11. My soule troubled me because of the chariots of Aminadab, as the Latine readeth: or, My soule set me as the chariots of Aminadab, as the Septuagint, which they say had relation to Aminadabs valiant marching into the Sea before the people. But the word amminadib is here no proper name, but is taken for the willing people: for the pro|per name Amminadab is all one word, Numb. 7.11. but here are two: and the proper name is written na|dab with chametz, but here nad•b with jod: some doe translate it, the chariots of the noble: Vatab. Mon|tan. but then it should be nedib; it signifieth the willing people, as Psal. 110.3. and the meaning is, that the Church with her willing people maketh haste, as being set upon chariots to come unto Christ. And further, it is not to be thought, that there were any chariots among the Israelites, but that all went a foot, the Lord leading them as sheepe after him.

3. Therefore it is most like, that the first which went into the sea, was Moses himselfe: for he was neerest unto the Sea, when he stretched his hand over it: and beside, it was the part of a good Captaine in such extremitie to goe before his people to incourage them. Iosephus also thus writeth hereof: Moses primus progreditur hortatus Hebraeos ut alacriter sequantur per viam divinitus datam: Moses first goeth forward, exhorting the Hebrewes cheerfully to follow by the way which the Lord had made: lib. 2. antiq. Iud. cap. 7.

QUEST. XVI. Whether the Israelites went thorow the midst of the red Sea, or onely a part of it.

Vers. 22. Then the children of Israel went thorow the midst of the Sea. 1. Some thinke that the Israel|ites did not goe thorow the Sea in the breadth thereof to the other side, but fetched a com|passe like a semicircle, and arrived on the same side againe beyond the mountaines: of which opinion are the Hebrewes, to whom Thostatus consenteth, using these reasons to confirme his opinion: 1. The Egyptians bodies were cast up upon the shore where the Israelites arrived, for they could not see them on the other side over all the breadth of the Sea: but the Egyptians were neerer to their owne shore, when they were drowned, going into it but late in the night after the Isaaelites: now the Sea useth to cast up things at the next shore. 2. Againe, it was after midnight when the Hebrewes went into the red Sea, and about the morning were the Egyptians drowned: in the space of five or sixe houres it is not like that the Hebrewes could goe all the breadth of the red Sea. 3. This further appeareth, that the Israelites returned to the same side againe, because they pitched in the desert of Ethan, when they went into the Sea, and went three dayes journey in the same desert of Ethan after they came out of the Sea, Numb. 33.8. which desert of Ethan is also called the desert of Sur, Exod. 15.22. 4. If they had gone over the red Sea they should have beene forced to have come over the Sea againe, to go into the land of Canaan: for they were further off from Canaan on that side toward Arabia, than on the other toward Egypt: and the red Sea did not bound the land of promise on the West, but onely toward the East, as the land is described and confined from the red Sea to the Philistims Sea, Exod. 23.31.

Contra. But these reasons may easily be answered: 1. Though it be admitted that the Egyptians were neerer their owne coasts, when they were drowned, than the other side, yet by the tempest and course of the water which came against them, they might be and were carried to the other side: for Cajetanewell observeth, that the Egyptians, when their chariot wheelles were taken off fled away from Israel, and fled against the waters that returned upon them, vers. 27. the violence of the waters then did drive them to the other side: wherein Gods speciall worke also is to be seene, that to the comfort of his people would have the Egyptians bodies cast up in their fight, whereas usually bodies being drowned doe sinke in the waters, and flote not. 2. The Israelites were above five or six houres in going over the Sea, they went all the night, as is shewed before, quest. 14. neither were they all passed over, when the Egyptians were drowned, as is shewed vers. 29. for the Israelites walked on still. 3. The desert of Ethan is so called on both the sides of the Sea, both where the Israelites entred, and where they arrived, as Lyranus thinketh they were two deserts of the same name: and Iunius well thinketh, that both that desert on Egypts side is so called, and where they travelled afterward, when they had gone over: Annot. cap. 13. v. 20. Ethan is not the same with the desert of Shur, which bounded the Ismaelites countrie, Gen. 25.18. 4. It was not necessary the Israelites should returne over the red Sea againe, for the Lord did not lead them the neerest way, which was through the Philistims country, but about by the vast desert, therefore that is no reason to being them over the Sea againe, because of the neerer way.

2. That the Israelites went through the midst of the Sea: 1. The Scripture evidently speaketh, Psalm. 135.13. He caused Israel to passe over in the midst of it. The word is ghabar, which signifieth transire to passe over. 2. If they had gone on the other side of the red Sea toward Egypt, they must have passed along by the Philistims countrie, which the Lord intended not to doe, chap. 13.17. and Iosephus addeth this reason, why they went the other way: Ne Palestini quos ob veterem simultatem infens habebat de hac perfectione certiores fieripossent: Lest the Philistims who had an old grudge against them should have knowne of their journey. But they must needs have knowne it and hindred it likewise, if they had compassed about the red Sea: Est enim eorum regio Aegypto contermina: For their countrie doth border upon Egypt. 3. Iosephus also in the same place useth another reason, voluit obiter juxta Dei mandata in montem Sinai populum sacrificaturum adducere: Moses purposed according to the commandement of God to bring the people unto mount Sinai to sacrifice. But the next way unto mount Sinai (which is a mountaine in Arabia, Galath. 4.25.) was not to goe backe againe into Egypt, but to passe over the red Sea. 4. Beside it is not like that the Lord would bring them backe againe unto the Egyptian coast: Lyran. For so they should have beene in danger againe of the enimie. 5. The Israelites from the red Sea went forward to the wilderness of Shur, but that was beyond the red Sea toward the countrie of the Ismaelites, Gen. 25.18. not on this side toward Egypt. 6. Lastly, of this opinion, that the Hebrewes went through the Sea, are Iosephus, who saith, Iamque in adversum littus Hebraei evaserant: The Hebrewes were escaped to the other shore against them, lib. 2. antiquit. cap. 7. Likewise Philo: Tempestas procellosa in littus adversum ejcit Aegyptorum eneictorum corpora: A tempestuous storme cast the dead bodies of the Egyptians upon the contrarie shore, that the Hebrewes might see them; so also Euseb. Nysen: Ictu Mosaica virgae in oppositam usque ripam hinc atque hinc cedentibus aquis scissura pervenit: By the stroke of Moses rod the waters did cleave along and give way even unto the banke on the other side; and as the way was made throughout overthwart the Sea, so the Israelites followed: Ex Perer.

QUEST. XVII. The division of the red Sea not the worke of nature, but altogether miraculous.

IN the next place it would be inquired, whether this division of the red sea, were altogether miraculous, or whether it might not be helped by the worke of nature or mans providence. 1. Artapanus an an|cient writer reporteth hereof two opinions among the Egyptians: the Heliopolites doe hold that when Pharaoh followed after the Hebrewes, Moses by the stretching out of his rod divided the Sea: the Mem|phites affirmed, that Moses being skilfull in such naturall observations did wait when the red Sea was at the low ebbe, and then conducted over the people. But this foolish opinion is confuted by Diodor. Tar|sens. Chrysostomes Master, who by these two reasons overthroweth it: 1. That when the Sea ebbeth, the waters onely toward the shore do abate, the chanell of the Sea is not emptied: and againe the ebbing of the Sea could not make the water stand up on each side like a wall.

2. Neither is Iosephus narration probable, who to perswade that this was no incredible thing for the Sea to give way to the Hebrewes, alleageth that in like sort the Pamphilian Sea did open a way to Alexander in his expedition against the Persians, lib. 2. antiquit. cap. 7. by which instance Iosephus doth much extenuate this great worke which the Lord did for his people. Concerning which storie of Alexander;* 1. Neither is the censure of Iacobus Crinitus to be approved, who utterly denieth it to be true, which Iosephus repor|teth, and they which write of Alexanders affaires make mention of no such thing: for beside that Iosephus saith, id quod omnes testantur; &c. Which all they doe testifie that have committed to memorie

Page 168

Alexanders exploits; who, it is like, had seene and read some of those writers, whose bookes may bee now perished: Quintus Curtius lib. 5. in a word touched such a matter, Mari nov•m it•r in Pamphiliam aperuerat: He opened a new way by the Sea into Pamphilia. 2. And yet we may hold the report of Iosephus to be uncertaine and not credible, that Alexandr• ductu Macedonibus Pamphilium mare c•ssit: That the Pamphilian Sea gave way unto the Macedonians under the leading of Alexander: For this were to im|paire the credit of this great worke. 3. Therefore Strabo for this matter commeth neerer the truth, who writeth to this effect, that there is an hill lying upon the Pamphilian Sea, called Climax, by the which there is a passage on the Sea shore when the Sea is calme and still, the waters so abating that the ground is left naked, which at the flowing of the waters is covered againe. And Alexander comming that way, prinsquam fluctus rediret, movit, Set forward before the waters returned; but because it was winter, before he was passed, it so fell out that the waters overtooke him, Vt tota die iter faceret in aqua •••bili•• (◇) : That he travelled all the day up to the middle: Strab. lib. 14. This passing then of Alexander by the Pam|philian Sea, was much unlike to the Hebrewes walking through the red Sea: First, he went along by the shore, but they went through the Sea; Secondly, Alexander watched his time when the Sea ebbed, but the ebbing of the red Sea could not helpe the Hebrewes to goe through: Thirdly, the waters returned before Alexander was gone by: but the Sea gave way still to the Israelites, till they were all gone over, but it overwhelmed the Egyptians.

3. Paulus Oresius writeth that there are yet certaine miraculous monuments of this miracle extant at the red Sea, that the very trace of the chariot wheelles are to be seene, not onely on the shore, but in the Sea, as farre as ones eye can discern them, and that if those marks be defaced, they renew againe: Ores. lib. 1. But what credit there is of this report is uncertaine, it may seeme rather fabulous than otherwise: the monument of this miracle is sufficiently extant in Scripture, we need not to seeke it in the sand. And if any such monument were to be seene, rather the footsteps of the Hebrewes that walked that way, than the prints of Pharaohs chariot wheelles, were likely to remaine in remembrance of that miracle, which God wrought for his people.

4. But howsoever the truth is concerning that miraculous monument of the traceings of the chariot wheelles: these things were miraculous indeed, and shew it to be Gods extraordinarie worke, beyond the wit of man, or the power of nature. 1. It was a great miracle that a way should be made through the Sea, to the very bottome: the water useth to ebbe onely about the shore, not in the bottome and depth of the Sea. 2. That the waters stood up as a wall on each hand, it was also miraculous, and contrarie to the nature of the liquid element of water. 3. That such a great winde should bee raised on the sudden, and drie the ground in so short a time, was also admirable. 4. That the waters returned upon the Egyptians on the one side of the Sea, when as yet the Israelites were not all gone over on the other, it was wonderfull: Perer. 5. That the winde and storme was so strong upon the Egyptians with thunder, lightning and raine, Psal. 77.18. that the wheelles of their chariots were taken off while the Israelites passed on quietly, it was a thing of great admiration. 6. Gods providence also was seene, in that not one of the Egyptians remained, nor yet one of the Israelites were missing. 7. The casting up of the bodies of the Egyptians, and of their armour also, as Iosephus thinketh, which was after distributed among the Hebrewes, was extraordinary, whereas such things use to sinke at the first. 8. The driving of them to the contrarie shore, which was further off, was Gods speciall worke. 9. The Egyptians desperate following of them into the Sea, when they saw the waters stand up as a wall, is much to be admired. 10. But more, the courageous and speedie passage of the Israelites through the wide and large Sea in the compasse of one night.

QUEST. XVIII. The division of the red Sea and of the river Jordan compared together.

BUT to compare this miracle of dividing the red Sea by Moses, with the parting of the river Jordan before Iosuah. 1. In some points they agree together, both of them were wrought by an extraordinarie power, both were done to the same end, for the passing over of the people of God; and they had the like effect, the setting forth of the power of God.

2. But herein they differed. 1. The Sea was divided to deliver them from danger of their enemies: Jordan to bring them into the land of Canaan to encounter with their enemies. 2. There at the stretching of Moses rod the waters parted, here at the presence of the Arke. 3. There the waters stood up on each side as a wall; here the upper waters onely stood up on an heape, the nether waters were cleane cut off and ran into the dead Sea. 4. Here twelve stones were set up for a monument, there no such thing was done, because they were not to returne thither againe, but Jordan was alwayes in their sight. 5. There a great wind was raised to drie the ground, here none such needed, because the chanell of Jordan was sandie and hard. 6. There the people were guided by the leading of the cloudie and fire pillar, but here they needed it not, being come into an habitable countrie, whereas then they walked in desert, and unknowne places. 7. There a solemne thanksgiving was given immediatly unto God, here in stead thereof the people were circumcised in Gilgal, Iosh. 5.8. There the Egyptians were overwhelmed in the waters, but here no such revenge was taken upon Gods enemies, but the people of God onely provided for.

3. So that simplie the dividing of the Sea was a more glorious and wonderfull worke than the other. 1. Because as the Sea was larger than the river, so the miracle in the standing up of the greater waters was greater. 2. The people were at this time more distressed, and therefore their deliverance more joyfull. 3. The destruction of their enemies doth also set forth this worke beyond the other. 4. The great fame also that went of this miracle more than of the other, which was spoken of among the Gentiles; as Rahab of Jericho taketh notice of it, Iosh. 2. And the Philistines also heard of the Lords wonderfull worlking among the Egyptians, 1. Sam. 6.0.

4. But yet in two respects the parting of Jordan was more strange than the dividing of the red Sea. 1. Because Jordan had a perpetuall current running along into the dead sea, and therefore the upper waters which ran from the fountaine and head of Jordan, were either miraculously staid in the spring from flowing out, or else they did swell into an heape, as high and huge as a mountaine still increasing which of the two is most agreeable to the text, The waters that came from above staid and rose up upon an heape, Iosh. 3.16. 2. The other thing singular in the cutting of Jordan was, that this huge heape of waters after Jordan came together againe abated by little and little and fell not all at once, for the water being so much higher than the bankes would have overflowne all the Countrie, if they had not been restrayned by the power of God, and brought to their ordinarie course. Perer.

Here follow certaine questions of the overthrow of the Egyptians in the red Sea.

QUEST. XIX. Of the blindnes of the Egyptians running upon their owne destruction.

Vers. 23. AND the Egyptians pursued. Herein appeareth the just judgement of God upon Pharaoh, that they were so blinded, that they run headlong into their owne destruction, and follow the Israelites into the Sea: of this their blindnes the reasons were these: 1. The longanimitie and patience of God toward them, in sparing their lives hitherto, and onely touching their ground and cattell and first borne, in those ten plagues. 2. Their malice in desiring to be revenged of the Israelites. 3. Their covetous and greedie desire to recover their substance: Ferus. 4. Iosephus addeth more: Cum incolumē illos terram tenere videbāt, sibi quoquē cūdem eventum pollicebantur: When they saw that the Israelites did walke on the ground, they did promise unto themselves the same event. But they were deceived, for that way was made for those that fled from their enemies, to escape them, not for the enemy that pursued the innocent to destroy them. 5. But the greatest cause of all was, that God had given them over to a reprobate sense: Spiritu vertigine is in reprobum sensum abducuntur; They are carried headlong by a brainsicke spirit into a reprobate sence: Pellican: maxime eos excacavit iudicium Dei: Most of all the judgement of God blinded them. And these foure are the ordinarie causes of the excecation and blinding of men: abusing of Gods long suffering, malice, covetousnes, and Gods justice concurring in giving the wicked and obstinate over to themselves. Ferus.

QUEST. XX. Why the Lord looked in the morning toward the Egyptians.

Vers. 24. Now in the morning watch when the Lord looked, &c. 1. The Lord is said to looke and behold two wayes, either in mercie, as Mary in her song, The Lord hath looked upon the poore degree of his hand maide, Luk. 2.48. and as Hagar saith Thou Lord hast looked upon me, Gen. 16.13. Or in judgement, as here he looketh toward the Egyptians, whom hee saw before, but seemed to winke at them, and suffered them to goe on: Simler. 2. The Lord looketh toward them toward the morning to open the eyes of the Egyptians: ut serò videre, quò ipsos projecisset furoris sui impetus; that they might see, though too late, whether the force of their furie had cast them: Calvin, ut utrinque conspicua esset potentia Dei: that the power of God might be apparent, in the destruction of the Egyptians, and the deliverance of his people: Simler. The Israelites it being now day, might with comfort behold the Lords mightie worke: And this was a lively type of the resurrection of Christ, which was in the morning, Ad ortum solis iustitia, ora qua Christus resurrexit, iudicantur satellites Satana: At the rising of the Sunne of righteousness, at the houre of Christs resurrection, the hands of Satan were judged; Pellican. The power of darknes was then perfectly conquered, as here Pharaoh and his host at the appearing of the day are subverted and overthrowne in the sea.

QUEST. XXI. By what degrees the finall subversion of the Egyptians was wrought in the red Sea.

Vers. 25. FOR he tooke off their chariot wheelles. In these degrees this finall and last judgement was brought upon the Egyptians: 1. The Lord disturbed them, an horrible feare was sent upon them, as is shewed in the former verse, procured by the tempests and grievous thunders and lightnings sent upon them: Simler. 2. Which lightnings and tempests with winde and raine the Lord sent upon them, when hee looked out of the cloud, as is more fully declared in the Psalm 77.16. The waters saw thee O God, the waters saw thee, and were afraid, the clouds powred out water, the heavens gave a sound, yea thine arrowes went abroad, the voice of thy thunder was round about: Iunius. 3. Their chariot wheelles were taken off: and he drave them slowly, that is, not Pharaoh drave his chariots, Simler. or, the chariots drave heavily; Vatab. or, He carried them with violence: Calvin. Septuag. for the word signifieth to leade, ahag. Isai. 11.6. But the Lord drave them slowly, or heavily, that is, caused that their chariots could not goe: partly because the wheelles were violently taken off: Simler. partly because the earth being moistned by the returning of the waters clogged their wheelles, that they could not go. 4. The Latine translator readeth. Ferebantur in profundum: They were carried into the deepe: which although it doe not expresse the sense of the word, which signifieth heavinesse, not the deepe, yet this was another hindrance unto the Egyptians, that their chariots were forced descending into the deepe places of the sea, and so suo so pondere d^omer serunt: they did sinke themselves with their owne waight: Pellican. As in the next chapter vers. 10. Moses saith, They sanke as lead in the mightie waters. 5. Hereunto may be added: Vt se invic^om imped^orent: That they hindred one another. Ferus: Equi impiug^oban^o: Their horses floundred and ran one upon another: Zeigler. 6. And to make up the full measure of their judgement, the water came together upon them, and they fled against it as followeth, vers. 27. Iun.

Page 170

QUEST. XXII. Of the number of the Egyptians that perished.

Vers. 28. SO the water returned and covered. 1. Touching the number of the Egyptians which perished in the water: Iosephus saith, that there were in Pharaohs host 50. thousand horsemen, and 200. thousand footemen, which all were drowned in the waters, not one of them remained. 2. But it is hard to gesse at the certaine number, seeing the Scripture hath not set it downe: yet it is most certaine that their number and multitude was very great: for Pharaoh had not onely sixe hundred of the choice chariots, but all the chariots of Egypt beside: and all his chosen captaines were drowned also in the sea, chap. 15.4. Oresius doth make this an argument of their great numbers, because the Hebrewes being 600000, of fighting men, were afraid of them, and had no power to resist them, but made full account all to be put to the sword and there to have their graves, cap. 14.11. Ores. lib. 1. cap. 10.

QUEST. XXIII. Whether Pharaoh himselfe were drowned in the Sea.

Concerning Pharaoh himselfe: 1. That opinion of Manethon is utterly untrue, that hee himselfe escaped, and reigned after this in Egypt 25. yeeres and 4. moneths, for the contrarie is gathered out of the Scripture. First, because the Lord said before, that hee would get him honour upon Pharaoh and all his host: God therefore was no^o honoured onely in the overthrow of Pharaohs host, but of Pharaoh also himselfe. Againe, they which pursued the Israelites followed after them also into the sea, vers. 23. but Pharaoh himselfe with his host pursued them vers. 10. and therefore Moses thus speaketh, cha. 15.9. The enimie said, I will pursue, I will overtake them: which is specially meant of Pharaoh himself. But not one escaped of all that went into the sea, vers. 28. as Iosephus also witnesseth, Ita totus ille exercitus est deletus ut ne nuntius quidem cladis domum reverteretur: All the host was wholly destroyed that not one remained to carry tidings home of their destruction. The Psalme also speaketh evidently, Psal. 136.15. Hee overthrew Pharaoh and his host in the sea. 2. But yet the opinion of the Hebrewes, whereunto Thostatus consenteth, may safely here bee received, and it is very probable, that Pharaoh was the last of all that was drowned, that seeing all the Egyptians were overwhelmed in the waters, he which had been the greatest cause of this their ruine should have also the greatest griefe. 3. What this Pharaohs name was it is uncertaine: Eusebius in his Chronicle saith it was Cen•res, Manetho• in Iosephus calleth him Thermasis: Cheremon, Amenophis, Lysimachus, and Cornelius Tacitus say his name was B•c•horis. In such uncertaintie of so great antiquities, and varietie of opinion, nothing can be certainly affirmed: neither to be ignorant in such things is it much materiall. Perer.

QUEST. XXIV. Whether the Israelites were all gone over when the Egyptians were drowned.

Vers. 29. AND the children of Israel walked upon drieland. 1. Some thinke that the Israelites were first passed thorow the sea before the waters returned upon the Egyptians, and therefore reade it, perrexerant per medium maris, they had gone through the midst of the sea in the preterpluperfect tense: Pellic. Osiand. 2. Iosephus thinketh that the Israelites were come to the other shore before the Egyptians entred: Iamque in adversum littus Hebraei evaserant: The Hebrewes were now escaped to the contrary shore. But this is not like that either the Egyptians were not yet entred, or that the Israelites were all gone over, before the waters came together: because the Egyptians made all haste, and were very eager in pursuing after them, as Mosessheweth, cap. 15.9. The enemy said, I will pursue, I will overtake them, my lust shall be satisfied upon them, I will draw my sword, mine hand shall destroy them. 2. Therefore it is more agreeable to the text, that while on the one side the sea returned upon the Egyptians, in the meane time the Israelites went on safe betweene the two walles of the water, as this verse sheweth, and this doth more set forth the power of God, that defended his people and destroyed his enemies, they being in the same place and danger: Iun. Piscat. And this very well may be a type of the last judgement, as Feruscolleth: Sicut hic in mari alii pereunt alii• evadunt, sic in iudici• unus assum•tur alius relinquetur•• A• here in the sea some perish, some escape; so in the last judgement one shall be received, another refused.

QUEST. XXV. Why the Egyptians dead bodies were cast up upon the shore.

Vers. 30. AND the Israelites saw the Egyptians dead &c. This also did further shew the great power of God, that caused the sea to cast up the dead bodies of the Egyptians, which thing is not usuall for them which are drowned in the sea presently to be cast up: Simler. 2. Beside, it made much for the comfort of the people of God, when they saw their enemies destruction with their owne eyes, as it is in the Psalme, When the wicked men shall perish thou shalt see, Psal. 37.30. Ferus. 3 This object also being in their eye, they were thereby more effectually stirred up to give thanks unto God, which they presently performed, as it followeth in the next chapter. 4. They did not only see their enemies dead, but they also spoiled them: Pellican, Simler. and, as Iosephus writeth, Moses distributed their armour and weapons among the Israelites.

QUEST. XXVI. Of the red Sea whence it is so called.

NOW because often mention is made in this storie of the subversion and overthrow of the Egyptians in the red sea, it shall not be amisse briefly to shew the reason of that name, whereof there are divers opinions which may bee all sorted into three heads. 1. Some think that it is so called of the red colour of the water, which some hold to be but in shew, others that the waters have that colour indeede: they that hold the water not to bee red, but to seeme so to be, some ascribe it to the reflection of the Sunne beames, that shine very hot and red: others to the red mountaines adjoyning, that cast that colour upon that sea: Strabo lib. 16. Plin. lib. 6. cap. 23. Some to the rednes of the sand, where Pliny saith the Corall also groweth. They which hold the water to be indeed of red colour, doe either ascribe it to the nature of the water: Plin. or to the raine that runneth downe from the red mountaines, and so coloureth the water: Vraxius ex Masio in Ioshu. and Strabo out of Ctesius •uidius reporteth, that there is there a certaine fountaine which sendeth red water into that sea, and Varro also writeth of a certaine fountaine by the sea side, whereof the sheepe drinking, of white become red and tawnie.

2. Others thinke that the sea is not red at all neither to the eye nor otherwise, but it was called in the Greeke tongue 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, mare Erythreum, which signifieth in the Greeke, red, of Erythra, the sonne of Perseus, whose sepulchre is to bee seene in an Iland upon the sea called Tirina: Strab. lib. 16. for Philostratus saith, that the sea it selfe is of a blew and azure colour: lib. 3. de vita Apollin.

3. A third opinion there is, that this sea in Hebrew is not called the red sea, but the sea Suph, which signifieth not either red, or a reed, as Hierom. Epist. ad Fabio•am, but a reed onely or bulrush, such as grow in great abundance on the sea shore: as Aben Ezra and Rabb. Salomon. Pliny also writeth, and so doth Strabo, that within the sea toward the bankes there grew great plentie of trees, like unto Lawrell and Olive trees, which is so much the more strange, because none grow there upon the land.

4. Now to put somewhat of all these opinions together: 1. It is out of question, that in Hebrew this sea is not so called of the rednes, but of the reed there growing: as the rivers in Egypt, and specially Nilus, were full of flagges and reed, as is evident Exod. 2.3. 2. It is also cleere, that the sea in the Greek tongue was so called Erythra, after the name of Erythra the sonne of Perseus, as is before shewed: which word signifying red, by translators it was turned from a name proper, to an appellative. 3. Yet notwithstanding use having so prevailed, that almost by all writers, it is called by the name of the red Sea, insomuch that the Chalde Paraphrast retaineth that name: it is like that the colour of the sea might give occasion also to that name: not appearing so to bee by the reflexion of the Sunne, for so other waters seeme red when the Sunne shineth red upon them in the morning, as we reade 2. King. 3.22. that the waters by this meanes appeared to the Moabites red as bloud. But that the reede and trees growing by and in the water doe in some part give such colour to the water; yet the proper name thereof is the Sea Suph, or reedie Sea, of the abundance of reede, or some such like there growing. Ex Perer.

QUEST. XXVII. Of the fabulous reports of heathen writers, concerning the causes of the going out of the Hebrewes.

IN the last place, as Pererius hath collected them, shall be added the fabulous reports of the Heathen writers concerning the departure of the Hebrewes out of Egypt. 1. Manethon an Egyptian writer, as Iosephus reporteth him, lib. contra Appian. devised this fable, that after long warre betweene the Egyptians and Hebrewes, whom hee calleth Pastores, shepheards, who had reigned a while in Egypt, at the length when Themasis the King of Egypt, had besieged them with 80. thousand armed men, being compassed in with a strong wall, which they had made, and being out of hope to overcome them, com|pounded with them to get them gone of Egypt, whither they would.

In this fabulous tale of Manethon many lyes are heaped up together: 1. The Hebrewes never reigned in Egypt, but Ioseph under the King a long time governed that people even 80 yeeres to their great good. 2. Neither ever did the Hebrewes take armes in Egypt against the King, but endured their miserable ser|vitude with great patience. 3. Neither did they make a wall for their owne defence, but they made in|deede certaine places of munition for Pharaoh. 4. Nor yet did the Hebrewes goe away upon any such composition and agreement but Pharaoh was forced by plagues, and by the strong hand of God to let them goe.

2. Lysimachus as Iosephus also in the same place testifieth, did thus fable of the Hebrewes, that they being a people infected with the leprosie, and the contagion being so generally dispersed, that by reason of the diseased people the land lay waste, the King Boccharis consulted with their gods, who advised them to expell the Hebrewes, and to drowne all those that were infected among them. The Hebrewes hereupon secretly in the night kindled fires and lights, and went away under the leading of one Moses, and agreed among them to spare none, yea to deface the Temples of the gods, till they came to some places inhabited, and at length they came to that countrey which is called Judea, and there built the Citie Jerusalem. Concerning also this tale that the Hebrewes were expelled because of the leprosie, Iustinus and Cornelius Tacitus doe concur with Lysimachus. Iustinus adding further, that the Egyptians pursuing the Hebrewes were driven home by tempest, and Tacitus, that Moses bid them to looke neither for the gods helpe nor mans, but to trust to him.

Contra. That this fable is worthie of no more credit than the other it may diversly appeare: 1. These fabulous Chroniclers doe not agree together: one saith they were expelled for their leprosie; another because they warred with the Egyptians: one saith that Themasis was then King; the other, that Bocchar is then reigned in Egypt. 2. Beside, how is it like that the Hebrewes should be a leprous people, seeing Moses made such straight lawes against such as were lepers, shutting them out of the congrega^tion, as Iosephus well reasoneth. 3. The Hebrewes at their departure used no artificiall or naturall lights, but lead by the fierie cloud the light of heaven. 4. And untrue it is that they agreed among themselves to put to the sword the people that inhabited Jordan before them: they were commanded of God so to do, who is the Lord of the whole earth, and may give it to whom it pleaseth him. 5. They destroyed indeede the idolatrous Temples, because they were a dishonour to God: and for their abominable Idolatrie were those nations worthily cut off. 6. Untrue also it is that the Egyptians were driven home with tempests: for they were utterly overthrowne by tempest in the sea, not one of them returned. 7. Untrue also it is, that Moses bid them trust wholly in him: he did indeede exhort them, neither to trust in the vaine gods of the Heathen, nor in man: but he bid them wholly to relie upon God, and to wayte for the saluation of the Lord, chap. 14.13.

Page 172

QUEST. XXVIII. Of the comparison betweene the red sea and baptisme.

NOW to conclude, this passing of the Hebrewes thorough the sea, is by the Apostle made a type and figure of Baptisme: They were all baptised unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea, 1. Cor. 10.2. Which resemblance consisteth of divers part: 1. As in Baptisme there is a dying unto sinne, & a rising to newnesse of life, so the Israelites were as it were buried in the sea, and afterward were restored to the land. Simler. 2. As Pharaoh was overthrowne in the sea, and the Israelites delivered from their servitude; so in Baptisme, wee renounce the devill and the service of sinne: Thestatus. 3. As the cloud did shelter them from the heate of the Sunne, so Christs blood doth defend us from the wrath of God: Simler. 4. As the Israelites after they had passed the red sea did eate of Manna, and dranke of the water of the Rocke; so they which are baptised into the name of Christ, are made partakers of the heavenly mysteries: Theodoret. 5. Like as all the Israelites were baptised in the sea, yet many of them because of their unbelieve did not enter into the land of Canaan; so many that have been baptised into the name of Christ, afterward falling away either in faith or life, do not enter into the kingdome of heaven: Osiander. 6. As in the morning watch the Egyptians were destroyed: so Christ rising in the morning made a perfect conquest of the devill: Pellican. 7. As the Israelites were all baptized in one sea, so, as S. Paul saith, there is one faith, one baptisme, Ephes. 4. Ferus. 8. As the Egyptians being cast up dead were a spoile to the Hebrewes; so Christ hath lead captivitie captive, and given gifts unto his Church, Ephes. 4. 4.9. As the Egyptians being dead could doe no more hurt to the Israelites; so our sinnes being remitted, and as it were buried in the death of Christ, shall no more rise to our condemnation: Simler. 10. As Moses lift up his rodde and the waters were divided; so Christ saith, All power is given unto me, which is signified by the rodde; and then he gi|veth this commission to his Apostles. Goe and baptise &c. Matth. 28. Ferus.

QUEST. XXIX. How the people are said to beleve Moses, or in Moses.

Vers. 31. THEy beleaved the Lord and his servant Moses. In the Hebrew the phrase is, they beleaved in the Lord, and in Moses: for beth the preposition here used signifieth (in) Now whereas this distinction is received in schooles, Credere Deo, credere Deum, credere in Deum: To beleve God that he is true, to beleve God to be, and to beleve in God, that is, to repose our trust and confidence in him, as we say in our beleefe, I believe in God: hereupon ariseth this question, how the people are said to beleve in Moses, that is, to have any confidence in him. Therefore howsoever this distinction hath prevailed in schooles, and it may well be retained, yet it is not grounded, in respect of the phrase, upon the Scripture, which taketh these two, credere Deo, & credere in Deum; to beleve God, and to beleve in God, for all one: so that the letter (beth) is taken here in the same sense with (lamed): and the Chalde, Septuagint, and Latine doe in this place translate 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 crediderunt Deo & Mosi; they beleaved God and Moses. So also 2. Chron. 20.20. Beleeve his Prophets, and ye shall prosper: the same phrase is used with (beth). Likewise in the new Testament to beleve in the name of Christ, is sometime taken not for con|fidence, but to give credite or beleve him to bee true, and so betokeneth a temporarie faith, as it is said, that many beleaved in the name of Christ at Jerusalem, when they saw his miracles, yet Jesus would not commit himselfe unto them, Ioh. 2.24. And credere Christo, to belev: Christ, is other where taken for true faith, Ioh. 5.46. Had ye beleaved Moses ye would have beleeved me: likewise, credere Christum, to be|leeve that Jesus is the Christ, is taken for true faith, that bringeth us to everlasting life, Ioh. 20.31. Here then they are said to beleve Moses, that is, to acknowledge him to be a true Prophet and the faithfull ser|vant of God. Simlerus.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the difference betweene filiall and servill feare.

Vers. 5. ANd the heart of Phar••• and his servants was turned against the people. Here wee see a diffe|rence betweene a servile and filiall and true feare: Impi•rum tim•r servilis non durat diuti•• quàm sensus plagarum: The servill feare of the wicked lasteth no longer than the sense and feeling of the pla|gues, as appeareth here in Pharaoh, whose heart was hardned againe so soone as the plagues were ended: Filialis autem tim•r & fides in med•• ni••is exercetur: but a filiall feare and faith is exercised in the 〈◇〉 of afflictions. Pellican.

2. Doct. Prayer may be made without the voyce.

Vers. 15. Why criest thou unto me? Moses here uttered no voice, but sighed unto God and cried in his heart, Egit vocis silentio ut corde clamaret: Hee in the silence of his voice so wrought that he cried in his heart, as Augustines saith, quast. 52. in Exod. So that the lifting up of the voice is not the most necessarie part of prayer, but the sorrow and contrition of the heart; and therefore the Lord saith by his Prophet, Before they call I will answere, Isai.65.24. Before they call with their voice I will make answere to the secret requests and inward groanes of their heart. Piscator.

3. Doct. Christ not all one to the beleevers and unbelievers.

Vers. 20. IT was both a cloud and darknes. A lightsome cloud it was to the Israelites, but to the Egyp|tians a grievous darkenes: so our Saviour represented in this cloud, is to some the savour of life unto life, in the preaching of the Gospell, to other the savour of death unto death, 2. Cor.2.16. to the Grecians foolishnes, a stumbling-block to the Jewes, but to the faithfull the power of God and the wise|dome of God, 1. Cor. 1.23.24. Simler.

4. Doct. A double deliverance by Christ.

Vers. 30. THus the Lord saved Israel the same day. The Lord had delivered them before, but now their deliverance is accomplished and perfected: So our Saviour by his death and passion re|deemed us, as the Israelites were redeemed, when they did eate the passeover in Egypt, and sprinkled of the blood upon the doore-posts: But Christ by his resurrection did make perfect the worke of our re|demption, and the triumph over hell and damnation: so that as the Psalme saith, With him is plentious redemption Psalm. 130. Ferus.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Conf. Against the Porphyrian Atheists.

Vers. 22. THE waters were a wall unto them on the right hand, and on the l^{ft}. This doth evidently con|vince the Atheists, and Porphyrians, who objected that Moses being a skilfull man in natu|rall observations, did observe the tide of the sea, and at a low and ebbing water went over with his people. For 1. If Moses had this skill, it is like that the Egyptians, specially Pharaoh and the wisest of them should not have been ignorant of it, who notwithstanding their skill were drowned in the waters. 2. When the sea ebbeth the water onely leaveth the shore, the channell of the sea is never drie. Simler. 3. And the sea swelleth rather than ebbeth and falleth at the full of the moone, as it was now. 4. But this doth evi|dently bewray their malicious ignorance, that the waters stood up as a wall on each hand, which the sea useth not to do at an ebbing water: Iun. in Analys. See more hereof quest. 18. before.

2. Conf. That Christ was the substance both of the old and new Sacraments.

Vers. 22. THE children of Israel went thorow the midst of the sea. Saint Paul hereupon doth inferre, that they were all baptised unto Moses, in the cloud and in the sea. 1. Cor. 10.2. This their going then thorow the sea, was not only a figure of baptisme, and a bare signification of that which our Sacraments exhibite, as the Rhemists do note, 1 Cor. 10. Sect. 2. But the same truth and substance, even Christ Jesus was exhibited in their Sacraments as is in ours, only the difference is in the manner, because we see Christ more clearely then they did, whom they saw only as it were in a cloud, for the Apostle saith, they did eate the same spirituall meate not among themselves, as the Rhemists cavill, but with us, as Augustine well expoundeth, Lib. de poenitent. cap. 2. And the Apostle himselfe saith that the rocke was Christ: Christ then was the same spirituall drinke both to them and us.

3. Conf. No beleefe nor confidence to be placed in men.

Vers. 31. THEy beleeved the Lord and his servant Moses. The Rhemists urging here the Hebrew phrase, which is, they beleeved in the Lord and in Moses, would inferre that we may beleeve and trust in men, and so in the Church: and the like place they object, 2. Chron. 20.20. Beleeve in his Prophets and yee shall prosper: Rom. 10.

Contra. 1. The Latine translator in both places readeth, Crediderunt Mosi, credite Prophetis, They beleeved Moses, and beleeve his Prophets: so that they do heere refuse the Latine text, which they only hold to be authentically. 2. It is shewed before, quest. 30. that these phrases to beleeve in God, and to beleeve God are indifferently taken both in the old and new Testament: and whereas Moses saith of Abraham, heemin baihvah He beleeved in God, the Apostle translateth it 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . He beleeved God. Rom.42.3. Therefore Piscators note is not true, that the word heemin with beth, signifieth to trust or put confidence in, but with lamed it signifieth to beleeve, and so he saith they are said to put their confidence in God principally, but in Moses secondarily, as the faithfull servant of God. * Contra. 1. What differeth now this opinion from the doctrine of the Romanists, who do not teach us principally or originally to trust in Saints, but as our mediator, having dependance of God. 2. How can this assertion stand with the Scripture, Ierem 17.5. Cursed be the man that trusteth in man. 3. Whereas he produceth certaine places, where in Scripture they are said to put confidence in man, as 2. Cor. 23. This confidence have I in you all, that my joy is the joy of you all, and chap. 7.16. I rejoyce, that I may put my confidence in you in all things: the Apostle in these places by confidence, understandeth only a firme perswasion that he had of them, that they would not deceive his hope and expectation, using the words 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 and 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 which differ much from 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , that betokeneth a confidence in one, with a dependance upon him for helpe and succour.

6. Morall observations.

1. Observ. God knoweth the perils and dangers of his servants, & how to Deliver them.

Vers. 4. I Will get me honour upon Pharaoh and all his hoast. The Lord brought his people into that strait of purpose, to get himselfe honour in delivering them out of their distresse, and in judging their enemies: whereupon it is evident, that the dangers which the servants of God fall into, come not by chaunce, but are brought upon them by Gods providence, who knoweth also how to deliver them out of the same, as it is in the Psalm: Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver thee and thou shalt glorifie me, Psalm. 50.11. Simler.

2. Observ. Not to faint in our journey to the heavenly Canaan.

Vers. 12. IT had been better for us to serve the Egyptians, than to die in the wilderness. Like unto these Israelites, that preferred their servile life in Egypt, before their perilous travell unto Canaan through the wilderness, are they, which will undertake no paines, nor undergoe any labour for the kingdome of God, but are readie when affliction commeth to fall away, and wish they had never entred into the profession of faith, which they finde so difficult and unpleasant. Sed melius est in itinere mori, quam cum Egyptijs interire: But it is better to die in the midst of the journey, than to perish with the Egyptians. Ferus. As Moses did rather chuse to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, Hebr. 11.25.

3. Observ. Action to be joyned with invocation.

Vers. 15. WHy criest thou unto me? speake vnto the children of Israel that they go forward. As prayer is necessarie and faithfull invocation, so also from prayer we must go forward unto action: we must so depend upon God by prayer for his protection, as that we must also carefully use the meanes, which God hath appointed for our preservation: Ostenditur non opus esse ut deinceps elamet, sed in agre quod in mandatis acceperit: Hereby is shewed, that he need no longer crie, but to do that which he is comm^on/ded. Simler. Cornelius after he had prayed, goeth forward, he sendeth for Peter to bee further instructed, as he was commanded, Act. 10.

4. Observ. Faith the victorie of the world.

Vers. 14. Lift up thy rod, &c. and divide the sea. This rod signifieth faith whereby the sea is divided unto us, we overcome all tribulation, as the Apostle saith, this is the victorie that overcometh the world, even your faith, 1. Ioh. 5.4. Ferus. Of the power and efficacie of faith against all dangers, the Apostle thus speaketh, Hebr. 11.31. Which through faith subdued kingdomes, wrought righteousness▪ stopped the mouth of Lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, of weake became strong. &c.

5. Observ. Obedience to God and his Ministers cannot be severed.

Vers. 31. They beleevd God and his servant Moses. Moses was Gods Minister, and they could not shew their obedience unto God, but they must also receive and acknowledge the Minister of God, Moses: Hoc ergo principium teneamus, non alios obedire Deo, nisi qui Prophetas ab omissos recipiunt, quia nefas est separare quae ille conjunxit: Let us hold this principle, that no other obey God, than do receive the Prophets sent of him, because it is a wicked thing to separate what he hath joyned together. As our Saviour saith, He that heareth you heareth me: Calvin. Moses therefore is here joyned with God, to teach us that the Ministers of God speaking in his name, are no otherwise to be heard, than if the Lord himselfe should speake unto us: as the law of Moses is of no lesse authoritie than the decalogue it selfe, which the Lord pronounced; and the Epistles of the Apostles, than the Gospels which containe the doings and sayings of our Saviour, Simler.

CHAP. XV.

1. The Argument and method.

T His Chapter containeth, first the solemne thanksgiving of the Israelites for their deliverance, to vers. 22. Secondly the historie of certaine journeyes of the Israelites, to vers. 27.

The thanksgiving is performed, first by Moses and his company, to vers. 20. Then by Miriam with the women, vers. 20.21.

In Moses song there is first the argument and summe of the song propounded, why they will prayse the Lord, because they had overthrowne their enemies, the horse and the rider in the sea, vers. 1.

2. The narration or exposition, consisting of benefits past and to come.

The benefit already past is their deliverance, and the destruction of their enemies, to vers. 13. where the effects with the causes are set forth, which are three: First, who were drowned in the sea, where the cause is set before, the power of God, vers. 23. The effect followeth, Pharaohs hoast and chariots, and his captaines were drowned in the sea, vers. 4. Secondly by what meanes, the cause is first expressed, the power of God, vers. 6. Then the effect, they were destroyed by the winds, called the blast of his nostrils, and the raging waters, vers. 7.8. Thirdly, when, and upon what occasion they were destroyed, even|when they were in the height of their pride, vers. 9. The enimie said, I will pursue, then the cause there|of, the power of God, set forth comparatively, vers. 11.

The benefits to come. 1. Their preservation still, vers. 13. 2. The feare of the enemies, both whom this feare shall take, the people of Palestina, Edom and Canaan, vers. 14.15. and the cause of this feare is shewed, Because of the greatnes of their armie, vers. 16. and the fruits and effects of this feare, Till the peo|ple passe by, vers. 16. 3. The bringing of them in, and planting them in the land of Canaan, vers. 17. 4. Their continuall protection for ever, vers. 18.

3. The conclusion of this song, containing a rehearsall of the destruction of the Egyptians, and the del|liverance of the Lords people, vers. 18.

In the thanksgiving of Miriam: three things are declared. 1 Who they were, Miriam with the wo|men and matrons of Israel, vers. 20. 2. With timbrels and daunces. 3. The matter and argument of their song, answerable unto Moses song, vers. 20.21.

In the second part of this Chapter, there are described the journeyes of the Israelites, which were of two sorts, either hard & unpleasant journeyes, in difficult and dangerous places, or comfortable and pleasant.

Of the first sort were their two journeyes, one in the wilderness of Shur for three dayes, where they found no water at all: the second journey was to come to Marah, where is described: first the distresse wherein they were, the waters were bitter, with the event, the naming of the place upon that accident, and the effect, the mourning of the people▪ then is shewed how they were delivered from this distresse, where, 1. The causes are expressed, the principall, God at the prayer of Moses; the instrumentall or mi|nisteriall, a tree which the Lord shewed. 2. The effect, the waters became sweete. 3. The event, that by this occasion, the Lord maketh a promise and covenant with them: consisting of the condition, their obe|dience, the promise of the benefit, their health and safetie from all the plagues of Egypt, the foundation thereof, the providence and protection of God: I am the Lord that healeth thee, vers. 26.

Their journey of the second sort, was in Elim, wherein were twelve fountaines of water, and seventie palme trees: both delectable for their pleasure, and profitable for their present use and necessitie, vers. 27.

2. The divers readings.

Vers. 2. The Lord is my song. I.V.C. praise. B.G.A.P.I. the first rather▪ Zi•arah commeth of Zamar to sing.*

Vers. 2. And I will build him a tabernacle. I.G.C.A.P. rather than, I will praise him. B.L.S.V. navah signifieth to dwell, as Habak. 2.5. he shall not dwell or continue: and in hiphil to cause to dwell.

Vers. 4. In the reedie sea. I.V. the sea suph. A.P. rather than the red sea.* B.G. cum cater: suph signifieth a reed or bulrush.

Vers. 6. Thy right hand is glorious to me in power. I better than, thy right hand is glorious in power.* B.G. cum cater: the word is nedari with an affix pronoun.

Vers. 6. Thy right hand hath bruised them. A.B. cum caeter: better than,* with thy right hand thou hast brused them. I. for a preposition should be supplied here, which is wanting in the Hebrew: and the word jeminca is used before in the beginning of the verse, in the nominative case.

Vers. 9. Mine hand shall take them for an inheritance. I. shall rule over them. S. better than, ^{*} shall destroy them. A.P.V.C.L. cum cater. the word torish of jarash to inherite, signifieth properly to cause to inherite: sometime it signifieth to expell, but that sense is not fit here: and beside it was their intendment to bring them againe into their subjection and service: cap. 14.5.

Vers. 11. Who is like unto thee among the mightie? I.L. rather than, among the gods. A.P.V.B.G.C. for beside that, ^{*} elim is so taken for the strong and mightie, 2. King. 24.15. this sense is more generall, ^{*} and exalteth God above all that are called mightie, Angels or men.

Vers. 17. Plant them in the mountaine of thine inheritance. B.G.C.A.P. cum cater. of thy possession^{*} I. but nachalah rather signifie than inheritance, as the Septuagint translate, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉.

Vers. 19. Pharaohs horses went with his chariots. I.C.P.G. not Pharaohs horsemen. ^{*} L. V. for that is expressed afterward: nor Pharaohs horse. S. or Pharaoh on horseback went. B. for though it be sus. in the singular in the originall, yet it is taken for the plurall▪ as cap. 14.23. it includeth a signification also of Pharaohs personall going into the sea.

Vers. 20. With timbrels and daunces B. G. C. cum cater. rather than timbrels and flutes. I. the word mecholoth is taken for dauncers, Iud. 21.20. and so wa^{*}the use for the women to come forth with daun|ces, to meete those that returned with victorie, as Iud. 11.34. 1. Sam. 18.5. and heere, as Miriam is said to take a timbrell only, so it is like the other women did, neither had it been so fit for them to play upon flutes, because of their singing and answering Moses.

Vers. 22. And they went forth toward the desert of Shur▪ or that they might go forth to the wilderness of Shur. I. better, then they went out into the desert of Shur. ^{*} B.G. cum cater. for they did not immediately en|ter into the desert of Shur, after they left the red sea, but they travelled first three dayes thorow the wil|dernesse of Ethan, Num. 33.8. Iun.

Vers. 23. He, or, everie one, called the name of the place Mara▪ I.V.A.P.C. not, the name of the place was called. B.G.S.L. for the word ^{*} ara is in the 〈◇〉.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QVEST. I. Of the antiquitie and excellencie of Moses song.

Vers. 1. Then sang Moses. 1. This song of Moses, as it is the first that we reade of in Scripture, so it is the most auncient song that is extant in the world, for the songs of Linus Musaeus, Orpheus, are found to be 300. yeares after this song of Moses. 2. Iosephus saith that Moses composed this song in hexameter verse: and lest any should thinke this strange, Hierome in his preface to the booke of Iob, wit|nesseth that all that booke from those words in the beginning of the third chapter, Let the day perish wherein I was borne, unto those words cap. 42. therefore I abhorre my selfe, and repent in dust and ashes, i^{*} written in hexameter verse, for the most part consisting of Dactilus and Spondaeus, the two usuall feete of an hexameter verse. Perer. 3. But whereas Iosephus in the same place saith, that the Israelites did passe all that night in mirth, and rejoycing for their deliverance, that seemeth not to be so: for it was morning before the Egeptians were drowned, cap. 14.24. The Lord looked toward the Egyptians in the morning watch: and the Israelites saw their dead bodies upon the sea banke, which they could not so well discern by night: therefore this rejoycing was solemnized the next day, not the same night.

QUEST. II. In what order Moses, the children of Israel, and Miriam sang this song.

Concerning the order and manner how this song was sung. 1. Some are of opinion, that Moses sang it alone, and that he taught the people afterward this song, who did often sing it, as they had occasion: Thostatus and Iosephus thinketh that the people first rejoyced and gave thanks unto God, and that afterward Moses framed this song in hexameter verse: but the text favoureth not this opinion, which saith, that then, even at that time Moses and the children of Israel sang; wherefore I subscribe rather unto Philo, who saith, that Moses began first every verse, and then the people followed: & this is agreeable to the text, where Moses beginneth in his owne person saying, I will sing unto the Lord: and seeing that Moses and the children of Israel sang this song, who were not all Prophets to endite a propheticall song, neither in so short a time could they have learned this song before, it is like that the one followed the other, and that Moses began, and then the people repeated either the whole verse or the ground of the song only, which was this, Sing unto the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously the horse and his Rider hath hee overthrowne in the sea; which verse is after repeated by Miriam and her companie: for so was it the use in solemne songs, to have one verse repeated, as Psalm 136. that clause, For his mercie endureth for ever, is often repeated.

Now in what order of consort and consent Miriam sang and answered the men, is not agreed upon. 1. Some think that Miriam with the women answered the men, and sang the ground of the song by turnes: Oleaster, Iun. and Philo sometime is of the same opinion, that there was a mixt harmonie of the great and base voyces of the men, and of the sharpe tunes of the women. 2. But I thinke rather that there were two companies of fingers, of the men apart, and of the women apart, and that as Moses began, and the people followed, so did Miriam sing, and the women answered her. Sic Pellican. Simler. Calvin. And this may seeme more probable. 1. Because it was the use for the women only by themselves, not mingled with men to celebrate such solemnities, as appeareth Iud. 11. when Iepthahs daughter met him, and 1. Sam. 18.5. when the daughters of Israel came out against Saul and David. 2. Beside their instruments and gesture of dancing sheweth so much, that they were by themselves. 3. Neither is it to be thought, that they sang only the ground of the song, which for brevities sake only is expressed, but the whole song. Simler. Calvin. Ferus. And so much seemeth to be insinuated in the Psalm 68.11. The Lord gave mat/ter to the women to tell of the great armie: They therefore did set forth in their song the whole manner of their deliverance, and the overthrow of their enemies, as Moses had done before: this place of the Psalm Genebrard doth fitly applie unto this song of deliverance, made by this company of women; whose opinion also is that there were two companies, one of the men, the other of women, singing by themselves; Viri in uno choro cum Mose, & foeminae in altero cum Maria celebrabant victoriam de Pharaone partam: The men in one companie with Moses, and the women in another with Marie or Miriam, did celebrate the victorie of Pharaoh obtained. 4. And whereas Miriam is said to answer the men, that may be referred rather to the correspondencie of the like act of singing performed by the women, and to the identitie and agreement of the song, than restrained to their answering them by turnes: as Simlerus giveth his opinion, that while Moses sang this verse with the men, Marie his sister, appointeth a peculiar queere of women: Et idem carmen praeinus illis succinentibus priori virorum choro respondet: And singing before them the same song, doth answer to the former queere of men.

QUEST. III. The end of the song of Moses.

The end of this song of Moses was, 1. To testifie their thankfulness unto God for this great deliverance, and that by this example others afterward should be stirred up, to give like thanks unto God, as the daughters of Israel did at the returne of Saul and David, from the overthrow of Goliath and the Philistims, 1. Sam. 18. and as Iehosaphat and the people blessed God in the same place, where they had obtained the victorie, 2. Chron. 20. Simler. 2. This celebration of publike thanks, doth make also very much for the truth of the historie, for as Calvin saith, Quibus mentiti essent, cum aliis alii testes essent? To whom should they have lied, seeing they were one witness to another? neither did this song come abroad to other nations. 3. This song was a notable type and resemblance of the spirituall joy of the Church, for their deli|verance by Christ: as in the Revelation, the Saints that had gotten victorie over the beast, are said, To sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lambe, saying, great and marvellous are thy workes, Lord God Almightye, just and true are thy wayes, th•• King of Saints: cap. 15.3.

QUEST. IV. Why the scripture speaketh so much against horse used in battell.

Vers. 1. The horse and his rider hath he overthrowne in the sea. 1. The singular is put for the plurall, which is usuall in the Scripture, and in this place with a speciall relation to Pharaoh himselfe in person, overthrowne with his horse. 2. We shall finde in Scripture, that the pride and trust in horses in battell is much discommended, as Psal. 20. Some put their trust in chariots, some in horse, but we will re|member the name of the Lord our God. Psal. 33.17. An horse is but a vaine helpe. Psal. 76.6. At thy rebuke O God of Iacob, both the chariots and horse are cast asleepe, Psal 147.10. He hath no pleasure in the strength of an horse: and among other sinnes of the people, this is numbred for one, Thir land was full of horses, and their chariots were infinite: Esay 2.7. 3. The reason why horses are so much discommended, Origen would have to be this: the Law commandeth nothing concerning horses, as it speaketh of asses, because horses are ordained more for mens destruction, but asses serve for labour, and carrying of burdens, and o|ther necessarie uses: and he addeth further, Lascivi motus, & superbae cervicis animal equ•s: An horse is a lascivious and proud beast, and therefore the Scripture compareth such unto horse, Orig. hom. 15, in Ios. Hierome giveth this reason▪ Quia contra Dei imperium possid•tur: Because it was against the commande|ment of God, to possesse and multiplie horses, Deut. 17. Hieron. in 2. cap. Isaia. Another yeeldeth this reason: Habet & Dominus noster equos, habet & diabolus suos, &c. The Lord hath his horse, and so hath the de|vill: but when the Prohpet desired that the e•es of the young man might bee opened, hee saw chariots and horse, but no riders: Quia currus & equi Angeli, & eorum a•censor *Deus, Because the Angels are the Lords chariots and horse, and the Lord himselfe is their rider: and on the other side, the Devill is the rider of his horse, Hieron. in Psal. 77. Rupertus*would have this the cause: Hic mundus per equum, Diabolus per ascensorem significetur; Because the world is understood by the horse, the Devill by his rider. Philo goeth fulther from the marke: Equi sunt furor & concupiscentia, inessor & a•riga intellectus; The horse are rage and concupiscence, the rider is the understanding: and so he understandeth that prohibition allegoricall|ly, Deut 17. That the King should not multiplie horses, of the passions and affections of the minde: Philo libr. de agricultur. Ex Perer. 4. But the true cause indeed why the Scripture so much inveigheth against horse, is not as though it condemned the necessary use of them, and the defence and service by them in warre: for Salomon had 40. thousand stalles of horses for his chariots, & 12. thousand horsemen, 1. King. 4.26. and therin sinned not. But two reasons may bee rendred thereof, the one politicall, which concerned one|ly that people, lest they might by this occasion go into Egypt to multiplie horses, Deut. 17.16. which beling a plaine countrie abounded with horse: the other reason was morall, because they did put their trust and confidence in horse. Both these causes the Prophet joyneth together, Isay 31. 1. W•unto them that go downe into Egypt, and stay upon horses: And for this cause, as Origen well noteth, Filii Israel nunquam equis usi fuisse referuntur; The children of Israel in all their battels against Canaan, are never said to have used any horses: Basil also toucheth the cause, Quia jubebat Deus, ut toti penderent à suo praesidio, &c. God comman|ded them wholly to depend upon his helpe: Basil upon that place, 2. Esay. So then as simplie to number the people, was not displeasing unto God: for Moses numbred them, but with an intent to rejoyce and put confidence in their numbers, as David did; so simplie, it was not unlawfull for them to have horse, but to place their trust and confidence in them.

QUEST. V. How the Lord is said to be the strength and song of his Church.

Vers. 2. The Lord is my strength and song, and he is become my saluation, 1. These words are repeated both by the Prophet David, Psal. 118.14. and by the Prophet Isay cap. 12.2. whereby appeareth the excellencie of this song, and that the praise of God is a most principall part of Gods service: Simler. 2. God is said to be the strength of his servants, being not only mightie and omnipotent in him|selfe, but giving them also might and strength: for as Iehosaphat said, There is no strength in us in respect of this great multitude. 2. Chron. 20.12. So for the most part the people of God are weakest in outward meanes, and in their extreme distresse, that God may have the more glorie in assisting, and streng|thning them. 3. He is said to be their song, that is, both the matter of their song, to whom they do re|turne the honour and praise of all their victories, as also, he is the song of his Church, in whom they onely rejoyce and make their boast, as Saint Paul onely rejoyced and gloried in Christ. Simler.

QUEST. VI. Whether God appeared in any visible shape to the Israelites at the red sea.

Vers. 2. This is my God. 1. The Hebrewes opinion, that God appeared to them in a visible forme, as like a man of warre upon the red sea, whom they pointed at with the finger, and said, This is my God, hath no ground, nor warrant at all. First, the Lord knowing how prone the people were to Idola|trie, would not shew himselfe publikely in any visible shape lest they should have imagined God to be so, as Moses saith unto them▪ Take heede to your selves▪ for yee saw no image in the day▪ 〈◇〉 the Lord spake unto you in Horeb, out of the midst of the 〈◇〉 ▪ Deut. 4.15. And for the 〈...〉 ▪ the Lord would not shew himselfe in any visible 〈◇〉 unto Israel, though priva••l•▪ 〈◇〉 was seene of Iosuah, like a man of warre, Ios. 5. But in 〈◇〉 manner the Lord shewed himselfe, is expressed before, cap. 14.24. The Lord looked unto the •oast of the Egyptians, sending thunder, raine and lightning, with storme and tempest upon them. Perer. 3. They therefore by the visible and sensible effect, which they saw before their eyes, do demonstrate God as verily present. Lyran.

2. They therefore in saying, This is my God, make a difference between the true God and the false, such as the Egyptian 〈◇〉 were▪ as if they should have said▪ Hic est 〈...〉 non 〈...〉 erant quos in Egypt• coleba••••punc; This is the true God▪ 〈◇〉 falsely 〈...〉 whom we worshipped 〈◇〉 Egypt.

Page 178

Basil. And againe they acknowledge him, Non novum a•t recentem Deum, Not a new start up god, but their fathers God, whom Abraham worshipped; and hereby, as before, they distinguished the true God from the heathens Idols: so Hac voce fides Abrahæ discernitur à cunctis gentium superstitionibus; By this word the faith of Abraham is discerned from all the superstitions of the Gentiles: Calvin. And these words, This is my God, have a speciall reference unto Christ their peculiar God, whom their Father Abraham worshipped, as our Saviour saith, Your Father Abraham rejoyced to see my day, he saw it, and was glad, Ioh. 8.56. Rupert. And Christ specially is said to be the strength of his members: for the strength of the head is the strength of the members. Ferus.

QUEST. VII. In what sense Moses saith he would build the Lord a tabernacle.

I Will build him a tabernacle. 1. Some reade, I will glorifie him. Latine and the Septuagint 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, so Calvin and Piscator; but the usuall signification of the word navah, which signifieth to dwell, doth not favour that reading. 2. Some reade, Habita•o eum, I will inhabite him, Cajetan. But the word being in hiphil, includeth beside an active power, as, I will cause to inhabite. 3. Wherefore the best reading is, I will build him a sanctuarie, or seemely tabernacle, as the Chaldee Paraphrast, and Vatab. Iun. Mont•• Pagnin. So that heere Moses by the spirit of Prophecie, foreshewed that the Lord would have a peculiar tabernacle made for himselfe, as the Idols of the Gentiles had their temples. Simler.

QUEST. VIII. How the Lord is said to be high.

I Will exalt him, or set him high. That is, exalt his praise, and acknowledge the Lord to be the only high God: foure wayes in Scripture is the Lord said to be high: 1. In respect of his incomprehensible nature, which none can behold as it is, or attaine to the knowledge of it: Who only hath immortalitie and dwelleth in the light, that none can attaine unto, whom never man saw, neither can see, unto whom be honor and power everlasting. 1. Tim. 6.16. 2. In respect of his deepe and unsearchable wisdom, as the Apostle also saith, O the deepenesse of the wisdom and knowledge of God, how unsearchable are his judgements, and his wayes past finding out, Rom. 11.33. 3. The Lord is said to be most high, in respect of his high dominion, farre above all Kings, and Princes, as Nebuchadnezzar confesseth the Lord to be most high, Dan. 4.31. though he were the most high Prince then in the earth, yet he confesseth God to be higher than he. 4. The Lord is very high in his habitation, he dwelleth in the heavens, God is in the heavens, and thou art in the earth, Eccle. 5.1. who although he is in everie place, yet heaven is said to be his seate, in respect of the more glorious signes, which he hath there placed of his presence. Let us also with the Hebrewes thus acknowledge the Lord to be high, and exalt his praise.

QUEST. IX. In what sense the Lord is said to be a man of warre.

Vers. 3. Iehovah is a man of warre. That is, an excellent warrior. 1. God is said to be a warrior in these respects. 1. Because he giveth victorie, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, he breaketh battels and subdueth warre, as the Septuagint, Victor bellorum: an overcommer of battels, as the Chaldee Paraphrast. 2. Because he is exercised in warre, and fighteth the battels of his people, giving them good successe: as Ezechiah thus encouraged his people against Senacherib; With him is an arme of flesh, but with us is the Lord our God to helpe us, and to fight our battels, 2. Chron. 33.7. Simler. 3. He is a man of warre in respect of his prudence and policie: as a wise Captaine will watch his best opportunitie, and then he will set upon his enemy; so the Lord a great while suffered the Egyptians to go on, but when he saw his time, he came upon them, and overthrew them all at once▪ Ferus. 4. A wise warrior will make best choice with what weapon and force he will encounter his enemy: so Christ was this wise warrior, who having not to deale with flesh and blood, but with spirituall enemies, did not arme himselfe with carnall, but with spirituall weapons: Contra potestatem superbiae, humilitatem induit contra spiritualia nequitiae fortitudine charitatis seipsum pr•lcinxit: Against the power of pride, he put on humility; against spiritual malice and impiety, he armed him|self with charity.

QUEST. X. Why now it is said His name is Iehovah.

Vers. 3. His name is Iehovah. 1. The Latine translator readeth, Omnipotent is his name, which although it be true of God, that he is omnipotent in himselfe, and so the name of God signifieth God himselfe, and that by the invocation of the name of God, miracles and wonderfull things are wrought, as Moses here, when he stretched out his rod upon the sea, did also invoke and call upon the name of God: yet it is not the meaning of this place, where in the Hebrew, it is Iehovah, which signifieth not omnipotent, but is a peculiar name, which is given unto God in Scripture. 2. The true reading is, Iehovah is his name, which Oleaster deriving of hovah, which signifieth destruction, maketh this to be the meaning▪ that the Lord had now shewed himselfe Iehovah, in the destruction and overthrow of his enemies: but the word being 〈◇〉 rather of ••aiah to be, as of the same root, the Lord calleth himselfe Eheje, Exod. 3.13. the Lord now sheweth 〈...〉 Iehovah, in making good▪ 〈◇〉 promises, in delivering of his people and in shewing his Majestie and power: that 〈...〉 before made himselfe knowne to Moses by his name Iehovah, Exod. 6.

so now as a mightie Iehovah, he performeth that which there <◇> promised. Simler. See more of the name Iehovah, Exod. chap. 6. qust. 7. and before.

QUEST. XI. Of the name of the Captaine see over <◇> .

Vers. 4. HI[•] chosen captaines, &c. they sank like <...> . 1. The word is <...> signifieth <...> ▪ captaines over <...> thinke they were so called <...> , because they were i[•] the next place <...> King, as Daniel was one of the <◇> , that <...> the other governours, Dan. 6.3. Hier. in. 5. cap. Dan. Some because they were in the third place from the King. Piscat. Gregor, Nyssen. upon this song bringeth divers interpretations, as they were called tristat[•], that [•]ode upon three horses: or they which could stand against three, or they which had the third place in the battel, that if the first and second were slaine, they might stand up in their place. H[•]sychius saith they were so called, which were of the Kings guard, which used three speares. Origen. hom. 6. in Exod. fleeth to a mysticall sense, who applieth these tristatas, to those three wayes wherein a man sinneth, in thought, word, and deed, and such other allegoricall applications he hath, which come not neere the point. But the most probable conjecture is, that they were so called, as Greg. Nyssen. in the former place alleageth, because in every chariot there were three, one to guide the chariot, one to fight, another to defend. But I like Cajetans conceit rather, that thinketh there were in every chariot nine, three on each side, and three before, and that every chariot had his Captaine, as it may be gathered, cap. 14.7. If every chariot had his peculiar captaine, it is like there were more than three in a chariot: this sense the Septuagint do favour, calling them < in non-Latin alphabet > , the triarie captaines, riders, so that these captaines were such as rid in the chariots. Ex Perer.

Page 179

2. The chiefe Captaines then are drowned in the red sea, ^{*} as before they made the waters red with the blood of the Hebrewes children, and as both King and Princes consented in crueltie, so are they joyned in punishment. Pellican.

3 The Lord is said to cast them into the sea: the word is jarah, taken from archers: that as an arrow is cast speedily, and with strength out of a bow, so were they with violence cast into the sea. Borrh. and as a stone sinketh and never riseth againe, and being throwne, it falleth with violence: such was the destruction of Pharaoh, with violence not to be resisted, and they sanke as a stone that lieth still never to be recovered. Ferus. 4. To the same purpose afterward, they are said to be consumed as stubble, to shew their speedie destruction, as stubble is easilie set on fire. Simler. But as the fire which consumeth the stubble purgeth the gold: so the Israelites came forth of the sea like gold, that whereas they were murmurers before, now they do give thanks unto God. Borrh.

QUEST. XII. What is meant by the blast of his nostrils.

Vers. 8. BY the blast of thy nostrils the waters were gathered. 1. Some understand by this phrase the wrath of God, Simler. But he made mention of the wrath of God immediately before, and the dividing of the waters was a worke of Gods mercy, and favour to deliver his people, not of wrath, and afterward Moses expoundeth himselfe, Thou blewest with the wind, vers 10. whereof mention is made before, chap. 14.21. how the Lord sent a strong Eastwind. Iun. Vatab. 2. And by this phrase, how easily the Lord can confound the wicked, Levi attactu Dei concidunt omnia, By the least touch, even by the blast of his mouth all things do fall to the ground. Pellican. Si hoc solo spiritu potuit, quid poterit cum veneri[•] cum Majestate, If the Lord could do this with his breath, what is he able to do when he commeth in his Majestie? Ferus. 3. And in that he saith the

depthes were con•ealed together, where the word is kaph•▪ which properly signifieth the running or setting together of cheese; Borrh. it sheweth how easily the Lord commandeth his greatest creatures, that even he can cause the waters of the sea to come together as curd• and cheese: And in that it is added, the Depthes were congealed together in the heart of the sea: it de|clareth that they went not thorow the sides of the sea only, fetching a compasse like a semicircle about▪ but that they went into the middest and heart of the sea. Simler.

QUEST. XIII. Of the vaine boasting of the Egyptians.

Vers. 9. THEemie said, I will pursue, I will overtake. 1. The Egyptians are heere brought forth, as it were upon a stage, vaunting and boasting themselves, which kind of figure called Prosopo|peia doth more fully and emphatically set forth, how the Lord disappointed them of their purpose, than if it had been expressed by a simple narration. Simler. After the same manner Siceras mother is brought in, speaking and vaunting of the victory, Iud. 5. 2. This doth not only shew the pride and haughtines of theemie, but the great power of God, that whereas they made account of the victorie, comming with chariots and horse against naked and unarmed people, yet the Lord delivered them, as snatching the prey from betweene their teeth. Calvin. 3. And three things they purposed and promised themselves, to be enriched by the spoile of them; Vatab. And they purposed to put many to the sword, as Moses and Aaron, and the principall, and to take the rest captive, and to bring them againe into their service, and to possesse them as their inheritance. Simler. For so the word is best translated, as is shewed before in the divers readings.

QUEST. XIV. What are the strong, before whom the Lord is preferred.

Vers. 11. WHO is like unto the Lord among the mightie? 1. This being uttered with an interrogatilon, is more emphaticall, than if it had been barely affirmed. Calvin. 2. The most reade▪ Among the Gods. But the word e•lim, is also taken for the Mightie, as Psalm. 29.1. Give unto the Lord yee sonnes of the mightie, give, unto the Lord glorie; and it hath a more generall signification, preferring God before the Angels, both good and evill: which of the latter sort assisted the Magicians against Moses▪ and before the Idols of the Egyptians, upon whom the Lord also executed judgement, chap. 12.12. and before the mightie of the earth, for Pharaoh and his Princes were confounded. 3. This exposition is warranted by the like place▪ Psal. 89.6. Who is equall to the Lord in the heavens, and who is like the Lord among the sonnes of the strong? Psal. 89.6.

QUEST. XV. How the Lord is said to be fearefull in praises.

Vers. 11. WHO is like thee so glorious? 1. In three things God is preferred before all other, in holi|nesse, for the very Angels are imperfect in his fight: in feare and reverence, none is so to be revered as the Lord, whose glory the Angels cannot endure to behold, and in the power of his workes. Siml. 2. He is said to be fearefull in praises: which some do interpret, that whereas the Devils are feared because they worke mischiefe, God is feared, because his workes are mercifull and praise-worthy, as it is in the Psal. 130.3. Mercy is with thee, that thou mayest be feared. Some expound it, that God is not to be praised without feare and trembling; but the fittest sense is, Quod Deus non potest rite laud•ri, <◇> rapiuntur omnes in stuporem: That God cannot duly be praised, but all men fall into astonishment, no man can praise him as he is worthy. Calv. To this purpose the Prophet David, Psal. 89.7. God is very terrible in the assemblies of his Saints. Even the Saints, the holy Angels do tremble, and wonder when they consider Gods praises. 3. Lastly, God is said to doe wonders: many things amongst men are counted wonders, which wise men doe not admire: and many things are miraculous, even unto wise men, which are not so to the Angels: but God doth wonders, which are an astonishment even to the Angels. Simler.

QUEST. XVI. Wherein the Egyptians are compared unto lead.

Vers. 10. They sanke as lead in the mighty waters, &c. 1. Impurissimo metallo comparantur: They are compared to the most impure mettall, not to silver and gold, but to lead, which is called ghophereth▪ derived of ghophir, which signifieth dust or earth, because lead is of the most terrene and earthly nature of all the metals. Borrh. 2. Likewise they are compared to lead, Quia peccatum sua mole ad inferna trahit: Because sinne by the waight thereof, draweth into hell. And therefore by the Prophet wickednesse is compared to a talent of lead▪ Zachar. 5.7. Ferus. 3. Neither in respect of the waight of their sinne onely, but of the heavinesse of their judgement, doth 〈◇〉 similitude agree unto them, Onere perfidiae & gravitate iudicii divini in altum depressi: They are borne downe into the deepe with the burden of their sinne, and the heavinesse of Gods judgement. Borrh. 4. And beside, Nullus fuit evitandi locus: There was no way for them to escape, as lead swimmeth not, neither floteth in the waters, but sinketh downe to the bottome. Osiander. 5. Beside, whereas, Omnia qua in opere metallorum conflatori•usurpantur; hic nominantur: All things which are used in melting of mettals, are here named, as fire, spirit, or wind, lead. Borrh. Herein also they are likened unto lead, because that mettall is soonest of all metals melted, wasted, and consumed in the fire, and so the wicked are swept away with Gods judgements, whereas the righteous are thereby tried and purified, as silver and gold: So the Prophet Ieremy saith, The bellowes are burnt, the lead is consumed in the fire, Ier. 6.29. 6. Likewise this similitude sheweth, that this their sinking downe like lead, betokeneth their everlasting punish|ment: Malitia graves, & importabiles Deo & hominibus abjiciuntur in abyssum inferni cum Satan• & Angelis illius discrucianti: They being weighed downe with malice, and importable to God and men, are cast downe into the bottome of hell, for ever to •e tormented with Satan and his Angels. Pellican.

QUEST. XVII. How the earth is said to have swallowed them.

Vers. 12. The earth swallowed them. 1. Neither is the water here understood by the earth, as the earth is sometime taken for this inferiour part of the world, as when God is said to have made the heaven and the earth, as August. quaest. 54. in Exod. for this were somewhat coact. 2. Neither yet did the earth open and devour them, as the water swallowed them, as Vatab. For if they had beene swallowed up of the earth; as Core, Dathan and Abiram were, the Scripture would not have concealed so great a mira|cle. 3. Neither are they said to be devoured of the earth, Quia in limo haeserunt: Because they did sticke in the mudde, as Simler. For they were cast up upon the land. 4. Neither is the meaning, Subito perierunt, a•s•eos terra deglutivisset: That they perished suddenly, as though the earth had swallowed them. Osiander. For this is not a similitude, but a narration of the fact. 5. Therefore by the earth here is understood, Alvens ••ari•: The chanell of the sea, hemmed in, and compassed of the mountaines, as Jonas described the bottome of the sea, I went downe to the bottome of the mountaines, the earth with her barres was about mee for ever; Ionah 2.6. Iun. 6. Ferus by the earth understandeth hell, Vbi nullus ordo, sed sempiternus horror inhabitat: Where there is no order, but everlasting horreur and confusion. But the other sense better agreeth to the hi|storie. 7. Wherein appeareth the correspondency of the judgement of their state, Amatores terren•rum dev•rabuntur à terra: The lovers of earthly things, are devoured of the earth. Pellican.

QUEST. XVIII. How the Lord will lead and carry his people.

Vers. 13. Thou wilt carry them in thy strength unto thine holy habitation. 1. The word in the originall, is in the preterperfect tense, Thou hast carried, not that Moses only wisheth that the Lord would carry them to the land of promise: but he speaketh confidently, that the Lord which had redeemed them, would not now leave them, till he had accomplished his good worke toward them: and it is the manner of Prophets, to speake of things to come, as already done and past, because of the certainty of Gods promises. Siml. 2. Here Moses useth two effectuell words, the one is •achah, which signifieth to leade, as a shepherd leadeth, which sheweth the provident care of God, as a faithfull and carefull shepheard leading his people like sheep. Siml. The other word, nahal, signifieth to carry: which sheweth both the tender care of God, that carrieth his children, as the mother doth her infant in her bosome, and the weaknes & infirmity of the people, that had need to be carried; yea which is more, Christ hath not only carried us, but hath carried our sins▪ Fer.3. Two reasons Moses here useth to encourage the people, not to doubt, but that the Lord will protect them still, because to that end he had redeemed them, and beside, the Lord is of great power and strength, to carry them thorow all difficulties and lets whatsoever. Calvin.

QUEST. XIX. What is meant here by Gods holy habitation.

VNto thine holy habitation. 1. Some understand here mount Sinai, where the tabernacle was first erected. Vatab. But they were not planted in mount Sinai; there they continued not, as Moses saith, they should be planted in Gods inheritance, vers. 17. 2. Some doe referre it unto the tabernacle, which Moses saw by the spirit of prophesie, should be erected and builded: Osiander. But the tabernacle was set up in the desert where they dwelt 40. yeeres in tents and boothes, they were not there planted; and Moses speaketh of a certaine place, to the which the Lord would bring them, but in the desert the tabernacle had no certaine place, but was removed from one station to another. 3. Some apply this speech to mount Zur. Borrh. But there the tabernacle was not pitched, till many yeeres after their comming to the land of Canaan. 4. Therefore by the habitation of his holinesse, or by his holy habitation, the whole land of promise is better understood. Iunius: So called, both because there was the Lords tabernacle, where the Lords presence, and as it were, dwelling was: and that was the land promised so often to the Fathers. Pellican. And the Lord wrought his signes and wonders there, evident demonstrations of his presence, and it was the place of the incarnation and birth of Christ. Simler.

QUEST. XX. What nations should be afraid of the Israelites.

Vers. 16. Then the Dukes of Edom shall be amazed. 1. Moses here sheweth by the spirit of prophesie, that feare shall come upon the nations: the Moabites, whose feare is evident, Num. 22. when Balaak hired Balaam to curse Israel: the Cananites, as Rahab testifieth, Ios. 2.11. When wee heard it our hearts did faint, and there remained no more courage in any of us. The Edomites also were affraid, which was the cause why they denied the Israelites passage thorow their country, least they might have surpris'd it. Simler. 2. For the manner of their feare, they shall be as still as a stone, both because as a stone maketh no sound, or noise, so they shall not once mutter or move the tongue against the Israelites. Osiand. And as a stone is still without any motion or action, so they shall suffer the Israelites to passe over Jordan, without any resistance, as is evident, Iosuah 2. Iun. Obmutescent & fient immobiles, ut lapis, They shall hold their peace, and be immoveable as stones. Pellican. The Septuagint readeth 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, they shall become as stones, that is, dead hearted, cold as stones through feare: as it is said Nabals heart through feare died within him, and was as a stone, 1. Sam. 25.37. Simler.

QUEST. XXI. Why the Lord is said to plant his people.

Vers. 17. Thou shalt plant them in the mountaine of their inheritance. 1. This word of planting sheweth both the care, which the Lord had of his people, as the husbandman with care, labour and diligence, setteth his plants. Simler. It signifieth also the firme and sure possession which the people of God should have of that country, that they should as plants take deepe rooting there: as the Prophet saith in the Psalme 44.2. That the Lord had driven out the Heathen, and planted them in Calvin. 2. It is called Gods inheritance, because it was prepared for his people, adopted to be the Lords heires, to whom he had given the right and privilege of the first borne, before all the people of the world, Exod. 4.22. Perer. 3. The whole country of Sion is understood by the mountaine of Gods inheritance; because it was a land of hilles and mountaines, Deut. 11.11. Iun. And with speciall relation also unto mount Sion, which the Lord had chosen for his habitation, as Psal. 132.13. The Lord hath chosen Sion, and loved to dwell in it, sayling, This is my rest for ever, here will I dwell. Calvin. 4. The Land of promise is here set forth by three names: It is called The mountaine of Gods inheritance, prepared for the habitation of his people: the place, Where the Lord would dwell: it should be as the palace of the great King, the Lord would protect it, and watch over it: It is also called the Sanctuary of God: for to this end had the Lord chosen that land, therein to erect a tabernacle, and the publike worship of God. Cajetan.

QUEST. XXII. In what sense the sanctuary of the Jewes was called a firme and sure tabernacle.

The place which thou hast made to dwell in. 1. The Latine translator here readeth, In firmissimo tabernaculo: In the most sure tabernacle which thou hast made: but the word is macon, which signifieth a place, not naco, that is sirme, sure; yet this sense and interpretation is true, that it is called a sure tabernacle, as the next words shew, Which thy hands have established; And the Lord promised to dwell for ever, Psal. 132.14. 2. It was then a firme and sure habitation not, as some doe take it, promised so to be conditionally, that if the Jewes had continued in the obedience of Gods Commandements, he would have dwelt among them for ever; for the tabernacle was not appointed to continue for ever, but the Sanctuary, and the ceremonies and rites thereof were to give place unto Christ. But it was a firme and sure tabernacle, because there the Lord was publicly worshipped at Jerusalem, above a thousand yeeres, from the first to the last, as may thus appeare. At the first the Sanctuarie with the Arke was in Shilo, for 300. yeeres and more, from the first entrance of the Israelites, untill the time of Heli the high Priest: then the Philistines tooke the Arke, where it stayed seven moneths: after it was placed in the house of Aminadab, where it continued about 50. yeeres, till the eight yeere of the reigne of David: then it abode three moneths in the house of Ob•d Edom: from thence it was removed to the city of David, where it remained 42. yeeres, till it was carried into Salomons temple: where it continued about 420. yeeres, from the 11. yeere of Salomons reigne, * till the captivity of Babylon; and after the captivity the temple being reedified, endured for the space of about 500. yeeres, till 42. yeeres after the death of our Saviour: So that from the first setting of the Arke in the temple, in the 11. yeere of Salomons reigne, untill the dissolution thereof, 42. yeeres after Christ, were about 1000. yeeres. In respect therefore of this long continuance, it may be said to be a firme and sure tabernacle. Perer. 3. The tabernacle was a type of Christ and his Church, and in that sense was firme and sure. Simler. And beside, we must understand, as Lyranus well noteth, Sub promissione templi materialis coeleste templum: Vnder the promise of the materiall temple, the heavenly temple of glory. And as Pellican observeth, Significat statum gloriae beatorum, ubi haereditas sola est sanctorum: It signifieth the state of glory, where is the inheritance onely of the Saints. And in this sense, it was a most sure tabernacle.

QUEST. XXIII. Of the meaning of these words, for ever and ever.

Vers. 18. The Lord shall reigne for ever and ever. 1. The Septuagint readeth, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, For ever, and further; or, yet; which Origen expoundeth thus: if he had said, In secula seculorum: For ever and ever; or for all ages, although a long time should so be expressed, yet it might bee supposed to have an end, if not in respect of us, yet unto God: but now when it is added, For ever, and further, Nullum sensum termini aut finis alicujus relinquit: Now there is no place left at all, for any end to be imagined.

2. But the Latine translator readeth, In aeternum & ultra: For ever and beyond, or longer: which Lyra/mus thus expoundeth, because the word holam, translated, for ever, sometime is taken for a finite time, yet long, as for the space of fifty yeeres, the other word is added, Vt significet aeternitatem, to shew that hee meaneth eternity indeed. Thostatus thinketh, that ultra, beyond, additur ex abundanti ad significandam magnam affectionem loquentis, is added of abundance more than need, to signifie the great affection of the speaker, because ultra aeternum nihil est, beyond eternity nothing is. Thomas thus interpreteth, In seculum & ultra, id est, ultra quameun{que} durationem datam: For ever, and beyond, that is, beyond any time or continuance that can be given: or, ultra aeternitatem participatam à creatore: God is said to be beyond eternity, that is, such eternity as is participated unto the creature: In regard that God hath eternity in himselfe, hee is said to be more eternall than that, to the which he giveth eternity. So Hugo S. victor. Et ultra, •on quantum ad temporis spatium, sed quantum ad dignitatem, •d est, super omnes: For ever, and beyond, not in respect of the space of time, but in respect of dignity, because God reigneth above all. Rupertus, Vltra id quod vider•potes: beyond that which thou seest, or canst in thy minde conceive, or thinke of eternity.

3. But the cause of this great variety of opinion, and businesse, which these Interpreters make to themselves, is, because they labour still to justifie and uphold the Latine translation, whereas the word hedh, or ghedh, as some reade, signifieth not here, yet or beyond, but it is taken for perpetuity, and eternity, as the Lord is called Shocen heedh, He which inhabiteth eternity▪ Esay 57.15. The words then are better read, For ever and ever: the first ever may signifie the time of this present world, the second, the time after this world: Non solum quamdi•durat seculum, sed etiam post hunc mundum in aeternum regnat: Not only while this world lasteth, but after this world he shall reigne for ever. Pellican.

And although the Kingdome of God, in the externall regiment of that commonwealth of Israel, were not eternall, the temple long since being destroyed, and the policy of that state being dissolved: yet in respect of the true Israel of God, the Kingdome of Christ hath no end. Cajetan. And as the Lord had now shewed his power upon the Egyptians in their overthrow, and in the preservation of his people, so for ever shall the Lord shew himselfe mighty in the protection of his Church, and in the confusion of their enemies. Ferus. Thus the Kingdome of God is opposed against all terrene and earthly Kingdomes, which are but temporall, and against the vaine Gods of the Egyptians: for the Lords Kingdome, and not theirs should remaine for ever. Simler. Borrh.

QUEST. XXIV. Whether this be a part of Moses song.

Vers. 19. FOr Pharaohs horses, &c. 1. Some thinke that this is no part of the song of Moses: but rather an historicall narration, shewing the cause why Moses and the Israelites did celebrate the praise of God, both for their glorious deliverance, and the overthrow of their enemies. Calvin. But it seemeth rather to be a part of Moses song: containing the summe of the whole, partly in the destruction of Gods enemies, partly in the preservation of his people. Simler. And these reasons may shew it to bee part of the song. 1. Because otherwise the song would seeme to bee defective, because no mention is made before in the song, how the Israelites went on dry land thorow the sea. 2. It containeth a reason of the last sentence before, namely of the power and Kingdome of God; that God had given an evident demonstration of his power, in the overthrow of Pharaoh. Osiander. The reason and amplification can[n]ot be divided from the sentence. 3. The like song is found, Apoc. 12.10. I heard a voice saying, now is salvation in heaven, and strength, and the Kingdome of our God, and the power of his Christ, for the accuser of our brethren is cast downe: As there in that heavenly song, the reason cannot bee sequestred from the first clause, so neither in this song of Moses.

Vers. 19. IN the midst of the sea. Whether the Israelites went thorow the midst of the sea, or part thereof, there are three opinions. 1. Some thinke that they fetcht onely as it were a semicircle in the sea, and arrived againe on that side which is toward Egypt: so Thostatus. But this opinion is confuted before at large, quaest. 17. in cap. 14. 2. Some thinke that they went just over the midst of the sea, from the West side to the East; but that is not like, because they arrived againe in the wilderness, Etham, from whence they went when they entred into the red sea, as it is evident, Num. 33.8. It is not like that the wilderness of both sides, (the sea comming betweene) should be counted a one desert, and beare the same name: and if they had gone right over, they had kept the way to Arabia, declining altogether from Palestina. And although the word be betoch, in the midst, that is not so taken, as though they precisely should keepe the midst of the sea: but the word signifieth as much, as within, as Gen. 18.26. If I shall finde but fifty persons in the midst of the City, that is, within the City; as Gen. 25.10. Ephron sate in the midst of the sonnes of Heth, that is, among them: So the Israelites went in the midst of the sea, that is, within it. Piscator. The common mappes therefore are here in error, that describe the journey of the Israelites thorow the midst of the sea, from one side to the other straight over. 3. Wherefore the truer opinion is, that they went thorow the sea, but at the further end, and corner of it as it were, Piscator. They went into the very depth of the sea, and fetched not a compass onely in the side of the sea, as the first opinion seemeth to be: for the waters are said to be congealed in the heart of the sea, vers. 8. Simler. Neither yet did they passe thorow the midst, as though the sea should have beene parted into two equall parts, but their way thorow the sea was somewhat aslope, as it might bee from the West to the Northeast, because they meet with the wilderness of Etham againe, which vast desert seemeth to have fetched a compass from Egypt side about the end of the red sea, and so winding againe on the East side: So that I neither thinke that this desert of Etham, was altogether on the West side of the red sea toward Egypt, for it is altogether unlike that the Israelites arrived toward Egypt againe: neither was part of it quite on the other side of the red sea Eastward toward Arabia, but that it was one continued desert, from that place where they entred the red sea, and so fetched a compass about the North end of that sea, to the place where they landed: see more hereof. Quaest. 17. in cap. 14.

QUEST. XXVI. Of the divers kindes of women singers mentioned in Scripture.

Vers. 20. And Miriam the prophetesse. Miriam and her company, and queere of women, being encouraged by the example of the men, and following the direction of Miriam, that was stirred up by the instinct of the spirit, being a prophetesse, did both by singing and seemely dauncing and gestures, expresse their joy, and give thanks unto God: So that not onely men, but women also did use to sing unto the praise of God: A lande enim Dei nem tacere debet: For none ought to bee silent in Gods praise. But we shall finde three sorts of women singers in the Scriptures. 1. Some were such as were used only for recreation, for the voice of women, for musicall harmony, doth in these two respects excell the voice of men, both in smalnesse and sharpenesse, and in the continuance and unchangeablenesse: the constancy of voice and time, holdeth in that unconstant sex: So Salomon for his pleasure and recreation, had men singers and women singers, Eccles. 2.8. 2. Another sort of women singers, were such as were used to set forth the praise of God in publike solemnities: and these were either professed singers; as among those that returned from the captivity of Babylon, there were two hundred singing men and singing women, Esra. 2.65. or they were voluntaries, such as of their owne accord came forth triumphantly, to meete those that returned in victory, as the women met David and Saul with songs and daunces, 1. Sam. 18.5.

3. There was a third sort of singers, that were extraordinary, who did not onely sing, but by the spirit of prophesie indited to the praise of God, as Miriam here, and Deborah, Iudg. 5. and Anna, 1. Sam. 2. Mary, Luk. 2.

QUEST. XXVII. Whether women did at any time publicly prophesie.

The Prophetesse. Miriam was a Prophetesse, because the Lord used to speake unto her by vision, as unto other Prophets, as is evident, Num. 12.2. where she and Aaron object against Moses, Hath not the Lord also spoken by us? Such Prophetesses were Deborah, Anna, and Huldah, and in the new Testa|ment Elizabeth, Mary, Anna the daughter of Phamul, and Philips foure daughters also were Prophe|tesses, Act. 21.9. But here the question is, whether these Prophetesses were admitted, or did take upon them publicly to teach. 1. Some are of opinion that they did not, because according to S. Pauls rule, women ought to keepe silence in the Church, 1. Cor. 14.34. 2. Other thinke that women were barred, A pradicatione tantum, non à laude Dei: They were only enjoined silence from preaching, but not from praising God. 3. But it is more probable, that these Prophetesses extraordinarily stirred up, did also publicly pro|phesie, not privatly onely in their families: as may be proved by these reasons. 1. Because the gift of pro|phesying, was given them to edifie the Church withall: they having then the gift, did use it to the right end. 2. It is confirmed by example: Miriam saith, The Lord hath spoken by us: Deborah judged Israel pulb|likely, being a Prophetesse, Iudg. 4.4. she did therefore exercise her propheticall gift publicly. 3. Saint Pauls speaketh of women prophesying in the congregation, 1. Cor. 11.5. It should seeme then, that some women being Prophetesses, such as Philips daughters were, did publicly prophesie. Beza thinketh the Apostle speaketh not of the particular act of women, but of the whole act of the congregation, which is said to pray or prophesie, when one only prayeth or prophesieth, that is, preacheth. But it seemeth other|wise by the use of this word elsewhere: Yee may all prophesie one by one, that all may learne, 1. Cor. 14.31. Here the Apostle speaketh of the particular act of prophesying: Others answer, that the Apostle com|mendeth not this use of women to prophesie publicly, but elsewhere reproveth it, enjoyning women to keepe silence in the congregation as chap. 14.34. Genevens. But it rather seemeth that the Apostle mislik|eth not the act in the extraordinary prophesying of women, but the manner, and willeth that it should be done with comelinesse and order. And concerning that place objected, wherein silence is enjoined women: * the Apostle speaketh of the ordinary calling of preaching and prophesying, which women ought not in any wise to usurpe, not of the extraordinary gift and function of prophesying: which as the Lord hath sometime given unto women, so no doubt, they accordingly used the same: herein therefore, I sub|scribe rather to the judgement and opinion of Simlerus.

QUEST. XXVIII. Why Miriam is said to be the sister of Aaron, not of Moses.

The sister of Aaron. She is called the sister of Aaron, rather than of Moses, for these reasons. 1. Ne videretur Moses genus suum commendare: Lest Moses might have beene thought to commend his kin|dred. Ferus. 2. Because Aaron was the elder brother, and so she was first Aarons sister, before she was Mo|ses. Simler. 3. Because she lived in Egypt in the time of Moses absence and exile, and so was better knowne commonly to be Aaronssister than Moses. Piscator. 4. Beside, it seemeth that, Conjunctius vixit: Shee was in great league with Aaron, for they two conspired together against Moses, Num. 12. Simler. 5. And this is expressed concerning Miriam, here called a Prophetesse, to shew how the Lord blessed that house of Levi, and what worthy instruments he raised from thence; Mose• elegit in ducem, Aaron in Sacerdoft•m, Miriam in prohetissam: Moses was chosen to be the Captaine, Aaron for a Priest, and Miriam was a Prophetesse. Ferus.

QUEST. XXXIX. Why Miriam taketh a timbrell.

TOoke a Timbrell in her hand. 1. Ferus thinketh that the women did here more than the men, singing not only with voice, but with instrument, Quia infirmi, quales sunt mulieres, pluribus incitamentis opus habent: Because the weake, such as women are, had need of more encouragements: But this was no signe of weaknesse in Miriam, being here called a Prophetesse. 2. Therefore shee tooke this instrument, Vt ad certos modos carent: That they might sing in measure and order. Osiander. For timbrels, Prae cateris instrumentis ad numeros & mensuram aptiora sunt: are fitter to keepe number and measure by, than other instruments. 3. Because the striking of timbrels might seeme somewhat too light, in so waighly a businesse, it is here divers wayes excused: First, Mos gentis eum excusat: the fashion of that nation doth excuse them, with whom it was ordinary, for the women to play upon timbrels, as Psal. 68.26. The singers went before, the players of instruments after, in the midst were the maids playing with timbrels. Calvin. Secondly, their intent is to be considered, Choreos ducunt non ad petulantiam carnis, sed adjucunditatem spiritus, &c. They dance not to shew the wantonnesse of their flesh, but the sweet joy of the spirit, rejoycing for Gods benefits. Pelican. Thirdly, Shee did it, motu prophético, by a propheticall motion. Iun.

QUEST. XXX. Whether the women came with pipes, beside their timbrels, or with dances.

Vers. 20. The women came out after her with timbrels and dances. Iun. readeth with timbrels and pipes, or flutes; but the first rather, as shall thus appeare. 1. The word mecholoth here used, hath three significations: it sometime signifieth a pipe or flute, as Psal. 149.3. Let them praise his name with the flute, &c. with timbrels also and harpe. Sometime it signifieth the company it selfe of the dancers, as Iud. 21.21. The daughters of Shiloh came forth, Lachiel Bamechiel, to dance in companies: it also signifieth the dancing it selfe, as Iud. 11.34. Iepthahs daughter came forth with timbrels and dances: There is no mention made of any company that was with her, for then Iepthah would have taken any of the company rather (all comming out together) than his onely daughter. 2. Now that it is here taken rather for either of the two latter senses, than in the first, it may appeare by these reasons. 1. Because Mecholoth more usually, and in most places, is so taken for dances, or companies dancing, than for pipes, as in the places before alleaged, Iudg. 11.34. Iud. 21.21. 1. Sam. 18.6. and beside Cantic. 6.12. Ier.31.4. 2. Because so was the use and practice for women, to play upon timbrels, dancing withall, as is evident in Iepthahs daughter meeting her father, and the women of Israel meeting Saul and David: and Psal. 68.26. there were other that played upon instruments, and the maidens played upon timbrels. 3. And hereunto the two reasons before alleaged in the divers readings upon this place: that it is like, the rest of the women did imitate Miriam: now shee is mentioned onely to have taken a timbrell: againe, Miriam sang first, and they all answered her; but if they had played upon pipes, it would have hindred their singing.

QUEST. XXXI. Of the lawfulness of instruments of musike.

NOW concerning this example of Miriam and her company, playing upon timbrels, how farre it is to be imitated, shall briefly be shewed. 1. Such signes (whereby men expresse their joy, such as these timbrels were, and of the same kind are other instruments of musike) are of two sorts, either such as were commanded, and so necessary, or voluntary: the signes commanded were either ceremoniall and typticall, prefiguring somewhat concerning Christ and his Church, which being but shadowes of things to come, are abolished now, the things, whereof they were types and figures, being exhibited: or else they were politicall, which only concerned the policy of the common wealth, which being now dissolved, the date of such signes is also expired. The voluntary signes are likewise of two sorts, either such as come of a naturall motion, as the using of instruments for recreation, which may be used so long, untill they should be found to bee against common order, or honesty, or against any worke of grace or regeneration. Or they are such, which are used to serve to set forward any act of godlinesse and grace, as David by his musike allayed the malady and evill spirit of Saul; and these are no longer to serve, than as they may be helps unto such workes of grace: But this signe here used by Miriam, to testifie her spirituall joy, was not of this latter sort▪ but she did it by a propheticall motion, therefore it was not voluntary, but she was thereunto moved and directed by God. Then this is no warrant for them that abuse instruments and dauncing, to wantonnesse, for in that it is said she did it, being a prophetesse, and so with a propheticall spirit, it sheweth that this example is extraordinary, and therefore not to be drawne into imitation, Iun. in Ana/lys. that is, in respect of the particular manner: but in regard of the generall use and intention, it may and ought to be followed, to use singing to the praise of God: that as Mary did sing, Non amatori, non tur/pia cantica, sed pia: Not love songs, or wanton sonets, but godly; sic nos cantemus Domino: so let u sing unto God. Ferus.

QUEST. XXXII. Of dancing.

Concerning dancing, we find thereof foure sorts in Scripture. 1. There was a spirituall kind of dauncing, which proceeded of an extraordinary motion, as David danced before the Arke to testifie his joy. 2. There was a civill kinde of dancing used in triumphes, when they met the Captaines with dauncing, returning from the conquest of their enemies, as David and Saul were met. 3. They used dancing for honest recreation, as the daughters of Shiloh used to doe in their yeerely solemne feast, Iud. 21.19. 4. There was a fourth sort of wanton and lascivious dauncing, such as Herodias daughter came skipping in with, to please Herod, wherewith his amorous and lustfull eye was intangled, and Iohn Baptists head begged: of these, the two first are lawfull and commendable, the last wicked and abominable, the third in/different and tolerable.

QUEST. XXXIII. Whether Miriam did sing the whole song, or repeated only the beginning.

Vers. 21. ANd Miriam answered the men. Sing yee unto the Lord: Moses repeated only the first verse▪ which seemeth to be the ground, and foot of the song, but it is like that Miriam sang the whole song, as is partly shewed before quest. 2. and shall be now further declared. 1. Beside the opinion of Ferus, Vatablus, Pellican, Simlerus, Osiander; that all consent herein, that shee with her company did sing the whole song: by these reasons, further it may be gathered, because shee is said to be herein a Prophe|tesse: she shewed her propheticall gift in singing; but to have repeated only one verse of the song, had beene no such propheticall action. 2. In this short sentence Miriam professeth to sing, and giveth the reason thereof: it is not like that she so ended, giving a reason, why she would sing, and singed not, shee supplied then the song, as well as she yeelded a reason thereof. 3. This being an incouragement and charge withall, unto the women to sing, Sing yee, it is like that they also followed, and answered her in song, as the men of Israel did Moses, shee being a Prophetesse and bidding them sing, it is not to be doubted, but that they followed her direction, and did sing. 4. The like example is found, 1. Sam. 18.6. Where only the ground and summe of the song is repeated, Saul hath killed his thousand, and David his ten thousand. It is very like that the women did sing more than there is expressed, but for brevities sake, the principall part of the song is only set downe, and so is it thought to be done here.

QUEST. XXXIV. Whether the desert of Shur, were simply a desert, and barren place.

Vers. 22. Then Moses brought Israel from the red sea, and they went forward to the wilderness of Shur. 1. The word signifieth to cause them to goe: which sheweth that Moses with much adoe brought them from thence, being too much intent upon the spoile of the Egyptians. Simler. 2. And where|as they are brought into a barren desert, where they were much distressed for want of water, it appeareth that the Lord would not bring them into Canaan, but thorow much tribulation and tentation. Borrh▪ 3. Pellican thinketh that it was called a desert, not because none inhabited there, but for that it was cragly and full of hills: but I rather subscribe to Iosephus opinion, that it was Difficilis regio propter ciborum & quarum extremam inopiam: An hard country (thorow which they were to passe unto mount Sinai) both for extreame penury of food and water: ut ne brutis quidem alendis, ne dum hominibus idonea; that it was unfit to nourish cattle, much lesse men, lib. 3. cap. 1. This wilderness of Shur, many doe thinke to bee the same desert, which is called Etham, wherein they travelled three dayes journey after they came out of Egypt, Num. 33.8. And here they are said presently to enter the wilderness of Shur. Sic Thostatus, Siml. Borrh. And this wilderness of Shur lyeth, they say, betweene the two seas, the red sea, and the Philistims sea, one way, and betweene the Philistims country, and Egypt another way: Borrh▪ But that the desert of Shur and of Etham, are not the same, but altogether diuers, it shall now be shewed.

QUEST. XXXV. The desert of Shur, and Etham not all one.

1. Some thinke that Etham should be the generall name of the whole desert, and Shur only of a part▪ Simler. Others that Shur is the generall name, and Etham a part thereof. Borrh. But neither can be so. 1. Shur cannot comprehend Etham, for Etham belonged unto Egypt, and stretched unto the red sea: hereupon the City Pithom, which the Israelites built in Egypt, was so called, because it was the mouth of the wilderness of Etham, and the entrance into it. Iun. But the desert of Shur was no part of Egypt, but is said to be over against Egypt, 1. Sam. 15.7. and it was the bounds of the country of the Israelites, Genes. 25.18. 2. Neither was the desert of Shur a part of the wilderness of Etham: for Etham touched the red sea, and from the sea they journeyed three dayes in the desert of Etham, Num. 33.8. But wee doe not find that the desert of Shur came so farre as the red sea: being the South border of the Israelites country, who extended not their dwelling to the red sea.

Page 186

3. Wherefore the wilderness of Etham where the Israelites went into the red sea, and came out, was all one continued desert, fetching a compasse by the North end of the red sea: and Shur was the name of that desert into the which they came out of the wilderness of Etham: the words then are to be understood, as Iunius well distinguisheth them, that Moses brought the Israelites from the red sea, to goe forward into the wilderness of Shur, but before they came thither, they spent three dayes journey in the desert of Etham. Iunius.

QUEST. XXXVI. Of the place Marah.

Vers. 23. Therefore they called the name of that place Marah. 1. Augustine readeth Mazra, but the word is Marah, so called of the bitterness: the Septuagint make it no proper name, but interpret < in non-Latin alphabet >, bitternesse, whereas the proper name Marah was retained. 2. Augustine moveth here this doubt, seeing it was called Marah, of the bitter waters, which they found there, after they came thither, how was it called Marah before? his solution is, because these things were written after they were done, and at such time as this history was written, the name thereof was called Marah, quaest. 56. in Exod. But beside, it is usuall in Scripture by the figure Prolepsis, to call places by the names which are given them afterwards, as is evident in the name of Dan, Gen. 14.14. which was not given that place in Abrahams time: and of Succoth, Gen. 33.17. which afterward Iacob so called. 3. This seemeth to be that place, which Plinie calleth fontes amarus, bitter fountaines, lib. 6. cap. 29. Iunius.

QUEST. XXXVII. Of the grievous sinne of murmuring.

Vers 24. Then the people murmured against Moses. The sinne of murmuring was a great transgres|sion, and it includeth many other particular sinnes in it. 1. Their murmuring shewed, that they were utterly forgetfull, and oblivious of all the great wonders which the Lord had done for them. Borrh. 2. They were ungratefull for all the benefits which they had received, as though the Lord had done nothing for them: Ingratitudo perpetua Iudaici populi, &c. The perpetuall ingratitude of the people of the Iewes, is set forth in Scripture. 3. They shew their incredulity and distrust, when they say, What shall wee drinke, as though the Lord could not provide them drinke. Osiander. 4. They are impatient and discontent: In prosperis gaudem, in adversis murmurant: They rejoyce in prosperity, but straigh way they murmur in adversity. Ferus. 5. It bewrayeth their disobedience, and disloyalty to their governours, they murmur against Moses, accusing him, as though he would kill them with thirst. Simler. 6. It maketh them prophane, that they have no heart to call upon God: Pro murmure contra Mosen Dominum orasse debu•runt: In stead of murmuring, they should have called upon God. Pellican. 7. It made them to extenuate the blessings of God toward them, as Numb. 11.6. We can see nothing but this Man. 8. It made a way for other most grievous sinnes, which they fell unto, as Idolatry, Exod.34. and fornication together with Idola|try, Num. 25.

QUEST. XXXVIII. Of the divers murmurings of the children of Israel.

COncerning the divers murmurings of the children of Israel, Hierom numb|reth them to have beene ten: the first for want of water, Exod. 17. the second likewise for water, Numb. 20. the third, Exod. 14. when the Egyptians pursued them: the fourth and fifth about Manna, when they kept it till the morning, and gathered it upon the Sabbath, Exod. 16. The sixth murmuring was for flesh, Exod. 16. and the seventh for flesh likewise, Numb. 11.4. The eighth for Moses absence, when they made the golden Calfe: the ninth, when they tempted God in fighting against the Amalckites, being forbidden, Numb. 14. The tenth, upon the returne of the Spies which were sent to search the Land of Canaan: Hieron. d• 10. tentationib. But if all the murmurings of the Israelites be summed together, they will bee found more than ten, not fewer than twenty. And they were of three sorts, either generall of the whole con|gregation, or speciall of some few, or particular of some principall persons. 1. Their generall murmurings were upon these occasions: first, for things which they endured, as, the increasing of their bondage in Egypt, at the first comming of Moses, Exod. 5.21. their feare to be all destroyed of the Egyptians, chap. 14.11. their wearinesse of the way, Numb. 11.1. their biting by Serpents, Numb. 21. Secondly, for things which they wanted, as for sweet and potable water, Exod. 15.24. for bread, chap. 16.3. for water in Relphidim, Exod. 17. for flesh, Numb. 11. for water againe, when Moses also offended, Numb. 20. Thirdly, they murmured, and disobeyed, when any thing was imposed them which they liked not, as twi•e they were disobedient about Manna, in reserving it till the morning, chap. 16.19. and in gathering it upon the Sabbath, chap. 16.28. where although their murmuring be not expressed, yet this their refractary disobe|dience could not bee without murmuring: So they rebelled in fighting against the Amalekites and Cal|naanites, being forbidden, Numb. 14.41. Fourthly, they murmured when their expectation was decei|ved, as upon Moses long absence, Exod. 32.1. when they heard a false report of Canaan, that the inhabi|tants thereof were invincible, Numb. 14. when Core, Dathan, and Abiram, with their adherents were sud|denly destroyed, Numb. 16.41. These murmurings in all were sixteene.

2. The second kind of murmuring was of some speciall men, as Core, Dathan, and Abirain, with two hundred and 50. persons murmured against Moses and Aaron, Numb. 16.3. The third kind was of some principall persons, as of Aaron and Miriam against Moses, Numb. 12. Of Moses himselfe at the waters of strife, Numb. 20. of Aaron being discontent and so negligent in his office, because of the death of his two sonnes, Nadab and Abihu, Levit. 10.19. Here are foure more, and unto these others by diligent ob|servations may be added.

QUEST. XXXIX. Whether the wood had any vertue in it, that Moses cast into the water.

25. And he cried unto the Lord, and the Lord shewed him a tree. 1. The Hebrewes thinke that this tree had no vertue at all in it to make the waters sweet, but rather the contrary, but that God would therein shew his power, in healing one contrary by another, as Elizeus did heale the waters by cal|sting in of salt, which was more like to have made them more bitter, and our Saviour anointed the eyes of the blinde with clay and spittle, which was an unlike thing to heale them. 2. But it is more probable that there was some vertue in this wood to season and relish the water: because it is said, that the Lord shewed him, or as the Hebrew word signifieth, taught him the tree: Tanquam tale jam liguoc esse quo posset hoc fieri. As though it were such a kinde of wood, as could doe this thing: So Augustine reasoneth quaest. 57. in Exod. to whom Calvinus and Simlerus consent: for to what end else did the Lord direct Moses to that speciall tree, more than to others, unlesse we say that there were no trees there at all in the desert? But the words will inferre another sense, that seeing the Lord shewed him a tree, there was a tree to be shewed: as the Lord caused Hagar to see a fountaine, not which newly sprung out of the ground, but which was there before, though she saw it not, Gen. 21. The author of Ecclesiasticus chap. 38.5. affir|meth that there was vertue in the wood. 3. But Iosephus is deceived, who saith, Moses fructum ligni ac|cepit forte ibi jacens: That Moses tooke a peece of wood lying there by chance: whereas the Lord shewed it him: and he further addeth, that Moses did not cast in the wood, because the people asked what it should doe, but caused a great part of the water to bee drawne out of the fountaine, and so the residue became sweet; but this is also directly contrary to the text.

QUEST. XL. Wherein the miracle consisted of healing the waters.

NOW although there were some vertue in this wood to heale the waters, yet it was done not without a great m|racle. 1. Which consisted not herein because the Lord Ostendit et lignum ubi nullum erat: Shewed him a tree where none was: for this is confuted before. 2. Neither, Quia in tali natura ligni Creator & demonstrator l|dandus est: Because the Creator and shewer is to be praised, in giving such a nature to the wood: as Augustine in the same place: for if the nature of the wood had done it, it had not beene mi|raculous. 3. But herein was the miracle, that by the meanes of so small a peece of wood, such a deale of water was changed, as served such a great multitude. Calvin. And that it was suddenly and presently chan|ged. Simler. And the waters were but made sweet only for that time, and afterward returned to their bit|ter nature againe, as Pliny before alleaged, maketh mention of bitter waters there. Iun.

QUEST. XLI. Why the Lord used this meane in healing of the waters.

GOd could have healed the waters, if it had pleased him, without this tree. But it pleased him to use this meanes, for these causes. 1. To teach us, that we should not neglect the meanes, which God ap|pointed: So the Lord divided the red sea, and dried the way by a strong East winde: Ezechias was healed by a lump of figges: So God instructeth men, and begetteth them to the faith by the ministry of men. Simler. 2. God hereby also reproveth their distrust and diffidence, shewing, Multa sibi in promptu esse re|media quibus{que} malis: That he hath many remedies in store, for whatsoever evils. Calvin. 3. Hoc medio uti voluit propter mysterium: He would use this meane because of the mystery. Ferus.

QUEST. XLII. Of the mysticall signification of this tree.

NOW what mystery is signified in this tree, that sweetned the waters, shall bee shewed in a word. 1. Some by the bitter waters doe understand the killing letter of the Law, which is impotable and unpleasant, but being qualified by the Gospell, Iam dulc|erit litera: The letter of the Law becommeth pleasant. Ferus. 2. This tree was a figure of that rod, which should come of the stocke of Iesse, and of the graft that should grow out of his root, Isay 11.1. who should make our bitter waters sweet, as he saith: Come unto me all that labour; and I will refresh you. Borrh. 3. It signifieth also, that our bitter afflictions, by faith are made easie and pleasant: which remaine bitter, sowre and tart, Nisi fide adhibeamus ad lignum crucis Christi: Vnlesse we doe apply by faith the wood of Christs crosse, that i^e, beleeeve in his death. Osiander. So also Augustine; Praefigurans gloriam & gratiam crucis: It prefigured the glory and grace of the crosse. 4. This further sheweth what wee are by nature, and what by grace: by these bitter waters the Lord would bring to light, Amaritudinem quae in eorum cordibus latebat, the bitterness which lay hid in their hearts. Calvin. By nature therefore, our waters, that is, our thoughts, and all our actions are bitter, but they are washed and purified by grace and faith in Christ.

QUEST. XLIII. What law and ordinances the Lord here gave his people.

Vers. 25. There he made them an ordinance, and a Law. 1. The Hebrewes thinke that this Law here gi|ven them, was concerning the Sabbath, which in the next Chapter is confirmed and establi|shed, where they are forbidden to gather Manna upon the Sabbath. But the law of the Sabbath was more ancient: for immediately after the creation, the Lord sanctified the seventh day of rest, to bee perpe|tually observed and kept of his Church. And it is not to be doubted of, but that the Israelites kept the Sabbath in Egypt, as may appeare by the institution of the Passeover, wherein both in respect of the num|ber of the seventh day, prescribed to be an holy convocation, and by the manner of keeping the same, in resting from all servile worke, Exod. 12.16. there seemeth to be relation to the rest of the Sabbath, and se|venth day, which they were already acquainted with, after the ensample whereof, they should keepe the seventh day of unleavened bread.

Page 188

2. Lyranus thinketh that these were certaine ceremoniall Lawes, as of the red cow, prescribed after|ward at large, Num. 19. and other rites of legall purifyings, as also some judicials: But this is only his con|jecture without any ground, the first Law that was given the people after they came out of Egypt, was the morall Law: and before this, it is evident, that there were certaine ceremoniall rites, and ju|diciall equities kept by the Fathers: so that this was not the first time and place, that they received such things.

3. Simlerus is of opinion therefore, that such ceremonies and rites as were preserved, and continued by tradition from the Fathers, were here by the authority of God confirmed, that they should not take them as grounded upon custome only, but warranted and commanded by God. But it seemeth by the phrase, He set them an ordinance, that they received an ordinance not given them before: and seeing that the Lord intended shortly, within the space of little more than a moneth (as may be gathered, chap. 16.1. and chap. 19.1.) to give them Lawes and ordinances in mount Sinai, there appeared no such necessity, to pre|vent that time and place.

4. Pellican understandeth the Lawes and ceremonies, which were given afterward in mount Sinai, Eo loci, sed non jam tunc: About that place, but not at that time. But neither about that place, were the Lawes given, which were delivered in mount Sinai, for betweene Marah and the desert of Sinai, they had six sta|tions, or mansions, as they are numbred, Num. 33. from verse 9. to vers. 16. And this Law here mentioned, was given at this time, while they stayed in Marah, where they proved and tried their faith and obedience, as the next words shew.

5. Some thinke that the Lord here gave them Lawes, Non scriptura, sed ore ut justè viverent: not in writing, but by word of mouth, that they should live uprightly. Ferus. And what Lawes they were, is not here expressed. Osiander. But to what purpose should a Law be given not written, that the people might alwayes have it in remembrance?

6. Therefore, what this Law and ordinance was, is here in the next verse expressed, where the Lord moveth the people to the obedience of his Lawes, with promise to bee their protector, in keeping them from the plagues and diseases of Egypt. Iun. So that the Lord in this place, dealeth two wayes with his people, Postquam aqua penuria illos examinavit, verbo etiam admonuit: After he had tried and examined them, with the want and penury of water, hee doth also by his Word admonish them to be more obedient. Calvin.

QUEST. XLIV. Why the Lord at this time gave his people a Law.

NOW why the Lord gave them this Law and ordinance in Marah, the reasons may be these. 1. Because the people a long time having beene in bondage, were not used to the Lords yoke: they might have said then with the Prophet, Isai. 26.13. Other Lords beside thee have ruled us: therefore, Hoc populo longa servitute oppresso forte i • dissuetudinem venerant: Because the people by their long servitude, might perhaps have growne to a disuse, the Lord giveth them a Law. Simler. 2. The Lord in thus doing, Pactum cum patribus factum renovat: Doth renne the covenant made with their Fathers. Pellican. Hee doth give them a Law, to put them in mind of the ancient covenant made with their forefathers. 3. The Lord taketh occasion by this present benefit, in providing of them water in their distresse, to take triall of their obedience, Postquam aquae penuria examinavit populum: After he had examined them with the penury of water. Calvin. Which might serve as a preparative to move them to obedience. 4. Because they were a carnall and disobedient people, they had need of a Law to bind them, Carnales enim cancello legis indigent: For carnall men had need to be held in by a Law. Ferus. As the Apostle saith, The Law is not given to a righteous man, but to the lawlesse and disobedient, 1. Tim. 19. 5. The Lord here giveth them a Law, to shew what was the end of their deliverance, and redemption out of Egypt, not to live as they list, but to walke in obedience before God: Populum docet ne ex servitute liberati ad carnis libidinem deflectat: He teacheth the people, lest they being delivered out of bondage, should turne unto the lust of the flesh. Pellican. 6. And beside, the Lord would by this meanes, Paulatim populum jugo legis adsuefacere: By little and little acquaint his people with the yoke of his Law, which he was purposed to deliver more fully in mount Sinai. Osiander. So also Simler. and Borrh.

QUEST. XLV. Who is said here to tempt him.

And there he ••oved him. 1. Some doe understand this of the people, that they should tempt God: and in that sense it is understood two wayes: either that they tempted God, after he had given them a Law, which sheweth the great perversenesse of the people, that notwithstanding the Law given them▪ ceased not to sinne against God: or it is a reason why the Lord gave them a Law, because they there tempt[ed] him: this latte• sense Calvin preferreth, Quod Deus populi malitiam castigaverit, à quo tentatu• fuerat: The Lord correcteth the malice of the people, of whom he was tempted. But if it were understood of the people, the verbe would have beene put in the plurall number, They tempted him, as vers. 23. When they came to Marah, and vers. 24. jil••• hag•am, the people murmured, where people is in the singular, but murmured in the plurall: And againe, the coherence of the sentence beareth not this sense, There he set them, (that is, the people) a law, and there he proved him, the same him then he proved, unto the which he set a law.

2. Some thinke that Moses in Gods name proved the people. Genevens. But the same that is said before, to set them a law, doth also prove them, that is, God, and not Moses. 3. Therefore the meaning is, that God tried here the faith and obedience of his people: and this best agreeth both with the words before going, that he which gave a law unto them, is said also to prove them, and with the words following, And he said, if thou wilt diligently harken, &c. As God thus said to his people, so hee it was that proved them. Simler.

QUEST. XLVI. Of the divers kinds of temptations.

Vers. 25. AND there he proved him. 1. There are three kinds of temptations: God tempteth man, and man tempteth God, and the Devill is the tempter of man.

1. God is said to tempt two kind of wayes, either directly, and immediately by himselfe, or mediately by other: By himselfe, sometime he proveth and tempteth by blessings, to see if the people will be thereby perswaded to obedience, as he did by giving them Manna, Exod. 16.5. and Deut. 8.16. sometime by afflictions, to see if they will be faithfull, as he proved the Israelites in the desert 40. yeeres, Deut. 8.3. The Lord is said to tempt mediately, when others are the instruments and agents, but God the disposer, as, hee is said by false Prophets, to prove his people, whether they love the Lord with all their heart, Deut. 13.3.

2. Man also is said to tempt God, as the Israelites did in the wilderness, provoke the Lord by their tentations 40. yeeres, Heb. 3.10. And these tentations are of three sorts. 1. By despairing and distrusting in the power and assistance of God, as Psal. 78.41. They tempted God, and limited the holy one of Israel: they did limite and tie God unto meanes; that when they saw no ordinary meanes to be provided for, they despaired: as they spake against God, saying▪ Can God prepare a table in the wilderness? Psal. 78.19. 2. They are said to tempt and provoke God, which presume upon God, neglecting, or refusing the meanes: As our Saviour answered the Devill, that would have tempted him, to cast himselfe downe from the top of the pinnacle, and to trust in Gods assistance: Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God: to have presumed upon Gods helpe, where there was no cause or necessity, had beene a tempting of God. So the Prophet saith, that the King of Judah (in refusing to aske a signe, for the confirmation of their hope in God provoked God, Isay 7.13. 3. Men also tempt God by their curiosity, where as they aske things of God, which are not necessary: as the King of Judah would not aske a signe, because it was to tempt God, Isay 7.12. which is generally true, that he which beleeveth not Gods word without a signe tempteth him: but hee was deceived in the particular: for it is no tempting of God to aske a signe, where the Lord doth offer it, as in that place he did. So the Sadduces and Pharisees are said to tempt Christ, when they asked a signe: for men doe as well tempt God of curiosity, as of infidelity: of this sort was the temptation of the Israelites: When they tempted God in their hearts, requiring meat for their lust, Psal. 78.14. They did of wantonnesse and curiosity for their bellies (as the other curiosity is for the mind) lust for flesh when they needed not, having Manna to content them.

3. The Devill is said to be the tempter of man, that is, a seducer and leader of them into evill: and therefore he is simply without any other addition called the Tempter, Matth. 4.4. Here then Augustines distinction may well be received, Vnam tentationem intelligimus, quae decipit, sic Deus non tentat; altera qua probat, sic tentamur à Deo: Wee understand one temptation, which deceiveth, so God tempteth none; one that proveth, so we are tempted of God. The temptation of Satan hath a double act, one toward God, when hee tempteth and urgeth God against the Saints, and therefore is called the accuser of the brethren, the other toward men, and so he is the deceiver of the world, Revel. 12.9, 10. And in these temptations unto evill, there is a principall tempter and chiefe egger unto evill, which is the Devill, and ministring, and underserving tempters, as the concupiscence of our owne nature: So the Apostle saith, every man is tempted, When he is drawne away by his owne concupiscence and is entised, Iam. 1.14. As Bernard also well saith:

Diabolus proprio baculo nos caedit, & manus nostras proprio cingulo ligat, ut caro quae nobis data est in adiutorium fiat nobis in ruinam: The Devill doth beat us with our owne staffe, and bindeth our hands with our owne girdle, that our flesh which was given for our helpe, should bee unto our ruine. Bernard. meditat. cap. 15.

QUEST. XLVII. Of the difference betweene good and evill tentations.

IT shall not bee amisse here to shew the differences betweene good and evill tentations. 1. They differ in the efficient cause, God is the author of the one, as God tempted Abraham; the Devill of the other, as hee entred into Iudasheart and tempted him to betray Christ. 2. The end is divers: Deus tentat ut doceat, Diabolus ut decipiat: God tempteth to teach us, the Devill to deceive us. August. de tempore, serm. 72. Abrahams temptation sheweth the one, and Iobs the other: Deus tentat ut corret, Diabolus tentat ut subruat, God tempteth to crowne us, the Devill tempteth to confound us. Ambros. lib. 1. d. Abraham. cap. 8. 3. The manner also is divers, the Devill promiseth faire and performeth foule, he maketh himselfe a friend, but in the end turneth a foe, hee beginneth like a Lambe, but endeth like a Lion. Ut spirituales defraudet transfigurat se in angelum lucis, ut fortes comprimat apparet agnus: To deceive those that are spirituall, he transfigureth himselfe into an Angell of light, to overcome the strong, hee sheweth himselfe as a Lambe. Augustin. soliloq. cap. 17. Hee inveigleth Judas with hope of gaine, when hee betrayed Christ, but he payed him with hanging. God contrariwise for the present seemeth to frowne, and to be as an enemy, but he in the end sheweth himselfe a father: hee beginneth with hard precepts, but endeth with sweet promises: Incipit à vinculis ferreis, finit ad torquem auream: Hee beginneth with ir bands, but endeth with a golden chaine: August. As Iosephs prison irons were turned into a golden chaine, Gen. 41.42. God handled Iob at the first as one of his enemies, Iob 19.11. but in the end he doth plentifully reward him, Iob 42.10.

4. Good temptations are wrought by good Ministers and instruments, evill temptations by evill instruments: the temptations wherewith the Lord proved Israel, were wrought by the hand of Moses and Aaron, and by good Angels: but the Sabeans and Chaldeans were Satans instruments in the afflicting of Iob: so *Augustine: Deus per homines bonos tanquam per ministros suos agit omne quod bonum est: diabolus per homines malos tanquam satellites suos exercet omne quod malum est: God by good men as his ministers doth whatsoever is good: the Devill by evill men as his assailes worketh all mischief: serm. 85. de tempore. 5. They differ as in the instrument that worketh, so in the measure of working: God tempteth his children according to their strength: as the Apostle saith: God is faithfull and will not suffer you to be tempted above that you are able, but will give an issue with the temptation: 1. Cor. 10.1. Good temptations are neither greater, nor more than the children of God can beare. But the Devill layeth on load, he hath never done, as he sent one crosse in anothers necke upon Iob: *Ingrui nuntius post nuntium, congregat vulnera: One messenger followeth at anothers heeles, he doubleth his strokes: Non unum telum diabolus habet, frequenter vulnera: The Devill hath more than one weapon, he sendeth his darts thicke, Ambros. lib. 4. in Luke. 6. They differ in the power of the tempter: God whom he will he draweth unto him by his temptations, he worketh upon mens hearts and affections, and turneth them as it pleaseth him: Ex nolentibus volentis facit: He of nilling maketh willing, August. But the Devill forceth none: Suadere, sollicitare potest, cogere compellit, non extorquet consensum, sed petit: He may perswade and solícite, but he can compell none: he extorteth not ones consent, but beggeth it. August. hom. 12. 7. Another difference is in the subject of the temptations, that is, such as are tempted. Deus probatos sibi tentat, unde David, proba me Deus & tenta me: God doth tempt those which are knowne to him, as David saith, prove me O God and trie me, Ambros. lib. 1. de Abraham. cap. 8. The righteous are the object of Gods temptations, as he tempted Abraham. But the wicked for the most part the temptations of Satan worke upon, as the Apostle saith, 2. Tim. 2.16. That they may come unto amendment out of the snare of the Devill which are taken of him at his pleasure. 8. The matter of the temptation is divers: God tempteth about things externall, sometime veris, which things fall out in deed: as when Abraham was tempted to come out of his country: sometime Compositis & fictis: With things supposed and pretended: as when he was tempted to sacrifice Isaack. But the Devils temptations are most exercised in spirituall things: Non solum in vitiis, sed in ipsis spiritualibus exercitiis laqueos abscondit: Hee doth not only in vices, but even in spirituall exercises hide his snares: hee tempteth unto vice, and maketh men proude of vertue: August. Soliloq. cap. 17. tom. 9. 9. The successe of these temptations is much differing: God never faileth in his worke, neither is deceived: but his tentation hath the end for the which he sendeth it, as in the prooffe of Abrahams obedience. But the Devill is prevented in his pur|pose, and whom he seeketh to supplant, they become stronger. Illuditur diabolus, & vulnere suo contra se armat, quem debilitandum putavit: The Devill is mocked, and with his owne wound armeth them against him whom he thought to weaken, Ambros. lib. 1. de poenitent. cap. 12. 10. Lastly, the effect of these temptations is farre unlike: Gods temptations doe try out for the most part, that good, which is in a man: as Abrahams obedience appeared in his tentation: so Augustine, Tentatio Dei non illud agit, ut ipse aliquid cognoscat, quod ante nesciebat, sed illo tentante, id est, interrogante quod in homine occultum est proclatur: God by his tentation seeketh not to know that which hee knew not before, but by his tentation as a kinde of interrogation, that which is hid in man is brought to light. Sermon. de tempor. 72. But Satans tentation discovereth that evill which lieth hid in a man: as in Iudas, his malice and covetousnesse, in betraying his master for money. See more of the difference betweene good and evill tentations: doctrine 1. upon Gen. 22.

QUEST. XLVIII. Wherein the Lord at this time proved his people.

NOW the Lord at this time proved and tried the people in these three things. 1. Tentavit aquarum penuria: He proved them by the penury of water: Borrh. Pellican. 2. Tentavit lege data: He proved them by giving them a law. Simler. Probavit eum num jugo adsuescere vellet: He proved them, whether they would yeeld unto the Lords yoke: Osiander. 3. The Lord also proved them by his mercies, in healing the waters, and sending them drinke in their necessity. In the first hee trieth their patience, in the second their obedi|ence, in the third their thankfulness.

QUEST. XLIX. What diseases of Egypt he meaneth.

Vers. 26. I Will put none of those diseases upon thee which I brought upon Egypt. 1. Some understand here the diseases which the Israelites had in Egypt. Cajetan. But the words doe plainly shew, that hee meaneth such diseases as were imposed upon Egypt: called also the diseases of Egypt, Deut. 28.60. 2. Neither yet are the ordinary diseases of Egypt here understood, such as was the Leprosie, called (Elephantiasis) peculiar unto that countrey, caused by the contagion of Nilus: for the Lord speaketh of such extraordinary diseases, as hee brought at that time upon the Egyptians. 3. Some therefore doe referre them to the plagues of Egypt, which the Egyptians endured: but seeing most of those plagues were without their bodies, and here the Lord speaketh of such diseases as were in the body, as it ap|peareth by the reason annexed, I am the Lord that healeth thee: such plagues then as touched not the Egyptians in their bodies, are not here comprehended under the name of diseases: and beside, seeing this promise conditionall, upon their obedience, includeth a secret commination, that if they walke not in obedience, the Lord will bring upon them all those diseases, and yet we reade not of such plagues, wherewith the Israelites were punished for their disobedience: it seemeth then, that those externall plagues of Egypt, are not here signified. 4. Wherefore speciall reference is here made, to those swelling, burning, biles and running sores, wherewith the Egyptians were smitten in the sixth plague, Exod. 9▪11. by that kind, understanding the like burning diseases, and swelling sores: as this to be the meaning, may be gathered, Deut. 28.60. where after he had said, He will bring upon thee all the diseases of Egypt, whereof thou wast afraid: then it is added, And every sicknesse, and every plague, which is not written in the booke of this law, vers. 61.

QUEST. L. Whether Iob, being a righteous man felt not the diseases of Egypt.

BUT here a further question ariseth, how this promise was fulfilled toward Iob, who being a righteous man, was notwithstanding smitten with botches and sores. 1. Ferus 〈...〉, that these diseases were the plagues of Egypt, which were not laid upon Iob: but seeing one 〈...〉 plagues was of botches and sores, though Iob felt not all the plagues, yet therein he was tried; and also, his sheepe and servants were destroyed with lightning and fire from heaven, which also was one of the plagues of Egypt; therefore, this answer doth not satisfie. 2. Neither yet will we say, that Iob lived before these times, and that this promise was made to the Israelites, for the same equity was generall in all times, and extended to all persons. 3. Therefore, this we answer: that this promise to be kept from the diseases of Egypt, is conditionall, upon the keeping of all Gods ordinances, which never any did but Christ, who was freed in his holly flesh from all diseases, and corporall infirmities: now Iob, although in respect of others, hee was a perfect man, yet he could not justifie himselfe toward God: for he saith, If he should wash himselfe with snow water, yet his owne cloathes should defile him, Iob 9.30. though hee should stand upon his best workes, yet the Lord could finde out his sinnes. And beside, these corrections laid upon Iob, were not punishments and plagues for his sinne, but the Lords chastisements in the end, to his greater comfort. And further, wee understand the diseases of Egypt to have beene generall; this letteth not, but that some particular persons in Israel, might be touched with the like diseases, as Ezechiah had a byle, yet were they not the plagues of Egypt, that is, universall and generall.

QUEST. LI. In what sense the Lord saith, I am thy healer.

I Am the Lord that healeth thee, or, I am thy healer or Physitian, for so the word Ropheca signifieth▪ 1. This reason containeth an argument from the contrary: I am hee that keepeth diseases from thee, and healeth them, therefore will I not bring them upon thee. Vatab. 2. And further, this reason is taken from the power of God: Ego possum & volo tui corporis vires conservare, &c. I can and will preserve the strength of thy body, and retaine it. Osiander. 3. And further, this promise is grounded upon the naturall inclination of God unto mercy: Non vult mortem peccatoris, potior apud eum est misericordia quàm ira: Hee will not the death of a sinner, mercy beareth greater sway with him, than wrath. Pellican. 4. And the Lord here promiseth, not only to heale all their infirmities, and helpe their present dangers, but keepe from them all perils imminent, or to come: as they had present experience by the healing of the waters.

QUEST. LII. Of the fountaines and Palme trees in Elim.

Vers. 27. And they came to Elim, where were twelve fountaines of waters. 1. Concerning the situation of this place, it seemeth that it was in Arabia petraea: and from these fountaines proceeded the river which watred the City Petra, and the circuit thereabout: this floud Herodotus calleth koris, of the coldnesse thereof, for kor in Hebrew signifieth cold: by the benefit of this river Cambyses, as writeth Herodotus, once made a way and entrance into Egypt. Iun. 2. It seemeth it was a watry place, because Palmes doe not grow in dry grounds. Calvin. 3. So it was every way commodious to campe in, the water was necessary both to quench their thirst, and to allay the heat with the coolnesse thereof, and the Palme trees (which some interpret Date trees) were comfortable both for their shadow, and their fruit.

QUEST. LIII. Of the mysticall signification of the twelve fountaines, and 70. Palmes.

THis camping place in Elim, in respect of the fountaines and Palme trees there growing, hath a threefold application: 1. It resembleth the present state of Israel; the twelve fountaines, the twelve tribes, that were watered there: the 70. Palme trees, the 70. Elders, which were afterward chosen, and the Palme beside betokened victory. 2. Beside, the twelve fountaines were a representation of the twelve Apostles, out of whose pure doctrine, the Church of God is nourished and refreshed: the 70. Palme trees set forth the Doctors and Fathers of the Church, whose writings, as the palme trees give comfort, both with shadow and fruit, are also profitable, so long as they are watered with these twelve fountaines, that is, swarve not from the Apostles doctrine. Some also make these 70. Palme trees, a type of the 70. disciples. Pellican. These as instruments, doe set forth unto us the true living water, the Messiah, by faith in whom the Church is spiritually nourished and sustained. 3. This also was a type and figure of everlasting life, and of the state of the blessed: as S. Iohn describeth the heavenly Jerusalem, by the river that was in the midst of it, and the tree of life growing by it, that bare twelve manner of fruit. Borrh.

QUEST. LIV. Of divers errors and oversights of Iosephus.

NOW in the last place, I will briefly shew, how many errors and oversights are committed by Iosephus in the narration of this short story. 1. Iosephus thinketh, that before the people came to Marah, they carried water with them in their journey, and digged pits by the way, and found water, but not enough: but the text saith they found no waters, that is, none at all. 2. He saith that they came prius vespere, the first evening unto Marah: but Moses saith, that they went three dayes in the desert, till they came to Marah, both in this place, and Numb. 33.8. 3. Hee saith, Moses accepit frustrum igniforte ibi jacens: That Moses tooke a peece of wood by chance, there lying, to cast into the water: whereas hee found not that wood by chance, but the Lord shewed it him. 4. Hee addeth, that when the people asked what need thee was to change the water, he cast not in the wood, but commanded them to draw out a great quantity of the water, and then the rest would be sweet, and they did so: But Moses sheweth how the waters became sweet, by casting in the tree. 5. Hee misreporteth the story, concerning the pleasant place of Elim, saying, that a farre off, it seemed a delectable place, but when they came neere, .....lit omnium expectationem, It deceived the expectation of all. 6. Hee saith further, that the palme trees were not Admodum propra propter loci ariditatem: That the palmes were not very tall; because of the drinesse of the place. wherein he seemeth to follow the Septuagint, that there were seventy < in non-Latin alphabet > trunks of palmes: But the text sheweth that it was a watry place, where were twelve fountaines, and therefore the Palmes there growing, were like to be goodly trees: And if they were such stubs, and stumps of <◇>, neiither profitable for shadow or fruit, Moses would not have made such a speciall mention thereof, both here, and Num. 33.7. Iosephus goeth on, and telleth that these twelve fountaines were not sufficient, Vt humiditatem terrae subministrarent: To minister moisture to the earth. But the contrary is shewed before, quast. 52. and it seemeth it was a warry and commodious place, because it is said, they camped there by the waters. 8. Iosephus also writeth, that in this place, for want of food, the people murmured against Moses: whereas their murmuring for want of food, was afterward in the desert of Sur, chap. 16.1. And thus far of the questions, doubts and difficulties, which this Chapter, as wee have seene, hath plentifully afforded.

1. Doct. All proceedeth of Gods mercy.

Vers. 13. THou wilt by thy mercy carry this people. Whatsoever the Lord doth for his people, procee|deth of his love only, and mercie, not of any merit or desert in them. Simler. As Iacob confes|seth, he was not worthy of the mercy and truth, which the Lord had shewed him.

2. Doct. All both men and women, must set forth Gods praise.

Vers. 20. ANd all the wom•n came out after her. In that not only the men, but women also here did s•ng, and set forth Gods praise: it sheweth that all in generall, both men and women, should •ee exercised in singing to the praise of God, as the Prophet David exhorteth all people to praise the Lord, Psal. 147. both young men and maids, old men and children, Psal. 148. Ferus.

3. Doct. Of the lawfull use of Church Musike, and how it ought to be limited.

THEy came out with timbrels. As hence it may be gathered, that there is a commendable use of Musike, both in voice and Instrument, in the publike service of God: So here certaine rules are prescribed, which serve for the moderation and limitation of Church Musike. 1. That according to the Apostles rule, all things are to be done to edifying: as here Miriam and the rest so sing, as they are understood, for the women answered the men, and the women answered themselves in singing. So he that singeth in the Church, should so sing, as that hee both edifie himselfe and others: Augustine saith concerning the healrer, Si sonum non sensum libido audiendi desideret, improbatur: If he that heareth, regard the sound more than the sense, it is to be reprov'd. Cont. Iulian. lib. 4. cap. 14. And touching the Singer, Bernard thus confesseth, Saepe ad sacrum mysterium vocem 〈◇〉 fregi ut dulcius cantar•m; magis delecta•ar in vocis modulatione, quàm in cordis compunctione: Oftentimes in the sacred mystery, I did marble with my voice, to sing more sweetly; I delighted more in tuning the voice, than in turning my heart. Hee acknowledgeth this to have beene a fault in himselfe, and so is it in all such singers as use the like. 2. Another rule is, that all things should bee done in the Church 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, decently, and with a comely grace, 1. Cor. 14.40. Miriam being a propheltesse with the rest, did sing after a sober manner, as it became a grave Matrone or Prophetesse: so should Church Musike, expressed by voice or Instrument, bee grave and sober, not with divisions, and running catches, and curious warbling, and breaking of the voice: As Augustine well saith, Sobri•psal••••in ecclesia divin• 〈◇〉 Prophetarum: Wee doe sing soberly in the Church, the divine songs of the Prophets, Epist•l. 119. cap. 19.3. The Apostle addeth a third rule, that all things should bee done 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, according to order. And this is agreeable to order, that things most necessary in the service of God, should have the first and the chiefest place: Musike then should bee used and ordered in the Church, as that it hinder not the preaching of the Word, neither take up that time, which should bee spent in spi|rituall instruction, and in edifying of mens soules. There is no comparison betweene preaching and singing in the Church, like as S. Paul preferreth five words, spoke with understanding to the instruction of others, before ten thousand words utt•red in a strange tongue, 1. Cor. 14.19. such oddes there is betweene lively and edifying preaching, and dumbe tunes, and unedifying songs. This abuse hath beene espied, even in the popish Church, when other necessary parts of Gods service, as prayers and thankesgi|ving, were many times omitted, because of the Organe play, and tedious Church-musike: and it is cen|sured in these words, Illud non rectè fit in quibusdam eccles••: This is not well done in certaine Churches, &c. Coloniens. part. 2. chap. 12.

4. Doct. Of the lawfulness of Physike, and the abuses thereof.

Vers. 27. I The Lord am thy hea•er, or Physician. By this, that the Lord giveth himselfe this title, the ho|nourable science of Physike is commended: The Physician is to bee honoured in the time of health, against the day of sicknesse. Luke is called the beloved Physician, Colos. 4.10. He would not, being called to be an Evangelist, retaine a calling either unlawfull, or dishonourable to his profession: Ecclesia|sticus well adviseth, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, honour thy Physician: not the science of Physike, but the abuse of Physic|ians is to be condemned. And there are two generall faults in that calling, one is in the professors, and practitioners themselves, if they be not faithfull, but make long cures, to inrich themselves, and impove|rish their patients, as that poore woman was handled, which had beene troubled with a bloody issu• twelve yeeres, and had spent all she had: the text saith, Shee had suffered many things of the Physicians and had spent all she had, and it availed her nothing, but she became much worse, Mark. 5.26. where foure incon|veniencies are set downe, that came by the fraud of the Physicians, the prolonging of the disease, the put|ting of her body to paine, the wasting of her substance, the increasing of her disease. The other fault is in patients, when they trust to Physicians, and forget God, (as Asa did, 2. Chron. 15.13.) who can worke without Physicians, but they can doe nothing without him.

5. Doct. That is only right, which the Lord commandeth.

Vers. 26. IF thou wilt doe that which is right in his sight, and give care to his commandement. Tunc rectum est opus homini•, cum eo modo fit quo Deus jubet: Then a mans worke is right, when it is done as the Lord biddeth. Pellican. For that is not right, which seemeth good in a mans owne eyes, but what is approved of God: as the Lord by his Prophet saith, They worship mee in vaine, teaching for doctrines the commandements of men, as our Saviour citeth the Prophet, Ma•k•.7.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Against uncertainty or doubtfulness of salvation.

Vers. 13. THou wilt carry thy people. But in the Hebrew it is •achitha, thou hast carried: Propter certitudinem fidei, sic de futuris loquitur, ut de praeteritis: For the certainty of faith, hee so speaketh of things to come, as already past. Ferus. As S. Paul saith, By his mercy he saved us. Tit. 3.6. whereas yet we are not saved, but are assured of our salvation by faith in Christ This then sheweth the absurdity of popish doctrine, that counteth it presumption for any man to be assured of his salvation.

2. Confut. Against the Maniches.

Vers. 25. AND there he proved him. The Maniches upon the like place, where the Lord is said to tempt Abraham, thus objected: Egone Deum colam qui tentat? shall I worship a God that tempteth? These Maniches rejected the old Testament, and the Author thereof, they made two beginnings, one of evill, the other of good, two chiefe Princes, the one of darknesse, to whom they ascribed the old Testa|ment, the other the Prince of light, whom they held to be the Author of the new Testament. S• displiceat tibi Deus tentans, displiceat & Christus tentans: If God displease thee, because he tempteth, then must Christ also displease thee, because he is said also to tempt: As he said to Philip, Whence shall we buy bread, that th•se may eat? Ioh. 6.5. then it followeth, This he said to prove or tempt him, for he himselfe knew what he would doe. Christ is said to prove him, that is, to see what he would say: so, Deo tentante id quod occultum est pro|ditur: God tempteth, that what is hid may bee bewrayed: Deus tentat ut d•ceat, and God tempteth to teach and instruct: August. de tempore, serm. 7•. See before quest. 50.51.

3. Confut. Against free will.

Vers. 26. IF thou wilt give eare unto his commandements. These and the like places are urged by the Romanists, to prove freewill, as Esay. 1.19. If yee consent and obey, yee shall eat the good things of the land: upon these and such other places, they argue thus: If it bee in our power to performe these conditions, then have wee free will, if not, to what end are they propounded? Bellarm. lib. 5. de grat. cap. 19.

Contra. This argument consisteth upon a disjunctive proposition: These places either shew free will, or else they are propounded in vaine. First therefore, I answer, that according to their collection, these places as well shew, that a man hath power of himselfe to keepe the Commandements, as that hee hath free will: But this S. Paul denieth, and thereupon hee concludeth, that every one that is of the workes of the Law, is under the curse, because they cannot keep it. Secondly, these places being urged in their sense, doe as well conclude, that a man of himselfe, without grace may keepe Gods com|mandements, for if a man cannot performe them wholly of himselfe, the same question remaineth, why they are propounded to him that cannot keepe them? Thirdly, And yet though it bee not in mans power, to keepe these commandements, they are not in vaine, for they serve as spurs to incite and stirre us up to obedience, and to strive unto perfection, and to labour to goe forward. But S. Paul sheweth the onely sufficient reason, why the Lord gave the Law, to bee a Schoolemaster to bring us unto Christ, Gallath. 3. And Augustine writeth excellently of this point: Non ob aliud superbis data ista praecepta sunt, quam ut in suis viribus deficientes in quibus confidebant, liberatores requirerent: These precepts were for no other cause given to the proud people, than that failing in their owne strength, wherein they trusted, they should seeke for an helper, and deliverer. Contra Celestin. de perfectione justitiae.

6. Places of Morall Observations.

1. Observ. Against vaine confidence in strength or riches.

Vers. 4. His chosen captaines were drowned also in the red sea. Notwithstanding, their great power, nobility, favour with the King, skill in feats of warre, the Lord being mightier than they, and a greater man of warre, was able to confound and overthrow them: this sheweth that no man should put confidence in his nobility, power, riches. Ferus. As the Prophet saith, Ierem. 4.23. Let not the wiseman glory in his wisdom, nor the strong man glory in his strength, neither the rich man glory in his riches, &c.

2. Observ. The enemies of the Church are the enemies of God.

Vers. 7. Thou hast overthrowne them, that rise against thee. They which are enemies unto the Church, the Lord holdeth them to be his enemies: they which rise against his people, doe set them|selves against the Lord: as the Lord Jesus said to Saul, Why persecutest thou me▪ Simler. They then, which oppose themselves to the Church and people of God, doe bid battell to the Lord himselfe, and hee will take their cause in his owne hand, and maintaine it.

3. Observ. Sinne presseth downe to hell.

Vers. 10. They sunke as lead in the mighty waters. Sinne is heavy, and presseth downe, ye it weigheth downe to hell: Examinemus ergo nos per poenitentiam ne deprimamur gravitate peccatorum usque in profundum: Let us therefore examine our selves by repentance, lest wee bee pressed downe with the weight of our sinnes, into the deepe. Ferus. So the Apostle exhorteth, That wee should cast away everything that presseth downe▪ and sinne that hangeth on so fast, Hebr. 12.1.

4. Observ. Not to give over to goe on in our calling, notwithstanding the unthankfulness of men.

Vers. 24. Then the people murmured against Moses, and he cried unto the Lord. Moses notwithstanding the peoples murmuring, goeth on in his calling, and leaveth not off to pray for them, though they were a very stubborne and ungratefull people: this teacheth the servants of God, to goe on with courage in their calling, notwithstanding, the evill acceptance in the world of their labours: Ministers must looke for small thanke at the hands of men, for their paines: nor yet must such as labour, either by preaching or writing, to propagate the knowledge of the truth, looke for their reward among men: nay it ought to be a comfort unto them, that they find not their reward here, for it is a sure signe, that a greater reward is laid up for them in heaven: As the Lord saith by his Prophet Ieremy, Refraine thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from teares, for thy worke shall be rewarded, Ierem. 31.16. As Moses here prayeth for a murmuring and unthankfull people; the like doth Samuel, God forbid that I should sinne against the Lord, and cease praying for you, but I will shew you the good and right way, 1. Sam. 1.23.

5. Observ. Obedience the best remedy against sicknesse.

Vers. 26. If thou wilt keepe all his ordinances, then I will put none of these evill diseases upon thee. The best medicine then, against diseases and sicknesse, is obedience, and to walke in the feare of God. Osiander. And sinne is that which causeth diseases: as S. Paul sheweth, that divers among the Corinthians, were some sicke, some weake, some were fallen asleepe, because of certaine abuses, which they committed in celebrating the Lords Supper: And in the same place, the Apostle sheweth the best remedy: that they should judge themselves, (by repentance and amendment of life) and then they should not bee judged of the Lord, by sicknesse, mortality, and other such judgements, 1. Cor. 11.30, 31.

6. Observ. After heavinesse commeth joy.

Vers. 27. And they came to Elim, where were twelve fountaines, &c. After they had gone thorow dry and barren places, the Lord bringeth them to a pleasant and comfortable station: thus the Lord after heavinesse sendeth comfort, after labour rest, after affliction prosperity. Simler. As it is in the Psalme, Weeping may abide in the evening, but joy commeth in the morning, Psal. 30.5.

CHAP. XVI.

1. The Method and Argument.

T His Chapter sheweth both the necessity and want of food, which the children of Israel sustained, to vers. 4. then the supply of their want in the rest of the Chapter.

First, their want is described: 1. By the circumstances of the time and place. 2. By the effects, their murmuring: where are set forth the circumstances of their persons that murmured, the whole congregation, and against whom, namely, Moses and Aaron, vers. 2. then the matter of their murmuring, vers. 3.

Secondly, the supply is: 1. Promised by the Lord, with particular direction, what they shall gather upon every day, and what upon the sixth day, vers. 4, 5. 2. The same is declared to the people: 1. Joyntly by Moses and Aaron, with a reprehension for their murmuring vers. 6, 7. 2. By Moses alone, vers. 8. 3. By Aaron alone, at the appointment of Moses: where is shewed, both what the people saw while Aaron spake, and what the Lord said before to Moses, vers. 10, 11, 12. 3. The promise is exhibited: where first is described the manner of the coming forth of the flesh, then of the Man, vers. 13, 14. 2. The effect which it wrought, the admiration of the people, which is shewed by the name Man, which they gave it. 3. Then followeth certaine lawes and precepts, for the disposing and ordering of this Man.

The first law and order is, how much every one should gather: where is set forth the precept or rule, vers. 16. The obedience of the people, vers. 17. and the successe, vers. 18.

The second precept is, that nothing should be reserved till the morning, where both the transgression of the people is shewed, vers. 20. and their obedience afterward, in gathering it every morning, vers. 21.

The third precept is, that they should gather none upon the Sabbath, but twice so much upon the sixth day, to serve also for the Sabbath: here is declared. 1. The occasion of this law, the information of the rulers, with the occasion thereof, the people gathering double on the sixth day, vers. 21, 22. 2. Then the promulgation of the law of the Sabbath, with the obedience of the people thereunto, to vers. 27. 3. The transgression of the people, vers. 27. 4. The reprehension by Moses, with an iteration of the law, to vers. 30. 5. The reformation of the people, vers. 30. with a further description of Man, vers. 31.

The fourth precept is, the reserving of Man in a pot, commanded by the Lord to Moses, vers. 32. prescribed by him to Aaron, vers. 32. and by him accordingly performed, vers. 34.

Lastly is shewed the perpetuall use of Manna, till they came to the land of Canaan, vers. 35.

2. The divers readings.

Vers. 8. When the Lord hath given▪ I.V.S. where must be supplied; ye shall know. I. better than, ^{*} at eventide shall the Lord give. B.G.L. for here the preposition is omitted: the word is, beteth, in giving. A.P.H.

Vers. 10. They looked towards the wilderness. A.P.B.G.L.V. they turned them. I.S. phanah signifieth both. ^{*}

Vers. 14. When the dew which was fallen (or the lying of the dew) was ••ended. G.P.A. or, lift it selfe up. I. was gone. B.V. had ceased. S. had covered the face. L.

Vers. 14. A small round thing. I.B. G.A.P.V. better than, a small white. S. or, pilo •usum, beaten with a pestle. L. mecusphas, round.

Vers. 15. It is Man. B.G.V.I.P. better than, what is this? S.L.A. for, mah▪ not man, signifieth what.

Vers. 29. Turne every man in his place. G.I.V.P. at home. B. with himselfe. L.S. the word is, •actun, sub se, under him. P. that is, in the place under him.

Vers. 31. As wafers made with hony. I.B. G. cum caeter. better than, fi•e flower made with hony. ^{*} S.L. tza/phichith, cakes, wafers.

Vers. 34. Laid it up before the Testimony to be kept. B.G. cum caeter. better than, posuit in Tabernaculo: ^{*} he put it in the Tabernacle. L. haghaduth, the Testimony.

3. Questions and doubts discussed and explained.

QUEST. I. Of the desert of Sin.

Vers. 1. They came to the wilderness of Sin, &c. 1. There was another desert called Zin, where Miriam Moses sister died, which is named also Pharan, and Kadesh, Numb. 33.36. but with this difference: this Sin is written with samech, the other with sade: Marbach. Simler. Then Tostatus is somewhat deceived, who maketh two deserts bearing the same name Sin: qu. 1. in Exod. whereas the one is Sin, the other Zin or Tzin. 2. There was also the desert of Sinai, which was divers from this of Sin: for into this desert they came on the 15. day of the second moneth, but into the other, on the first day of the third moneth, chap. 19.1. Thostat. 1. quaest. 3. This was the eighth station or mansion place of the Israelites: the seventh which was by the red Sea, Numb. 33.9. is here omitted: as other stations there numbred, as Raphkah, and Alush, are not here rehearsed, but only the principall places remembred▪ Iun▪ Simler.

QUEST. II. Of the time, when the Israelites came into the desert of Sin.

The fifteenth day of the second moneth: 1. This was a moneth after their comming out of Egypt, whence they departed upon the 14. day of the first moneth: Marbach. 2. Which sheweth their great ingratitude, who in so short a time had forgotten all those miracles, and great workes, which the Lord had done for them in Egypt, and their mighty deliverance from so great a bondage: Pelarg. 3. As also by this appeareth the cause of their great want and penury: they had now spent all their provision, which they brought out of Egypt, of the which they had lived all these thirty dayes, feeding thereof but sparingly neither: for they could not bring out much foode with them, comming forth in haste, and halving no other carriage but upon their shoulders, and they pretending to goe out to sacrifice in the desert, could not without suspition of a purpose not to returne, convey much away: Simler. 4. Now further it is to be observed, that this 15. day of the second moneth, when Manna was given, was the same day which was prescribed for them to keepe the Passeover in, that were uncleane, Numb. 9. signifying thus much, that the true Manna was not given to the Jewes, which observed the first legall pasch, but to the Gentiles, which were uncleane through their filthy Idolatry, Christ the true Passeover was offered: and this was the second pasch under the Gospell, which succeeded the first pasch under the Law: Ferus ex Gloss. ordinar.

QUEST. III. Whether all the children of Israel murmured.

Vers. 2. And the whole congregation of the children of Israel murmured. 1. The word Lun here used, signifieth to persist, as also to murmur: but the latter is more proper, they persisted obstinate, and opposed themselves by their murmuring against Moses and Aaron. 2. It is like that there were some godly persons among them that murmured not, as Caleb and Ioshua: but because they were but few in respect of the rest, all are said to have murmured: Lyran. and even the Saints also are not without some infirmities: Ferus. 3. The whole congregation therefore is said to murmur, both because it was generall throughout the campe, and in regard of the manner, they assembled tumultuously against Moses and Aaron, and shewed their discontent: Simler. 4. It is added, in the desert, to shew the cause of their murmuring: the place where they were was barren and dry, and yeelded no hope of any succour or comfort: Iun. And beside, their wretched nature appeareth, that being in such misery and distresse, which should have stirred them to prayer, they fell to murmuring: Simler. 5. This famine then, which they endured, was the more grievous in these three regards: because all their provision, which they had brought out of Egypt was spent: and there was small hope of any new supply in that vast and barren desert; and beside, the multitude was so great, that a little provision would not suffice: Borrh. 6. So for this cause all the congregation is said to murmur, both to include the Levites, who also murmured with the rest: and there were beside other strange people mingled with the Israelites, who set them on worke to murmur, as we reade, Numb. 11.4. Tostat. quaest. 1.

QUEST. IV. How they are said to have murmured against Moses and Aaron here, and afterward against the Lord.

Against Aaron and Moses. Yet afterward verse 8. they are said to have murmured, not against them, but against the Lord: the reason is this: 1. Because they were the servants and Ministers of God: and he which murmureth against Gods Ministers, contemneth God himselfe: Genevens. And Moses so saith, Vt adversus illum se scirent murmurasse, qui illos miserat: That they should know, that they had murmured against him, who had sent them. August. qu^ost. 59. in Exod. 2. They are said then to murmur against Moses and Aaron, because their speech was directly against them, and to them: but in effect it was against the Lord: because not Moses and Aaron, but the Lord had brought them out of Egypt, which the Israelites repented them of, and were discontented with: Lyrans. and beside, that which they murmured for, the want of flesh and of bread, Moses could not give them, but God. Thostat. quaest. 1.

QUEST. V. Of the grievous murmuring of the Israelites.

Vers. 3. O That we had died by the hand of the Lord, &c. These murmuring and obstinate Israelites doe diversly offend: 1. In their ingratitude in extenuating the benefits, which they had received, upon every occasion: they looke onely unto their present state, and place, where they were, and thinke not of the place of bondage, whence they were brought: Pellic. 2. They preferre carnall things before spirituall, the flesh-pots of Egypt before the glorious presence of God, who now shewed himselfe visibly among them: Ferus. 3. They preferre their miserable bondage in Egypt, with their grosse flesh-pots, before their glorious liberty, being in some want, whereas men will even with the losse of their lives redeeme their liberty: Marbach. 4. Yea they untruly accuse Moses and Aaron, as though they had brought them out for their destruction: whereas they did therein nothing of their owne head, but as the Lord directed them: Ferus, Pellican. 5. Yea, they call their glorious vocation from bondage to liberty, a death and destruction. Borrh.

QUEST. VI. How the Israelites are said to have fit by the flesh-pots of Egypt.

When we sate by the flesh pots. 1. The word (sir) signifieth both a pot and a thorne: because they used to hang their pots upon hookes of iron, or wood, like unto thornes: and so the meaning is, that they sate by the pot hangers, whereon they used to hang their pots: Oleaster. 2. Some thinke, this is spoken because they had flocks of cattell in Egypt, whereof they might have fed, if they would, but they did rather use to eat of fish and fowle, which they had there in abundance: Gloss. ordinar. 3. But though the Egyptians abstained from the flesh of bullocks and sheepe, it is like the Israelites had their fill: and their fitting by the flesh pots, both noteth their security: Lyrans. and their carnall voracity and greedinesse: Sedebant affectuo^oe: They sate gaping over the pots? Tostat. They had cattell in the desert, but if they should have eaten of them, they might soone have killed them all up. 4. But it is very like that they speake somewhat lavishly in the commendation of Egypt, as Dathan and Abiram did call it a land that flowed with milke and hony, Numb. 16.13. of purpose to disgrace and diminish the true praise of the land of Canaan, which indeed was the land that flowed with milke and hony. 5. Some thinke further, that they had no such store of cattell in the wilderness, because of the want of pasture: o^o that they spared that kinde of flesh, lest they should want for sacrifice: but it is not like that this people had any such religious thought at this time: therefore it is more probable, that they longed not for such kinde of flesh, which was at hand, but for the flesh of fowles, such as they used to eat in Egypt, and they wanted now: for the nature of discontented people is, to loath such things, as they have, and to covet and desire that, which they have not: and in that the Lord giveth them quailles, it seemeth hee satisfied their owne desire, but to their further hurt, in sending that kinde of flesh which they lusted after: Sic fore Gloss. Ordinar.

QUEST. VII. In what sense the Lord saith he will raine bread from heaven.

Vers. 4. I Will cause bread to raine from heaven. 1. Some thinke, that by bread is understood generally▪ any kinde of nourishment, after the manner of the Hebrew phrase: Gloss. ordinar. Lyran. Oleaster. But Augustines reason overthroweth this interpretation: *Nam isto nomine carnes complectuntur: * ipsa enim alimenta sunt: for so also the flesh should be comprehended in this word, for they were also a kind of nourishment;* but the flesh and bread here promised, were two distinct things, as is evident, vers 8. 2. Nei|ther is yet bread here taken properly, for that which is made of corne, for of that kinde Manna was not. 3. Therefore the (name) bread, is here taken for that which should be in steed of bread, as the foundation and stay of other meates, which should serve to strengthen mans heart, as bread doth, Psalm. 104.14. and for that, they were to use it as bread, in grinding it, and baking it, and making cakes of it, Numb. 11.9. Tostat. 4. It is said to raine from heaven: because it came downe in the manner of raine or snow, * out of the aire, which is called by the name of heaven: as Psal. 8.8. they are called the fowles of heaven. 5. And hereby the Lord signifieth the great abundance of this heavenly bread, which should overflow, and fall every where, as the raine, that both poore and rich might have enough: and in that it came from heaven, hee would teach them, that although the earth was barren below, that he could command the heavens above to nourish them, that they should no more be so diffident or distrustfull. Ferus.

QUEST. VIII. Why they are commanded every day to gather this bread.

Gather that which is sufficient for every day. 1. What this sufficiency was, is afterward expressed, vers. 16. for every one, a gomer full. Tostat. 2. And as God promiseth to send it, so they are required to gather it: whereby is signified, that although God doe send bread, and other necessities for the susten|tation of man, yet hee must doe his diligence in the labour and travell of his vocation. Ferus. 3. And here the Lord promiseth only sufficiencie, not superfluity, that they should not give themselves to immol|derate appetite and gluttony. Pellican. 4. And further, the Lord promiseth bread, not for yeeres or moneths, but for every day for it selfe, that they should depend upon Gods providence, day by day. Genevens. And for this cause the Hebrewes thinke, that the seventh yeere of rest was appointed in the law, wherein they should neither sow nor reape; that as well the rich as poore should that yeere depend upon Gods providence. And agreeable unto this rule, is that petition in the Lords prayer: Give us this day our daily bread: where our Saviour teacheth us daily to depend upon God for our food. Oleaster.

QUEST. IX. How the Lord is said by this to have proved his people, and to what end.

Vers. 4. THat I may prove them. 1. This probation of them, was not to that end, that the Lord should have experience of them, for their froward nature was well enough knowne to him: but as Augustine saith, ut ipsis hominibus ostenderet, to make them knowne to themselves and others: Tostat. 2. Some referre this probation or triall, to that particular law and precept of gathering but a certaine por|tion of Manna every day: to see whether they would beleve Gods promise, and depend upon him: Sic Vatab. Borrha. Galas. Tostat. Rupert. 3. Some understand it as well of that precept, as of the other, not to gather any upon the Sabbath: as the Lord tried Adams obedience in that one prohibition not to eat of the forbidden fruit: Simler. 4. Some will have it taken more largely of all the precepts and com|mandements touching Manna: which were eight in all: 1. To gather Manna in the morning. 2. To gather that which was sufficient. 3. Not to exceede in eating the measure of a gomer. 4. Not to leave any till the morrow. 5. Upon the 6. day to gather double so much. 6. To reserve one gomer for the Sabbath. 7. To eat that measure so reserved upon the Sabbath. 8. To keepe a gomer of Manna for a monument to posterity: Lyranus. 5. But it is better to take it in a more generall sense: The Lord as hee had tried them before with crosses and adversity, so now hee will prove them by his benefits, to see whether they will afterward walke in his feare, and in obedience before him: Sic Ferus, Calvin.

Osiand. Pelarg. And thus by this particular benefit God would prepare them to the obedience of his law which should be given afterward: Oleaster.

QUEST. X. Why the flesh was given in the evening, the bread in the morning.

Vers. 8. AT even shall the Lord give you flesh to eat, &c. 1. The reason why both the flesh and bread were not given together, as the Ravens brought unto Elias, bread and flesh at once, both morning and evening, 1. King. 17. some take to be mysticall: Augustine applieth it to Christ, who was sa|crificed in the evening, and rose againe in the morning, being the true bread which is given us from hea|ven: Rupertus by the flesh in the evening, signifieth the carnall rites of the law, by the bread in the mor|ning, the faith of the Gospell. Ferus by the flesh given in the evening, understandeth the incarnation of the Sonne of God, in the evening, that is, toward the end of the world, who came to redeeme us, and by the bread in the morning, when they should see the glory of God, the glory of immortality in the next life. 2. But leaving these mysticall applications, which may be as many and divers, as their heads are tha• devise them: some other thinke, that the reason was this: because these times were best agreeable unto the things: the evening was fittest for the fall of the quails, which being wearied by the •ight of the day, doe light upon the ground at night: and the morning was the fittest time for the Manna, which fell with the dew, and if it were not gathered betime, it melted with the heat of the Sunne• Lyranus. These reasons are misliked by Tostatus: the first, because the quails came not by any naturall instinct, but sent of God by an extraordinary wind: and the Manna, which was hardned by the fire, and melted by the heat of the Sunne, had not that property by any naturall quality, for then it should have melted by any heat whatsoever, as we see butter and oyle doth, and other liquid things: therefore it was a supernaturall quality, which was given to Manna, to melt with one kind of heat, and not with another. But Tostatus hath not thus answered Lyranus reason concerning the falling of Manna in the morning, for howsoever that were a supernaturall quality in the Manna, yet i• appeareth (de facto) that it did melt by the heat of the Sunne: then was the morning the fittest season to gather it in, before the Sunne waxed hot: The morning then serving best for Manna, what other time could bee •itter for the rayning of flesh than the evening? for together they could not come: if the flesh had fallen with the Manna, it could not have beene gathered. 3. But the best solution is, which is touched by Lyranus also, and subscribed unto by To|status,* that the Lord in sending these things, flesh and bread, which the people murmured for, observeth the same order, which they did in their murmuring: they first complained for the want of their flesh po•• and then for the scarcity of bread, vers. 3.

QUEST. XI. Whether the rocke were first striken to bring out water, or the flesh and bread first sent.

RVpertus here also moveth another doubt out of the 78. Psalme, vers. 20. Behold hee smote the rocke that the water gushed out, &c. can he give bread also, and prepare flesh for his people? For here the Pro|phet seemeth to invert the order of these miracles, that first the rocke was smitten, whereout the water gushed, and that afterward the flesh and bread was given, whereas the striking of the rocke followeth in the next chapter, Exod. 17. 1. To this question he answereth by a distinction, that Moses report of these miracles is historicall, setting downe the order of time, wherein they were done: but the other in the Psalme is propheticall, applied unto Christ: the flowing of the waters out of the rocke, signifieth the passion of Christ, and the baptising into his death; the Manna shadowed forth the Eucharist, in the eating of his body: now, first we must be baptised in the name of Christ, before we can be partakers of his body and blood in the Eucharist.* 2. But we need not for the dissolving of this question to runne unto any such mysticall sense: for the people murmured twice for flesh, once in the desert of Sin, as is here expressed, another time in Kibroth hattavah, Num. 11. the first of these murmurings went before the smiting of the rocke in R•phidim, the other followed after, and of the latter speaketh the Prophet here, when the Lord sent a fire among the people for their murmuring, which was not done now, but it happened afterward in the other murmuring, as the story is extant, Numb. 11.1. And of the former sending of Manna and flesh, speaketh the Prophet afterward in the same Psalme, vers. 24. Hee had rained ◇ Manna, &c.

QUEST. XII. Why Moses biddeth Aaron to speake to the people, and doth it not himselfe.

Vers. 9. AND Moses said unto Aaron, &c. 1. Some thinke that Moses vouchsafeth not to speake unto this unworthy and unthankfull people, and therefore appointeth Aaron to speake. Pellican. But this can be no reason, because afterward Moses speaketh unto the people himselfe, vers. 15. 2. Some thinke, that it was Aarons office to speake unto the people, for God had made him Moses mouth, chap. 4.16. and as Moses Prophet, chap. 7.1. But although this order was observed in Egypt, that the Lord spake to Moses, Moses to Aaron, & Aaron to Pharaoh, and to the Egyptians: yet after they were come out of Egypt, Moses used himselfe to speake unto the people, as appeareth, chap. 12.13. and 14. where it is said, vers. 31. They beleevied the Lord, and his servant Moses. 3. Therefore, this rather was the cause, why Mo/ses thus spake unto Aaron, because when these words were to be uttered, Moses was to be with the Lord, when his glory appeared in the cloud: this then was the order, wherein these things were done, hither|to rehearsed in this Chapter: First, after the people had murmured, then the Lord spake to Moses, vers. 4. which might be betimes in the morning: after that, Moses and Aaron spake to the people, vers. 6. then Moses gave that charge to Aaron, of speaking further to the people, vers. 8. This being done, Moses went unto the place, where the Lord appeared in the cloud. *Tostat. 4. Now Aaron spake unto all the Congregation, either in calling the Elders and Rulers together, who should speake to the people: or else, in causing himselfe proclamation to be made, and notice to be given to the people, which is most like, for this might be sooner done, and as all the people had murmured, so it was fit, they should all present them|selves before the Lord. Tostat. ibid.

QUEST. XIII. How the people are bid to draw neere before the Lord.

Vers. 9. DRaw neere before the Lord. 1. The Lord in respect of his divine essence is every where: and not in one place more than in another: but by reason of some new effect, and extraordinary manifestation of his presence, he is said to be rather in one place, than in another: As here hee is said to bee in the cloud, because there hee shewed his glory. Tostat. 2. The people are called before the Lord, which Pellican understandeth of the assembly and congregation, where they should heare the Lords Pro|phets speake unto them: but it is rather understood of Gods presence in the cloud, that all the people should come forth of their tents, and turne themselves toward the wilderness, and so behold the glory of God, which appeared unto them: as followeth in the tenth verse. Tostat. Iun. For as yet there was nei|ther Arke nor Tabernacle, where they should appeare before the Lord. Simlerus.

QUEST. XIV. What cloud it was wherein the Lord appeared.

Vers. 10. The glory of the Lord appeared in the cloud. 1. Some thinke, that this was not that cloud, whereby the Lord directed the journeyes of his people, but another: because that cloud stood over the hoast, but this was toward the wilderness: but this is no good argument: for that cloud which did lead them, went before them, sometime neerer, sometime further off. 2. Others thinke that this was the cloud, which rested upon Moses Tabernacle, before the great Tabernacle was made, which is mentioned, chap. 33.7. but this is uncertaine. Ex Tostat. 3. Therefore, without further question,* it was none other cloud, than that, which was their guid, which in the day was a cloudy pillar, in the night a pillar of fire: which was an evident testimony of Gods presence: Iun. Oleaster. Yet it is to be thought, Gloriam Dei in solit•modo patefactam, &c. That the glory of God was manifested, otherwise than it ◇ ◇ , that i•, in a more fearefull manner, the more to terrifie the people: Calvin. Simler.

QUEST. XV. When the Lord thus spake to Moses.

Vers. 11. For the Lord had spoken to Moses, &c. 1. Some thinke, that Moses, after he had given Aaron charge to speake to the people, and was gone to appeare before the Lord, that then the Lord spake thus to Moses, which words, he returning againe, delivered to the people. *Tostat. But here is no mention, that Moses spake those words in this place to the people: only it is said, The Lord spake, or had spoken. 2. Therefore it is the better opinion, that the Lord had thus spoken unto Moses, before he spake thus unto the people, vers. 6, 7. but here it is expressly mentioned, to shew Moses faithfulness, that hee delivered nothing to the people, but what he had received from God: for here the very same words almost are rehearsed, which Moses before had uttered to the people: it is therefore better expressed in the pr•terpluperfect tense, dixerat, the Lord had said. Sit Simler. Vatab. Gen•vens.

QUEST. XVI. What manner of fowles were sent, whether they were Quails.

Vers. 13. At even the Quails came, &c. 1. The Septuagint translate the Hebrew word (sh•la•) ◇ in non-Latin alphabet ◇ , ortygometr•, which is not the Quaile, but a bird of a greater sort, much bigger, but not much unlike a Quaile, as Aristotle describeth: which is the King and Captaine of the Quails, and goeth before them: but the Rabbinesse, as David Kimhi, Salomon, doe take it for the usuall bird called a Quaile. 2. But this doubt will be made: because both Plini•, and Solinus doe write, that the Quaile is but unwholesome flesh, because it feedeth of poisonfull herbes: and *Gale•saith, that the Quaile eateth of Helleborus: and beside they say, that it hath the falling sicknesse, and the claw thereof is used to hang about their neckes, that are troubled with that disease. But hereunto it may be answered, that many fowles which feed of grosse, and unwholesome meat, yet doe yeeld wholesome and nourishing flesh for mans food: and wee see by experience, that the Quaile is held to be dainty meat, and found to bee nourishing, and not much unlike the Partridge: and therefore Aristotle treateth of them both in one and the same Chapter. Simler. And further, if it were admitted, that the Quaile is of it selfe no wholesome meat, who doubteth, but that the Creator, which sent them, could make them wholesome and salvoury to his people? Pelarg. 3. Therefore the Lord rather in sending Quails, not beefes or sheepe, or such other grosser flesh, doth therein shew his power, that was able to provide for them of the best; hee testifieth also his love, in sending them the best: and he would thereby take occasion of murmuring away, which they would have fallen into, if God had fed them with the worst, and grossest flesh. Ferus.

QUEST. XVII. Whether the comming of the Quails were a naturall worke.

SEcondly, it is questioned, whether the comming of these Quails were an ordinary and naturall thing. 1. Seeing that those Arabian coasts doe abound with such kind of fowles: and Plinie writeth,* that they use to passe over the seas in such numbers, that resting upon the maste• of ships, they put them in danger of drowning, and in Italy in the sea coasts, about Pisa•rus, they flock in such numbers, that a great sort of them are taken by the inhabitants: Beside, they use in the spring, to fly into the Northerne countries, and in the Autumne, to returne againe into the Southerly parts, and it was now about the spring time, when they were sent upon the camp of the Israelites. 2. But notwithstanding these allegations, this appeareth to have beene a miraculous worke, above the ordinary course: 1. Because God promised hee would send them flesh: but if the Quailes would have come otherwise, by ordinary flight, such promise needed not to have beene made. 2. Though Quailes use to take their flight in great troupes, yet for so many to come together, to suffice 600. thousand people and more, was beyond the compasse and reach of ordinary experience. 3. The place also maketh it seeme the more strange: for the Quailes living upon the fruits of the earth, would not of themselves have taken their flight, into barren and desert grounds, such as these were: but rather unto the fertill and fruitfull countries. Simler. Pelargus.

QUEST. XVIII. Whether this story of the sending of the Quailes, and that Num. 11. be all one.

A Third question remaineth, whether this sending of Quailes, be the same with that, which is mentioned, Num. 11. Some thinke that it is the same story, though remembred in two sundry places: of this opinion seeme to be Ferus, Berrh. Genevens. But that these are two divers stories, and that the Quailes were two sundry times sent, it may appeare by these reasons: 1. Because this sending of Quailes was in a divers place from the other: this was done in the desert of Sin: the other in Kibroth hattavah, after they were departed three dayes journey from the wilderness of Sinai, Numb. 10.33. and 33.16. Pelarg. 2. These Quailes came in the second moneth, on the 15. day: but the other, after they had received the Law in mount Sinai. Simler. 3. These Quailes were given, but to satisfie them for one time, there they are satisfied with them a moneth together, Calvin. 4. These Quailes onely covered the Campe, because they were but to suffice them for once: those fell a dayes journey without the hoast on each side, because they were to feed on them a moneth together. Tostat. qust. 5. Here no punishment followed, but there the wrath of God was kindled against them, and they were smitten with a very great plague, while the flesh was betweene their teeth. Osiander.

But here two principall doubts will be moved: First, Why the people were punished then for lusting after flesh, and not now? The answer is, because God in his fatherly compassion, and longanimity, did beare with them now: but being often provoked with the same sin, he will no longer forbear. Osiander. Beside their murmuring now, being in extreame want, destitute of all manner of food, was more excusable than the other, proceeding of wantonnesse, when they were fed with Manna. Simler.

Secondly, it will be objected, that Moses, Numb. 11.21. doubteth, how the people being 600. thousand, should have all flesh given them: which Moses would have made no doubt of, if the like miracle had beene done before. To this it may be answered: 1. That so in Rephidim, when the people murmured for water, Moses smote the rocke, and there came out water: yet hee doubted, when hee was to strike the rocke againe at another time, Numb. 20. 2. Beside, at the first time the Quailes came but one evening, and served but for one refreshing, but at the other time the Lord promised, that they should have flesh for a moneth together: therefore Moses might not simply doubt of the sending of Quailes, but that they should be fed with them so long together. Simler.

So then notwithstanding these objections, it is evident by the reasons before alleaged, that the Quailes were twice sent unto the Israelites: and Iosephus also accordingly reporteth this story in two severall places, as twice done, Lib. 3. Antiquit. cap. 1. and againe, cap. 12. This also is warranted by the Psalm. 78. vers. 20. where mention is made of the streaming of the water out of the rocke, before they had flesh gi|ven them: whereas the first giving of flesh, came before that miracle of bringing water out of the rocke Exod. 17.

QUEST. XIX. Whether the Man were a kind of dew.

Vers. 13. ANd in the morning the dew lay round about the hoast, and when the dew that was fallen was ascended, &c. 1. Some by this dew understand the Manna it selfe, which was as a kinde of congealed dew, and lay round about the hoast. Lyran. But it is evident, that beside the Manna, there was a dew also, together with the which the Man did fall, Num. 11.9. 2. Some other are of opinion, that first there fell as an hoare frost upon the earth, and then the Man fell upon that: and so they doe reade that place, Numb. 11.9. that the Man fell upon the dew: Tostat. quæst. 6. But there the preposition ghal is better interpreted, with, than upon: as the Latine Interpreter giveth the sense: Pariter descend•b•t & Man: The Man descended together with it: and beside, it is said in the verse following, that the dew first ascended, that is, vanished, and then the Man appeared: but this could not bee, if the Man were upon the dew. Tostatus taketh the ascending of the dew, for the being or lying of it, above and upon the earth. But that cannot be: for in the verse before it is said, The dew lay round about the hoast, then it fol|loweth, When the fall or lying of the dew was ascended. Here then two things are evidently expressed con|cerning this dew: the comming and falling of it, and the ascending of it, and going away. 3. A third opinion there is of the Rabbines, that the Man had both an hoare frost, and congealed dew under it, and a dew upon it, and so was, as it were betweene two covers: R. Salomon. But, if there were as an hoare frost beside the Man, how should it have beene discerned from it? for the Man it selfe is said to have beene ◇◇ a small hoare frost upon the earth. 4. This then remaineth as the truest opinion, that the Man fell together with the dew, as it were wrapped and folded up in it: and when the dew was gone and vanished away, the Man remained:  Simler. Oleaster. Iun. Vatab.* But against this Tostatus objecteth: 1. That the Man it selfe melted also with the heat of the Sunne, so that when the dew wasted, the Man should have gone away with it. 2. The dew hath an evill relish and taste, and so if it had fallen together with Man, which had a sweet and pleasant taste, it would have marred and corrupted the pleasantnesse and sweetnesse thereof. Contra. 1. The dew being of a thinner substance, was quickly licked up, but the Manna melted not, before the heat of the Sunne came: in the space then betweene the drying up of the dew, and the heat of the Sunne, was the time to gather the Man. 2. Wee see by experience, that when the dew is dried up, the hearbs doe nothing relish or savour of it: beside, there are sweet and pleasant dewes, such as this was, which would nothing have allayed the pleasant taste of the Man.

Page 201

QUEST. XX. Whether the Man were a naturall meteore.

FURther it is to be enquired, whether this Man were a naturall meteore, and ordinary thing.  1. Iosephus* affirmeth, that in his time in all that region, it used to raine Manna, as it did then in Moses time: the Arabians also have such a like thing, as that was, which is called Manna. Contra. The Arabian Manna is nothing like unto this Man: 1. This fell every day, saving the Sabbath, for 40. yeeres together, the other only in the spring time: Pelarg. 2. The Arabian Manna neither hath such a pleasant taste, neither doth it melt with the heat of the Sunne, nor yet is so hard, to bee beaten in a morter: and it will continue a whole yeere: it is used also rather as a medicine, than nourishment: beside, the Hebrewes write, that the Arabian Manna falleth not at all about the mount, and circuit of Sinai. Simlerus, Oleaster. 2. Then this Man was not a naturall meteore, or an ordinary and usuall thing, as may appeare by these reasons: 1. The Man was never seene before till that time. Tostat. And it came not but according to the word and promise of God. Calvin. 2. The naturall Manna falleth but in the spring: this came winter and summer, and ceased not; as no naturall meteors doe: Simler. 3. This came in such abundance, that it sufficed 600. thousand daily. 4. It fell every day, the Sabbath excepted. 5. It fell only in that place where the Israelites encamped, the other nations bordering upon it, as the Amalekites, Edomites, and others knew it not. 6. This Man, if it were kept till the next morning upon the weeke-dayes, putrified, yet was preserved till the Sabbath, and indured many yeeres in Aarons pot of Manna. Simler. 7. It had contrary qualities: it melted at the Sunne, and was hardned at the fire: 8. It fell twice so much upon the sixth day, to serve also for the Sabbath. 9. As soone as they were gone over Jordan, and entred into the Land of promise, the Manna ceased. Simler. Calvin.

QUEST. XXI. Whether the Manna lay about the campe only, and not within it.

Vers. 13. IT lay round about the hoast. 1. The Manna fell not as the Quailes did, which covered the campe, and were sent amidst their rents, that they might take them with ease: but the Manna fell without the campe round about, whereof Tostatus yeeldeth these two reasons: * 1. Because the place where they pitched their tents, was trampled upon with their feete, and so full of dust, and therefore not cleane, or fit for the Manna to fall in. 2. After that the Sunne rose, the Manna melted, which remained ungathered, and then the ground would have beene moyst and slabby, and so discommodious for their wa••ing, and footing: therefore hee thinketh, that the Man fell rather without the campe, upon the greene grasse, and sword ground, which was not walked, nor trampled upon. * 2. Rupertus further maketh this application of the divers site and place of the Quailes and the Manna: the one lying within the campe, signified the carnall rites and ceremonies of the Law, peculiar to the Jewes, the other lying with|out, betokened the Gospell of Christ, which should be preached to all nations: and that as the Israelites went out of the campe to gather Manna, so we must leave the Jewish rites and ceremonies, if we will bee graft into the faith of the Gospell. 3. But this observation of the divers falling and lying of the Quailes and Manna is too curious: neither will the text beare it. For, Numb. 11.9. it is said that the Man with the dew fell ghal hamachaneh, upon the hoast or campe: in the which very word, the Quailes are said also, vers. 13. to have fallen upon the hoast, or campe: so that indifferently the Manna fell upon and about the hoast, as the Quailes did: for if the Manna had fallen all without the campe, which lay in a great compasse and circuit of ground, some miles in length and breadth, the people, if it had not rained Manna at their doores, and neere hand, could not so readily have gathered it, before the heat of the Sunne. And it is not to be imagined, but that in the midst of the tents, there was some convenient ground for the Manna to light upon: and that it was so ordered and disposed in the fall, as it was fittest for their gathering: nei|ther need the other inconveniences to be feared, of moistening the ground: for beside, that it may bee supposed, that the Manna came in such measure every day, as sufficed for their eating, so that much remai|ned not superfluous after their gathering: it falling like unto a dew, or thin frost being melted, could not much moisten the ground.

QUEST. XXII. Whence it was called Manna.

Vers. 15. IT is Man. 1. The words in the Hebrew are Man hu, which have a double interpretation: Some doe reade, quid hoc, what is this, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 : Septuagint, whom Iosephus followeth, and the Latine. So also, Simler. Pellican. Tostat. Rupertus. And then they take man hu, for ma• hu: for mah signifieth what, and then they will have the letter (nun) added paralogically for better sound: Ma• bach: some thinke that Man in the Chaldee tongue, signifieth what: Simler. And this interpretation best agreeth (they say) both to the words following, They wist not what it was: and to Moses answer; This is the bread, which the Lord had given: but if they had called it Man, that is, a gift, or meat prepared, they had knowne what it was, and Moses needed not to have told them. Tostat. Lyrar. Contra. 1. If such a word in that sense bee found in the Chaldee, yet there is no reason to thinke, that Moses would use a Chalde word here. 2. The people in generall, might know it to be sent of God, but could give no speciall or particular name to it. Iun. Galas. And so as Calvin saith, Colligimu• mediam fuisse eorum cognitionem, &c. Wee gather that they had a meane kinde of knowledge mixed with ignorance: and therefore they are more fully instructed of Moses, concerning the use and end thereof.

2. The Hebrew word there being man, not mah, it is more likely to be derived of the root manah, which signifieth to number, or prepare: some will have it called man, because it fell in such great number. Olea/ster. But it signifieth here rather a gift, or meat prepared, that is, without any labour. Calvin. Galas. Iun. Vatab. And so the Author of the wisdom of Salomontaketh it: who calleth it 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, •ibum para/tum, meat prepared: chap. 17.20. Howsoever the other reading may seeme to have a good coherence with the words following, yet because it answereth not to the originall word, which is not maah, what, but 〈◇〉, the latter is to be preferred.

QUEST. XXIII. Why the Manna is said to be the bread of Angels.

THis Man is called. Psal. 78.25. The bread of Angels. 1. Some Rabbines hold, that it is so called, because the Angels indeed are refreshed with the divine light: Quod lum•n incorporatum est, & f•ctum Manna: Which divine light was incorporate, and became Manna: So R. Aquiba, and R. Mos••Gerun/dens. To whom seemeth to subscribe Paulus Burgens. in his additions upon this Chapter: But R. Ismael dissenteth from them, that the Angels doe eat no materiall or corporall food, being themselves spirits, and immateriall: and that divine light being a spirituall thing, how could Manna, being a materiall substance be made of it? 2. But this is a more probable sense, that not the materiall, but the mysticall Manna, is the bread of Angels, because it was a type and figure of Christ, whom the Angels desired to behold. Borrh• Marbach. Yet this is not the proper and literall meaning. 3. Some thinke it is so named of the effect, because it gave strength unto them not to wax old, nor feeble, as the Angels are preserved in their state with|out decay: such an operation this Man wrought in Caleb, who was of as good strength at 80. as hee was at 40. yeeres before, Iosh. 14. Ferus. But this is spoken without ground; true it is that Caleb was lively, and of good strength in his old age, but this he had not by the eating of Manna, but by the speciall gift of God: And this being but one speciall example, maketh not a generall rule: whence also can this vertue of Manna be gathered, seeing all the 600. thousand, which came out of Egypt (only Caleb and Ioshua ex|cepted) all died in the wilderness, and yet they did eat of Manna? 4. Some thinke therefore, that it is called the bread of Angels, because of the excellencie of it: as *S. Paul*saith, The tongues of Angels. Borrh. But the right meaning is, that it is so called, because the Angels were Gods Ministers, in the forming and preparing of Manna: it was given by the ministry of Angels. Tostatus quaest.6. Lyranus, Iunius, Mar/bachius.

QUEST. XXIV. Of the measure gomer how much it contained.

Vers. 16. Gather every man a gomer, &c. 1. Concerning the measure of the gomer, it is said in the last verse of this Chapter, to be the tenth part of an Ephah, which according to the estimate of R. Salomon, containeth three of the measures called Seah: and every Seah held six of the measures callled (cabi) and every •ab held so much as 24. egges: so that the gomer being the tenth part of an Epha. contained 42. egges, which maketh just three pints of ale measure. Oleat. Lyran. In another account, the gomer contained two of the measures called choenix, and an halfe. Iun. And the choenix was a pint and halfe and somewhat more; so that by this estimation the gomer should be somewhat above three pints: some esteeme the gomer at a pottle. Genevens. 2. Simlerus thinketh that the gomer was not so large a mea|sure, nor yet the Epha, as it is taken for: he thinketh that there was no great difference betweene the choenix, which was an Attike measure, and the gomer: so also Budaeus. For the chaenix was the ordinary allowance for one day, as appeareth by that proverb of Pythagoras, Choenici no insideas, that one should not sit over his choenix, that is, be too carefull for his daily diet: it is not like therefore, saith he, though the Lord shewed himselfe liberall toward his people, that he would double and treble their diet: Againe, it is written in the story of Ruth, that she gathered every day an Epha of barley, which had beene too much for her to beare according to this rate, if the Epha were equall to the medimnus Atticus, the Attike bushell: and whereas Sarah is said to have made ready three Seahs of meale, for the three Angels, which came as three ghests to Abraham, which make an Epha, to what end should she have made ready so much? But these reasons may bee answered. 1. The Lord in allowing unto this people double the ordinary stint, therein shewed his liberality toward them. Iun. 2. The Epha, though it should containe (as some take it) almost 8. gallons, equall to our bushell, was not too great a burden for a woman to beare: neither is it strange, that Sarah of her bounty, especially in so great a family, made ready such a quantity of meale for so few ghests. 3. But I neither thinke, that a gomer containeth so little, as Budaus and Simlerus make it, as to be equall to the measure choenix, which was the daily allowance for servants: for in the Epha, which was the halfe part of the medimus Atticus, the Attike bushell, Iun. Analys. there were 24. of that measure choenix: so that a gomer being the tenth part, must containe two choenix, and almost an halfe: neither was the gomer so large, as to containe a pottle. Genevens. Which had beene too great a proportion for one dayes allowance: or to hold▪ 2. of the measure called Sextarius, as Rupertus: which as some thinke, * contained six egges. Marbach. Some foure egges. Oleaster. I then subscribe to the former computation of R. Selam^h, as most probable: that the gomer was of the content of 42. egges: which maketh just three pints of Ale measure: so the Epha shall by this reckoning hold not all out foure gallons, about halfe of our bushell. For the Epha is derived of Apha, which signifieth to seethe or bake: The Epha then signifieth, a seething, or baking, so much as might serve for the daily ordinary of a reasonable household. Iun. Analys. 4. Tostatus here maketh question, whence the Israelites had so many gomers, every man to measure his gatherings by; and resolveth, that the measures which they had, they brought out of Egypt with them: and that it was not necessary, that every family should have their severall measures, but that some common measures served for all. Quaest. 9. But these questions are both curious and unnecessary, and therefore I will spend no time about them.

QUEST. XXV. How one measure of Manna sufficed for every ones eating.

Every man according to his eating. 1. How could one gomer be sufficient for every ones eating? The young and feeble could not eat so much as the elder persons, and strong: and some men would eat more than others: as Solinus writeth of Milo, that he did eat up an oxe in a day; wherefore, for the removing of this doubt, it must be confessed in the opinion of some, that as Manna was an extraordinary food, so it had an extraordinary vertue given unto it, that one gomer might content the greatest feeder, and that he which did eat the least, might well overcome that measure. Lyrans. Pelarg. As for feeble person, it is to bee supposed, that there were not any among them, as is witnessed in the Psalme 105.37. There was none feeble among their tribes: and yet if there had beene, the Manna, which was ministred by the Angels, was such an excellent food, as that as it strengthened the sound, so it would also have comforted the weake and feeble. Tostat. 2. The last named Author hath another solution, that the miracle was not In saturatione, sed in mensuratione: Not in the sufficing and satisfying them which did eat, but in the measuring: For he imagineth, that he that was sufficed with lesse than a gomer, yet when he came to measure, the Manna was rarified, and so filled up the gomer. But he that needed more, and gathered according to his eating, more than a gomer; when hee came to the measure, by the secret working of God, the Manna was thickned, condensate, and pressed together; so that he had but a gomer: Tostat. qu. 10. But according to his owne rule, Miracula non ponenda sunt sine necessitate: Miracles must not be brought in without necessity: There being then no necessity of this miracle, nor yet the Scripture warranting the same, we have no ground or foundation of any such conceit: neither doth the Author insist upon it, relying rather upon the first. 3. But seeing therein also we must presuppose a miracle, a third way may bee found without miracle, to dissolve this knot: for where it is said: Gather of ^ot every man according to his eating, a gomer for a head or poll: the meaning may be this, not that all should eat alike, that the child should eat the same mea|sure, which the strong did, but the next words expound it, According to the number of your persons: that is, so many gomers they should take for every house, as there were persons in it. So Simler. 1. This exposition is warranted by the like, Exod. 12.4. where they are bid to take a lambe according to the number of their persons, that is, according to their eating. 2. If the meaning of these words were, that every man should gather according to his owne eating, and not according to the eating of the family, then they which could not gather, should be excluded from eating. 3. If it were understood of the quantity rather, of that which he gathered, not of the number of those for whom they gathered, it would imply a contra|diction: for every mans eating, was not according to the same stint, and measure of a gomer: some were contented with lesse, and some others it would not suffice. 4. A great inconvenience would follow, that if every one were allowed his gomer, the infant of three or foure yeere old, should bee allowed to eat as much as the strongest man. Therefore upon these reasons, I thinke, that a proportion is rather limited for the families, for every head in the house a gomer; which was afterward distributed in the house, according to every ones eating, then a rule prescribed how much every one should eat. And of this opinion is Cajetan: Sciebat Deus, quod supputando quamlibet familiam simul ^sufficiebat summa tot homer, quot erant capi|ta, &c. God did know, that counting every family together, so many homers sufficed, as there were heads, be that did eat lesse, being considered with him, that did eat more.

QUEST. XXVI. Why a gomer was appointed for every head.

NOW the reasons, wherefore a stint was set them for their gathering were these. 1. By this meanes God provided for the weake and feeble, that the lusty and strong should not gather all from them, seeing that how much soever they gathered, they should have but for every one his gomer: Ios^oph. 2. Beside in that the Lord appointeth the same measure, as well to the rich, as the poore, he would teach them, that they likewise should be helpfull one to another, and communicate one to anothers necessity. Galasius. 3. In that the Lord onely alloweth them competent and sufficient food, hee teacheth them to take heed of superfluity and excesse: Non vult ut colligant ad superfluitatem, vel avaritiam, sed ad necessitatem: He would not have them gather to superfluity, or covetousnesse, but for necessity. Ferus. As Christ teacheth us, only to pray for our daily and necessary food, in the Lords prayer. Borrh.

QUEST. XXVII. Whether the people transgressed in gathering, some more, some lesse.

Vers. 17. THEY gathered some more, some lesse. 1. Some thinke, that the Israelites offended herein, and transgressed the commandement of Moses, as they did afterward, both in reserving the Man|na and in going out to gather it upon the Sabbath day. Rupertus, Ferus. But this appeareth not in the text: because they came not to the ghomer to measure, till they had gathered,* and therefore in the gathe|ring there was no apparent transgression. 2. It is then only hereby insinuated, that they did their ende|vour to gather it, as Moses bad them, one helping another. Galas. And they which had more servants, whose helpe they used in gathering, had more, and they which had fewer, gathered lesse. Piscator.

3. Yet the obedience of the people is not much commended, seeing presently after, their disobedience is noted. Calvin. It might be, that at the first gathering, some of them were greedy, and gathered with an unsatiable mind.

QUEST. XXVIII. How it came to passe that none had over, that gathered more, nor none had any lacke, that gathered lesse.

Vers. 18. When they did measure it with a gomer, he that had gathered much, had nothing over, and he that had gathered little, had no lacke. How this could be, seeing it is said before, that some gathered more, and some lesse, it is diversely resolved: 1. Iosephus thinketh, that what any man gathered above a gomer, putrified and corrupted, and so he had not the more. Contra. This solution cannot be received, for these two reasons. First, because by this it yet is not evident, how he that gathered little had no lack, though he that gathered much had not the more: Again, this putrifying of the Manna, was of that which was reserved of every mans gomer, as it followeth, vers. 20. not of any such overplus above a gomer. 2. Some other thinke, that God so guided and directed their hand in gathering, that every family when they came home, found no more by the measure, but for every person a gomer. Oleaster. But the text is against this conceit: which saith, that some gathered more, some lesse: but if God had directed their hand, they should not have exceeded their gomer in gathering: neither is it like that every household had a gomer to measure by at home: for they had no occasion to use such measures till now. 3. Some doe here affirme a miracle to have beene wrought: that, what any gathered above a gomer, when it came to the measure, was annihilated by the power of God, or secretly subtracted by the ministry of the Angels: and what lacked of that measure, in any ones gathering, was by the like secret meanes supplied. Tostat. quaest. 10. But we are not to imagine miracles without necessity: Divers miracles indeed must be acknowledged concerning Manna: 1. That every day there fell so much, as sufficed 600. thousand and more. 2. That upon the sixth day, there fell twice so much, as upon any other day. 3. That the Manna reserved upon any other day, putrified, saving what was kept for the Sabbath, upon the sixth day. 4. That no Manna fell upon the Sabbath: all these were miraculous workes. Marbach. But in this equall distribution, it is not necessary to presuppose a miracle. 4. Piscator hath this solution, that although in an arithmetical proportion, some gathered more, some lesse: as hee that went into the field with ten servants gathered more, than he which went with five: yet in a geometrical proportion, there was no difference: for he which gathered for five, had as much, his number considered, as they which gathered for ten: but the text seemeth to speake, not of the gathering by families, but of every ones single gathering: that hee which gathered much, had nothing over, that is, more than his fellow, that gathered lesse. 5. The reason of this equality then, was, they did not carry every one his gathering presently home, but they put all their gatherings together: Tandem ex communi acervo sumebant praescriptam portionem: Then they tooke their stinted portion out of the common heape. Calvin. Galas. Or the fathers of the families, Adhibita mensura distribuebant ab omnibus in commune comportatum: Did by applying the measure, distribute that which was brought together in common. Iun. 6. S. Paul by this example of the Israelites, one helping another in gathering, and conferring their labours in common, exhorteth to liberality, that Christians in like manner should support the necessities one of another, 2. Cor. 8.14. Beside this excellent morall use, Rupertus maketh this fit mysticall application: that as in the gathering of this Manna, howsoever they had gathered, none had over, nor yet did any lacke: so in the Eucharist, wherein we receive the true spirituall Manna, it goeth not by ones eating much or little of the bread and wine, which are proposed in the Sacrament: Non pro quantitate portiunculae vivitici panis, quam ore sumit & gratiam accipit: A man receiveth not grace, according to the quantity of the portion of the lively bread, which he taketh with his mouth: but if he receive but a little,* it doth as much profit him, as if he had received all: As Adam was as deepe in transgression, in tasting of one apple, as if he had eaten of all the trees in the garden. So Rupertus.

QUEST. XXIX. How the Manna grew to be corrupt with wormes.

Vers. 20. SOme reserved of it till the morning, and it was full of wormes and stunke. 1. They abused Manna, reserving it of a covetous and distrustfull minde, contrary to Gods commandement by Moses, and therefore it became unprofitable unto them: for no creature is so pure, but being abused turneth to our destruction. Genevens. 2. Here an < in non-Latin alphabet > is to be admitted: the latter is expressed first: for it stanke and putrified, before it crawled with wormes. Borrh. 3. The Manna putrified not of it owne nature, as is evident, both that it kept without any putrification untill the Sabbath, and it was preserved in a pot for many generations. Lyran. As also the Manna being ministred by the Angels, and of an excellent workmanship, was of such a perfect composition, that it had no such malignant and noxious quality. This corruption then was sent upon Manna, and caused by the Lord, as a punishment of their disobedience. Tostat. quaest. 11. 4. This putrifying of Manna hath this morall application: that after the same manner, covetous men, which greedily gather riches, and hoard them up unprofitably, doe now feelee the worme of conscience: and after this life, *Ver•em illum sentient, qui nunquam morietur; shall feelee that worme which shall never dye, unlesse they repent. Ferus. 5. But Rupertus application is unfit, who by the wormes in the Manna understands Christ, that as the wormes bred there without any generation: so Christ was borne of the Virgin, without any carnall copulation: Christ is in Scripture compared and resembled to this Man|na: but the corruption of this Manna, no way agreeth with his perfection and incorruption.

QUEST. XXX. How the sunne is said to wax hot, and of the melting of Manna.

Vers. 21. WHen the heat of the sunne came, or when the sunne waxed hot, it melted. 1. Some take by the sunne here, to be understood the ayre next unto the ground, which waxeth hot, and not the sunne. Borrh. But the figure rather is in this: the sunne is said, incalesce•e, to wax hot, for calefacere to make hot. Iun. For the sunne increaseth not in heat. 2. Aristotle thinketh that the sunne is not hot of it selfe, and the reason is, Quia corpora coelestia non suscipi•t peregrinas impressiones: The heavenly bodies receive no forren or strange impressions. Thostat. This may be admitted, and yet the sunne shall be hot: for that is no elementary or forren impression, but a quality inherent, and native in the sunne, seeing the Scripture saith, nothing is hid from the heat thereof, Psal. 19.8. which heat may be increased by the reflexion of the beames of the sunne, and the exhalation of hot and drie vapours▪ but the beginning of vitall and comfortable heat, without any inconvenience, may be granted to come from the body of the sunne, as the fountaine thereof. 3. Now the reason why the sunne, as he riseth higher, so waxeth hotter, is this: when the sunne is too low, his beames doe not fall directly upon the earth, but being in the East, they tend to the West; but as the sunne ascendeth unto the meridianall point, so his beames doe descend, and smite upon the earth, which then beginneth more and more to feelee the power and force thereof. Tostat. 4. In that the Manna melted by the heat of the sunne, but was hardned by the fire, for otherwise it could not be baked and made into cakes: it appeareth, that neither of these proceeded from any natu|rall disposition or quality in the Man, for if naturally it had beene dissolved by the sunne, the heat of the fire in like manner, would have wrought upon it: therefore both these operations in Manna, proceeded not from any naturall qualitie therein, but was wrought extraordinarily by the power of God, so dispolsing. Tostat. qu•st. 11. 5. And this was the reason, why it melted by the heat of the sunne, to stir up the people, to gather it betimes, that they might have time to prepare it, and then attend other businesse: if it had beene to bee gathered all day, they might have beene more slothfull and negligent. Calvin. 6. The time then of gathering Manna, was after the sunne rise, so soone as the dew was off the ground, untill the sixth houre of the day toward noone, when the sunne began to be ho•. Lyran.

QUEST. XXXI. How they gathered twice so much upon the sixth day.

Vers. 22. The sixth day they gathered twice so much, &c. 1. Some thinke, that they gathered no more upon the sixth day, than they did other dayes, but that it was multiplied by the power of God, and became twice as much, that is, two gomers for every man. Ioseph. Lyran. But the words of the text are otherwise, they gathered twice so much: it was not then made twice so much when it was gathered, but they indeed gathered twice so much, as they did upon any other day. 2. Therefore, herein the miracle was seene, that upon the sixth day there fell twice so much, as upon the other dayes. Marbach. And they indeed gathered as much againe, as they used to doe: for otherwise, if the Lord had not commanded them so to doe, to gather double upon the sixth day, they had transgressed in exceeding a gomer in their gathering: yet they are not reprov'd, but commended for it: And Moses saith, they did herein the same thing, which the Lord said. If it were then Gods commandement, that they should gather double, this doubling was in their gathering, not in the increasing afterward: God would not have commanded them to doe that, which was not in their power, but in his owne working: It was in their power to gather double, when God had sent it upon the ground: But it was in Gods hand onely to increase and multipli • it, when it was gathered. Sic fere Tostat. quaest. 12.

QUEST. XXXII. What moved the Rulers to come and tell Moses, that the people had gathered double.

Vers. 22. The Rulers of the Congregation came and told Moses. These were not the Captaines over thousands and hundreds, and over fifties, for they were not instituted till afterward, chap. 18. nor yet were they the 70. Elders, which also were not yet appointed: but they were the Princes of the tribes and families, such as are rehearsed, Numb. 1.2.7. Tostat. 1. Some thinke that these Princes came of a good minde, and feared lest the people transgressed the commandement in gathering double, because they knew not Gods will yet touching the Sabbath. Ferus. But they could not be altogether ignorant of that, seeing the Lord by Moses had told them before, vers. 5. that upon the sixth day, they should gather twice so much, as they did dayly. 2. Some impute it unto their forgetfulnesse, and incredulitie, that they beleev'd not the word of God, that he would send them double food upon that day. Calvin. Gal•s. But it is not like that the Princes, and chieftest men, which used to consult with Moses, and were directors to the rest, were more ignorant, and of lesse beleefe, than the common people: neither doth Moses here reprove them for any such unbeleefe. 3. Therefore the sounder opinion is, that they were not ignorant herein of Gods commandement of gathering double, and that the people did therein as they were com|manded: but they came to Moses to receive further direction, how that double portion which they had gathered, should bee ordered. Tostat. 4. Another opinion is, that Moses had not yet propounded to the people, what the Lord had said concerning the double portion, to be gathered upon the sixth day, vers. 5. but the people of themselves did it, being accustomed to keepe the Sabbath, knowing that upon that day, they were to rest, and yet that it was not Gods will they should fast that day, and altogether abstaine from meat. Piscator. But this would lay both an imputation of unfaithfulnesse to Moses, that he should con|ceale any part of Gods counsell from them, especially in so necessarie a thing, as the observation of the Sabbath was: and of ignorance upon the Rulers of the Congregation, that the common people did better know what was to be done, than they: and although it was an usuall custome among the people of God, to keepe the Sabbath: yet they were not yet so well instructed, in the manner of the observation thereof: therefore I rather preferre the opinion of Tostatus herein, next before alleaged.

QUEST. XXXIII. Of the meaning of the 23. verse, and whether they dressed upon the sixth day, that which was reserved for the seventh.

Vers. 23. The rest of the holy Sabbath is to morrow. 1. Thostatus in not rightly pointing, or distinguishing this verse, putteth this word morrow to the next sentence, reading thus, Cr•s quodcun{que} operandum est, facite, To morrow, what is to be done, do; and so much busieth himselfe about the meaning of these words; resolving upon this sense, that, what was to be done the next day about their victuall, because it was the Sabbath, they should doe it now: but, although this indeed be the meaning of the words following, that what they had to seeth and dresse the next day, they should doe it now: yet all this labour might have beene spared, if the word morrow, be joyned with the former sentence, as it is here set downe, and as it is in the originall, the Sabbath is to morrow. 2. The words following, Seeth that which yee would seeth, &c. are two wayes understood, that either they should seeth upon the sixth day, so much as should serve the next also, for upon the Sabbath they were not to busie themselves about their meat. Iun• Piscator. Or they should seeth so much, as would serve their turne presently, and reserve the rest till the next day: for if they had sod & dressed that which was reserved till the next day, it had seemed no strange thing, that it was not putrified. Simler. But I preferre the former exposition, both because there was much businesse, which belonged to the grinding, dressing of Manna, and making it into cakes, which works they were not to doe upon the Sabbath: and it is like that the Manna, which was reserved upon other dayes, though sodden or baked, yet was corrupted with wormes: and of it selfe, the Manna was not like to putrifie in one day, though it were raw and unsodden, but that the Lord caused it to corrupt, thereby to admonish his people.

QUEST. XXXIV. Whether the observation of the Sabbath were now first instituted.

Vers. 20. The Lord hath given you the Sabbath. 1. Some are of opinion, that the Israelites began first now to keepe the Sabbath, and that this precept was but to continue till the coming of the Messiah. Tostat. quaest. 12. But this opinion hath no ground, nor good warrant: for Moses speaketh of the Sabbath, as of a thing well knowne: To morrow is the rest of the Sabbath: and to what end else should the people have beene so readie, to have gathered a double portion upon the sixth day, but to prepare them for the Sabbath, before Moses had yet spoken any thing of the rest thereof? 2. Therefore it is more than probable, that the Sabbath of ancient time was kept among the people of God, grounded▪ upon the example of God himselfe, that rested after the creation, finished in six dayes, upon the seventh: which ob|servation was delivered by godly tradition from Adam to his posteritie: for seeing, that the Church had from the beginning a publike▪ and externall worship of God, it could not otherwise be, but that they had also a certaine time prefixed, wherein to celebrate the publike worship and service of God; and then what time was more fit, than that which God had sanctified by his owne example? Simlerus, Oleaster. This law then of the Sabbath, as belonging rather to the law of nature, than to the law of Moses, because it containeth the manner of Gods worship, was to continue even after the abrogating of Moses law, Ferus: for though we keepe not the very same day, which the Jewes did, yet the Lords day is kept upon the se|venth day: Dic septima vacare catenus morale & necessarium, quod stat• tempore Domino vacandum sit: Vpon the seventh day to rest is therefore morall and necessarie, because we must upon some set time be vacant for God. Pellican. 3. Here the reason given of observing the Sabbath, is taken from Gods liberalitie, that had given them upon the sixth day, meat for two dayes: two other reasons are else where yeilded, the one from the end of the creation, Gen. 2. the other from the deliverance of the Israelites out of the bondage of Egypt, Deut. 5.15. Iun.

QUEST. LV. Of the Feast of the Sabbath.

Vers. 29. TArrie every one in his place, let no man goe out. There are three rules here set downe for the observation of the Sabbath: 1. That every one should tarrie in his place, and so being free from other businesse, give himselfe to contemplation: so Ferus interpreteth these words: Maneat apud se: Let him abide with himselfe: that is, enter to himselfe: Conscientiam suam scrutetur: Let him examine his conscience: This indeed may very well be a consequent of that their staying and tarrying within: for being sequestred from other affaires, they were the freer for meditation: but the literall sense of the words is, that they should stay within. 2. Neither were they to goe forth, that is, with intent to gather Manna, which lay round about the host; or to doe any further businesse: they were not forbidden all kind of walking and going out for their solace and recreation: as the mount Olivet is said to bee a Sabbath dayes journey from Jerusalem, Act. 1. that is about a mile: Thostat. quaest. 13. 3. They are also comman|ded to keepe the Sabbath rest, to Sabbatize, which is to be exercised in good works, Ferus: as Augustine saith: *Malè celebrat Sabbatum, qui à bonis operibus cessat: •t•um enim ab iniquitate debet esse, quia bona conscientia non inquietum, * sed tranquillum facit animu•:* He keepeth the Sabbath ill, which ceaseth from good works: for true rest must be from iniquitie; because a good conscience doth make the soule not unquiet, but calme and still: yet although they were commanded to rest the seventh day unto the Lord, Non oblig•bantur tota di•v•care D•o: They were not bound all the day to attend upon Gods service, but to cease from all other occupations: Ne imped•rantur, si Deo vacare vell•••: That they should not be hindred, if they were disposed to attend upon God. Tostat. quaest. 12. in Exod.

Page 207

QUEST. XXXVI. The description of Manna, the quantitie, fashion, colour and taste thereof.

Vers. 31. IT was like unto Coriander seed, white &c. The Manna is resembled here and in other places to five severall things: to the hoare frost, vers. 14. to Coriander seed, unto wafer cakes made with hony: and Numb. 11. 7. to •d•llium▪ and fresh oyle, 1. it is likened to the hoare frost: Non quia ex•••sum, in modum pr•••a, sed sic multiplicatum: Not because it was extended (or lay in flakes) as the •oare frost, but it was multiplid in number like unto it: as it is in the Psalme: He scattereth the hoare frost lik• ashes, Psal. 47. Oleaster: Iosephus therefore is deceived, who thinketh that it came downe like snowe: fo• he saith, that as Moses prayed it fell upon his hands, and he thought it snowed: 2. In quantitie and prop|ortion it was like to Coriander seed, not in colour, for that kinde of seed is blackish. Vatabl. And so vers. 14. it is said to be a small round thing: the word is M•cusphas, which Hierome translateth p•lo con/••s•m, as wheat that is husked, and brayed with a pestle: and the Chald. d•c•rticatum, like unto barked or pilled wood, that is, white: the Septuag. translate it, white: but the Hebrewes generally interpret here round: this word is onely found in this place, and so the signification is the more doubtfull and uncertaine here: but I prefer the usuall reading. 3. For the colour, it is said here to be white: and Numb. 11. 7. In colour like unto •dellium, which some take to be white pearle: Oleaster; or a kinde of precious stone. Vatabl. the Septuagint take it sometime for 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, the Carbuncle, sometime for the Crystall: Numb. 11. but it is rather the gumme of the tree •dellium, which was transparent and shining like unto pure and tried waxe, Plin. lib. 12. cap. 9. Iun. Osian. and Iosephus saith, that •dellium was a kinde of drugge, or spice. So then the Manna was not onely white, but it was also of a cleare colour, like unto gumme, * o• to the kernell of a grape: Pellican. 4. For the taste, it was like unto wafers made with hony, or unto fresh and sweet oyle, Numb. 11. 7. it had a pleasant taste and relish.

QUEST. XXXVII. Whether the Manna had a divers relish according to every ones taste.

BUt further concerning the divers taste of Manna, a question is moved out of those words in the book of Wisdome, chap. 16. vers. 21. It served to the appetite of him that tooke it, and was meet to that that every man would. 1. Upon this ground the opinion of some is: that the Manna, though it had actually and positively, but one kinde of taste, like unto wafers made of hony: yet God gave unto it such a gift, that it relished according to every mans desire, and it was turned to the taste and savour of any kinde of meat, which they had mind unto. Tostat. And that Manna had this quality onely in their mouths and taste, that were holy men, and thankfull▪ but to the evill and disobedient, it had not that variety of delightful taste, but was as unsavory in their mouths, for they preferred p•ppons, onyons, leekes and garlike before it. Lyrans.

2. Contra. 1. If the Manna, actually gave one certaine relish in the mouth, as of hony or oyle, how could it at the same time have any other relish? for divers tastes of contrarie kindes and tempers it could not have at once: and if it were turned to any other taste, then had it not actually the taste of hony or fresh oyle. 2. Besides, by this meanes the Lord should have satisfied every ones wanton appetite, which not being contented with the ordinarie taste of Manna, would have it changed according to his desire. 3. And that Manna had the same relish to all, both good and bad, is evident by Moses description, Numb. 11.8. The people went about and gathered it • &c. so it relished in that manner to the people: if it had tasted so onely to the better sort, to the beleivers and the thankfull, a very few should have had that pri|vilege: for the people wept and murmured in their families, every one in his tent dore. Now in that they preferred the onyons and leekes of Egypt, it shewed their great unthankfulnesse, that made more account of such grosse meat, than of the precious delicate Manna.

3. The meaning then of that place is, that this Manna actually had such variety of delectable tastes, that it pleased every man: not that it changed and turned as every mans fansie led him: but there was no stomake so weake, nor no tooth so daintie, whom Manna might not content: the Manna being yet raw and undressed, had the taste as of mingled hony, or oyle, but after it was prepared and dressed, it gave a mixed and variable taste, as if many sweet and pleasant things were tempered together. Iun.

4. The excellencie then of this food commendeth the goodnesse of God, who was not contented to give them ordinary and common food, but fed them with the best. Ferus. As it is said, Wisdom 16.21. Thy sustenance declared thy sweetnesse to thy children. The Grecians write that Democritus prolonged his life with eating of hony, Athan. lib. 2. cap. 3. Plinie maketh mention of some that lived of pulse, lib. 18. cap. 8. The Egyptians boast much of their herbes. Diodor. lib. 1. cap. 11. But all these must give place to Man|na: never was any people in the world fed with the like food unto Manna. Pelarg.

QUEST. XXXVIII. When Moses spake to Aaron concerning the pot of Manna, to be set before the Lord.

Vers. 34. ANd Aaron laid it up before the Testimonie. 1. The opinion of some Hebrewes is, that this pot of Manna was laid up in Moses Tabernacle, before the great Tabernacle was made. Lyrans. But this cannot be: 1. Into that Tabernacle none came but Moses, and in his absence Ioshua, chap. 33.7, 11. Therefore it is like, that Moses would rather have there placed it himselfe, than have spoken to Aaron. 2. Because Moses speaketh to Aaron to doe it, it seemeth that Aaron was consecrated Priest, which was not before the second yeare, when the Tabernacle was erected. Tostat. 2. Whereas it is said, vers. 33. to be set before the Lord, it may also have this sense, Ante ◇ ◇ dictum est, quod sit ipsa devotione offerendi, &c. Before the Lord may be said, in respect of the devotion of the offerer, wheresoever it was put: so Augustin. quaest. 61. But these words, before the Testimonie, which is meant of the Arke, doe expound the other: therefore the Arke being not yet made, this here commanded, was not done presently. 3. Au|gustine misliking the former solution, resolveth, that this is spoken by way of a prolepsis, that is here writ|ten which was afterward done: for in Scripture the order of time is not alwayes observed: Moses there|fore to finish at once the whole history concerning Manna, maketh mention also of this reserving of the •ot of Manna, which was done afterward, the Tabernacle being now made, and Aaron consecrated Priest. Tostat. quast. 14.

So 1 Sam. 17.54. David is said to have put Goliahs armour in his Tabernacle, which was not then, but long after, when he was established in the Kingdome. Piscator. 4. This pot of Manna, which was of gold, Iunius thinketh was not placed hard before the Arke, for then it could not have beene seene of the people, as it is said, vers. 32. That they may see the bread &c, And in the Arke it was not, for within it onely were the two tables of the law, 1 King. 8.11. it was set therefore, in the entrance of the most holy place. Iun. But it seemeth rather, that it was placed in the most holy place within the second vaile, by the Apostles description, Heb. 9.4. Simler. Where also Aarons rod was, which was there kept also, for a testimony to the people, Numb. 17.11. though it were not continually in their fight.

QUEST. XXXIX. By whom this clause was added of the Israelites eating of Manna fourtie yeares.

Vers. 35 The children of Israel did eat Manna 40. yeares, untill they came to a land inhabited, &c. Augustine also thinketh, that this is spoken by a prolepsis, that is, an anticipation or prevention of the story; but it cannot so properly be said here, because Moses lived not to see this, for he died in the 11. moneth of the 40. yeare: and the Manna ceased on the 15. day of the first moneth of the 41. yeare: but a prolepsis, or anticipation of the story is, when the same writer setteth downe that before, out of his place, which was done after. Tostat. He therefore resolveth that Moses did write this, propheticè by a propheticall instinct: so also Iun. But this may be rather thought to be added by Ioshua, or some other of the Prophets afterward; as likewise, the story of Moses death and buriall, Deut. 34. which is not like to have beene penned by himselfe. Piscator.

*2. Till they came to a land inhabited. Augustine thus expoundeth, Non quia continuo ut venerunt ad terram habitabilem, &c. Not because as soone as they came to a land inhabited, they left eating of Manna: Sed quia non ante, But because not before. But what land inhabited it was, is expounded afterward, namely the land of Canaan: for though the Israelites possessed before, the land of the Amorites, on the other side of Jordan, yet the Manna ceased not, till they had passed over Jordan, and were entred into the bounds and borders of Canaan, which was the promised land, that flowed with milke and hony. Tostat. quast. 15.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the excellencie and prerogative of the Lords day.

Vers. 5. But the sixth day, &c. it shall be twice so much. Origen upon this place, well collecteth the prerogative and excellencie of the Lords day, beyond the Sabbath of the Jewes, proving that the Manna began first to fall upon that day: his words are these: Si sex diebus continuis (ut scriptura dicit) collectum est, à septima autem die, quae est Sabbati, cessatum est, sine dubio initium ejus à die prima, qua est dies Dominica, fuit: &c. If the Manna were gathered six dayes together, as the Scripture saith, and it ceased upon the seventh, which is the Sabbath, without doubt it began on the first day, which is the Lords day.

2. Doct. That it is lawfull to lay up in store, so it be done without distrust in Gods providence.

Vers. 19. Let no man reserve thereof till the morning. Though the Israelites were bound unto this precept, because every day they received Manna from heaven, and so the Compassions of God were renewed every morning, as the Prophet Ieremie saith, Lament. 3.23. yet this taketh not away all store and provision, to be laid up aforehand: for the sluggard is condemned for his sloth and carelesnesse, and is sent by the Wise man to learne of the Ant, which gathereth her meat in summer; Prov. Our blessed Saviour also commanded 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, the remainder of the meat to be kept. And the reason is not alike: for then they received Manna every day, and therefore needed not to lay up any thing in store: But now the fruits of the earth are onely gathered in summer: wherefore 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, the letter of this precept is not to be urged, but the 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, the sense and morall equitie bindeth us still, that we take heed of an immoderate & distrustfull care, in making provision for the time to come, but depend upon Gods fatherly providence. Pelarg.

3. Doct. How Manna was a type and figure of Christ.

Vers. 31. They called the name of it Man, &c. The holy Apostle S. Paul, maketh this Manna an evident type of Christ, calling it their spirituall meat, 1 Cor. 10.3. And in many things the type and figure agreeth unto the bodie and substance: 1. In the causes of sending this Manna: 2. In the condition and qualities thereof: 3. In the manner of the gathering: 4. In the use thereof. Ferus.

First, touching the causes: 1. The Lord had compassion of his people, when they were in want, and almost famished in the wilderness: so Christ was given unto us, that by faith in his bodie and blood, our hungrie soules should be nourished. Marbach. 2. The Lord in sending Manna, shewed his power, his mercie, goodnesse, and love to his people: and in nothing more appeareth the love of God to us, than in sending his onely Sonne into the world to die for us. 3. The Lord by sending Manna, did prove, whether his people would walke in his law or no, vers. 4. So the Lord maketh triall of the obedience of the world, in receiving the law of his Sonne Christ, that is, the Gospell. Ferus.

Secondly, concerning the qualities and properties of Manna: 1. It was but a small thing, yet had great vertue and Christ, though in the low degree of a servant, was of great power. 2. The Manna was white, and Christ was pure and unspotted. 3. The Manna was ground in the mill, or beaten in a mortar, and Christ was beaten and bruised for us. Ferus. 4. The Manna came from heaven: so the Sonne of God descended, and tooke upon him our flesh. Simler. 5. The Manna was sweet and pleasant, as hony: so is Christ unto the soule. 6. The Manna fell with the dew: so Christ brought with him abundance of spirit and grace. 7. The Manna fell every day: and Christ hath promised to be with his Church unto the end of the world. 8. The Manna ceased as soone as they came into the land of Canaan: and in the next world, there shall be no use of the Word, or Sacraments. Ferus.

Thirdly, in the gathering of Manna, these conditions were observed: 1. It was lawfull and free for all men and children, male and female, young and old, master and servant, to gather the Manna: so there is neither bond nor free, male nor female, but all are one in Christ, Gal. 3.28. Simler. 2. They were commanded to gather every day: and we must all our life long gather of the heavenly Manna. 3. They were to goe out of their tents to gather it: and wee must depart from our old conversation. Ferus. 4. They which gathered much, had not the more, nor they which gathered little, the lesse: so both those which are strong, and they which are weake in faith, are admitted to this Manna. Marbach.

Fourthly, for the use: both good and bad did eat of the Manna: so men of all sorts come unto the Word, and Sacraments, but not all to the same end: for as the Manna putrified to those which kept it contrary to Moses commandement, so the Word of God, and the Sacraments are the savour of death unto death, to those which unworthily receive them. Ferus. But it will here be objected, if this Manna were spirituall and heavenly food to the Israelites, as S. Paul saith, how is he reconciled with our Saviour Christ, who saith, Moses gave you not bread from heaven, but my father giveth you true bread from heaven? Ioh. 6.32. The answer here is ready, that our Saviour speaketh according to their capacity and understanding, with whom he there dealeth: who had a carnall imagination of Manna, and could see therein nothing, but corporall food. Simler.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Conf. Against the carnall presence in the Eucharist.

Vers. 5. The people shall goe out and gather. Rupertus hath upon these words this glosse, applying them to the Eucharist: Si digne manducare cupimus, ab omni curiositate corporales sensus egrediamur, &c. If we will worthily eat, let us goe forth from all curiositie of corporall sense, that we doe not thinke to discern by the sight, taste, smell, feeling, whether it be the flesh of Christ indeed, which we take &c. Paulus Burgens. likewise in his additions upon this Chapter, maintaining the opinion of some Rabbines against Lyranus, that the Manna is called the bread of Angels, because it was made of that incorporeall light, which the Angels are refreshed with, addeth further, thus: Est valde applicabile, &c. This is very fit to be applied unto our true Manna, the Sacrament of the Eucharist: In qua est verum lumen divinum, ex voluntate divino incorporatum, ex quo scilicet lumine divino Angeli in coelo reficiuntur, &c. Wherein the true divine light, by the will of God is incorporate, out of the which divine light, the Angels in heaven are refreshed, and the faithfull in the wilderness of this life, are fed by the same light, being incorporate.

Contra. First, this is but a weake text, The people shall goe out and gather; to prove the carnall presence of Christ in the Eucharist: for an argument cannot be grounded upon an allegorie of Scripture devised: it rather maketh against that grosse opinion: for seeing their Manna was also, as the Apostle saith, a spirituall meat unto them, and signified Christ, as the Eucharist doth unto us: and yet as it was their corporall food also, they tasted it, and it had a sweet relish in their mouths, as of hony or oyle: they were not to goe out of their senses, though under that type spirituall food also were conveyed: so in the Eucharist, the outward symboles are discerned by the senses, while the spirituall food is offered to the faith of the worthy receiver.

And concerning Burgensis conceite, it is very new and strange: that not the true bodie of Christ, that which was borne of the Virgin Marie, is not incorporate in the Sacrament, which is the opinion of the moderne Papists, but a certaine divine and incorporeall light, such as the Angels are nourished with in heaven. In his assertion then these three notable errors are contained: 1. that the Israelites Manna, and the bodie of Christ in the Eucharist were made of one and the same substance, a certaine divine light incorporate. 2. That Christs bodie in the Eucharist is incorporate, and made of that divine light: and so consequently, Christ shall have another kind of bodie in earth, than that in heaven, which was incarnate of the virgin Marie. 3. That the Angels in heaven, and the faithfull in earth, have one and the same food. Thus when men follow their owne fancies, and leave the Scriptures▪ they wind themselves into errors, and finde no way to get out.

2 Conf. That there was the same spirituall substance of the old Sacraments and ours.

FURTHER, where the Apostle saith, alluding unto this Manna, they did all eat The same spirituall meat, 1 Cor. 10.3. The Romanists, because they cannot away that there was the same spirituall substance of the Sacraments of the old Testament, and of ours, have this shift: that they eat the same meat among themselves, not the same with us, Rhemist. annot. in 1 Cor. 10.3. and Rupertus hath the same conceit: *That they did all eat the same meat, Non eandem, quam nos, Not the same which we eat.

Contra. 1. This answer is contrary to the very sense of the Scripture: for the Apostle sheweth, that Christ was their spirituall meat and drinke, and so is he ours: therefore they had the same spirituall meat with us. 2. Against Rupertus, we will oppose Augustine, who thus writeth of this matter: It had sufficed to have said, they did eat a spirituall meat, but he saith the same, I cannot finde how I should understand the sense, but the same that we doe eat.*

3. Conf. Against the Anabaptisticall communitie.

Vers. 18. HE that had gathered much, had nothing over, &c. S. Paul upon this text thus inferreth: Vpon this condition, your abundance at this time supplieth their lacke▪ that also their abundance may be for your lacke, that there may be equalitie, as it is written. He that gathered much, &c. 2. Cor. 8. 14. Upon which place the Anabaptists would ground their confused communitie and equalitie: where[as] the Apostle speaketh not of an equalitie in the possession of things, but in the use, and that not all times, but when the necessitie of our brethren requireth it: and so he exhorteth, that like as in the gathering of Manna, one helped another, and that which any gathered over, went to make up his part, that had gathered lesse: so the superfluitie and abundance of the rich, should supplie the necessities and wants of the poore. Simler.

4. Conf. Against prayer and sacrifices made for the dead.

Vers. 26. Slx dayes shall yee gather, but in the seventh you shall find none. Ferus hereupon thus noteth •Septimo die, id est post hanc vitam, non inuenietur quod colligere possumus, &c. On the seventh day, that is, after this life, there shall nothing be found for us to gather. They then which in this world doe not finde remission of sins, shall not finde it in the next: what helpe can prayers, or Masses afford unto those which are departed, if nothing be to be gathered after this life? Here then one of their owne write•• hath made a good argument, against their superstitious and fruitlesse prayers, and sacrifices, which the Romanists use to offer for their dead.

5. Conf. Against the keeping of reliques.

Vers. 32. FILL a gomer, and keepe it for your posteritie. Here is an holy relique kept by the commandement of God, not to be adored and worshipped, but to put the people in remembrance of this great benefit, in feeding of their forefathers in the wilderness. The popish reliques offend against all these rules: 1. God hath not commanded them to keepe any such thing. 2. They shew them to the people for adoration, not for the commemoration of any benefit. 3. The Manna which putrified, being kept one day against Gods commandement, endured many hundred yeares by his appointment: but popish reliques are not privileged from putrifying, therefore God hath not ordained them so to be kept.

1. Observ. The Church of God hath her turnes, of fulnesse, and of want in this world.

Vers. 1. THEy departed from Elius, and came into the wilderness of Sin. They remove from a place of pleasure and plentie, where they found 12. fountaines, and 70. Palme trees, to a barren and comfortlesse desert: wherein is set forth unto us the state and condition of Gods Church and children in this world. Ferus. Sometime they ebbe, otherwhile they flow: now they have plentie, and ere long, they suffer want, which the Lord doth, to exercise the patience of his servants, that they may be instructed with the Apostle, both To be full, and to be hungrie, to abound, and to have want, Philip. 4. 12.

2. Observ. Against the unprofitable gathering of riches.

Vers. 20. SOME reserved of it till the morning, and it was full of wormes. This sheweth, that they which corruptly gather riches, shall have no profit by them, they both scrape them together in this life without comfort, and heape them up to their punishment afterward, as the Prophet saith to cruell covetous men: Thou hast consulted shame to thine owne house, by destroying many people, and hast sinned against thine owne soule: for the stone shall crie out of the wall, and the beame out of the timber shall answer it: we unto him that buildeth a towne with bloud, &c.

3. Observ. Worldly and carnall men acknowlege not Gods gifts.

Vers. 15. THEy wist not what it was. This is the difference between the godly and the wicked: they thankfully acknowledge the gifts of God, and know from whom they receive them: but the other as brute beasts, use the things present before them, not praising the Author thereof. Oleaster. And therefore, men of this world are said to have their bellies filled with hid treasure, Psal. 17.14. for it is hid unto them, who it is that feedeth and filleth their bellies: and in this respect, the Prophet maketh the unthankfull and ignorant people worse than the ox, That knoweth his owner, & than the asse, which knoweth his masters cribbe: but Israel hath not knowne, my people hath not understood, &c. Isay 1.2.

4. Observ. Gods benefits are to be had in remembrance.

Vers. 32. Fill a gomer, and keepe it for your posteritie, that they may see the bread, &c. God will not have his worthie and singular benefits, to bee committed to oblivion, but alwayes thankfully re|membred: as for the same cause, Christ commanded the remainder of the broken meat to be kept, which filled 12. baskets, after he had fed the multitude: that that singular miracle might be had in thankfull re|membrance. Oleaster.

5. Observ. Where ordinary meanes are offered, extraordinary must not be sought.

Vers. 35. THEy did eat Manna till they came to the borders, &c. As soone as they came to helpe them|selves sufficiently with the fruits of the earth, the Manna ceased: which sheweth, that ex|traordinary meanes must not be expected, where ordinary are at hand. Piscat. For this cause our blessed Saviour repelled the tempter, which would have had him make bread of stones, which was an extraordi|nary and unwonted way for food.

CHAP. XVII.

1. The method and Argument.

T His Chapter treateth of two distresses, which the Israelites fell into, the one of thirst, the other of warre.

In the description of the first, these things are orderly declared. 1. Their penurie and want of water, vers. 1. 2. The effects thereof, their murmuring, begun, vers. 2. and continued, and confirmed, vers. 3. 3. The remedie against this calamitie. 1. Begged and asked of God by Moses prayer, vers. 4. 2. Promised by the Lord, with a descripti|on of the manner, how Moses accompanied with the Elders, should smite the rocke with his rod, vers. 5. 3. Effected accordingly, vers. 6. 4. A consequent whereof is this, that Moses imposeth a name upon the place, to be a memoriall of this miracle.

In the other part these particulars are set downe. 1. The attempt of Amalek against Israel, vers. 8▪ 2. The manner of resistance, partly by externall meanes, the preparation of Ioshua against Amalek, vers. 9.10. partly by spirituall, the prayer of Moses, with his gesture, the lifting up of his hands, the letting downe of his hands, with the divers event thereof, vers. 10. and the supporting of his hands, vers. 11. 3. The successe of this battell, the discomfiting of Amalek. 4. The event, the decree of God against Amalek, vers. 12. testified by Moses, both by his fact in building an Altar, and by his speech, vers. 16.

2. The divers readings.

Vers. 1. According to the appointment of God. I. or, word of God. L.S.P. commandement, or, precept of God. V.B.G. mouth of God. A.H.

Vers. 3. To kill me, and my children. I.V.B.A.P. rather than, kill us, and our children. * L.S.G. the word is, othi, mee, not us.

Vers. 4. Yet a little, and they will stone me. I.A.P.L.S. they are almost readie to stone me. * B.G.V. They give the sense rather, than the words.

Vers. 7. He called the place Massa and Meribah. I.A.V.G. not, Messah, and Meribath. B. he called the place, tentation, and contention. S.A. he called the place tentation. L. Here the other word is wanting, and they are proper names, not common and appellative.

Vers. 8. Then came Amalek. B.G. cum caeter. the Amalekites. * I. but in the originall it is put in the singullar, yet taken for the plurall, as it is usuall in Scripture.

Vers. 14. From under heaven. B.G.V.A. rather than, under heaven. L. here the preposition signifying from, is omitted: or, lest it be under heaven. A. or, from the earth under heaven. I. or, from that, which is under heaven. S. These render the sense rather than the words.

Vers. 15. And he called it, Iehovah nissi. G. that is, the Lord is my banner. V. or, my banner is of Iehovah. * I. better than, the Lord is my exaltation or lifting up. A.L. or, my refuge. S. or the Lord is he, that worketh miracles for me. B.C. for, ness, signifieth a streame or banner.

Vers. 16. The hand is on the seate of God. B. or, the hand is on the throne of the Lord. A.P. better than, * the Lord hath sworne. G. or, lift up his hand to sweare. V. the sense rather, than the words: or, with a secret hand the Lord fighteth. S. or, because the hand of Amalek, is against the throne of Iah. I. here Amalek is added: or, the hand is onely of the Lord, solius Domini. L. Here one word is mistaken for another, solius for solii.

3. The explanation of doubtfull and difficult questions.

QUEST. I. Why some mansion places are omitted here.

Vers. 1. They camped in Rephidim. 1. They came from the wilderness of Sin by divers countries, for betweene Sin and Rephidim, there were two stations beside, here omitted, Dophka, & Alush, Numb. 33. 13, 14. Iun. 2. Sinis here taken for one speciall station, but it is the name in generall of all that desert unto Sinai: Gloss. ordin. 3. These two stations are omitted and many beside: for whereas there are 42. mansion places reckoned in all, Num. 33. not above 15. are specially mentioned before in the historie, as it is set forth in this booke and Numbers, because those places are specially noted, wherein any notable accident befell: as in Marah the bitterness of the water, in Elim the Palme trees, in the desert of Sin, the Manna, in Rephidim, the issuing of the water out of the rocke, and some other beside. Tostat. quast. 1. 4. There are also more names of places rehearsed in the storie, than are numbred in the Catalogue of their stantions, Num. 33. as Mattanah, Nahaliel, Bamoth, Numb. 21. but all those were not the names of the mansion places, where they stayed, but such as they passed by. Tostat. ibid. 5. They are said to have journeyed at the mouth of God, because they followed the direction of the cloud: for when the cloud was ta|ken up they journeyed, and where it abode they pitched: this was the commandement of God here spo|ken of, as it is interpreted, Numb. 9.18. Tostat. Simler.

QUEST. II. Of penury and want of water which the Israelites here endured.

Vers. 1. WHere was no water for the people to drinke, &c. 1. The Rabbines here are deceived, which thinke that the thirst of the people here, was not naturall and necessary, (for Manna was both meate, and being full of moisture, served for drinke, say they) but of wantonnesse rather. The words of the text shew the contrarie, that there was no water for the people to drinke, and therefore it was a violent and necessary, not a wanton and voluntary thirst. Simler. Calvin. 2. Their conceit also hath no ground, that thinke some of the people had water, which they brought along with them from Elim, and therefore they are said to tempt God, to shew his power, when there was no such necessitie. Tostat. quast. 2. For all the people murmured, as though they were ready to die for thirst, vers. 3. 3. The truth is therel|fore, that they were driven to great extremitie for want of water: for drought and thirst is a great triall, and a miserable calamity, as is evident by divers examples in sacred and forren stories: As Hagar with her sonne were ready to perish for want of water, Gen. 21. And the three Kings, that were to fight against Moab, were like all to bee undone for want of water, if the Lord by his Prophet had not relieved their want: The men of Berhulia, when the Citie was besieged, fell downe and died for thirst: The Samari|tanes, being assaulted by the Romanes, died of thirst: Thales Milesius, as Laertius writeth, perished through heate and thirst: * Ioannes Leo hath a memorable storie of certaine Merchants, that perished by thirst in the desert of Azoad in Africa: where are to be seene two Sepulchers, the one of a Merchant, the other of a Carrier of wares: who sold unto the other a cup of water for a thousand crownes, and yet, the water not being able to suffice both, they twaine died there: Lysimachus yeelded himselfe and his whole host, for want of water, and having drunke, being now become a captive, he uttered these words: O Dii, inquit, quam brevis voluptatis gratia ex rege me feci servum! O God for how small a pleasure, of a King, have I made my selfe a captive! Pelarg.

QUEST. III. Why it pleased God to prove his people with thirst.

NOW it pleased God, as before hee tried his people with hunger, so now with thirst, for these causes: 1. Because the people were very oblivious and forgetfull of Gods benefits, God by afflictions would put them in mind of their dutie, that they which in prosperitie did forget him, by want and penurie, might be driven to seeke him, as it is in the Psalme, When he slew them, they sought him, and returned. 2. Another cause was in respect of themselves, * because they were a proud and haughtie people, and thought well of themselves: as the rebellious say unto Moses, All the Congregation is holy, Numb. 16.3. therefore the Lord by this meanes would humble them, and make them know themselves. 3. The Lord being purposed to make the Israelites a peculiar people to himselfe, and purposing to give unto them his lawes, by this meanes would prove and trie them, whether they would keepe his commandements, Deut. 8.2. Even as a father nutureth and schooleth his child, whom he purposeth to make his heire; so the Lord saith, As a man nutureth his sonne, so the Lord thy God nutureth thee. Tostat. 4. The Lord also brought them into this strait, * that the faithfull thereby should be discerned from the rest: for affliction and temptation, is as a sieve to trie the chaffe from the wheat. Ferus.

QUEST. IV. How the people are said to tempt God.

Vers. 2. WHerefore doe yee tempt the Lord? 1. Some will have them to tempt God, because there were among the people, that had water, and yet would have God to helpe them, when there was no need: for then to expect or require the divine helpe, when there is no urgent necessitie, is to tempt God. Tostat. But it is shewed before, that this want of water was generall, and all the people were in great extremity. 2. They are therefore said to tempt God, either because they doubted of his power, and there|fore would trie whether he could give them water: for the word nasah, signifieth properly to make triall, as David is said not to have tried or proved before to goe with armour, 1 Sam. 17.39. Oleaster. Or they tempted God, doubting of the truth of his promises, as vers. 7. Is God among us or no? Pelarg. And so they tempted God by their incredulity. Iun. Further they doe prescribe and limite God, that unlesse he shew them some signe of his presence and power, they will not beleewe, that it was his will to bring them out of Egypt unto that place. Marbach. They doe tempt him also by their impatiencie, they urge Moses presently to give them helpe, or else they will stone him, whereas they should patiently have waited upon God. Simler. And further, though they are not herein said to tempt God, expecting his helpe, where all humane meanes, & counsell was denied: yet herein they tempted him, because they thought God was bound unto them, to succour them at their need. Lyran. Whereas the heathen by the light of nature, could see and say, Diis & parentibus non possumus reddere aequalia, Wee cannot recompense the Gods and our parents: * God is no way indebted unto man. Tostat. quast. 2.

QUEST. V. Of Moses feare lest he should be stoned.

Vers. 4. YEt a little while, and they will stone me. 1. Iosephus here somewhat altereth, and transposeth the storie: for this taking up of stones to cast at Moses, hee placeth before the giving of Man, when they murmured for food in the desert of Sin: But this their violent and audacious enterprise fell out in Rephidim. 2. This was not a carnall, worldly, or distrustfull feare in Moses, but a naturall feare, which a right perfect man is subject unto, for so our Saviour saith, My soule is heavie unto death. Tostat. 3. Yet this feare of Moses was not so much, in respect of his present danger, as in regard of the people, lest they, if he should have beene slaine, after his death might have fallen to Idolatrie. Lyran. 4. Or he might feare, lest, if they should have killed him, the Lord would have punished them, and revenged his death: as Ieremie saith in the like case: As for me, behold I am in your hand, doe with me as you thinke good: But know for a certaine, if ye put me to death, you shall surely bring innocent blood upon your selues, &c. Tostat. quast. 2. 5. Moses objecteth his danger, that he might the sooner obtaine his desire. Oleaster.

QUEST. VI. Why Moses is bid to take the Elders with him.

Vers. 5. Take with thee of the Elders of Israel. 1. The vulgar people were not thought worthy, * because of their murmuring, to see the miracle, which God was about to worke for them, and therefore he is bidden to take the Elders. Simler. Or because, the Elders might be murmurers also with the rest, they are called to bee eie witnesses of this great worke, that they might see and testifie, that water was brought forth out of the rocke, where there was none before. Ferus, Tostat. Galas. 3. That being men of authoritie, they might be able better to instruct and certifie the people. Iun. 4. And God hereby would establish an order for government, that Princes should bee assisted with grave counsellors, neither to doe things of their owne head, as Saul did. Ferus. Nor to despise the counsell of the wise and ancient, and to follow the rash and headstrong, as Rehoboam did to his cost.

QUEST. VII. Why Moses is bid to take his rod.

Vers. 5. And the rod, wherewith thou smotest the river. 1. Rab. Salomon, to whom subscribeth Lyranus, thinketh that Moses is bid to take the rod, because some of the Israelites thought, that rod had power onely to bring plagues, as it did upon the Egyptians, and not blessings: but that was no reason, for before this, Moses used that rod in dividing the waters of the red sea, to deliver the people of Israel out of the hand of their enemies, which was a great blessing. Tostat. 2. Therefore that was not the reason, but because it pleased God to use this organe and instrument at this time. Tostat. And to get Moses the greater authority with the people, hee is bid to smite the rock with the rod, whereas God could have brought forth the water, without any such meanes. Pelarg. And the Lord did it also to confirme the faith of the Elders, when they saw this rod in the hand of Moses, whereby he had wrought great wonders, especially in the waters. Simler. 3. By the river and floud, we are not to understand the sea, but the river of Egypt, which is here remembred, because it was first of the Egyptian plagues: and though Aaron smote the river, and not Moses: yet he is said to doe it, because it was done by his direction. Iun. Tostat. Aaron percussit autoritate & mandato Mosis: Aaron smote it by the authoritie, and at the commandement of Moses: August. quast. 64. in Exod. so also Lyran.

QUEST. VIII. Whether it be all one storie of smiting the rock, Exod. 17. and Num. 20. or divers.

FURther, whereas the like storie of bringing waters out of the rock, is penned by Moses, Numb. 20. the question is, whether it were one and the same act. 1. Some thinke, that in both places there is a narration of one and the same fact: as Procopius upon this place with others: of which opinion these may be the reasons: 1. Because it would seeme strange, if Moses had once before done the like, that he would have doubted the second time, as he doth, Num. 20. 2. The people there object, Wherefore hast thou brought us out of Egypt? Whereas all of that generation were dead before, that came out of Egypt, they onely excepted which were then young. 3. The name which Moses giveth to the place in both stories is the same, namely Meribah.

Contra. 1. Moses might be doubtfull the second time, in respect of the unworthinesse of the people, fearing the Lord would not shew his power, because of their unthankfulnesse, and therefore he saith, the Lord was angrie with him for their sakes, Deut. 3.26. 2. the offspring of those which were dead, might so complaine, because if their fathers had not come out of Egypt, they had remained there still. 3. The same name may be given unto divers places: and yet herein there was a difference, for the place in Rephidim, was called both Massah and Meribah, tentation, and contention: the other Meribah onely.

2. Wherefore the sounder opinion is, that these two stories were divers, and that Moses smote the rocke two sundrie times, which may appeare to be so by these reasons: 1. The place was divers: this striking of the rocke was done in Rephidim, which was the 11. station, Numb. 33.14. but the other was in the desert of Sin, the 33. station, Numb. 33.36. 2. The time was divers: this miracle was done in the first yeare after their departure out of Egypt: the other in the 40. yeare: for in the very next station Aaron died in the 5. moneth of the 40. yeare, Numb. 33.38. 3. In the other storie Moses was somewhat doubtfull, and therein displeased God, and was reprov'd: but here he is found firme and faithfull. 4. Here he onely taketh the Elders with him, but there the Lord biddeth him to gather together the whole congregation.

5. This miracle was wrought by the rod, wherewith Moses had wrought wonders in Egypt: the other with Aarons rod that budded, and was laid up before the Lord, Numb. 27. for Moses is said to have taken it from before the Lord, Numb. 20.9. Iun. By these reasons, the stories appeare to be divers. Simler. Osiander.

QUEST. IX. Of the mount Choreb.

Vers. 6. I Will stand before thee upon the rocke in Hereb. 1. Some take Horeb or Choreb to be the top of the mount Sinai: but that cannot be, for they were not yet come unto mount Sinai, much lesse unto the top of the mount. 2. Some thinke that Choreb and Sinai were all one, but this was another place, yet called by the same name. Lyran. Tostat. But that this was the same Choreb, which was called the mount of God, chap. 3.1. appeareth in the next chap. vers. 5. where it is said, they camped by the mount of God. 3. Some other thinke that Sinai was the name of the whole plaine or desert, wherein there were many hils and mountains, whereof Choreb was one. Oleaster. in 3. cap. Exod. But this opinion is con|trouled, chap. 19.11. where the very hill it selfe is called mount Sinai. 4. Therefore the more probable opinion is, that all that hillie tract or circuite was called Choreb of the drines of the ground, where Sinai was situate. Iun. Or that hillie tract might beare the name of Choreb on the one side toward the West, and the name Sinai toward the East. Simler.

QUEST. X. Whether the water out of the rock did still follow the Israelites.

Vers. 6. THou shalt smite the rocke, and water shall come out of it. The Apostle saith, that the rocke fol|lowed them, 1 Cor. 10.4. 1. Some thinke that this is spoken of Christ the spirituall rocke, that did still accompanie them: but the Apostle meaneth that rocke whereof they dranke, which he called spi|rituall, because it signified Christ. 2. Some will have the water of this rocke still to follow the Israelites, to serve thir necessarie use, as Tertullian calleth it Aquam comitem, the water, that did accompany them: but this cannot be admitted: for afterward Moses smote a rocke in another place, Numb. 20. and in ano|ther place they digged a well for water, Numb. 21.17. which needed not to have beene done, if the water still followed them. 3. Neither yet is it like, that this water did onely satisfie their present necessity, in that place. Osiander. For it came forth abundantly▪ and so ran along: and if in that place onely, it had refreshed them, that whole circuite being barren and drie, they should oft soone againe have beene in distresse for want of water. 4. Therefore I condescend to their opinion, that thinke this was not Vnim di•i beneficium, a benefit for one day, or place, but that they had use of this water afterward in their jour|neye. B•za. 5. But whether this river or streame runneth still to this day, and watereth all that valley, which before was drie, as Tostatus thinketh, quast. 3. I leave as doubtfull, thinking rather, that it ceased, as the Manna did, being appointed onely for a supplie of their present necessity.

QUEST. XI. What nation the Amalekites were, and how they set upon Israel.

Vers. 8. Then came Amalek. 1. The singular number is here put for the plurall, Amalek for the Amalekites: for one man could not bid battell to a whole host. Tostat. 2. Amalek the father of this nation, was the sonne of Eliphaz the sonne of Esau by his concubine Timna, Gen. 36.12. Mention is made of the countrie of the Amalekites in Abrahams time, Gen. 14.7. but that is by a prolepsis, the coun|trie is called by that name which it had when Moses writ that storie, not when these things were done. Simler. 3. Some take these Amalekites to bee the same with the Ismaelites, and Saracens. Gloss. ordin•r. They rather belonged to the Idumeans, or Edomites, but dwelled apart from them, in a part of Arabia by themselves. Tostat. They inhabited the region Gobolitis, and the citie Para, Ioseph. lib. 3. cap. 2. They are thought to be the same with the Arabians called Autai. Zeigler. 4. The manner how Amalek set upon Israel, is declared, Deut. 25.18. how they set upon the hinmost of them, the tayle of the armie, where fol|lowed the women and children, when they were faint and weary; whereas it had beene their part, rather to have met them with bread and water: Like as Shemei cast stones at David, and railed upon him, being already afflicted and pursued of his wicked sonne: and as the Jewes insulted over Christ hanging in tor|ment upon the crosse, and gave him vineger and gall to drinke. Marbach. 5. These Amalekites were the first of all nations that set upon Israel, when they came out of Egypt. And therefore Balaam thus prophesieth of them: Amalek the first of the nations, his latter and shall be destruction, Numb. 24.20. As they were the first that assaulted Israel, so their destruction should not be behind. Ferus. 6. Twice did the Amaleki|tes encounter with Israel, once by stealth, striking the hinmost of them, and this was in Rephidim: another time they fell upon them being joyned with the Cananites, while Israel abode in Cadesh barneah, Numb. 14. Tostat. 7. This Amalek is not unfitly by some, made a representation and lively image of Satan, who lieth in the way, to hinder all true Israelites in their way to the heavenly Canaan. Gloss. interlin.

QUEST. XII. The reasons which moved the Amalekites to set upon the Israelites.

The causes why Amalek did thus lie in waite for Israel, were these: 1. Some thinke they did it. Vt paterne abdicationis ultores essent, to revenge their father Esau quarrell for the losse of the birthright. Calvin. But this was no wrong offered to Esau, seeing he sold his birthright, and so willingly left it: and this revenge rather belonged to the Edomites (if there had beene any wrong done) which were the right offspring of Esau, whereas the Amalekites came by a concubine. Simler. 2. Some thinke that the Amalekites did it of envie, to hinder them from the possession of Canaan, their promised inheritance. Marbach. But it is not like, that they had any such perswasion, that ever they should conquer Canaan:

Page 215

but yet it is very like, that there remained some envie and hatred in them against the Israelites, as there was in Esau toward Iacob. 4. Therefore the Amalekites might feare their owne countrie, lest the Israelites should set upon them, and therefore combined themselves with other nations against them, to prevent all danger, Ioseph. 5. As also, they not onely enterprised this of a malicious, but of a covetous mind also: as it is the manner of the Arabians, to rob and spoile those that goe by the way, thinking to enrich themselves by the prey, and spoile of the Israelites: these were the causes which moved the Amalekites. 6. But on Gods behalfe the reasons were these, that he might exercise his people with new crosses, lest through ease and idlenesse they might wax wanton. Pelarg. That they might have experience of the goodnesse of God, which still added benefits to benefits. Ferus. That they might by this meanes be made more expert, and animated against their enemies, whom they should afterward encounter. Lyran. Tostat. And by this meanes, the Israelites also were furnished, and provided of armour and other necessities, by the spoile of the Amalekites. Ferus, Lyranus, Marbach.

QUEST. XIII. Why Moses goeth not himselfe to battell, but appointeth Ioshua.

Vers. 9. AND Moses said to Ioshua. 1. Moses goeth not himselfe to battell, propter senium, because of his age, he was now 80. yeare old. Ferus. 2. And Quia novit officium suum spirituale magis esse, quàm mundanum, &c. He knew that his office was spirituall, rather than worldly. Marbach. 3. Hee therefore appointeth Ioshua in his place, whose courage and faithfulness hee had experience of. Tostat. As also, because he was to bring the people into the land of Canaan, and to fight the Lords battels, it was fit that the people should be used and acquainted with his government and command. Simler. 5. As also Moses stayeth behind, that he might attend unto prayer, and use spirituall meanes, whith he knew would more prevaile than all externall force. Simler. 6. Beside, this doth notably shadow forth the excellency and preeminence of the Gospell, before the law: for by this, that Ioshua, and not Moses, encountereth with Amalek, and prevaileth against him, was prefigured, Quod non lex nos ab hostibus liberaret, sed Iesus Christus, That not the law could deliver us from our enemies, but Iesus Christ. Ferus.

QUEST. XIV. Whether this Hur were the sonne of Caleb.

Vers. 10. MOses, Aaron and Hur, or Chur, went up. 1. The opinion of some is, that this Hur was the sonne of Caleb, and Miriam, Moses and *Aaron*sister, who, they say, was also called Ephrata, whom Caleb married after his wife Azuba, 1 Chron. 2.20. Contra. But this cannot be for divers reasons: 1. Miriam was elder than Moses by 13. or 14. yeares: being then a maid of discretion, when Moses was an infant, exposed in the river, who stood by to see what became of the child, and went and called Moses mother to be his nurse: Moses then being at this time 80. yeares old, Miriam could not be under 90. at the least, and then was Caleb but 40. when he was sent to search the land, Iosh. 14.7. therefore it is not like that these two were married together, especially considering that Caleb had another wife before. 2. Again, this Hur was now a grave man, and fit for government: for to him and Aaron, Moses committed the affaires of the Common-wealth, when he went up into the mount, Exod. 24 14. how then could he be the sonne of Caleb, who was but 40. yeare old? 3. That Ephrath, which was Caleb's second wife, gave that name unto Bethlehem, of whom it was called Bethlehem Ephrata: but Miriam dying in the wilderness, never came into the land of Canaan, and therefore of her could no place be named there: she was not then that Ephrath, that was Caleb's wife. 4. Now whereas Hur is there said to be the sonne of this Ephrath, it might be another of that name: for in the Scriptures we finde, that divers have had the same name. Sic Lyran. Tostat.

2. Iosephus opinion then is more probable, that this Hur was rather the husband of Miriam Moses sister, and so he was allied unto Moses and Aaron. So Procopius.

QUEST. XV. Whether Moses lifted up his hands in prayer.

Vers. 11. And when Moses held up his hand. 1. Some thinke that Moses held up his hand by course: when the one hand was weary, then he held up the other with a staffe in manner of an ensigne, or banner: Iun. But I rather subscribe here to Oleaster, that hand is put in the singular, for hands: for it followeth afterward, vers. 12. that Aaron & Hur held up his hands on both sides, not by turnes, but at once. 2. Iunius also, with whom consenteth Piscator; thinketh, that Moses did not lift up his hand, as shewing the gesture of one that prayed, but he lift up the staffe with his hand, as a triumphant banner. But against this opinion Tostatus objecteth: 1. That had beene to no purpose, for Moses to hold up the staffe as a signe of victory to the host, because the backes of the Israelites were toward him, seeing the Amalekites from the South, set upon the hindermost part of the campe: and then they could not turne them to see the staffe, without giving advantage to their enemies. 2. There had beene no force in the lifting up the staffe to get the victory, therefore the efficacie was in Moses prayers: to the which end he lift up his hands: as the Apostle exhorteth men to lift up pure hands, 1 Tim. 2.8. 3. But both these opinions are better joyned in one, that both Moses prayed unto God, Et manuum elavatio symbolum fuit additum precibus, And the lifting up of his hands was a signe added to his prayers. Simler. And the Chalde Interpreter expresseth the same sense, that his hands were stretched out to prayer. Vatab. As also the holding up of the staffe betweene his hands, was a signe of the victory. Moses àux & belli quidam signifer foelicem eventum ipse spondebat baculi vexil••, interim prophetiae munere functus: Moses the Captaine of the warre, & as it were the ensigne bearer, did assure them of good successe by the banner of the staffe, not neglecting in the meane time his propheticall office. Pelarg. 4. And as for the former of Tostatus reasons, it cannot certainly be gathered, which way the host of Israel was pitched: it is no other like, but that Moses staffe, which he held up, was in the sight of the Israelites:

and to that end he went up to the top of the hill: * and to this purpose Procopius maketh this fit allusion: Populus si cernit manus legislatoris supinas, vincit, &c. If the people see the hands of the Lawgiuer aloft, they overcome: but if they see them hang downe they are overcome: so if one understand the law spiritually, he obtaineth victorie, but the contrarie falleth out, if one follow the literall sense. 5. But whereas some make this gesture of Moses, holding his hands aloft with the staffe betweene them, to be a representation of the signe of the crosse: I say with Simlerus. Non valde huic sententia innit•r, ut dubia, I doe not much rest upon this sentence, as doubtfull.

QUEST. XVI. How Moses hands were heavie.

Vers. 12. Moses hands were heavie. 1. The peoples sins did not presse downe Moses hands, as Lyranus, for then he should not have lift them up at all, which is Tostatus reason: 2. Neither were his hands feeble through age: for 40. yeare after this, when Moses was an 120. yeare old, Moses was of such a perfect constitution, that it is said, his naturall strength or vigor, was not abated, Deut. 34.7. 3. Neither yet is this to be imputed to Moses infirmitie of mind, as our Saviour saith, The spirit is readie, but the flesh is weake, as though Moses waxed cold in prayer. Ferus. 4. Nor yet doe I consent to them, that thinke Moses still continued his prayers, but that this remission was onely in his strength: Continuatus labor ab eo perferri non potuit, Continuall labour, in lifting up of his hands hee could not endure. And yet God would have the victorie to follow the lifting up, or falling of Moses hands, to testifie unto the people, that the victorie was onely from God, to whom Moses did elevate his hands. Simler. For if Moses inward strength and zeale had continued all one, it is like the same effect would have followed 5. Wherefore, I thinke rather with Calvin: Iste defectus ex singulari zeli vehementia natus est: This defect in Moses proceeded not (of any tepiditie or coldnesse in Moses) but from the vehemencie of his zeale: for while he lift up his hands, Intentissime orabat, & magna animi contentione, He prayed vehemently, and with great earnestnesse of mind. Vatab. The remitting of his hands then shewed an inward abating of his zeale and fervencie, which may befall the most perfect men: for the gesture of them that pray, hath a reciprocall worke upon the affections, which first doe bring forth the humble gesture of the bodie, and by the same, they are againe kindled and inflamed: as Augustine hath this excellent saying, Gestu corporis, ut flexione genarum, extensione manuum seipsum magis excitat homo ad orandum, &c. By the gesture of the bodie, as the bowing of the knee, the stretching out of the hands, a man doth stirre himselfe up the rather to prayer: and these being visibly done, the invisible affection of the soule is increased: and by this meanes, Affectus cordis, qui ut ista fierent praecessit, quum facta sunt, crescit: The affection of the heart which went before these were done, is increased, when they are done. So then, Moses hands became steadie afterwards being supported; and so, the constancie of the gesture of the bodie, did rebound upon the affection of the soule, which in like manner continued constant and fervent. 6. Rupertus mysticall application is not here to be rejected: Moses manus graves erant, Moses hands were heavie, because the law could bring nothing to perfection.

QUEST. XVII. Of the supporting and bearing up of Moses hands.

Vers. 12. And they tooke a stone, and put it under him, &c. 1. Moses was both wayes wearied, both in standing so long, and in holding up his hands all that while, therefore they provide both wayes for his infirmitie and weaknesse: they put under a stone for him to sit upon, and of each side held up his hands. Tostat. 2. As they supported and bare up his hands; so no doubt they joyned with him in their earnest prayers and desires unto God: Quum manus ejus attollerent, mentes etiam habebant ad Deum erectas. As they lift up his hands, so also they had their minds erected unto God. Calvin. 3. His hands are said to be steadie to the going downe of the sunne, not that then they began to be faint, but then the battell being ended, and the victorie obtained, there was no need for him any longer to hold up his hands. 4. Divers allegories are made of this place: as that Moses hands, that is, the precepts of the law are heavie, but that by Aaron, who signifieth Christ, and Hur; that is, the holy Ghost, they are made easie and light. Ferus. Some by Moses and Hur, understand the two Testaments: upon the which our prayer must relie. Some againe thus allegorize: Aarrn, they say, signifieth montanus, hillie, and Hur, fire, so two things support our prayer, high and heavenly meditation, and fervent charitie. Lyran. But Chur signifieth white, V. light or fire: and beside the false etymologie, these allegories are too curious, and somewhat farre fetcht. 5. But Rupertus mysticall application may be received: who by this stone understandeth the grace of the Gospell, In quasederet Moses, id est, lex adimpleretur: whereon Moses sate, that is, the law was fulfilled. And this morall accommodation also is very fit: that by Aaron and Hur, all godly Ministers may learne, Quomodo se mutuò animare debeant, & incitare ad preces: How they ought to animate and stirre up one another unto prayer. Marbach.

Vers. 13. Ioshua discomfited Amalek and his people. 1. Strabo hath this opinion, that this Amalek, the father of the Amalekites, should bee descended of Ismael. Lyranus and Tostatus would convince him of error herein, because the young man, which came running to David and confessed that hee had killed Saul, said he was an Amalekite, and yet he is generally held to have beene the sonne of Doeg, that was an Edomite: But this were to prove a thing more certaine, by that which is uncertaine: for it is evident and certaine out of the Scripture, that Amalek the sonne of Eliphaz came of Esau, Gen. 36. and whether that young man were the sonne of Doeg, is uncertaine. 2. Where it is said, Amalek and his people: Tostatus doth much busie himselfe to shew, that this could not be Amalek the sonne of Eliphaz, for then he must have beene above 260. yeare old: for the time of the sojourning of Israel in Egypt, was 215. yeare, and when Iacob descended thither, he was an 130. yeare old, about whose 80. yeare Amalek might be borne: and so he resolveth that this was not that Amalek, but another of that name, descended of that race. Tostat. quast. 7. in Exod. But all this labour might have beene well spared, for by Amalek, not any one person, but the whole nation of the Amalekites is understood: as Israel is usually in Scripture taken for the Israelites: and his people were those, which ayded and assisted them. *Vatab. As Iosephus sheweth, how the King of Amalek sent unto other nations, and that they combined themselves together against Israel. 3. Thus we see how this victorie was atchieved: First and principally by God the Author, and cause thereof, then the meanes were of two sorts, partly spirituall by the earnest prayer of Moses, partly externall by Ioshuas sword. Simler. And here began the prophecie to take place, concerning Iacob and Esau, The elder shall serve the younger. Borrh.

QUEST. XIX. What booke this was wherein Moses is commanded to write this storie.

Vers. 14. Write this for a remembrance in the booke. 1. Tostatus thinketh, that this was some speciall booke beside this present storie, and namely that, which is called the booke of Iashar, or the Righteous, which is mentioned, Iosh. 10. and that many things were written in that booke by way of prophecie, which booke was written by Moses, but is now lost, because when that Heretikes had corrupted this booke, the ancient Church neglected it, and had no care of it, lest in receiving the Verities in that booke, they should together have received their Falsities and Heresies. Tostat. quast. 7. in Exod. Contra. 1. That this booke of Iashar was written by Moses, it is not like: seeing mention is made thereof in Dauids time, 2 Sam. 1.18. for if all those stories had beene prophetically set downe in that booke aforehand, what needed those severall historicall books of Scripture to have beene written afterward? 2. Neither had that beene a good reason, to reject that booke, because it had beene corrupted: for so some bookes of canonicall Scripture also, should have beene laid aside, which some Heretikes corrupt fingers have beene meddling with. 3. This booke of Iashar therefore was none other than a Chronicle of the acts and gestes of the people of God, which booke is now lost, as divers other historicall books. Iun. 4. Tostatus addeth further, that this booke of Iashar was the same booke, which is called the booke of the battels of the Lord, Numb. 21.14. which was not that booke of Numbers: for there is a confirmation of those things, then presently done by a former book, which prophetically described those warres: But it is no good argument, thus to reason: the booke of the battels of the Lord is not the booke of Numbers, therefore it is that other booke of Iashar: some thinke it was the booke of Judges. Genevens. Some a booke now missing, the Scriptures now extant being sufficient. Osiander. The best answer is, that the word sepher, signifieth as well a rehearsall, as a booke, as it is taken, Matth. 1.1. The booke of the generation of Iesus Christ. The meaning then is, that when the battels of the Lord are rehearsed, these also shall be spoken of, which by Gods providence the Amorites made against Moab, preparing an inheritance for the children of Israel, who were forbidden to deale directly against Moab. Iun. Numb. 21. annot. 8. 5. Wherefore the booke, wherein Moses did make a memoriall of this thing▪ was no other than this present historie of Exodus, and other his historicall commentaries, which are likewise mentioned, chap. 34.17. Deut. 31.9.22. Iun. Calvin. Simler. This same charge is likewise registred by Moses, Deut. 25.17. Galas. 6. This the Lord would have committed to writing for these causes: 1. That a thankfull memorie should still be retained in time to come, of this great deliverance. 2. That the people of God should know the sentence denounced against Amalek, which should be executed in due time. Simler. 3. And that Saul, who was to performe this service, should with better courage and boldnesse, set upon that enterprise. Ferus.

QUEST. XX. Why Moses is commanded to rehearse it to Ioshua

Vers. 14. REhearse it, or as the Hebrew is, put in the cares of Ioshua. 1. Moses is bidden to intimate this to Ioshua, because he was to be his successor. Iun. 2. Some thinke, that this was the thing, which he should rehearse to Ioshua, how Moses by his prayer, and the lifting up of his hands, obtained the victorie, which Ioshua was not present to see. Pellican. But it followeth in the next words, what it was, namely the sentence of God, for the utter extirpation of Amalek. 3. That both it might be an incourage|ment to Ioshua against the rest of Gods enemies, seeing, that they, which made the first attempt, are thus judged of God. Simler. As also to be a caveat unto Ioshua, and the Israelites, that they should make no league or peace with this nation, which before the Lord stood accursed. Tostat. 4. In like manner, God will have it written in every faithfull mans heart, that he hath ordained the Devill and his Angels, and all our spirituall enemies, that wee should be at perpetuall defiance with them: Ferus, Rupert. 5. Neither was this charge given to Ioshua, that they should beare still in mind this injurie, which was offered them by the Amalekites: but that they should thinke of the judgements of God against them: it is one thing to remember private wrongs, another to beare in mind the judgements of God given in charge.

QUEST. XXI. Whether Amalek were wholly destroyed by Saul.

Vers. 14. I Will utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek, &c. Tostatus here affirmeth thus, Nomen Amalechitarum totaliter perit tempore Saulis, That the name of the Amalekites did wholly perish in the time of Saul, quast. 7. in Exod. But this appeareth to bee otherwise: for after that time, when Saul was sent against Amalek, 1 Sam. 15. (and after that, Tostatus saith, Non fuit populus Amalechitarum, &c. There was  more people of the Amalekites) wee find that the Amalekites burnt Zildag Davids Citie, 1 Sam. 30.2. Some therefore thinke, that the meaning is, that the Lord would overthrow and destroy, statum & dominium, the state, Kingdome and dominion of that nation. Pellican. But the words are more generall, hee would put out the remembrance, or memorie of Amalek. 3. The truth then is this, that God gave indeed a charge unto Saul, utterly to destroy Amalek: and if Saul had done his faithfull ende|vour at that time, there had not beene any left: But Saul being negligent to execute the Lords comman|dement, onely the destroying those Amalekites, that were nearest, and made resistance, letting them alone which were farther off; Iun. 1 Sam. 15. Martyr. 1 Sam. 27.8. David afterward perfected what Saul had omitted, & did smite Amalek, 1 Sam. 27.8. & afterward he put to the sword the whole host of the Amale|kites, letting none to escape, saving 400. which rode away upon camels, 1 Sam. 30.17. And after this, we find no great exploit done by that nation: but by little and little they were rooted out, according to the sentence of God here decreed against them.

QUEST. XXII. Of the building of the Altar, and the name thereof.

Vers. 15. And Moses built an Altar, and called it Jehovah nissi. 1. Moses by the example of the godly Patriarkes built an Altar, whereon to offer sacrifice unto God, and to shew his thankfulness for this great victorie. Simler. 2. There was yet no settled Priesthood ordained, but the right of sacrific|ing belonged unto the first borne, as mention is made afterward of certaine young men of the children of Israel, which were sent to offer sacrifice, chap.24.8. Now Moses, though he were not the first borne (Aaron being elder than he) yet he was extraordinarily consecrated of God both Prince and Priest, to offer sacrific|ice, who consecrated Aaron afterward for the Priesthood. Tostat.3. The name given unto this Altar, signifieth, Jehovah is my banner: which name some thinke was not given to the Altar, but is referred to the sacrifices there offered. Calvin. And so the Chalde interpreteth, that hee worshipped God upon that Altar. Tostatus saith, that the name of God is incommunicable, and cannot be given unto the creatures, but complexè with some other addition, as Gen. 22. Abraham calleth the mountaine, The Lord will be seene: but this observation is not alwayes true: for Iakob called the Altar which he set up in Sechem, The mightie God of Israel, without any other addition: where notwithstanding the word Altar must be supplied: The Altar of the mightie God of Israel. Iun. As we use commonly to say, We will goe to S. Andrewes, meaning the Church so called. Oleaster. So the word Altar is to be supplied here, The Altar of Jehovah my banner. Simler.

QUEST. XXIII. Of the meaning of these words, The hand is upon the throne of Iah.

Vers. 16. The hand is on the throne of Iah. 1. Here the Latine translator readeth very corruptly, manus solius Domini, the hand, is of the Lord onely, for, manus super solium Domini, the hand is on the throne of God: and the Interlineary glosse giveth this note upon it: Omnia opera nostra operatur in nobis, He worketh all our works in us, which is a true note, but upon a wrong text. 2. Iunius in his last edition, doth understand it of Amalek, reading thus, Because the hand of Amalek was against the throne of Iah, that is, against his people: But here, Amalek is thrust into the text: and Iunius himselfe hath reversed that in|terpretation, in his Analysis, inclining to their opinion, that take this to be the forme of an oath, which the Lord taketh for the assurance of this sentence against Amalek. 3. Some by the throne of God under|stand the heavens, and make this the meaning, that as the covenant with the heavens is sure, so this decree against Amalek. Ex Simler. 4. Others by the hand upon the throne, understand the power and majesty of God, which with an outstretched hand shall bee revenged of Amalek. Iunius in his first edition, Tostat. Lyrans. Galas. 5. Some by throne interpret the Church of God, which is as Gods seate and resting place, which hee will defend against all the adversaries thereof. Ex Calvin. 6. But the fittest interpretation of all is this, that God as by the lifting up his hand to heaven, and laying it upon his throne, doth sweare that he will have continuall warre with Amalek: for as men use to lift up their hand, when they take an oath, as Abraham, Gen. 14.22. so the like phrase is used of God, as Deut. 32.40. I lift up mine hand to heaven, and say I live for ever, Iun. Analys. Borrh. Pellican. For divers formes are set forth in the Scrip|ture of the Lords oath: sometime hee sweareth by himselfe, Gen. 22.16. sometime by his excellencie, Amos 8.7. sometime by his life, Ezech. 18.3. As I live, saith the Lord: and by lifting up his hand to heaven, Deut. 32.40. and by his throne, as in this place. Oleaster.7. So by this oath, the Lord con|firmeth his sentence against Amalek, that hee will have warre against him, from generation to genera|tion, that is, continually, till hee have made an end of him, which was fulfilled partly under the Judges, and under the Kings, specially Saul and David: and under the Persian government, for Ha|mon who was subdued by Ester, was an Agagite, that is, an Amalekite of the posteritie of Agag. Simler. Iunius.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Christ is the rocke, whereout issueth the waters of life.

Vers. 6. THou shalt smite the rocke, and water shall runne out of it. This rocke is interpreted to be Christ, by the Apostle, 1 Cor. 10.4. The rocke was Christ: Christ is diversly said to bee a rocke: he is a most sure rocke, against the which the gates of hell shall not prevaile, Matth. 16.18. hee is a rocke of offence to the wicked and unbeleevvers, Rom. 9.22. Behold, I lay in Sion a stumbling blocke, and a rocke to make men fall: hee is a rocke, upon the which the faithfull doe relie, 1 Pet. 2.6. Behold I put in Sion a chiefe corner stone, elect and precious, and he that beleeveth therein, shall not bee ashamed: hee is a rocke or stone of judgement, that upon whom it falleth, it grindeth them to powder, Matth. 21.44. This rocke giveth us water of life: First, his most precious blood, which issued out of his side, whereby we are cleansed. Secondly, the Spirit of grace, which is the water of life, as it is interpreted, Ioh. 8.38. He that beleeveth in me, out of his bellie shall flow rivers of waters of life: this spake he of the Spirit, which they that beleeve in him should receive, &c. The people asked this water of Moses, but he could not give it them: they receive it out of the rocke. Ferus.

2. Doct. It is lawfull for Christians to defend themselves by warre.

Vers. 9. MOses said to Ioshua, chuse us out men and goe fight. Hence is proved the lawfulness of warre against the Anabaptists, which denie the use of armour and weapons unto Christians. Pe/larg. It is lawfull for the people of God to defend themselves with weapons, against their enemies. Piscat. For Moses doth here nothing of himselfe, but by Gods direction.

3. Doct. Reverent outward gesture to be used in prayer.

Vers. 11. AND when Moses lift up his hands, &c. A comely reverent gesture is to be used in prayer, to stir up the devotion of the minde: as Moses lift up his hands, Salomon bowed the knee: our blessed Saviour fell upon his face. Ferus.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Conf. Against the doctrine of merits.

Vers. 3. AND the people murmured, &c. Upon these words Rupertus hath this good note: * Non ergo ille populus gloriatur, quod pro suis meritis magnificaverit cum Dominus, &c. Let not therefore that people baast, that God hath magnified them for their merits: Neither did the Lord looke upon the Gentiles, in making them his people, for any worthinesse in them, but for his owne mercie sake hath he called us to the knowledge of his truth, for otherwise, what we are in our selves, the Apostle sheweth in the Psalme: They have all gone out of the way, &c. there is none that doth good, no not one, Rom. 3.12.

2. Conf. That signes and ceremonies doe not actually conferre grace.

Vers. 6. BEhold I will stand there in the rocke before thee. Otherwise, if God had not concurred with that outward act and ceremonie, in smiting the rocke with the rod, and given force and efficacie unto it, Irrita fuisset & lusoria rupis percussio. The smiting of the rocke had beene in vaine and trifling. Calvin. We see then, that ceremonies have no efficacie or activitie of themselves: they cannot conferre and give grace, as the Romanists teach, but the Spirit and word of God concurring, giveth operation unto the externall signes: as here by Gods standing upon the rocke, not by Moses striking of the rocke, the waters gushed out: so wee are cleansed by the washing of water, as the Apostle saith, but yet through the Word, Ephes. 5.26.

3. Conf. That the wicked cannot eat or drinke the bodie and bloud of Christ in the Eucharist.

Vers. 6. THat the people may drinke. Osiander holding with the rest of the Lutherans, the carnall presence of Christ in the Eucharist, upon these words giveth this corrupt glosse: Sicut inter Israelitas multi erant impii, &c. As among the Israelites there were many wicked men, which did draw water out of the rocke, which notwithstanding entred not into the land of Canaan, but fell in the wilderness, 1 Cor. 10. So among Christians, many doe drinke and eat the bodie and bloud of Christ, which for their unbeleefe shall not enter into life eternall. His position here with the rest of the Consubstantialists, is (therein agreeing with the Romanists) that the wicked and unbelievers, doe eat and drinke the very bodie and bloud of Christ. Contra. 1. But first he should have proved out of this place, that there is a carnall and corporall presence of Christs body and bloud in the Eucharist, before the other assertion can have any place, that the wicked are partakers of it. But this text maketh directly against that carnall and grosse conceit: for as Christ saith of the bread, which hee brake to his disciples, This is my body, which is the chiefe text they have, whereupon to ground that fansie: so S. Paul saith, this rocke was Christ: like as then, neither the rocke was verily Christs body, nor the water thereout issuing his bloud, but onely in signification, and representation: so the bread and wine are lively, demonstrative, and exhibiting signes of the body and bloud of Christ, to the faith of the receiver, and no otherwise. 2. The other position is directly opposite to the Scripture, Whosoever eateth my flesh, and drinketh my bloud, hath eternall life, Ioh. 6.54. Hee that eateth my flesh and drinketh my bloud, dwelleth in mee, and I in him, vers. 56. Hee that eateth mee, even hee shall live by me. But the wicked and unbelievers, neither have eternall life, neither doe they dwell in Christ, or Christ in them, neither doe they live by Christ: which life is by faith, as the Apostle saith, I live by the faith in the Sonne of God, Galath. 2.20. therefore they cannot eat or drinke the body and bloud of Christ.

6. Places of Morall Observations.

1. Observ. That one affliction followeth another, as long as we are in this life.

Vers. 1. Where was no water for the people to drinke. God doth divers wayes exercise his children, and trie their faith, as before with want of food, so now with penury of water and presently after with warre. Piscator. And thus it falleth out in the desert and wilderness of this life, that one temptation followeth another, till we come to the celestiall Canaan, and so as the Scripture saith, We must through many afflictions enter into the Kingdome of heaven, Act. 14.22.

2. Observ. Ministers must not intermit their dutie, though it be evill accepted.

Vers. 4. ANd Moses cried to the Lord. Moses is not discouraged by the ingratitude and murmuring of the people, to forsake his calling: hee intermitteth not his dutie, nor ceaseth to pray for them: whereby the Ministers of Jesus Christ are taught, that notwithstanding the evill acceptance with the world of their painfull, and godly labours, they should persevere and continue still in discharging their dutie. Marbach. As Samuelsaith, God forbid that I should sinne against the Lord, and cease praying for you, Sam. 12.23.

3. Observ. We must still goe forward and hold out to the end.

Vers. 1. They departed by their journey. As the Israelites stayed not in one place, but still went forward, approaching still nearer to the promised land: so we must still goe forward in the pilgrimage of this life; and hold out to the end of our journey, till we have attained to our celestiall inheritance, as the Apostle saith, Let us studie to enter into that rest, lest any man fall away after the same example of disobedience, Heb. 4.11. Ferus.

4. Observ. Prayer is not effectually, unless it be fervent.

Vers. 11. When he let his hands downe, Amalek prevailed. While Moses prayer was fervent, it was effectually: but when his zeale abated, which is signified by the letting downe of his hands, he failed of the effect: which teacheth us, that so long as we lift up hearts and hands unto God by a lively faith, we overcome our spirituall enemies, but when our zeale waxeth cold, and our faith faint, they are superiour. Piscator. Therefore the Apostle having said, The prayer of a righteous man availeth much, addeth, if it be fervent, Iames 5.16.

5. Observ. The punishment of the wicked though it be deferred, will most certainly come.

Vers. 14. I Will utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek. This was not presently accomplished: but the judgements of God were suspended above 400. yeares, untill the reigne of Saul: which sheweth that the judgements of God, though they be deferred a long time, yet in the end will most certainly come. Marbach. As the Apostle saith, Whose judgement long agoe is not farre off, and their damnation sleepeth not, 2. Pet. 23.

CHAP. XVIII.

1. The method and Argument.

THe summe of this Chapter is to shew the politike order of government instituted in Israel. 1. By whom it was brought in. 2. By what occasion. 3. And the manner thereof.

First, as touching the Author and adviser, it was Iethro, Moses father in law: of whom three things are declared. 1. His coming unto Moses, both upon what occasion, vers. 1. whom he bringeth with him, Moses wife and his two sons, who are described by their names, vers. 3.4. whether he cometh, vers. 5. 2. His manner of entertainment, when shee was come, where these things are expressed: 1. His message to Moses. 2. Moses greeting, vers. 7. and narration of such things, as the Lord had done for them, vers. 8. 3. Iethro his congratulation, vers. 9.10. and confession of God, vers. 11. 4. His solemne admittance and joyning to the people of God, vers. 12.

Secondly, the occasion followeth: wherein is shewed the fact, vers. 13. and thereupon the conference betweene Iethro and Moses, consisting of his demand, vers. 14. and Moses answer, vers. 15.16.

Thirdly, in the manner and matter of this forme of government: 1. There is Iethro his reprehension of Moses order, with his reasons, vers. 17.18. 2. His advice and counsell is propounded, what course should be taken in the greater and weightier causes, which hee would have reserved to Moses owne healing, vers. 19.20. what provision should be made in chusing officers, and governours for the rest, vers. 21.22. with the reasons of his counsell, vers. 23. 3. Then followeth the putting in practice of this counsell, first by Moses, vers. 24.25. in chusing of such officers, as Iethro prescribed: then by the officers and Judges themselves, vers. 26. And so Iethro is dismissed, vers. 27.

2. The divers readings.

Vers. 1. The Prince of Midian. I. C. rather than, Priest. * B. G. cum cater. cohendoth not onely signifie a Priest, but Prince • as David's sonnes are called cohanim, not Priests, but chiefe rulers: for they being of the tribe of Iudah, could not be Priests. Tostatus, Oleaster.

Vers. 1. The father in law. I. V. cum caeter. cognatur the kinsman. * L. but chothen signifieth rather a father in law: as it is taken, Exod 3.1.

Vers. 2. Then Iethro Moses father in law tooke. I.B.G. cum caeter. then he tooke. L. here the former part of the clause is clipped off.

Vers. 11. For in that thing, wherein they were proud, he is above them, that is, superiour unto them. Iun. Better than, because they dealt proudly against them. L.S.P. for here these words, in the thing which; are omitted, or, wherein he dealt proudly against them, did they perish. V. or were destroyed themselves B. or were recompensed. G. All these words are added by way of explanation. But after the first reading▪ ghalehem, is better translated, above them, than, against them: and it is referred rather to the Lord, than to the Egyptians, and so the sense is full, without any addition.

Vers. 23. If thou doe this thing, and God commande thee, both thou shalt be able to endure. * G.I.B.A.P. better than, in these things, which God commandeth thee, thou mayst stand. V. Here these things, is added; or, if thou doe this thing, thou shalt fulfill the commandment of God. L. fulfill, is added; or, God shall strengthen thee. S. But the word tsavah, signifieth to command. See the meaning of these words after|ward, quest. 23.

3. The Explanation of doubtfull and difficult questions.

QUEST. I. Whether Iethro and Rohuel, or R•ghuel were the same man.

Vers. 1. When Iethro the Priest, or Prince of Midian. 1. Some thinke, that Reguel mentioned, Exod. 2. Iethro here named, and chap. 3.1. and Hobab, Numb. 10. were all one. Sic Lyran. Tostat. Pelarg. So also the Latine translator readeth, Exod. 2. for Reguel, Iethro: Lyranus from the Hebrewes giveth this reason, from the notation of the name Iethro, and Hobab: the first signifieth adj•ciens, adding; for he added unto other ordinances of Moses, that of appointing officers; and the other word, signifieth diligens, loving, because hee loved the law of God, and was converted to Judaisme. But that Hobab, Iethro and Reguel, are not the same, is evident, * Numb. 10.29. where Hobab is said to be the sonne of Reguel. 2. Oleaster thinketh Iethro and Reguel to be the same, (so also Iosephus) and that Hobab, or Chobab, was the sonne of Iethro and Reguel, and brother to Zipporah: And his reason, that Iethro and Reguel are all one, is, because the same title is given to them both: Iethro is said to be the Prince of Midian, Exod. 3.1. and so is Reguel, Exod. 2. Contra. 1. The reason why in one place the father is called the Prince, in another the sonne, is, because the sonnes succeeded the fathers in the principallitie and Priest|hood, among the Gentiles, as they did among the Jewes. Lipoman. in 2. Exod. Which thing was usuall in the primitive Church, as Polycrates Bishop of Ephesus, writing to Victor Bishop of Rome, there sheweth, that seven of his ancestors had beene Bishops in that place before him, and he was the eighth, Euseb. lib. 5. cap. 22. Pellican. 2. Hobab could not be brother unto Zipporah, for Numb. 10.29. hee is called chothen, the father in law of Moses: which word, though Oleaster contend to signifie a kinsman: yet seeing Iethro is called by the same word chothen, Exod. 3.1. it seemeth in the same sense also, to be given unto Hobab. 3. Therefore the truer opinion is, that Iethro and Hobab were all one, and Reguel was father unto Iethro, and grandfather to Zipporah Moses wife. Iun. Pellican. as is before shewed, cap. 2. quaest. 26. 4. Some thinke, that Iethro was a common name, both to the father, which was Reghuel, and to the sonne, which was Hobab. Galas. Exod. 3.1. But that is not like, for Iethro onely hath this addition, Moses father in law, as it is ten times repeated in this Chapter: But Reghuel is not so called, Exod. 2. whose daughter Zipporah is said to be, because the grandfathers with the Hebrewes are so called by the name of fathers. I rest therefore in the former opinion, as most probable. 5. Concerning the word cohen▪ which signifieth both Prince and Priest, and whether Iethro were Prince or Priest, or rather both, see before, cap. 2. quaest. 27. It was an ancient custome, that they which were Rulers and Magistrates, to defend the people, did execute also the Priests office, by sacrifices and prayer, to protect and direct them: such an one was Melchisedeck, and Iethro here. Lippoman. 6. Likewise, whether Iethro were the worshipper of the true God, is handled before, chap. 2. quest. 28. where it is resolved, that he was a worshipper of the true God, though not purely, as Calvin saith, Mihi videtur vitiatum fuisse aliqua ex parte illius sacerdotium: It seemeth to me, that his Priesthood had some blemish, and was stained with superstition: But it is not like that he sacrificed to Idols, for Moses in all likelihood, would not have married his daughter then, or conversed with him so long. Pro/copius saith, that they worshipped the most high God, as Melchisedeck did: Nec tamen interim abstineb•nt ab idolatria, But yet they abstained not from idolatrie. But as Calvin saith, there is difference betweene Idollatrie, Et impurum Dei cultum & degenerem in unae parte, And the impure worship of God, degenerating in some one part. The religion then, which Iethro professed, was principally the worship of the true God, yet intermingled with some superstitions of the idolatrous heathen: though hee was not a professed Idolater.

QUEST. II. How Iethro heard what the Lord had done for Moses and Israel.

When he heard all that God had done. 1. Some thinke, that Moses sent his wife out of the desert, unto her father in law, and that by this meanes, Iethro had intelligence of Moses affaires. Calvin. But this to be unlikely, shall be shewed afterward: seeing it is very probable, that Moses had sent backe his wife from the place, where the child was circumcised by the way, Exod. 4. 2. Some thinke, that Moses had sent some message unto Iethro, and so signified unto him what had happened. Simler. But the manner of speech, When he heard, giveth rather, that he was led by some common fame and rumor; though it is most like, that Moses being now not farre from Midian, would have sent to his father in law, to his wife and children, which were deare unto him, if Iethro had not prevented him. 3. Therefore the common fame and rumor, which was spread among the nations, moved Iethro to come. Galas. Especially seeing Midian was not far from Egypt, bordering upon the red sea. Simler. And now Moses was not far from Midian, being about mount Sinai, where he had beene before time accustomed to keepe his fathers sheepe. Tostat. From whence the report and rumour of the Israelites, and their acts, as the late victorie obtained against Amalek, might easily be brought.

QUEST. III. The causes which moved Iethro to come unto Moses.

Vers. 2. Then Iethro tooke Zipporah, &c. The causes which moved Iethro to take this journey, were these: 1. That he might congratulate and rejoyce for those great mercies and benefits, which the Lord had vouchsafed unto Moses and all Israel. Simler. Which his joy is expressed afterward, vers. 9. Some of those benefits concerned Moses, and the people in generall, as the deliverance out of Egypt, their passing thorow the red Sea, the giving of Manna: but some specially belonged unto Moses: as that the Lord had made him the Captaine and guide of his people, and had given him power to worke great miracles. Tostat. Therefore both these are put together in the text: When he had heard, what the Lord had done for Moses, and for Israel his people. Iethro therefore came, to shew and expresse his joy in both these respects. 2. Beside, another end of his comming was, to bring unto Moses his wife and children. Simler. For he was not now farre off from the host of Israel, the Citie of Midian being held to be but 16. miles distant from Rephidim, where they had pitched last. Pelarg. 3. Further, though Iethro doubted not of the truth of those things, which he had heard, yet he is desirous to come to be an eye witnesse, and present beholder of those great works, which the Lord had done for them, as of the cloudie and fierie pillar, of the Manna, that fell dayly, and the water that issued out of the rocke. Simler. 4. Yea he came to glorifie God, to whom he offered sacrifice, vers. 12. Pellican. and to joyne himselfe to the people of God: wherein appeared Gods providence, both toward Moses and Iethro: that as he was a comfort and reliefe to Mose in his exile, for outward things; so Moses should be a meanes for his spirituall good, to bring him to the knowledge of God. Ferus.

Vers. 2. After the sending her away. 1. Some read, after the sending, that is, of gifts, either of Moses to his father in law: Simler. or, of Iethro with his daughter. Ex Lippoman. But the pronoun ha, is of the feminine gender, and cannot agree to either of them: some therefore understand it of gifts, which Zipporah sent to Moses: but it is more like, she would first come her selfe, as she doth, Moses being so neere, then send unto him. 2. It is better therefore referred to Moses sending away of Zipporah, to her fathers house: which some thinke Moses did, after he was come into the desert, to see her father, and rejoyce with him: for (say they) it is not like but that Moses had his wife and children with him into Egypt, that they might bee partakers of that great deliverance, which the Lord was to worke for them. Calvin. But the manner of the description of this storie, how Iethro, when he had heard. &c. tooke Zipporah, and her two sonnes, sheweth, that Iethro was moved to take this journey, by the fame, which hee heard, and not by any report or information by Zipporah, which should be sent unto him. And though they went not downe into Egypt with Moses, yet were they partakers of that deliverance: even as they were, which were afterward borne in the desert: specially seeing Moses two sonnes, were by circumcision graft into the people of God. Simler. 3. Therefore the most probable opinion is, that Moses had sent Zipporah with her sonnes, backe unto her father, at such time as the child was circumcised by the way in the Inne. Some thinke that she fell into a disease, by seeing that bloudie spectacle of the circumcision of her sonne, and so could goe no further. Vatab. Some, that Noluit cum, amplius sequi, that she refused to follow Moses any further. Ferus. Some, that Moses would not have her with him, because she was not able to goe thorow such difficulties in Egypt: Abraham and Iacob went downe into Egypt, because they were strong: Non potuit descendere in Aegyptum & subire agones Aegyptiorum, nisi athleta probabili. None could goe downe into Egypt, and undergoe the agonies of the Egyptians, but a strong champion. Glass. ordinar. Ex Origen. But the truth is, that Zipporah her selfe, was offended with the circumcision of her child, and so willing to returne, and that Moses also gave his consent therewithall: Dicendum, quòd <◇> de voluntate Moses, &c. Wee must say it was with the will of Moses, for hee perceived that his wife and children would bee but a burden unto him, in that businesse, which hee went about. Lyran. Iun. Galas. Pellican. Tostat.

Vers. 3. And her two sonnes, &c. 1. We see that the Israelites did not abhorre or decline the mariage of strange women, so that they were instructed in the faith, and vertuously given: as Ioseph married Potiphars daughter, Booz, Ruth and here Moses Zipporah. 2. Mention is made onely of his sonnes: the holy Fathers and Patriarks are found to have had more sonnes, than daughters; or it is, because they use not to be counted in the catalogue and genealogie. 3. Moses in giving names to his sonnes, which did put him in minde of Gods mercies and benefits toward him, doth teach us what names to impose upon our children: such as may both stir us and them up to a thankfull remembrance of the benefits, which we receive. Lippo♦♦. Pellican.

Delivered me from the sword of Pharaoh. 1. Some doe here give credit unto that unwritten relation, that Moses escaped Pharaohs sword in this manner: He being convented before Pharaoh, and asked why hee killed the Egyptian, boldly made answer, that he had done it justly: thereupon Pharaoh com|manding him to be killed; the executioner was smitten with blindnesse, that seeing every one beside, he could not see Moses: and Pharaoh was taken with such stupiditie, that seeing Moses to escape, hee had no power to bid any to lay hands of him to stay him. Tostat. 2 But wee need not run to any such del|vised tale, nor faine miracles, where no necessitie is: Moses is said to bee delivered, &c. because hee escaped by flight, Ne Pharaoh de illo supplicium sumeret, That Pharaoh should take no punishment of him. Osiander.

QUEST. VII. At what time Iethro came to Moses before the law given in mount Sinai, or after.

Vers. 5. ANd Iethro Moses father in law came, &c. 1. Some thinke, that Iethro came unto Moses, in the end of the first yeare of their departure out of Egypt, or in the beginning of the second, after they had received the law in mount Sinai, and that the historie is transposed. Tostat. Cajetan. Simle/rus also holdeth, that he came about the fourteenth moneth after their comming out of Egypt. The argu|ments brought to confirme this opinion are these.

1. Because it is like that before Iethro set forth, hee heard certainly where the Israelites encamped, namely by mount Sinai: for hee would not take an uncertaine journey, to wander up and downe in the wilderness: now he could not come to mount Sinai, within lesse than two or three dayes journey, from that part of Midian, where Iethro remained: for when Moses went from Iethro with his wife and chil|dren, he lodged by the way, where that heavy chaunce befell touching the circumcision of his child, and after that hee went forward, and met with Aaron in the mount of God, Exod. 4.27. It seemeth then that this mount of God, which was Sinai, was two or three dayes journey from Iethros place: Then could not Iethro come before the law was given, for the third day after they pitched in the wilderness of Sinai the law was given, chap. 19.11. And if it were graunted, that Iethro came to mount Sinai, before the Israe|lites encamped there: yet this here described could not be done before the law was given: for this storie of Iethros entertainment one day, of viewing and seeing Moses order in judging the people, which was upon the next, and of chusing and appointing of officers and Judges, upon the third, all which required three dayes, could not be done in the three first dayes, after their encamping by mount Sinai: for the first day God spake unto Moses, to sanctifie the people the next, which was no fit time to heare suites and controversies, and the third day when the Lord gave the law, they could not intend to chuse officers. So Tostat.

Contra. All this long discourse may bee answered in one word, that herein is their errour: they take the mount of God here spoken of, for Sinai, whereas it was mount Choreb, chap. 18.6 from whence the Israelites were not yet departed; which is called the mount of God, chap. 3.1. because of the vision of the bush, which Moses saw there. Iun. Genevens. Which Choreb was the generall name of all that hillie tract or circuite, in the which was situate more toward the East the mount Sinai: wherefore all this here men|tioned in this Chapter, was done before the Israelites encamped by mount Sinai, and so all the former dif|ficulties are removed, Iosephus therefore is deceived, that thinketh that Iethro came in the third moneth to mount Sinai; for by this meanes should all this businesse fall into that very time, when the people were preparing themselves to receive the law.

2. Neither is it like, that Iethro came immediately after the giving of the law, for Moses stayed 40. dayes with God in the mount, and then comming downe, he judged the people for their Idolatrie; which was no time to give entertainment to Iethro, all the host being in heavinesse: and after that, Moses stayed 40. dayes more: so that it was toward the end of the first yeare, or the beginning of the second, when Iethro came. This is Tostatus second reason.

Contra. All this is easily granted, and admitted, that Iethro came not immediately after the law was gi|ven: but this sheweth not, that he came not before the giving of the law, as is before declared.

3. Againe, seeing Iethro returned into his Countrie in the second yeare, the second moneth, when they were about to remove their campe from mount Sinai, Numb. 10.30. it is not like that hee would stay a whole yeare with Moses, out of his owne Countrie. Tostat.

Contra. That storie concerning Hobabs departure, who also is Iethro, is transposed: and that communication, which Moses there hath with his father in law, was had before that time; which storie is here all|eaged, because it was there more fully to bee handled. Iun. Seeing therefore, that one of the stories must of necessitie be transposed, and set out of his place: it is for many reasons more agreeable to the order of the things which were done, to referre that storie, Numb. 10. to this place, than to joyne this unto that: for immediately after that storie there inserted, of Hobabs departure, followeth in the next Chapter, Num. 11▪ the constitution of the 70. Elders, which was a divers ordinance from Iethros device, of constituting Captaines over thousands, hundreds and fiftie, and like not to have followed immediately upon the other: because Moses having made so many coadjutors so lately, by the advice of his father in law, which did helpe to beare the burden with him, would not so soone have complained, till he had had full triall and ex|•ience of that forme of government, that he was not able to beare the people alone, as he doth complaine, Numb. 11.14.

4. Further it is objected, that at Iethro his comming hee gave that advice, for the appointing of un|der officers and Judges; but this was done in the second yeare, what time they were to remove from mount Sinai, as Moses himselfe sheweth, that it was about the same time, when the Lord spake unto him to depart from Choreb, Deut. 1.6, 9. Tostat.

Contra. Moses indeed saith, I spake unto you the same time, saying, I am not able to beare you my selfe alone: but these words, The same time, must not be restrained to the time of the Lords speaking unto them, to remove from Choreb: for how could that choice of officers be made in the instant of their removing? but it must be understood generally of the time of their stay and abode by the mount Choreb. Iun.

2. Wherefore the more probable opinion is, that Iethro came unto Moses, while they encamped about Choreb, before they removed to the wilderness of Sinai, and there received the law, in that order, as it is here set downe by Moses.

1. Because no anticipation of time, or transposing of the storie, is to be admitted in Scripture, where no necessity of the sense enforceth it, now here is no such necessity to urge us to thinke this storie to be set out of the place, neither any inconvenience need to be feared, in admitting the same to be done in this or|der, as Moses hath penned it, as is before shewed in the particular answer to the severall objections.

2. The nearenesse of that place doth perswade as much: that seeing Midian was not far off from Cho|reb, where Moses had used to keepe his father in lawes sheepe, it is like that Iethro invited by the neare|nesse and opportunity of the place, tooke this journey. Lyranus. And though Moses, when he departed with his wife and children, lodged by the way, that might be because the children were young and tender, and so he tooke easie journeyes, or the day might bee farre spent, when he tooke his leave of his father in law: as when in the like case the Levite departed from his wives father, Iud 19.

3. Neither is it like, Moses with the host of Israel lying so neare unto Midian, so long together, well nie a yeare: that Iethro would deferre so long, to bring Moses wife and children unto him, or that Mos•• would all that while endure their absence from him. Lyranus.

4. The text sheweth, that the report of those things, which the Lord had done for Moses and Israel, brought him thither: it seemeth then, that as soone as he had heard of the same of the late victory of the Amalekites, Iethro dispatched presently to goe unto Moses: Iosephus.

QUEST. VIII. Wherefore Iethro sent before to Moses.

Vers. 6. AND he said to Moses. 1. Iethro said thus by some messengers, which he sent before to Moses, which both shewes his humanity, he would not presse upon Moses unawares though he were his father in law. Simler. And he did it, Vt honestius reciparentur; That they might be received in better manner, for Moses honour. Lyran. Tostat. It is like also, that Iethro came with some troupe and company, and therefore could have no safe passage or entrance, without some safe conduct from Moses: for the Israelites did stand upon their watch and guard, because of their enemies which were round about them. Simler. It might be also, that Iethro did this in humility, not presuming to joyne himselfe to the people of God, before he had made Moses acquainted. Ferus.

QUEST. IX. Of the manner of Moses entertainment.

Vers. 7. AND Moses went out to meet &c. 1. Moses humility joyned with humanity, appeareth in going forth to meet his father in law: whom hee reverenceth as his elder and his father in law: though in other respects, Moses being the Ruler of such a great people, and endued with such an excellent gift, in the power of miracles, were the more honourable person. Tostat. 2. Then Moses sheweth his love in kissing him, which was used then, and is yet in some Countries, as a signe and testimonie of love. Marbach. 3. Then his courtesie appeareth, each in asking the other of their welfare and health. Pelarg. 4. His beneficence and hospitality is declared, in bringing him into his Tent. Pelarg. that they might bett^r commune within of their affaires, than abroad. Lyran. This was Moses peculiar Tabernacle, which he pitched without the host, chap. 33.7. and whereupon the cloud used to rest, before the great Tabernacle was set up. Tostat. It was not that great Tabernacle, where the Arke afterwards was put: for it was not lawfull for any Gentile to enter therein: Hugo de Sanct. Victor. neither was yet that Tabernacle spoken of.

QUEST. X. Why Moses declareth all these things unto Iethro.

Vers. 8. THEN Moses told his father in law, &c. 1. Three things Moses declareth to his father in law: First the plagues and judgements, which fell upon Pharaoh and the Egyptians, for Israels sake, that is, to the intent that they should let the people of God goe. Secondly, the travell and labours which they indured, by famine, thirst and warre. Thirdly, how they were relieved in all these necessities, and delivered from all their dangers. Tostat. 2. Now Moses declared these things to Hobab, to satisfie his desire:

for he was desirous to heare more certainly of all these things. Simler. Likewise, he doth it that Iethro might rejoyce together with them, for all the mercies of God received. Tostat. quast. 3. And beside, Moses hereby would draw him to the true knowledge of God, and further instruct him therein. And so Moses cibare studuit socerum primo spiritualiter; Moses first of all seeketh to give spirituall food to his father in law. Ferus.

QUEST. XI. Of Iethro his joy and rejoycing.

Vers. 9. AND Iethro rejoiced. 1. Iethro dealeth far otherwise than Amalek: for they envied the prosper^rity of Israel, and sought to doe them hurt: But Iethro rejoiced, and was glad: therefore afterward Saul was sent to take revenge of Amalek, but he spared the Kenites, which were the posteritie of Iethro, because they shewed mercy to the Israelites, 1 Sam. 15.6. Borrh. 2. Iethro expresseth his joy in three degrees: first hee rejoyceth inwardly in heart, then hee testifieth and confesseth the same with his mouth, vers. 10. and further expresseth the same in act, in offering of sacrifices unto God. Tostat. Non solum confessus est fidem suam ore, sed etiam opere, He confessed his faith, not onely with his mouth, but in d^od. Lyran. 3. And for very joy of heart, he repeateth the same thing twice, that God had delivered them out of the hand of the Egyptians, as men in passion doe use to double and treble their words. Tostat. Or the first delivering may signifie their saving from the sword of the Egyptians, which pursued them, the other from their thraldome and servitude. Cajetan.

QUEST. XII. Whether Iethro had before this the knowledge of the true God.

Vers. 11. Now I know that Iehovah is greater than all gods. 1. Neither was Iethro before this, altogether ignorant of the true God, or was before a worshipper of Idols: as Tostat. For Moses would not have married a meere Idolaters daughter: and where he saith, Now I know, that sheweth not, that he knew not God before, as Tostatus concludeth, but it is meant of his experimentall knowledge, that he was now by these wonderfull works, and judgements of God, more confirmed in his faith. Calvin. 2. Neither yet was Iethro a perfect worshipper of God, and so circumcised, as the people of Israel were: for if he had beene circumcised, hee had beene bound to keepe the whole law, as the Apostle reasoneth, Gal. 5.2. as all the festivities and other ordinances of Israel: and then he being incorporated by circumci|sion into the people of God, and so become a proselyte, would not have desired to returne to his people, as he doth, Numb. 10. Tostat. quast. 4. 3. Therefore, though before this Iethro had the true knowledge of God, which was a long time preserved in Abrahams line, among those which were not of Israel, as appeareth in Iob, and his friends; yet, Non tam pure & sinceriter, & clare cognoscebant Deum, ut Israeli te, &c. Yet they knew not God so purely and sincerely, and clearely, as the Israelites. Lippoman. And this speech in preferring Iehovah before other gods, may proceed from his errour, who had an opinion before of the multiplicite of gods, as other of the heathen. Simler. Yet in another sense is this speech used by Moses, chap. 15.11. Who is like unto thee O Lord among the gods? that is, Angels, or any other power whatsoever. Calvin.

QUEST. XIII. Of the meaning, and true reading of the 11. vers.

Vers. 11. IN that thing, wherein they dealt proudly, hee is above them. 1. The Latine translator readeth, Because they dealt proudly against them: but here the words bedabhar asher, in the thing which, are omitted: in this sense a reason is given in generall, of the destruction of the Egyptians, because they were proud and insolent against the people of God. Tostat. 2. Others supplie this word, indicavit, hee hath judged them, Simler. or perierunt, they have perished, in that thing, wherein they were insolent against them: which some referre to their destruction in the red sea, that as they had drowned the Hebrewes children in the red sea, so they perished there. Vatab. But as Calvin saith, Videtur nimis esse restrictum, This seemeth to be too much restrained: therefore in generall, rather the equitie of Gods judgements appeareth, that had measured unto them, as they had done to the Israelites. Galas. Borrh. 3. But the third reading is to be preferred: that the preposition ghal, here signifieth, not against, but above, and them must not bee referred to the Israelites, but to the Egyptians: that God was superiour unto them, in that, wherein they boast, that is, in their great power, and glory. Iun. As they vaunted, when they pursued Israel: I will overtake them, I will divide the spoile, my lust shall be satisfied upon them, chap. 15.9.

QUEST. XIV. Whether Iethro offered himselfe burnt offerings.

Vers. 12. Then Iethro tooke burnt offerings, &c. 1. Tostatus hereupon gathereth, because Iethro obser|veth the difference of sacrifices instituted in the law, betweene burnt offerings, wherein all was consumed upon the Altar, and other sacrifices wherein part was reserved: that he came to Moses, af|ter the law was given: quaest. 4. But this is no necessary collection: for even among the Gentiles, some sa|crifices they offered whole, of some they reserved part for their sacred feasts: especially among them, which came of Abrahams line, where some seeds of Abrahams faith were still preserved. Simler. 2. This rather may serve as an argument against that opinion: that the law of sacrifices, and of the Priesthood of Aaron was not yet instituted, because Iethro a strange Priest was permitted to sacrifice: & therefore it is like that as yet the Priesthood was not instituted. Simler. Cajetan. 3. Some thinke that Iethro onely tooke part of the sacrifices which were offered, and sacrificed not. Lippoman. But the phrase, He tooke them unto God, sheweth, that he tooke them to offer unto God. Iun. 4. Oleaster thinketh, that he offered by the ministry of Moses. But as Augustine well collecteth, Moses is not yet read to have sacrificed at all. 5. This is like to have beene Primum ejus sincerum, & legitimum sacrificium: Iethros first sincere and legitimate sacrifice. Calvin. For although he had some knowledge of God before, yet he knew him not purely and perfectlie before now.

QUEST. XV. In what sense they are said to eat bread before the Lord.

They came to eat bread with Moses father in law, before God. 1. They did either eat Manna, that Ie/thro might see the bread, which God gave them from heaven: or such bread as hee might bring from Midian: beside bread, they did also eat of the remainder of the peace offerings. Tostat. 2. Before God, Oleaster expoundeth, before the Tabernacle, but as yet the Tabernacle was not built, as is shewed before, quast. 7. nor Aarons Priesthood instituted: as Cajetan well noteth here, Non interfuit Aaron ut sacrificaret, sed ut conviva, Aaron was not present as a sacrificer, but as a ghest. 3. Others doe expound, before God, In gloriam & honorem Dei, to the honour and glory of God. Simler. Calvin. So also Origen, Omnia, quæ Sancti faciunt, in conspectu Dei faciunt, All that the Saints doe, they doe in the sight of God: as the Apostle saith, Whether you eat or drinke, &c. doe all to the glory of God. 4. But somewhat more is insinuated here: that as after the Tabernacle was built, before the Arke, was said to be in the presence of God, so now, because they were assembled in Moses Tabernacle, where the cloudy pillar rested, they are said to eat before the Lord, who manifested himselfe in that pillar. Tostat. quaest. 4. in cap. 18.

QUEST. XVI. How the people came to Moses to aske of God.

Vers. 15. The people come unto me to seeke God, &c. and I declare the ordinances of God and his lawes. 1. Some expound it, that they enquired of God by Moses. Oleaster. But it is not like, that in every small matter, Moses consulted with God for them: for although the Lord cannot be wearied, and he is ignorant of nothing, yet for reverence of the divine Majesty, they were to forbear in small mat|ters. * Tostat. So also Augustine, Nunquid per singula credendum est eum consulere solere Deum: It is to be thought, that for every thing he used to consult with God? 2. Some interprete, because the sentence of Moses, being their lawfull Judge, was the sentence of God, in asking of Moses, they asked of God. Cajetan. And to the same purpose, Augustine moving the question, how Moses maketh mention here of the lawes of God, seeing there were none as yet written, maketh this answer, Nisi praesidentem menti suae Do/minum consuleret, &c. Vnlesse he had consulted with God the president of his mind, he could not have judged justly. Moses therefore, was the interpreter of the will and sentence of God, revealed unto him, & so judged according to his lawes. 3. But this phrase to seeke God, insinuateth a further matter: that when they had any weightie businesse, which either concerned God, or the state of the common-wealth, then they went to seeke an answer of God, as the phrase is used, 1 Sam. 9.9. Iun. So then here is a distinction of cause• noted: in the greater and weightie affaires, they consulted with God by Moses, as Iethro saith after|ward, vers. 19. Be thou unto the people to Godward, and report their causes unto God: but the smaller matters Moses judgeth himselfe, which were afterward by the advice of Iethro transmitted over to the inferiour officers.

QUEST. XVII. Why the Lord would have Moses to take his direction from Iethro.

Vers. 19. *HE*are now my voyce. Augustine here moveth a question, why the Lord would have his servant Moses,* to whom he so often spake, to take this direction from a stranger: to the which he maketh this answer: that God hereby would teach us: 1. Per quemlibet hominem detur consilium ve|ritatis, non debere contemni: That by whomsoever any true counsell is given, it should not bee contemned. 2. Againe, God would haue Moses thus admonished, Ne eum tentet superbia, &c. lest that sitting in that high seate of judgement, Moses might have beene somewhat lifted up: and therefore this was done to humble him. 3. Rupertus goeth yet further, and sheweth, that this fact of Iethro was answerable to that saying in the Gospell,* That the children of this world are wiser in their generation, than the children of light. So Iethro for civill government, and worldly affaires, was wiser than Moses: but in things belonging unto God, Moses went beyond him. Ferus addeth, that hereby Moses was humbled, Videns se non omnia scire, seeing that he knew not all things: but was advised by a stranger to take a better course, in politike administration, than he himselfe could thinke of.

QUEST. XVIII. What causes Iethro would have reserved to Moses.

BE thou for the people to Godward. 1. Some thinke that here is a distinction made by Iethro of the spiri|tuall, and temporall power: the first he would have still reside and rest in Moses, as best exercised in spirituall things, the other to bee passed over to others. Ferus. But the chiefe temporall power remained in Moses still, after the choice made of the inferiour officers, hee was the chiefe Prince and Magistrate notwithstanding: nay rather hee resigned afterward his ordinarie spirituall power unto Aaron: retain|ning the temporall still. 2. Others thinke, that whereas Moses was both a Lawgiver to the people, and a Judge also: that the first power he reserved still, but the other part, of executing judgement in parti|cular cases, according to those lawes, he transmitted over to the officers. Ex Simler. But this is not true neither: for Moses gave the sentence against the blasphemer, Numb. 24. and against him that violated the Sabbath, Num. 5. 3. Wherefore the distinction here made, is neither of divers kinds of offices, as the spi|rituall and temporall, nor yet of divers parts and functions of the same office, as in making, and execut|ing of lawes: but the difference was of causes small and great: the one to bee reserved to Moses heal|ring, the other to be committed to the officers to be chosen: And so afterward they came to Moses, when any difficult and hard matter fell out: as when one blasphemed God in the host, Levit. 24. they brought him to Moses: likewise when they found one gathering of sticks upon the Sabbath, they referred the matter to Moses, Numb. 15.33. In the cause also of Zelo|pechads daughters, they resorted to Moses, Numb. 37. 4. And in those weightie matters, two things were required of Moses, first that hee should consult with God, and then declare unto the people the will of God, and shew them the ordinances and lawes of God, vers. 20. the ordinances or as the Latine Interpreter readeth, ceremonies, did onely apper|taine unto God: the lawes were of two sorts, either such as concerned both God, and man, as the morall commandements, the first table whereof, commandeth our dutie toward God; the second, our dutie to our neighbour: or such, which onely concerned the affaires and controversies among men, as the Judi|cials. Tostat. quæst. 5. 5. Herein then consisted Moses office: 1. That he should report unto God, the requests and demands of the people, and so pray for them. 2. To report unto the people the will and pleasure of God: both Quantum ad cultum Dei, what hee required concern|ing his service: and to shew them the way, which they should walke, Quantum ad credenda, What they were to beleeeve: and the worke which they should doe, Quantum ad agenda, that is, what things they were to doe. Ferus.

QUEST. XIX. Of the qualities and properties required in good Magistrates.

Vers. 21. PRovide men of courage. The first propertie required in a Magistrate, is, that he be valiant, chaijl, which signifieth not onely valour or strength of the bodie, but the industry of mind: as Pharaoh would have Ioseph set over his cattell, such of his brethren as were valiant, that is, industrious and well practised and experienced among cattell.

In this first qualitie or vertue then, these things are required. 1. That they must be industrious, able to dispatch and expedite causes. Simler. Valentes ingenio, men of good dexteritie and wit. Cajetan. There must be verus intellectus, a good conceit and understanding. Tostat. 2. Constancie and strength is required: Ne metu potentiorum deserat causam justam, That he doe not leave a good cause for feare of mightie men. Simler. As Ecclesiasticus saith, Noli fieri Iudex, &c. Seeke not to be made a Iudge,^{*} lest thou bee not able to take away iniquitie, and lest thou fearing the person of the mightie, shouldest commit an offence against thine uprightness. 3. Also it is fit they should be of greater power in riches, or by birth, and estimation in the world: for if they be base and poore, though upright, they are sooner contemned: so Deut. 1.15. they must be jedughim, knowne and famous men: if other vertues doe concurre withall. Tostat. Among the Lalcedemonians, one Demosthenes, an obscure and base fellow, gave wise and prudent counsell, which the Ephori, which were the counsellors of state, willed to be propounded by another man of fame and estima|tion, lest it might have beene contemned, because of the first author. Simler.

2. They must bee men fearing God. For the feare of God is the foundation of all vertues: and where that is not, Non sunt ver• virtutes, sed umbrae, They are not true vertues, but shadowes of vertues. Simler. And if men of might should not feare God, Cum ex potentia sua homines non timeant, &c. When in regard of their great power, they feare not men, they will be readie to commit many wrongs. Tostat. qu•st. 6. Oportet jus dicentem aliis, rationem habere superioris Iudicis, &c. It behoveth him, that judgeth others, to have respect unto his superiour Iudge, to whom he must give account of all his acts. Cajetan. Deum spectent, cujus vi|cem obtineant: Let them looke unto God, in whose stead they are. Borrh. They must execute his will, whose place and person they sustaine: for where no feare of God is, there justice is soone declined, as is evident in Pilate. Ferus.

3. They must be men of truth. Both understanding the truth, that they may be able to distinguish right from wrong: as also following the truth in their will and practice: for there is a speculative truth in dis|cerning and judging, and a practicall truth, in following a right judgement. Tostat. There is veritas vitae, truth of life, when a mans conversation is framed according to the rule of truth: veritas justitiae, in giving unto every man his right: and veritas doctrinae, in discerning the truth from errour, and right from wrong: Lyrans. This love of the truth containeth these two things, both that in others he should give way to the truth, that he should seeke out the truth by witnesses, writings, evidences: and in himselfe having found out the truth, give judgement accordingly. Simler. Vt sit vera tum dicendo tum faciendo: to be true in word and in deed, both to speake the truth and practise it. Cajetan. Veritas non tantum fraudibus & crassis men|daciis, sed ambitioni, &c. The truth is not opposed onely to fraud and grosse lies, but to ambition, flattery and such like, and what other cunning soever may be used to corrupt judgement. Calvin. Stabiles sint in sententiis, non mutabiles, They must be stable in their sentences, not changeable. Oleaster.

4. They must hate covetousnesse. Quantumvis sufficiat homini non esse avarum, &c. Although it be sufficient for a private man not to be a covetous: yet a Judge must be so far from covetousnesse, that he abhorre and hate it: Cajetan. Some thinke, that the Hebrew word batzah signifieth, to fill: a Judge then must not desire to be filled with riches, for a covetous man will never be full, but to be content with things necessary, and convenient for his place. Oleaster. For gifts blind the eyes of the wise, and pervert the words of the just.

Beside these properties here required, there be other also elsewhere set downe, * as Deut. 1.13. they must be men of wisdom and understanding. The first of these belongeth to the speculative and intellectuall part: he must be wise, both in the knowledge of God, for true religion maketh wise: and in humane affairs, there is a particular wisdom, as of every artificer in his trade; but this must be a generall wisdom, how to rule and governe all sorts of men.

The other, which is called binah, understanding, belongeth rather to practise, than speculation: for hee that hath knowledge onely in generall, and knoweth not how wisely to applie it to every particular occasion, is not fit to be a ruler or governour. Ioseph was wise in the unfolding and interpreting of Pharaohs dreame, hee was also prudent, and a man of understanding, in giving advice afterward, how to provide against the famine.

Page 228

Further, they must not be of base and obscure condition, but such as are famous and well knowne: as no man will commit his money to an unknowne Banker, nor his bodie to an unexperienced Physitian: so neither should men of unknowne conditions be trusted with the common-wealth.

Lastly, their age must be respected, as Numb. 11.16. Moses is bid to take such as he knew to be Elders of the people, not onely in yeares, but in manners: for age bringeth experience, and experience maketh wise. Yet young men, which are endued with the wisdom of the ancient, are not to be rejected from government: as David and Iosias were but young, when they came to the Kingdome. Simler.

QUEST. XX. How that Rulers over thousands, hundreds, &c. are to be counted.

Vers. 21. Rulers over thousands, &c. 1. Some of the Hebrewes thinke, that this distribution was onely of the under Officers, and Ministers to the Judges: that some of them had 10. some an 100. some 1000. apparitors under them, for the execution of their sentence. Ex Simler. But this would have bred a great confusion, that one Judge should have had so many ministers, neither should their causes have beene dispatched, so many being brought to one Judge. 2. Others thinke that this division was of the Judges themselves, that one session was of ten, another court above that, of 100. and a superiour to that of 1000. Simler. But beside that it was inconvenient to have a Court consisting of so many, which would have tended rather to confusion, than settling of order, the text saith, that all these were heads of the people, some were made rulers of 1000. some of 100. some of 50. &c. vers. 25. These divers names of rulers then, have not relation to the number of the Judges, but to the divisions of the people, over whom they were set. 3. The most usuall and received opinion is, that this distribution of Officers was made according to the computation of those in the campe, which were fit for warre, who from 20. yeare to 60. were numbred to 600000. and above, Numb. 1. Lyran. Iun. But this is not like: for whereas these officers were appointed, not for military discipline, but for the deciding of controversies and questions, which might grow among them; by this account all under 30. yeare, and above 60. which were not meet for warre, should be excluded: whereas questions might arise among both the younger, but especially the elder sort, as well as among the rest. Tostat. 4. Some thinke that this division was not in respect onely of the limits of the Judges, but to reduce the people into order, and to distribute them into their severall ranks, and divisions: because it is not like, that such a multitude of suits should arise among them, as that they needed so many officers: for the rulers over tens, in 600000. would come to 60000▪ Simler. But it appeareth by Iethros motion, that in this division he onely intended the peace and quietnesse of the people, and Moses•ase, that they might without any great travell, have their controversies ended: neither is it like there were so many officers: for not over every ten persons or polle•, was an officer set, but over every ten fa|milies, as now shall be shewed. 5. Wherefore, this account of thousands, hundreds, &c. might be made three wayes: either reckoning those onely, which were fit for warre, which kind of account is before re|moved: or by every single person, and poll, as they counted for the eating of the paschall Lambe, chap. 12. and for the gathering of Manna, chap. 16. But neither was this account here followed, for then women and children should bee here reckoned: whereas the one were under their parents, and the other under their husbands government, and their controversies might be ended at home, and need not bee brought before the Judges. The third way remaineth, that this computation was made according to the families: that over every ten families an officer should bee set. Tostat. So by this meanes a goodly order was established, that every Tribune or millenary officer, had under him ten Centurians, that i•, officers over hundreds: and every Centurian had under him two rulers over fifties: and every ruler over fiftie, had un|der him five, which were set over ten. Ferus. Iosephus saith further, that there were bands appointed of thirties, and twenties: but there is no such thing in the text.

QUEST. XXI. Of the number of these officers, and of their continuance and succession.

Vers. 22. LEt them judge the people at all seasons. 1. Concerning the number of these officers, it is un|certaine. Lyranus thinketh there were six hundred Tribunes or millenarie officers, and six thousand Centurians, and three score thousand set over tennes: which number is rightly taken according to the summe of six hundred thousand. But it is shewed before, that in that number, containing the summe onely of those which were fit for warre, divers are not comprehended, over whom the Judges were set, for compounding of their controversies: and therefore by that proportion the summe and number of the Judges cannot be taken. And so it cannot certainly be defined, the number of the families being not knowne, over the which these officers were appointed, how many these Rulers were in all: Tostat. 2. In that they are said to judge at all seasons, both the time of continuance in their office is signi|fied, which was during their life, untill they were made unfit by reason of their age: for then it is like they gave over their government, as the Levites were freed at fiftie yeares from the service of the Taber|nacle: As also their diligence and attendance upon their office is noted: that dayly and continually, un|lesse upon solemne and festivall dayes, they attended the causes of the people. 3. It is also evident, that this Magistracie did not descend by succession from the father to the sonne, but was conferred by election: for whereas it is required, that they should be good men fearing God, and endued with other vertues; this could not be perpetually observed, if the sonnes had succeeded their fathers, for a good father may some|time have a bad sonne, as Hezekiah had Manasseh: and an evill father may have a good sonne, as A•/mo• begat Iosias. Ex Tostat.

QUEST. XXII. The difference betweene Moses office, and the rest.

Vers. 22. BVt every great matter let them bring to thee. 1. There were two reasons why the great causes were reserved unto Moses hearing, both because he was a Prophet, and so consulted with the oracle of God: and beside he was the chiefe Magistrate: as in all Common-wealths appeale is made un|to the Prince. Simler. 2. The greater matters were of two sorts, either such as were of a divers kinde, which concerned the worship of God, and ceremonies of religion, which wholly belonged unto Moses, and the other Officers were not to meddle with them: or else they were of the same kinde, wherein the other used to deale: but difficult and hard matters, wherein they were to require Moses judgement, as they did about the punishment of the blasphemers, Levit. 24. and the violater of the Sabbath, Numb. 15. Tostat. 2. The smaller causes which were referred to the under Officers, were pecuniary and civill causes, the greater as capitall were reserved for Moses hearing: for in these causes, if there were any aggrievance the sentence might be reversed: but when the sentence of death was inflicted, it could not bee revoked: therefore it is like that none was put to death without Moses consent and direction. 3. In giving this advice Iethro intendeth two things, both the case of Moses, in dividing the burthen with others, and the profit of the people, that should not be wearied by this meanes by long attendance. Tostat. qu. 8.

QUEST. XXIII. Of the meaning of these words, And God commmand thee.

Vers. 23. IF thou doe this thing, (and God so command thee.) 1. The Latine Translator readeth thus: If thou doe this, implebis imperium Dei • thou shalt fulfill the commandement of God; whereof there may bee two senses given: first that Iethro doth insinuate that this device and counsell is of God: the other, that by this meanes he shall be able to discharge his office in governing, and taking care for the people, which thing God had commanded him: Tostat. But this translation differing from the originall, which hath, and God command thee, neither of these interpretations can stand. 2. Some make this the sense: if thou doe as I counsell thee; poteris a•dire pracepta Dei, thou shalt have time to heare what God comman|deth thee, that is, to consult with God, which his leisure would not now permit him to doe: Oleast. Osi|and. 3. But this clause seemeth to depend of the first word (•m, if) so that the meaning rather is this, if God doe approve this my counsell: Iun. Wherein appeareth the piety of Iethro, that would not obtrude his counsell upon Moses, no otherwise than it should have the divine approbation. Simler. Calvin.

QUEST. XXIV. In what sense the people are said to goe quietly to their place.

And all this people shal• goe quietly to their place. 1. Some take this to be the meaning: that this order devised by Iethro, was but to serve during the time of their travell: but when they were come to their place, that is, to the land of Canaan, then they should have Officers and Judges set in their Cities. Ex Siml. But Iethro in these words sheweth the present benefit which should redound unto them, by this order, both Moses should be eased of much labour, and the people of their attendance. 2. In these words there|fore, Iethro doth insinuate two things, both that the people should dispatch their businesse, whereas they were constrained before to goe home, their controversies undecided, because Moses was not at leasure to heare all, and so they should goe home quietly. Simler. And againe, they should not need to hang so long, and give such attendance, as they did. Iun. For Moses should bee able to dispatch their greater causes, which they brought unto him in time, and their smaller controversies should be taken up at home. Tostat. quast. 8.

QUEST. XXV. Whether these Officers were chosen by Moses.

Vers. 25. And Moses chose men. 1. These Officers and Magistrates, were taken out from the rest of the people by election: so that the government of Israel was in respect of Moses, Monarchicall: for the supreme authority still remained in him: but in respect of these inferiour Magistrates, it was Aristocraticall: which forme of government is so called, because the best and most worthy are elected to rule and governe. 2. Moses is said to have chosen them, because he cōfirmed the peoples choice, and admit|ted those, whom they presented: for so hee said unto the people: Bring you men of wisdom, &c. and I will make them Rulers over you, Deut. 1.13. For it was the safest way for the people to make choice of them, because they were better knowne unto them, and they would the more willingly obey them. To|stat. quast. 9. 3. Further, whereas Moses saith, Deut. 1.8. I am not able to beare you my selfe alone: as though Moses himselfe first thought of this device, it must be understood, that after Iethro had given this counsell unto Moses, then he propounded it unto the people. Genevens.

QUEST. XXVI. Whether these Officers were of equall authority, or one subordinate to another.

Vers. 25. ANd make them heads over the people. 1. It is not like, that these Officers, whereof some were set over thousands, some over hundreds, some over fifties, some over tennes; that they had their severall distinct regiments, so that they which were not under one Officer, as under the Ruler over ten, were not also under his superiour Officer, that was set over fifty: for then, if they had beene all of equall authority, this distinction needed not to have beene, that some were Rulers of thousands, some of hundreds, &c. But it had beene better for them, all to have beene of one sort, as all over hundreds, or tens: and againe, if these Officers had not beene subordinate one under another, that inconvenience should not have beene prevented, which Iethro intended, to deliver Moses of trouble: for by these meanes, if the people might not appeale from one Judge to a superiour; a multitude of causes still should have beene devolved to Moses. 2. Therefore it is resolved, that these Officers were one under another: the Ruler of ten under the Ruler of fifty, and he under the Centurion, and this also under the tribune or millenary Officer: so that there was none of the people, which was not subject, to a Ruler of ten, or tithing man, to a Ruler of fifty, a Ruler of an hundred, and a Ruler over a thousand. And this subordi|nation served to two purposes: both for the Officers themselves, that if any controversie fell out among them, it might bee ordered by the superiour Judge: and if the people found themselves agreeed with their tithing men, and inferiour Officers, they might appeale for redresse to their superiour Judges. And so the appeale ascended, from the Ruler of ten, to the Ruler of fifty, from the Ruler of fifty to the Cen|turion, and from him to the millenary Judge or Tribune: and thus their causes were decided, before they came at Moses; only the hardest and most difficult matters were reserved for his hearing, and from him there was no further appeale. Tostat. quaest. 11.

QUEST. XXVII. Of the difference betweene these Officers, and the 70. Elders, Num. 10.

FURther, it is here to be considered, that this institution of Officers, which was brought in by the coun|cell and advice of Iethro, was divers from that order of 70. Elders, which was instituted afterward by the Lord, Numb. 10. For they differ both in order of time: these were appointed before they came to Si|nai, the other after they removed thence; and in number, these were many, no doubt divers thousands, the other onely 70. Iethro gave the advice for the choice of the first; but the Lord himselfe of the other: Their office also and administration was divers; the seventy were the Councell of State, which consulted only of the publike affaires of the Kingdome: the other attended upon the private causes and suits of the people. This difference betweene the Senators, and Counsellors of State, and inferiour Judges was observed in all well ordered Common-wealths, among the Athenians, Lacedemonians, Romans, and is to be seene in our State. This was the 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 or Senate of the Jewes, which at the first consisted indifferently of men taken out of all the tribes, six out of each of the eleven tribes, the Levites excepted, and the other foure to make up 70. were supplied by Levites and Priests to direct the rest. This indifferent choice out of all the tribes, continued untill the time of the Kings, when the choice of these Elders was overruled by their authority: then after the captivity, because of the prerogative of the tribe of Iudah, to whom the principality of right appertained, most of the Elders were taken out of that tribe, and so it continued, till Herod dissolved that honourable and grave Senate of the Elders, making havocke of them, and putting most of them to death. Iun. ex Ioseph. Analys. in Num. cap. 11.

QUEST. XXVIII. At what time Iethro tooke his leave of Moses.

Vers. 27. AFterward Moses let his father in law depart, &c. 1. Some thinke, that Iethro neither came unto Moses in this order, or at this time, as the story is set downe, that is, before the giving of the Law, but that hee came in the end of the first yeere, or in the beginning of the second, and stayed with him about two moneths, till the campe removed, which was the 20. day of the second moneth, Numb. 10. Tostat. Contra. But this opinion is before refuted, quaest. 7. For it is not like, that the campe of Israel lying almost a yeere, from the first day of the third moneth in the first yeere, chap. 19.1. to the 20. day of the second moneth in the second yeere, Numb. 10, 11. that either Iethro would stay so long from visiting Moses, or Moses all that while not desire to see his wife and children: and seeing the same and report of the great workes, which God had done for Israel, and of that late victory against Amalek, brought Iethro thither, it is no doubt, but that as soone as this same came to his eares, that hee hastened his journey.

2. Some are of opinion, that Iethro Moses father in law went away at this time, but he left Hobab his sonne, and brother to Zipporah with Moses still, who also departed, when the campe removed from Sinai, Numb. 10. Oleaster, Simlerus, Osiander. Contra. But it is proved before, that this Hobab and Iethro were all one man, quaest. 1. for there is no mention made of any kinsman that Moses had by his wife, but his father in law, and her grandfather Reghuel: and that speech of Moses, Thou mayest bee as eyes unto us, that is, our guide, best agreeth unto his father in law, a man of age and experience, and if Reghuel had any sonne, it is like, where hee is said to have had seven daughters, Exod. 2.16. mention would have beene made of his sonne: seeing the Scripture useth rather to note the genealogy of the males, than of the other sex.

3. Some other thinke, that Iethro came at this time in the first yeere, and stayed a whole yeere, that hee might be full instructed in the faith and religion of Gods people. Lyran. But it is not like, that he being so neere his countrey, not above a dayes journey or two, would so long be absent from thence: being so desirous to returne thither. Tostat.

4. Nor yet is it probable, that Iethro went away so soone, before the Law was given: for it is like, that before hee went, Moses put his counsell in practice, which could not bee done in so short a time: Pellican. for the people were first to bee numbred before the Officers could bee set over thousands and hundreds, &c. Now there were but fiftene dayes from their first comming to the wilderness of Sin, chap. 16.1. and their removing to the wilderness of Sinai, chap. 19.1. In which time Manna was given them, and the water out of the Rock, and they fought with Amalek: so that they could have no time to number the people.

Page 231

5. Wherefore this may be safely held, that Iethro came at this time, while they camped in Rephidim: but neither went away so soone, staying but only a few dayes; nor yet remained so long, as a whole yeere: but seeing that Moses presently went up to the mount, and stayed twice forty dayes: it is like that Iethro waited his comming downe, and presently Moses set cunning men aworke to make the Tabernacle, at what time the people were numbred, Exod. 38.25. when they contributed silver, gold and brasse toward that holy worke. Then it being like that Iethro stayed to see his counsell put in practice, which could not be done without the numbring of the people, and they were not numbred untill the Tabernacle began to be made, which might be some foure moneths after his comming: so long it is probable, that Iethro stayed; how long after it is uncertaine. That story then of Hobab's departure, Numb. 10. is transposed; but it belongeth not all to this place, as Iunius thinketh, for the reasons before alleaged; yet it is evident that it fell not out in that very time and order there set downe: for before Moses is there mentioned to have spoken to Hobab, the cloud was lifted up from the Tabernacle, and the host began to march forward according to their armies: So I here subscribe unto the opinion of Galasius, upon this place: Non intelligit Iethronem statim abiisse, &c. Hee understandeth not that Iethro presently went away, but that he stayed not with the Israelites, and at length returned into his countrey.

1. Doctr. No mans actions are perfect in this life.

Vers. 17. THis thing, which thou doest, is not well. Moses though an excellent man, yet in this action of judging the people, tooke not a good course, neither for his owne case, nor the peoples good: which sheweth, that in the best mens actions, there are imperfections. And if all Moses acts were not perfect, what are ours? Simler. So the Apostle confesseth of himselfe, Not as though I had already attained unto it, or were already perfect, Philip. 3.12.

2. Doctr. The Prophets had not an habit of prophesying, but an actuall and present illumination.

FURther, in that Iethro as a prudent man, seeth more for the politike government than Moses, who was a great Prophet: it sheweth, that the Prophets had not an habituall knowledge or propheticall instinct alwayes remaining with them; for then they should not be ignorant of any thing: but they prophesied, Ex actuali quadam illuminatione: By an actuall illumination for the time: which as soone as it cea|seth, Redeunt ad seipsos: They returne to themselves, and see no more than they did before; as here Mo/ses, though a Prophet, because hee had no present revelation, seeth no more than another in this matter, nay, he seeth not so much as Iethro, who was no Prophet. Tostat. quaest. 8. So Ieremy, after hee had talked with the King, was advised by him what answer hee should make to the Princes, and followed his dire|ction accordingly, Ierem. 38.28.

3. Doctr. The wise sayings of the Heathen not to be rejected.

Vers. 24. SO Moses obeyed the voice. Upon this example of Moses harkening to the voice of Iethro, who was a stranger from Israel, Origen thus collecteth, Vnde & nos, si forte invenimus aliquid sapienter à Gentilibus dictum, &c. Whereupon wee also learne, that if wee finde any thing well spoken of the Gentiles, we must not presently reject it with the Author. Ex Lippoman. As those profitable inventions of the liberall sciences, which were found out by the Heathen, are still commendably retained among Christians, and are made to attend as handmaids upon religion, as the Egyptian Jewels served to adorne the Israelites: So Saint Paul useth the testimony of Aratus, Act. 17.28. of Menander, 1. Cor. 15.33. and Epimenides, Tit. 1.12.

4. Doct. Princes may have Officers and Ministers under them.

Vers. 25. MAde them heads over the people. It is fit therefore that Princes should not thrust them|selves upon all causes, but make choice of grave and vertuous men to governe under them: and yet they must have their owne eares open also to the complaints of their subjects, as here Moses hath. By this councill of Iethro approved of God, and accepted by Moses, wee see it both lawfull, and necessary for Princes and chiefe Magistrates, to have their inferiour and helping Ministers of the Kingdome. Olea/ster. And that we are bound to yeeld obedience both unto the King, As to the superiour, and unto gover/nours, as those which are sent of him, for the punishment of evill doers, and for the praise of them that doe well 1. Pet. 2.13, 14.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. That wife and children are no impediment to the calling of Ministers.

Vers. 2. THen Iethro tooke Zipporah Moses wife. Some hereupon give this note, Quòd Moses ex illo tempore, quo prophetare incepit, uxorem concubitu non cognovit: That Moses from that time, when he began to prophesie▪ did not know his wife carnally. Lippoman. ex Epiphan. And another saith, Moses non ac|cedebat ad uxorem propter frequens colloquium Dei; That Moses came not to his wife, because he often talked with God. Tostat. quast. 2. in margine. Oleaster also doth collect thus, Quam onerosum sit murrimonium, h•c ostenditur; &c. Here it is shewed how burdensome marriage is, seeing Moses after he had sent his wife away, had no great care to fetch her againe.

* Contra. 1. Against Epiphanius, may bee opposed the judgement of Chrysostome, who concludeth the contrary upon this example of Moses: Vis cognoscere, quod nihil nocet uxorem habere & pueros? Moses nonne uxorem habuit & liberos? Wilt thou know, that it hindereth not to have wife and children? Moses had both wife and children. And then he maketh an eloquent comparison, betweene married Moses, and un|married Elias: Moses brought Manna from heaven, Elias fire: Moses divided the sea, and Elias was taken up by a fiery chariot into heaven: Vidisti Heliam aurigam in aëre, vidisti Mosen in mari viatorem: Thou hast seene Elias a chariot man in the aire, and thou hast seene Moses making a way in the sea: did virginity hurt the one, or wife and children hinder the other? He addeth further, Vides, quòd & Petrus uxorem habuit, ne incuses nuptias: You see that Peter had a wife (because mention is made of his wives mother in the Gospell) then blame not marriage. By this testimony it plentifully appeareth, that Moses after hee was entred into his propheticall office, found no impediment by having wife and children, and therefore did not abandon their company.

2. Concerning Tostatus assertion, I answer him out of his owne words; for though his marginall note be generally and at large set downe, That Moses came not to his wife, that is, at all: yet it is qualified in his text: Rarissimè accedebat ad uxorem: Hee very seldome came to his wife: he did not utterly then forsake her company. And that instance which hee giveth of the exception, that Aaron and Miriam tooke against Moses, because of his wife, maketh flat against him, Num. 12. For if Moses had not used her still as his wife, they could not have pretended nor taken any such occasion to quarrell.

3. Oleaster may be answered out of his owne words: for in the same place, upon Iethros bringing of Moses wife he giveth this note: Vbi simul dicemur, non esse permittendam uxorem sine viro suo esse: Where we are also taught, that a wife is not to be permitted to be without her husband. But to what end is the cohabitation of the husband and wife else required, then that they should the one enjoy the other? for other|wise it is all one, as if they were apart, or asunder.

4. Only this example of Moses, in sending backe his wife before, upon her discontent, and absenting himselfe from her for a while, sheweth, that it is the duty of all that are called, To remove from them in a lawfull sort those hinderers, preferring the Lords worke before their affection. B. Babington. As Moses did but for a time leave his wife, while he was employed in that waighty embassage to Pharaoh in Egypt: which kinde of sequestration for a time, for holy workes, the Apostle alloweth, not a finall separation; but wil|leth that they come together againe: * Defraud not one another (saith the Apostle) except it be with consent for a time, that you may give your selves to fasting and prayer; and againe come together; that Satan tempt you not, for your incontineny. Likewise this example sheweth, That it is a grievous offence, for either wives or others, to be an hinderance to men in their duties enjoyed them by God. B. Babington.

2. Confut. Against the heresie of the Manichees, of two contrary natures.

Vers. 19. HEare now my voyce, and I will give thee counsell, &c. By this example, Hierome confuteth that heresie and wicked opinion of the Manichees, that did hold there were two natures contrary the one to the other, the good and bad: If a good tree, saith he, never bringeth forth evill fruit, Quomodo Moses arbor bona peccaverit ad aquam contradictionis? How did Moses a good tree, sinne at the waters of strife? * Aut qua consequentia Iethro socer Moses arbor mala. &c. dederit Mosi consilium borum? Or what consequence is there, that Iethro Moses father in law, being an evill tree, who beleevd not in the God of Israel, gave unto Moses good counsell?

Hieromes argument standeth thus: the nature of a thing cannot be changed; but a good man may be changed to evill, and an evill tree to be good; therefore it is not of their nature that they are evill, that is, as their nature was created of God: wherefore that a man is evill, it is not by his created nature, but his corrupted nature; that he is good, it is not by his corrupted, but his corrected nature.

3. Confut. Of Cajetane that condemneth the regiment of women.

Vers. 21. PRovide men of courage, &c. Cajetane here giveth this corrupt note: Viros, inquit, non mulieres, quia regimen mulierum pessimum est: Men, saith he, not women, because their government is worst of all: so that to speake according to the common course of nature, no vertue is said to be in women, sep/tim. Ethicor. Contra. 1. This is but a bad consequent, Women are not to bee elected or chosen to govern|ment, therefore their government is bad: for though women come not by election to the place of govern|ment, yet either it may fall to them by succession, as Zelophechuds inheritance descended to his daughters, Numb. 27. or they may be extraordinarily designed and appointed to be governours, as Deborah, Iud. 5. and directers, as Huldah the Prophetesse under Iosias. 2. Neither doth it follow, Women are not fit to be chosen Judges and Officers of a Kingdome, therefore they may not be Queenes and Princes: these here chosen, were elected to be Officers of ministry, not of regality, and principality. 3. As for that heathenish conceit of the Philosopher, that vertue is not properly said to be in women, it is contrary to that position of the Apostle: that in Christ there is neither male nor female, Galath. 3.28. the spirit of God can plant grace and vertue in the hearts of women, as well as of men: nay often the Lord chuseth the weake things of this world to confound the mighty things, 1. Cor. 1.27. And the examples of so many vertuous and good women in the Scriptures, of Sara, Rebecca, Anna, the Shunamite, and the rest in the old: of Marie, Anna, Martha, Lydia, Dorcas, and many other in the new Testament, doe evidently confute that prophane paradox of the Philosopher. 4. And to deliver the regiment of women, from the Cardinals vile and impure slander; this country and nation of ours, as is hath found the government of a woman the worst, in the late Marian persecutions, when more good men and women, Saints of God, were put to death, than in any three Kings reigne beside: so have we seene it in the next change, the best of all other Princes reignes that went before: famous Queene Elizabeths government, as for flourishing peace,* honourable fame and name, enriching of the Land, subduing of forraine enemies, enacting of good lawes, may be com|pared with the reigne of any former Kings. So for the advancing of true religion, increasing of learning, propagating the Gospell, none of her predecessors came neere her: That as the refining of coine, being reduced from base money to pure silver and gold, was her honour in the Civill State: so the purging of religion, according to the purity of the word of God, in the Church shall bee her everlasting fame in the world, and is her eternall reward with God.

4. Confut. That Christ shall have no Iudges under him at the latter day, but shall be the only Iudge himselfe.

Vers. 22. LEt them judge all small causes. Origen upon these words hath this private conceit: Hanc s^o/guram Iudicum non solum in hoc seculo, sed etiam in futuro servandam, &c.  this forme of Iudges shall be observed, not only in this world, but in the next. And then he alleageth that text, Matth. 18.28. That when the Sonne of man shall sit in the throne of Majesty, yee which have followed me in the regeneration, shall sit upon twelve seats, and judge the twelve tribes of Israel: Whereupon he inferreth, that Christ at the day of judgement shall appoint other Judges beside himselfe, Qui iudicent populum de mineribus causi^o▪ &c. Which shall judge the people in smaller causes, referring the greater to him. The Rhemisnists, and Romanists, (whose manner is to scrape all the refuse of the Fathers) affirme likewise, That the faithfull shall judge and give sentence with Christ at the latter day, wresting the same text in Matthew, to the same purpose.

Contra. 1. The Apostles and Saints, are said indeed to judge the world, but not in that sense, as Christ is said to be the Judge of the world: but as he saith, his Word shall judge them at the latter day, Ioh. 12.48. that is, be a witness against them: so the Word preached by the Saints in their life, and their conversation following the same, shall be a witness against the world, and so their condemnation: like as in the processe of judgement here in earth, the evidence that is brought in, and the witnesses produced, are said to condemne the guilty partie, and to judge them, though the Judge only give sentence. Thus Ambrose fitly expoundeth this phrase: Iudicabunt Sancti hunc mundum, quia exemplo fidei illorum perfidia mundi damnabitur; The Saints shall judge the world, because by example of their faith, their perfidiousnesse shall be condemned. 2. For otherwise if Christ should observe the same forme, which Moses did, to appoint coadjutors, because he alone sufficed not, this were to derogate from his all sufficient power, who needeth not as man, any assistants or fellow helpers.

Vers. 22. Every great matter let them bring to thee. Upon this president, the Romanists would ground the papall reservation of cases, from whom no appeale, say they, is to be made, as there was not from Moses. Tostat. quaest. 11. in 18. cap. Exod.

Contra. 1. There is great difference betweene the reservation of matters to Moses, and of certaine cases to the Pope: for Moses was set over but one nation, which at this time encamped together, within the compasse of not many miles, and so they might with ease bring the weighty causes to him. But the Pope challengeth to be the supreme Judge over all the world: and so without infinite trouble, the greater causes cannot be brought unto him. 2. Moses judgement was sought for, because hee could not erre, having often conference with God, to direct him, as the Pope hath not: and this Testatus confesseth; Romanus pontifex, &c. The Roman Bishop, though he have great power, sometime is not a man very vertuous, and though he be, because he hath not God present to answer unto all his demands, facilius errare potest, he may more easily erre: therefore that is but a foppish and fawning conclusion of the Canonists: that the Pope hath Omnia jura in scrinio pectoris: All lawes in his breast. 3. Whereas Iethro intended in this device the peoples ease, not to goe farre for their causes, and Moses ability to performe his office: neither of these inconveniences is helped in making appeales to Rome: for neither is the Pope able to amend all such causes, and the people would be infinitely molested to be hurried to Rome. 4. And if it were not for the advantage of the Court and Consistory of Rome, they would desire to bee eased rather of, than cumbred with such appeales: But Moses herein only sought the profit of Gods people, not his owne. Simler.

6. Morall Observations.

1. Obs. To take heed of idle and vaine talke.

Vers. 8. Then Moses told his father in law, &c. Moses did conferre with Iethro about the wondrous workes of God, which the Lord had wrought for them: Vnde arguuntur hi, qui vanis colloquiis delectantur: They then are reprov'd, which are delighted with vaine talke. Ferus. Which may serve as a good motive in our dayes, to cut off idle, if not very prophane conference when wee meet; remembring ever, that of idle words we must give an account. B. Babington.

2. Observ. Workes must be joynd with faith.

Vers. 12. Then Iethro tooke burnt offerings, &c. Having beene thankfull in words, now he addeth deeds: for S. Iames calleth that a dead faith, where workes want; if we joyne both these together, as Iethro did, we shall fully give assurance both to others, and to our selves of our true faith, B. Babington.

3. Obs. That we should doe all our workes as in Gods sight.

Vers. 12. THEY came to eat bread with Moses father in law before God. Hereupon Origen well noteth: Sancti manducant & bibunt in conspectu Dei, &c. The Saints doe eat and drinke in the sight of God, and all that they doe, they doe in his sight: And so the Apostle saith, Whether ye eat or drinke, or whatso|ever ye doe, doe all to the glory of God: 1. Cor. 10.31.

4. Obs. Diligence is required in a Magistrate.

Vers. 13. The people stood about Moses, from morning to even. Mosessingular diligence and paines is here set forth, in attending upon the causes of the people: Audiant hoc delicusi Indices no|stri, qui vix ad horam, &c. Let our delicate Iudges heare this, which scarce indure an houre to heare their suiters causes. Diligence in the charge committed to us, is sweet unto God, and good to our selves: Come thou good and faithfull servant, will God say to the Magistrate, as well as to the Minister, Enter into thy Lords joy, B. Babington.

5. Obs. Iudges and Magistrates specially must be men fearing God.

Vers. 21. FEaring God, &c. The feare of God is a vertue most necessary in Judges, for hereupon hang all vertues: Abraham thinking that the feare of God was not in Gerar, despaired of any other vertue there to be found, Gen.20. B. Babington.

6. Obs. Good counsell is to be received at any hand.

Vers. 24. SO Moses obeyed, &c. In quo mite & modestum ingenium declarat, &c. Wherein Moses sheweth a milde and modest disposition, not to refuse to receive wholesome counsell at any mans hand, Mar|bach. As the Apostle saith, Set up them which are least esteemed in the Church, 1. Cor. 6.4. Good counsell proceeding even from simple and meane people, is not to be despised.

The end of the first booke.

Page [unnumbered]

THE SECOND PART OF THIS BOOKE OF EXODVS: Containing THE HISTORIE OF THE Constitution and setling of the people of Israel, after their deliverance out of Egypt, in their state Ecclesiasticall and Civill, by Lawes morall, ceremoniall, politicall;

WITH THE OBEDIENCE AND disobedience of the people thereunto: divided into two Bookes:

THE FIRST SHEWING THE PRESCRIPTION of those Lawes, to chap. 30. The second, the practice and execution thereof, unto the end of Exodus.

THE FIRST BOOKE SHEWING THE PRESCRIPTION and promulgation of the foresaid Lawes.

[illustration]

LONDON, ¶ Printed by the Assignes of THOMAS MAN, PAVL MAN, and IONAH MAN. 1633.

Page [unnumbered]

Page 237

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE HIS SINGVLAR GOOD LORD, SIR THOMAS EGERTON, Lord
Ellesmere, Lord Chancellor of England, and of his Majesties most honourable privie Councill.

Right Honourable, there is a saying,  That nothing so soone w^oeth old, as thanks* for a benefit received: This imputation of unthankfull oblivion might justly fall upon mee, if having occasion to use my penne, I should in silence passe over your Honour: I cannot therefore forget your Honourable favour and bounty, which I have some yeeres past felt and found. The eye better seeth the object removed in equall distance from it, than when it is put close unto it: so a thankfull heart will as well consider of a benefit after, as at the first time when it is received. I hate flattery, neither have I used to fawne upon great men, in praising above desert, or blazing their names, whom their vertues commend not: yet I hold it as great a wrong not to ascribe praise where it is deserved, as it is follie to give it where it is not due. It is a good saying,  It is seemely to give incense unto God, and praises unto good men:* for the praise of the instrument redoundeth to him that handleth it, and the industry of the Minister commendeth the skill of the chiefe worker: and the acknowledging of the gifts and graces of men, setteth forth the praise of God that giveth them.

This therefore I cannot conceale, that I have found your Honour the greatest respecer, and only rewarder of my poore travels and labours. This I speake not, as though wee which by preaching and writing keepe the watch-tower against the enemy, ought to make the reward of the world the end and scope of our paines taken in the world: I hold it Pharisaicall to doe any thing,  for the praise or recompence of men. This is sufficient for the servants of Christ, that their Lord hath promised; Thou shalt be recompenced at the resurrection of the just.  I am of his minde, that when one had said, It is an excellent thing for a man to obtaine all that he desires: made this answer: Multò majus est non desiderare e^o, quib^o nihil indiges: But it is a greater matter, not to desire at all the things which thou needest not. But this I have mentioned, to note by the way the strange humour of this age, that of all presents, least esteemeth bookes, and vilipendeth no gift, as it doth the fruits of Scholars studies. I have read that the women among the people called

Page 238

Iberi,  did use every yeere to shew publicly their spinning worke, and that she was most honoured, which in the judgement of the men had laboured most. If the Spinsters of these times,  which spinne and weave garments, not with Dor/cas to cloathe the body, but with Paul to adorne the soule, were had in such regard, we should have more spinners, and better worke. Such bookes I confesse, as feede mens fancies, and breed wanton delight, are had of some in price, when graver treatises are set light by:  as one of Terentius Comedies, called Eunuchus, was valued at eight thousand peeces of money, which make two hundred crownes: more than all Tullies Orations, and other his learned workes were esteemed at. But the choice of bookes should bee as the choice of Physicians: Medicus non jucundior, sed utilior eligitur:

A man will have a Physician rather profitable, that can doe him good, than pleasant to feede him with words. Such difference there is in bookes: they which please the eare doe flourish with leaves, but such as instruct the minde doe yeeld the fruit: the one as a song of Mu|sicke, that endeth with the sound, the other as wholesome physicke, that worketh after it is gone: * the bookes of the one are 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, Commentaries to instruct, the other are 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, Commemoratives of mens folly. Now what should be the reason, why bookes of Divinity are so much at many hands contemned, and treatises of vanity so highly commended, may easily be conjectured: for as Dio|genes being asked, why men used to give unto the blind and lame, but not unto Philosophers, made this answer, Because they may thinke they may one day become blind and lame themselves, but never hope to be Philosophers: So mens affections being blind and lame, and their phantasies vainly bent, must needs delight in vaine and lame pamphlets which feede their humours, and cannot brooke that which would purge them. But leaving to complaine of that which I cannot helpe, I cannot but commend that which I heare, and have my selfe found: that your Lordships respective care in preferring freely men of desert, (a rare presi|dent in these corrupt times) and protecting and patronizing their labours, is not the meanest flower in your garland, nor the smallest pearle among your jewels, nor of the least grace among your vertues. * But as Plutarke saith, The Moone ne|ver sheweth fairer, than when it is at the full: so your beneficence and favour to|ward such, sheweth your fulnesse, which with all other honourable parts I wish may still increase with you as the Moone, and never decrease as the Sunne.

Now in one word I will touch the occasion of my writing. As before I handled, in my Commentary upon Genesis, the holy histories of Abraham, Izhak, Iakob, Ioseph: So observing the same method, I have entred into the hi|story of Moses life and acts. I have chiefly handled the obscurer questions, which fall out in this booke of Exodus, not to bee inferiour (in mine opinion) either in depth of knowledge, or weight and pithinesse of argument or variety of de|light, to any in all the Scripture: Neither have I omitted the plainer observations (of most speciall note) fit for edifying: for, as Augustine well saith, In omni copia scripturarum sanctarum, pascimur apertis, exercemur obscuris: illie fa|mes pellitur, hic fastidium: In the great plenty of the sacred Scriptures wee are nou|rished with the plaine places, and exercised with the obscure; that ariveth away hun|ger, and this satiety. Of Moses therefore the Writer of the Law, I thought good to write to a Moses in our times, a most honourable Professor and Iudge of the Law. Three things in Moses are worthy of all eminent persons to be imitated: his beginning without ambition, his proceeding without corruption, his ending with glory.

For the first, Moses presumptuously aspired not to that high calling, to be the deliverer and Iudge of the Lords people, but by all meanes would have declined it. And as the Apostle noteth of Aaron, that no man taketh this honour to himselfe, * but he that was called of God, as Aaron: So was it true of Moses: and therefore as Hierome saith; Indignum se judicans ministerio Dei, major effectus est: While hee counted himselfe unworthy of the service of God, he became greater.

Secondly, in the execution of his office, Moses was most faithfull: as the Scrip|ture giveth testimony of him, that he was faithfull in all his house, Heb. 3.2. Hee ^adelivered the oppressed, delayed not ^bthe right of the poore, ^creceived no gifts, ^dcorrupted not judgement, sought not himselfe. The people waited upon Mo|ses, but from morning to even, Exodus 18.14. which Iethro his father in law thought to bee too much, that the people should stay so long for judgement, and therefore adviseth him to take a more speedy course for expedition. * It was ad|mirable that Moses having six hundred thousand people to attend upon him for their causes, held them no longer, than from morning to even. Herein your Honour, with other of your honourable place, shall doe well (as your Honour hath well shewed heretofore your care that way) to imitate Moses, in abridging the tediousnesse and length of suits, and in taking care that poore suters bee not wearied with long attendance. But this is more to bee wondred at, that Moses having two sonnes, Gershon and Eleazar; sought not their advancement, nor to make them great, seeing he consecrated Aaron and his sonnes for the Priesthood, and ordained Ioshua his minister and servant, to succede him in the govern|ment, making no mention at all, nor commending his sonnes unto God for ei|ther place. Wherein hee well declared, that hee affected not the greatnesse of his owne house, but studied wholly for the welfare of the people of God. And here|in Ioshuah followed his masters steps, who divided the land of Canaan among the tribes, and left nothing for himselfe, but that the people last of all cast him out a part, and that but a meane one in the barren mountaines: * as Hieromeno|teth, writing of that Christian Matron Paula, how shee visited the sepulchre of Ioshuah: Satisque mirata est, quod distributer possessionem sibi montana & aspera dellegasset: And marvelled very much, that the divider of the possessions chose the hilly and craggie places for himselfe: and he addeth further: Imo Iosua nihil sibi reliquit, sed portio ab Israelitis illi concessa: Ioshua left nothing for himselfe, but a portion was given him by the Israelites: as is evident Iosh. 19.49. Whence it cannot be infer|red, that it is unlawfull for Governors to provide for their kindred and posterity: for Ioseph being in authority nourished his father and brethren: but hereby it ap|peareth, that the chiefest care of Magistrates, who are Fathers of the Common-wealth, should be for the publike weale, more than for their private wealth: As the Apostle saith, I seeke not yours but you, * for the children ought not to lay up for the fathers, but the fathers for the children. And Bernard saith well: Praees, * nunquid ut de subditis crescas? nequaquam; sed ut ipsi de te: Thou art set over others, not that thou shouldest increase by them, but that they be increased by thee.

As Moses was faithfull and sincere in his office, so his end was glorious: who ever had a more honourable end than Moses, whom the Lord is said to have bu|ried? * whereof Ambrose thus writeth: Quis in terrenis ejus potuit deprehendere reliquias, quem secum esse Dei filius in Evangelio demonstravit? Who could thinke to finde his reliques (that is, his body) in the earth, whom the Sonne of God shewed in the Gospell to bee with him? Such an honourable end God will send to all Chri|stian Magistrates that walke in Moses steppes: whose excellent vertues of humi|lity, sincerity, piety, while your Honour setteth before your eyes, Moses reward of immortall glory shall assuredly follow, through the abundant mercies of God, and the infinite merits of Iesus Christ our blessed Saviour, to whom bee praise for ever.

Your Honours ready to be commanded in the Lord, ANDREW WILLET.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS BOOKE OF EXODVS, OF THE CONSTITUTION AND SET|ling of both the Ecclesiasticall and civill State of Israel, by most just and godly Lawes.

THE first part of this booke concerneth the deliverance and redemption of the people, both from the cruell bondage of the Egyptians, and from other dangers, which befell them in the desart. Now foll|loweth the other generall part, of the constitution and setling of their State, by wholesome and good Lawes, both morall, judiciall, and ceremoniall, to chap. 30. with the execution and practice of the people, to the end of the booke.

CHAP. XIX.

1. The Method and Argument.

T His Chapter containeth a description of the preparation of the people, to receive the Lawes afterward given them: which preparation is both generall to vers. 9. then particular to the end of the Chapter.

In the generall preparation, first the circumstances are set downe, both of time, place, and persons, when they removed, from whence and whither, and who, the whole host of Israel, vers. 1, 2.

Secondly, the generall preparation followeth. 1. Here is set downe the Lords loving invitation of Israel to be his people, propounded to Moses, consisting both of a rehearsall of the benefits, which the Lord had done for them, vers. 4. of the condition of their obedience required, vers. 5. of a most ample promise, to make them his peculiar people above all the earth, vers. 6. 2. Then is shewed the acceptance by the people of this gracious offer, propounded unto them by Moses, vers. 7. thankfully received by the people, vers. 8.

The particular preparation sheweth partly what was done the two dayes before the Law was given, to vers. 16. and what upon the third, to vers. 25.

In the first, there is: 1. The Lords prescription to Moses, both how he will talke and commune with him, vers. 9. the that he should sanctifie the people, vers. 10. with the end thereof, vers. 11. that they may be ready: thirdly, the interdict followeth, of not comming neere the mountaine, vers. 12. with the perill and danger thereof, vers. 13.

2. The obedience of Moses, and the people to the Lords commandement, vers. 14, 15. Upon the third day are declared, 1. the manner of the Lords appearing in mount Sinai, with thunder and lightning, vers. 16. 18. 2. The placing and disposing of the people, vers. 17. 3. The communication of the Lord with Moses, First in generall, vers. 19, 20. Then in particular: which containeth the Lords charge to Moses, concerning the people and Priests, vers. 21, 22. The exception of Moses and Aaron, vers. 24. interposed by occasion of Moses answer, vers. 24. Then the execution hereof by Moses, vers. 25.

2. The divers readings.

Vers. 1. In the third new moneth. I. better than, in the third moneth. caeter. for he saith afterward,* in the same day, that is, when the new moneth began.

Vers. 6. A kingdome of Priests. B. G. A. that is, a Priestly kingdome. V. L. P. that is, a sacred and holy kingdome: not, a royall Priesthood. for the latter substantive is put for the adjective, not the first.*

Vers. 7. Proposed all these words. B.V. cum caeter. all these things. G. debharim, words.*

Vers.* 9. After Moses had reported, &c. or, for Moses had reported G. better than, and Moses reported. V. A.P. or, Moses therefore reported. L. or, but Moses reported. S. It is better read in the preterpluperfect tense: for Moses had reported their words before, vers. 8.

Vers.* 19. God answered him by voice. B.G. cum caeter. God answered him. L. Here these words, by voice, are omitted.

Vers. 25. Lest he breake in upon them. V.I. or, make a breach upon them. A.P. better than, lest hee destroy them. B.G.L. or, destroy of them. S. bam, signifieth in or upon them.

3. The explanation of doubtfull and difficult questions.

QUEST. I. Of what yeere this was the third moneth.

Vers. 1. IN the third moneth, &c. 1. It is not expressed here, of what yeere this was the third moneth. But it is easily gathered, that it was in the first yeere of the departure of the children of Israel out of Egypt: for although the Scripture usually in the computation of time, doth expresse the yeere, as well as the moneth: yet sometime the yeere is omitted: when either by the circumstance and under of the story, it may be gathered, as Numb. 20. vers. 1. The first moneth is named, but the yeere is omitted, which was the 40. yeere, because the order of the story, and course of time will leade us to that yeere: or else, when as by conference with other places, the yeere may be found out, as seeing Numb. 10. 11. they departed from Sinai in the second yeere, and second moneth; it must needs be, that they came thither in the third moneth of the first yeere. Tostat. 2. For in this place were all those things done, which are described by Moses, in the rest of this booke of Exodus, and in the booke following of Leviticus. Hierom. Which things could not bee done in a short time: therefore they here encamped almost a whole yeere, before they removed.

QUEST. II. What day of the moneth the same day was.

The same day. 1. Some thinke, the same day is named, wherein they came from Rephidim: because they tooke a longer journey than usuall upon that day, even from Rephidim to Sinai. Lippe. Vatab. 2. Some, because upon that day the three moneths were expired, after their departure out of Egypt. Oleaster. But there were only two moneths expired, and the third now begun. 3. On the same day, that is, the third day, as it was the third moneth. Hugo de S. Victor. But upon the third day of the moneth was the law given, against which day the people are warned to prepare themselves, vers. 11. 4. The same day then hath relation to the words before, the third moneth, or rather the third new moone, when the moneth began: for ch•desh doth as well signifie the new moone, as the moneth, as 1. Sam. 20. 5. to morrow is ch•desh the new moone, which is the first day of the moneth: The same day, when it was new moone, when the third moneth began. Iun. For of no other day hath the moneth the denomination but of the first. Tostat. And because the day is certainly expressed, as is usuall in Scripture, it must needs have reference to the third new moone, rather than moneth before spoken of, Piscator. 5. Moses is so diligent to describe the moneth and day, when they came to Sinai, because this was the place to the which the Lord called them, and wherein the Law was given, and the Tabernacle erected; and where the Lord entred into a league, and covenant with his people. Ferus.

QUEST. III. Whether this first day of the third moneth, were the 47. day from the passeover.

NOW how many dayes this was from the pasch, there are divers opinions: 1. Cajetane thinketh it was the 45. day, counting together 15. dayes remaining of the first moneth from the passeover, and 29. of the second, and so the first day of the third moneth maketh 45. But beside, that the Hebrewes counted 30. dayes to a moneth: by this account, the day of giving the Law, which followed the fourth day after at the furthest, should not be the Pentecost, that is, the 50. day. 2. The most received opinion is, that this was the 47. day from the passeover, accounted thus, 16. dayes remaining of the first moneth, 30. of the second, and the first of the third, which make 47. Iun. Simler. Rupertus. But by this reckoning, the day wherein the Law was given, which was the third day after, as some held, as Tostatus, should be but the 49. day: which is generally held of all to be the 50. which is called Pentecost, upon which day the holy Ghost came downe upon the Apostles, that the type and shadow may agree with the substance. To remove this doubt: 1. Some say, that the Law was given on the 49. day; but the tables of stone were delivered upon the 50. Rupertus l. 3. in Exod. c. 23. 2. Some that 49. is counted for 50. Simler. Or that the Law was given, not upon the third day, but the fourth day of the moneth: or that 31. dayes must bee reckoned to the second moneth. Simler. But the best answer of these is, that the Law was not given before the fourth day of the moneth, which was the third day from the time that the Lord spake to Moses, to sanctifie the people, vers. 10. as shall be further shewed, quest. 16, following. 3. Augustines computation is, that wee must take 17. dayes of the first moneth,* because they eat the Passeeover upon the 14. day at even, and 30. of the second moneth, and three of the third, and so have we full 50. dayes: So account also Gloss. ordinar. Ferus. Saving that they make this first day of the third moneth, but the 47. day, which is this last account must bee the 48. for 17. of the first, and 30. of the second moneth, make 47. dayes, and then the first day of the third should be the 48. But there remained not 17. dayes of the first moneth to be counted, as shall be further declared, quest. 16.

QUEST. IV. Of the place where they encamped.

Vers. 2. They came to the desert of Sinai, and encamped, &c. 1. It is not said as before, they came by their journeyes to Rephidim, chap. 17. 1. because they had other stations before, there omitted, as Dopke and Alush: but here they came without any stay, from Rephidim to the desert of Sinai. Tostat. 2. This was the 12. station which the Israelites had after they came out of Egypt. Hiero•. This place was distant from the red sea about 90. miles, so that the Israelites might march some 8. miles a day: which considering their carriages, and their little ones, which went with them, was sufficient for a dayes journey. Simler. 3. There was both the mount Sinai, and the desert of Sinai, which was the region, which lay about Sinai, so called of the mountaine. Lippoman. 4. Whereas they are twice said to have encamped, which the Latine interpreteth by two words, castrametari, to encampe, and tentoria figere, to pitch their tents, though the same word chanah, be repeated in the originall. Some make this difference: that the first encamping was the appointing unto every one his standing places by certaine Officers: and then, according to this designement, they pitched their tents, Tostat. Lyran. But this is more curious than needeth, the reason of this repetition is, because, first the place in generall is described, where they camped, namely, in the wilderness, secondly, the particular place is designed, they camped before the mount.

QUEST. V. Whether the Israelites encamped on the East side of the mount Sinai.

Vers. 2. They encamped before the mount. 1. Lyranus thinketh that the Israelites pitched on the East side of the mount: so that the mount it selfe lay Westward from them, that they might bee ready to worship the Lord, descending upon the mount: for the Jewes used to worship toward the West: the Tabernacle being so placed, that the doore was Eastward, and the most holy place toward the West: and the starres in the heavens take their course from the East toward the West, as Nehemiah saith, All the host of heaven worshipped thee, Nehem. 9.6.

But this opinion of Lyranus is confuted by Burgens. and Tostatus: their reasons are these: 1. The people when they came to mount Sinai, did not know, whether the Lord would appeare in any such visible manner as he did; and therefore it is not like, they did so dispose themselves, or to such an end. Tostat. 2. The Israelites indeed did worship toward the West, when they were in the Tabernacle; but when they were out of the Tabernacle, which was pitched in the midst of the campe, then they all worshipped toward the Tabernacle, whether it were East or West, otherwise some should have turned their backs upon it. So before the Tabernacle was set up, when Moses went unto his Tabernacle, all the people worshipped at their tent doores, Exod. 33.10. but all their tent doores could not open one way toward the West. Tostat. 3. The Israelites in captivity worshipped toward Jerusalem, as Daniel opened his window that way, which was Southward from Babylon, and Babylon lay North from Jerusalem. Tostat. And wheresoever the Jewes are at this day thorow Europe, they worship toward Jerusalem. Burgens. And Sa/lomon prayeth, that when the people went to battell, and prayed toward the house of God, that the Lord would heare them, 1. King. 8.44. But being abroad in battell, the Temple could not be alwayes West|ward from them. 4. Beside, though at other times they prayed toward the West, yet wheresoever they saw any visible presence of Cod, they were notwithstanding their usuall custome, to turne themselves that way. Tostatus.

2. Tostatus opinion then is, that they pitched on the South side of mount Sinai, because they came from Egypt, which lay Southward from mount Sinai. 3. But the more probable opinion is, that they lay in circuit and compasse about the mount, as Paul. Burgens. That they might the better heare and see what was done: as the Lord saith to Moses, That the people may heare, while I talke with thee, vers. 9. And Moses is commanded to set markes for the people round about the hill, vers. 12. so that it seemeth the campe of Israel compassed the mountaine, though not round about, yet on more sides than one. But here Mathias Thoring the Replier against Burgensis, taketh this exception, that the host of Israel could not lye about mount Sinai: because on the one end toward Egypt, the hill is continued, and Iosephus maketh Horeb a part of it; and on the other side some thinke, that mount Sinai is extended even unto the Land of promise, because of the Apostles words: Sinai mons est in Arabia, & conjunctus est ei, qua nunc est Ierusalem: Sinai is a mountaine in Arabia, and is joyned unto that which is now Ierusalem: Galath. 4.25. So the Replier, Repl. in 19. cap. Exod.

Contra. 1. We grant that the hilly tract, where Sinai is situate, reacheth a long way toward Egypt, and is called Horeb: but Sinai was an high hill over all the rest, of such an height, as that they could scarce see to the top of it, as Iosephus writeth, lib. 3. cap 4. This need bee no let, but that some part of the host might incampe on that side toward Egypt, though it were somewhat hilly: and admit they did not; this maketh only against Tostatus opinion, that thinketh they incamped all on the South side toward Egypt: they might lye round about on the other sides, the South side only excepted. 2. That Sinai is not continued unto the land of Canaan, it is evident by all mappes and descriptions of that country: the word 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ▪ which the Apostle useth, signifieth the answering or correspondencie of Sinai, unto the earthly Jerusa|lem, in that allegory, which the Apostle maketh, not any conjunction, in situation. And so the Replier is answered.

QUEST. VI. How Moses is said to goe up unto God.

Vers. 3. MOses went up unto God, &c. 1. Some thinke that Moses went aside to give himselfe to prayer and meditation, as he was wont. Calvin. But this phrase of going up unto God, sheweth, that this was some extraordinary calling of Moses unto that place. 2. Others thinke that Moses went up into this mount uncalled, because there the Lord sometime appeared before in the fiery bush, and had ap|pointed that to be the place, where they should sacrifice unto him: and therefore Moses went up to the mountaine, but not to the top of the mountaine, remembring that hee was before reproved for appro|ching so neare. Lryan. Tostat. 3. But it is more likely, that Moses for the same reason went not up into the mount, till the Lord called him, because of the reverence of the place; and so the words are to be read. For the Lord had called him. Simler. Genevens. So also Oleaster. And then, hee is said to goe up to God: not because it was the mountaine where God had appeared. Vatab. Or because there was the cloud, or some visible signe of Gods presence. Simler. But for that he heard Gods voice calling unto him from the top of the hill: Quamvis nulla species sensibilis scribatur apparens in monte, ipsa tamen vocatio, &c. Although no sensible shew is written to have appeared in the mountaine, yet the very calling of God put Moses in hope there to find God. Cajetan.

QUEST. VII. Why both these names of Iacob and Israel are joyned together.

Vers. 3. THou shalt thus say to the house of Iacob, and tell the children of Israel, &c. 1. Hee calleth them the house or family of Iacob, because as one house is to the master and father of the house, so all that people were in respect of Iacob. Tostat. They had all their beginning out of that family. 2. He callleth them the house of Iacob, rather than of Abraham, or Izak. because they had each of them but two sonnes, nay in effect but one sonne a piece, because the other were not counted their seede: which were not sufficient to make a family, but Iacob had 12. sonnes. Oleaster. 3. Both these names are joyned together, Iacob, and Israel: to shew, that as the first was Iacobs naturall and originall name, the other was gi|ven him by grace, so there were two sorts of Israelites, those, which were such only after the flesh, others that were true Israelites according to promise. Simler. And that as Iacob had that name of supplanting, and Israel for prevailing with God, so they should seeke to be answerable to both these names in supplan|ting of vice, and being strong with God. Ferus. And as Israel was a name given of God, so they bearing this name, should assure themselves, they were the people of God.

QUEST. VII. How the Lord is said to carry them upon Eagles wings.

Vers. 4. I Carried you upon Eagles wings, &c. 1. Some by these two wings understand Moses and Aaron, by whom the people were led: Gloss. interlinear. but Moses and Aaron themselves were carried upon these Eagles wings. 2. Some understand the two Testaments: Gloss. ordinar. but they as yet had received neither of the Testaments. 3. Therefore hereby is metaphorically described, the singular protection of this people, and their mighty defence: and in divers respects: 1. In respect of their speedy del|iverance, that all of them in one day, being such a great multitude, came out of Egypt, which was an ad|mirable thing. Cajetan. 2. In that they passed many difficulties, in going thorow the red Sea, in travelling thorow the wilderness: they went thorow all these hazards and difficulties, as though they had beene carried upon Eagles wings: Tostat. 3. The Hebrewes here write, that the Eagle taketh her young ones, and carrieth them upon her backe, whereas other birds carry them in their talants, whereby the Lord shewed his love: Genevens. and their safe and secure defence: that they were extra omnem teli jactum, without the compasse of all danger. Tostat. Lippom. But this conjecture of the Eagles carrying her young ones upon her shoulders, frivolum videtur, seemeth to be of no great credit; Calvin: fictitium &c. it may be thought to be fained: Oleaster. The Eagle is said to beare them on her wings, because, when the young ones begin to fly, shee doth support them with her wings, lest they should fall: Oleaster. and she soareth with them aloft, using them to flie against the Sunne. Calvin. And so the meaning is, that as the Eagle supporteth and protecteth her young ones, while they flie aloft, that no danger can come neere them: so the Lord protected his people. 4. And as the Eagle stirreth her nest, and provoketh the young to fly, and defendeth them in flying, when she changeth her place and nest: so the Lord transported and removed his people, stirred them out of their uncleane nest in Egypt, to bring them to Canaan. Oleaster. As Mosesset|teth forth this similitude at large, Deut. 32.11. As an Eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her birds, stretcheth out her wings, taketh them and beareth them on her wings. 5. And as the Eagle taketh her young ones aloft: sic Deus eduxit eos elevatos in filios Dei: So God tooke them, advanced or lifted up to bee the sonnes of God: and as the Eagle from aloft defendeth her young ones, so God de superna nube pugnavit pro eis: did from the cloud above fight for his people. Cajetan.

QUEST. VIII. How they are said to be the Lords chiefe treasure.

Vers. 4. YE shall be my chiefe treasure, &c. 1. The word is segulah, which signifieth a speciall and pecu|liar treasure above the rest: as that is called peculium which the sonne and heire of the house hath of his owne, beside the right of his fathers inheritance, which he may dispose of as he thinketh good: so the meaning is this, that although the whole earth be the Lords by the right of creation, yet this people should have a speciall interest in God before all other. Tostat. 2. Beside, the Lord had given unto them his law, as to no other people in the world, which he had committed unto them as a chiefe and principall treasure. Vatab. 3. And herein as the Lord sheweth what prerogative they had over other people: so thereby is signified how deare and precious they were in the sight of God: Vos veluti populum quendam eximium mihi consecravi: I have consecrated you to my selfe as an excellent people. Theodoret.

QUEST. IX. How they are said to be a kingdome of Priests.

Vers. 5. YE shall be unto me a kingdome of Priests. 1. That as the Levites and Priests were chosen out of all the tribes of Israel, to bee peculiar unto the Lord for his service: so the Lord had chosen the seede of Abraham out of all the nations of the world. Theodoret. 2. Or as the Priests did specially attend the service of God, so the people of Israel should all be as Priests, in respect of other nations, addicted to the worship of the true God. Tostat. So that all other kingdomes were but profane in respect of them. 3. Hereby also is signified their principality above other nations, as Priests were revered and honoured of all; and the speciall care which God had of them, as they themselves had seene in Egypt, how the Priests were revered of all, and maintained out of the common Treasury. Cajetan. 4. The Chalde readeth, yee shall be Kings and Priests, that is, they should under the regiment and kingdome of God, be as Kings: Quia nullum optabilius, & felicius regnum, quam nos Deo subicere: Because there is no more happy kingdome, than to subject our selves unto God. Calv. for God was their King, as the Lord saith to Samuel, They have not cast thee off, but cast me off, that I should not reigne over them. Cajet. 5. They are also said to be a kingdome of Priests, because Christ was to bee borne of that nation both King and Priest: Ferus*; which his spirituall kingdome and priesthood by faith is communicated to his members: whom he hath made Kings in subduing sinne and Satan, and Priests in offering spirituall sacrifices unto God: as S. Peter expoundeth, and applieth this place, 1. Pet. 2. Cajetan. Lippoman. 6. Oleaster bringeth foure interpretations of these words: 1. That they should be a kingdome governed by Priests: for the Lord was angry that the people had cast off the government of Samuel. But it was never the Lords meaning, that Levi should have the civill government of his people, though some of Levi were extraordinarily raised up, as Moses, Samuel, to judge his people, because the scepter was promised to Iudah, Gen. 49.10. 2. The word cohanim may be translated, Princes, as well as Priests, and then the meaning is, they should all bee as Princes, that is, subject to none but unto God▪ But it is not like that two words of like signification should be put together, as Kingdome and Princes: therefore the other sense, of Priests is here more fit. 3. They should be a kingdome of Priests, that is, all of them addicted and devoted to the service of God, as if they were all Priests. 4. Or they should be an holy people in respect of other nations: and in comparison of them as Priests. These two last senses are most fit, and agreeable to the rest before alleaged.

QUEST. X. By what reasons the Lord perswadeth the people and why.

Vers. 8. AND the people answered. 1. Thus by these perswasions before propounded, the Lord thought good to winne the obedience and hearts of the people: for seeing the Lord was to impose upon them a law: & lex est quoddam onus, and the law is a certaine burthen: for where a law is set, the will of man is limited, which man naturally desireth to be left free: and therefore it was requisite that the people should be thus prepared to obedience: Tostat. quæst. 2. 2. The Lord perswadeth them partly with the commemoration of benefits past, their deliverance out of Egypt, and their protection in the wilderness, which is set forth by an elegant similitude taken from the Eagle, which supporteth her young ones with her wings: partly with the promise of future blessings, that they should be a peculiar people to him|selfe. Simler. 3. Then whereas men naturally partim fastu & altitudine turgent, partim securitate torpent: partly doe swell with pride and haughtinesse, partly grow slothfull by security: Calvin. These perswasions as soveraigne medicines doe meet with both these inconveniences: the remembrance of Gods benefits doth serve to abate their pride, that they should not ascribe their deliverance to themselves: the promise of further blessings would provoke them not to bee idle. 4. If the remembrance of these temporall benefits was so effectuall toward them; how much more ought wee to remember, Quod nos abundantiore gratia liberatos à peccatis nostris, portavit Deus, homo factus, &c. That God made man hath deliverd us by more abundant grace from our sinnes, and carried us unto mount Sion to the celestially Ierusalem? &c. Rupertus.

QUEST. XI. Whether the people unfainedly here promise obedience.

Vers. 8. All that the Lord hath commanded, will wee doe. 1. It seemeth, that at this present, the people had a good desire and full intent to keepe all the commandements of God: for otherwise the Lord would not have commended them: thus saying, Deut. 5.28. I have heard the voice of the words of this people, which they have spoken unto thee: they have well said, all that they have spoken: O that there were such an heart in them to feare me, and keepe my commandements alway. The Lord would not both for the present have approved their saying, and wished a continuance of their disposition, if it had not proceeded from a good affection. Tostat. quaest. 3. Nec eos quicquam simulasse credibile est: It is not credible or like, that they dissembled at this time. Calvin. 2. But although this their readinesse to obey, were not without the motion of the spirit of God: in plaeris{que} tamen temporariam fuisse promptitudinem, &c. yet that it was but a temporary promptitude, a willingnesse for a time in the most of them, their doings, which followed, declare. Simler. So their first fault here committed is their frailty and inconstancy: Propensus est populus, sed fragilis & inconstans: The people seeme to bee ready, yet fraile and inconstant: Pellican. Caro solet multa promittere, nihil praestare: The flesh useth to promise much, and performe nothing. Ferus. So that herein appeareth their temerity and rashnesse, that promise great things as Peter did: Sic faciunt, qui propriis confidunt viribus: As all they doe, which trust in their owne strength. Lippoman. 3. And seeing the people doe of themselves vow obedience to the law: they afterward are most justly punished for the transgression of the law, quasi voti rei, as breakers of their vow and promise made unto God. Gloss. ordinar.

QUEST. XII. How the Lord is said to come in the thicke cloud, when, and in what thicke cloud it was.

Vers. 9. LOe I come unto thee in a thicke cloud. 1. Before the Lord came and appeared in the cloud, but not to this end, to speake to Moses in the hearing of the people, and to give them a law: for before the people had promised their obedience the Lord would thrust upon them a law, against their willes. Tostat. 2. Some thinke that presently the Lord came to Moses in a thicke cloud: Intelligend• absque omni haesitatione est: It must be understood without any deferring. Cajetan. But the cloud came not presently: for the Lord thus spake to Moses upon the first or second day: the cloud came not before the third day, vers. 16. Tostat. And when the cloud appeared, the Lord talked with Moses out of the cloud: but that was not before the third day. 3. Neither is it like that this thicke cloud was the cloudy piller, which used to goe before the host: as the Septuagint reade, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, in the piller of the cloud: and so the Chalde also: for this cloud was major & densior, both greater and thicker, for it covered all the moun• and by way of distinction it is called a thicke cloud. Lippoman. 4. In that he calleth it a thicke cloud, quod drat patefactionibus veteris testamenti, &c. it agreeth to the revelations of the old Testament. Simler. Tunc cum Deus in caligine apparuit, id est, in umbrae & figuri: For then the Lord appeared in a darke cloud, that is, in shadowes and figures. Ferus. 5. Beside hereby is shewed, quod in praesenti non habemus nisi cognitionem anigmaticam in divinis: That in this present world wee have but a darke knowledge in divine things: as the Apostle saith, Now wee see thorow a glasse darkly, 1. Cor. 13.12. Lyran. 6. But God is said in Scripture to come, metaphorically: Sicut sol dicitur intrare domum, vel exire: As the sunne is said to come into the house, or goe out, when his beames only enter: so God is said to come, per influentiam bonitatis, by the influence of his goodnesse, and by illuminating the minde: as here he commeth to Moses. Lippom. ex Thoma.

QUEST. XIII. Why the Lord talketh with Moses in the hearing of the people.

THat the people may heare while I talke with thee. 1. The Lord then spake not to the people out of the mount, but he spake to Moses in the hearing of the people, as vers. 19. it is said, Moses spake, and God answered him by voice: for God spake to Moses to this end, that hee might get him credit and authority with the people, which could not have beene, if the Lord had spoken to all the people. Tostat. 2. Beside, here is a difference made betweene the Lords speaking to Moses now, and afore time: for then hee spake unto him secretly, but now in the audience of the people. Lippo. 3. And whereas before God had confir|med Moses authority with miracles, so now hee would by a more certaine way give him authority in speaking to him by his owne voice in the hearing of others: for there may bee false miracles, as it is said, Antichrist shall come with lying signes, 2. Thes. 2. But when God himselfe speaketh there can be no errour, or doubt: Tostat. 4. The makers of lawes among the Heathen to winne credit to their lawes, have imagi|ned the Gods to be the authors of them: as Minos ascribed the Cretensian lawes to Iupiter: Lycurgus the Lacedemonian lawes to Apollo: Zoroastres the Bactrian lawes to Cramaeses: Zamulxis the Scythian lawes to Vesta. But those were onely devices. This Law-giver Moses, most certainly received his lawes from Iehovah: Borrh. 5. And in that it is said, that they may beleeeve thee for ever, God would not, ad breve tempus fidem servo suo Mosi adstruere, &c. God would not for a short time only get credit unto Moses: but that they might also beleeeve him being dead: Calvin.

QUEST. XIV. Why Moses is said twice to have reported the peoples words unto God.

Vers. 9. FOr Moses had told the words of the people to the Lord. Whereas it is said also before, That Mo|ses reported the words of the people to the Lord, vers. 8. 1. Some thinke this to be a repetition of the same thing, which is usual in Scripture. Tostat. But the Scripture useth no needlesse repetitions, such as this should seeme to be, if it were a bare iteration of the same thing. 2. Some thinke the sentence is trans|posed, and that both these clauses should be put together: Moses told the words of the people to the Lord: And when Moses had reported the words of the people, &c. Hug. de S. Victor. But this were to teach the spi|rit of God to speake. 3. Cajetan will have the first not to be Moses relation, but onely Moses returning or intendment to report unto God the words of the people: but that, Moses was Praeoccupatus à Deo, ante|quam relationem faceret: Moses was prevented of God, before he made relation. But the words of the text are against this exposition, for in the first place it is said, that Moses did report their words, as it is expres|sed afterward. 4. Therefore the last clause is better thus read, in the pleterpluperfect tense: for Moses had reported. Simler. Genevens. Or, after Moses had reported: so that this is the meaning: that when Moses had related their words unto God, then the Lord thus spake to Moses. 5. And Moses declareth the peo|ples words unto God, not as though the Lord was ignorant: Sed ut bona voluntas populi tanquam Deo pla|cita praesentetur: But that the good mind of the people should bee presented unto God, as pleasing unto him. Lyran. And herein Moses shewed his good affection, Gaudet de profectu populi, &c. As a good Prince hee rejoyced to see the people profit. Ferus.

QUEST. XV. Why they are bidden to wash their garments.

Vers. 10. Sanctifie them, and let them wash their cloathes. 1. This washing of the garments, though in it selfe it was of no force to sanctification, yet it had a double profitable use: pertinuit ad disciplinam, &c. it belonged to the externall discipline, to shew their reverence in the presence of God. Siml. As it is noted for a contempt, to come with filthy garments before a great man. Tostat. Beside, it was Symbolum interna sanctificationis, it was A symbole of their inward sanctification. Simler. Ex his enim intelligere poterant multo magis mentem expurgari debere, &c. For hereby they might understand, that their minde was much more to be purged. Theodoret. 2. Beside, admonendi erant suae impuritatis: They were to be admonished of their impurity. Simler. That they should remember how they had beene defiled and polluted with the idolatry, and other corruptions of Egypt: As Iacob, being to go up to build an Altar in Bethel, doth purge his family, and biddeth them cast away their strange Gods, and change their garments. Tostat. quaest. 5. 3. But why they are not bid to change their garments, as Iacob spake to his houshold, but onely to wash them, these two reasons may be yeelded: because in Iacobs family there were not many, and he was rich, and his servants might have change of rayment: but the Israelites were many, and among them divers poore, that had not double rayment. Tostat. quaest. 6. Beside, the Israelites garments did not wax old all the time of their travell in the wilderness: therefore the Lord would not have these garments changed, that therein they might have experience of the power and providence of God, that watched over them. Lyran. quaest. 8.

QUEST. XVI. Whether this were the third day of the moneth when the law was given.

Vers. 11. LEt them bee ready on the third day, &c. 1. The opinion of some of the Rabbines is, that this was not the 3. day of the moneth, but the 6. day: and the third from that time, when the Lord thus spake to Moses: for they say that upon the first day of the moneth, Moses went up to God, and relceived that message to bee delivered to the people, and came downe the same day and stayed the next and reported not the answer of the people untill the 3. day. R. Salom. Lyran. Cajetanus is of the same opinion, that the first day of the moneth, was but the 45. day after their departure out of Egypt, and that the Lord upon the 48. day, bid the people to bee ready against the third day after. Contra. But this is not like, for this would have shewed great negligence in Moses, if he should have stayed so long, before hee delivered the peoples minde to the Lord, seeing mount Sinai was so neere unto the host. 2. Some thinke that it was the third of the moneth, and that it hath relation to the first day mentioned, vers. 1. Tostat. quaest. 10. Gloss. ordin. Ferus. But this cannot stand neither: for both Ferus, and Gloss. interlin. doe make the first day of the moneth but the 47. day: then the third day wherein the law was given, was but the 49. day: but the day wherein the law was given, is held of all to bee the Pentecost, the 50. day. Some to take away this doubt, would borrow 17. dayes of the first moneth, and 30. of the next, and 3. of the third: and so the publishing of the law shall fall out upon the 50. day: So Augustine, Gloss. ordin. But there remained onlly 16. dayes of the first moneth to be counted, the Passeover being kept upon the 14. day at even: there|fore they cannot make their reckoning of 17. dayes remaining in that moneth: and to account 31. dayes unto the next moneth, as some doe, it was against the custome of the Hebrewes. 3. Therefore it must thus be, that on the first day of the moneth, when the host was come into the wilderness o• Sinai, Moses went up to the Lord, and came downe with the message to the people: and then the next day went up with the peoples answer unto God: for it is not like that all the host came thither, and Moses went up, and came downe, and propounded the Lords words to the Elders, and they to the people, and received their answer, and returned the same, all upon one day. And Cajetanes conceit herein is not to be refused: that, because the Lord saith, To day and to morrow sanctifie them, Insinuatur, quod haec dicta fuerint man•: It is insinuated, that this was said in the morning. This then was spoken upon the second day in the morning▪ and the third day from thence was the law given, which was not the third, but the fourth day of the moneth. Iun. Simler. Rupertus also agreeth, that the first day of the third moneth was the 47. day after the Passeover, and that the fourth day after, which was the 50. day,

Moses received the tables of the law: but herein he differeth, that the thicke cloud, with the thunder and the lightning, were seene and heard the day before, which was the 49. But it is evident by the text, that upon the third day was the voice of the Lord heard talking with Moses, vers. 19.

QUEST. XVII. Whether the 15. day of the moneth were one of the fifty which went before the giving of the Law.

BUT here ariseth another doubt, whether in the computation of these 50. dayes after the Passeeover, the next day after they had eaten the paschall lambe, be included in that number, or that there were fifty dayes beside. 1. Some doe hold that the 15. day, being the morrow after the Pasch, must bee excluded, because afterward in the law of the Pentecost, they began the account of seven weekes upon the 16. day, the morrow after the Sabbath, or first solemne day of the Passeeover: as is further to be seene, Lev. 23.11. and then after seven weekes complete, the which make 49. dayes, the next day which was the 50. was the day of Pentecost. Cajetan. But it is not necessary, that this first 50. day should be accounted after that rule, excluding the morrow after the Passeeover: as it may appeare partly by the text: When yee bee come into the land which I shall give you, vers. 10. that law is made to bee kept after they were come to Canaan: and the reason of this alteration was, because they were to begin the account of the seven weekes from that day, wherein they first put the sickle into the corne, whereof they should bring a sheafe to shake before the Lord, Deut. 16.9. which could not be done upon the first day of unleavened bread, it being a solemne day, and of the nature of a Sabbath, wherein they were to doe no servile worke. Levit. 23.7. Rupertus here agreeth, that the Pentecost was not yeerely kept the just fiftith day after the Passeeover, as the law was gi|ven the fiftith day after the Passeeover. But herein he is deceived, that upon what day soever the Passeeover fell in the weeke, they did expect the morrow after the next Sabbath, when they were to bring in their sheafe, and then beginne to count their seven weekes: for herein is his errour, he taketh the Sabbath there spoken of, Levit. 23.10. for the seventh day of rest, where it is understood to be the first day of unleavened bread,* which was a solemne day of rest, as the Sabbath was, Iun. Borrh. And by the way, Rupertus in the same place slippeth in another point, Prima dies azymorum Iudaeis in quintam feriam illo anno evenit: The first day of unleavened happened to the Iewes that yeere, upon the fifth day of the weeke. For true it is, that our blessed Saviour did eat the Passeeover according to the law, upon the 14. day, which was as our Thurs|day at even: but the Jewes following a tradition of their owne, to avoid the concurrence of two Sab|bath dayes,* did put off the eating of the Passeeover, untill the 15. day of the moneth at even, which was the sixth day of the weeke, because the next day was the Sabbath: for if they had eat the Passeeover, when Christ did eat it with his Disciples, then the next day should have beene kept holy, neither were they to doe any worke therein: but upon that day they put Christ to death, which could not be done without more than servile labour in carrying the crosse, and nailing Christ unto it, and such like: beside, the text saith, they would not put Christ to death upon the feast day, lest there should bee some tumult among the people,* Mark. 14.2. But this point is elsewhere handled more at large, whither I referre the Reader.

2. Some againe, as Cajetane before excludeth the 15. day of the moneth, out of the number of the 50. dayes: so they include and take in, both the 14. and 15. dayes; borrowing 17. dayes of the first moneth, to make up the summe of 50. Augustine, Ferus, Gloss. ordinar. as is shewed before, quest. 16. But this ac|count cannot bee admitted: for thus should they begin the 50. dayes both before the Passeeover was ea|ten, which was upon the 14. day at even, whereas they must be accounted from the Passeeover; and before they were delivered and went out of Egypt, whereas the Pentecost was kept in remembrance of their deliverance out of the servitude, and hard bondage of Egypt, as the reason of the institution thereof is yeelded, Deut. 16.12. Thou shalt remember, that thou wast a servant in Egypt, therefore thou shalt observe and doe these ordinances.

3. Wherefore this remaineth, as the most probable, that the 15. day of the moneth, the next day after they had eaten the pasch, was the first day of the fifty, howsoever in the anniversary Pentecost, afterward there were some innovation. Iun. Piscat. Simler. And that for these reasons:

1. Because this was the day of their deliverance, and going out of Egypt, from the which they count their moneths and dayes, chap. 16.1. 2. And againe, this first day of unleavened bread, was not in respect of the present necessity and occasion, of their sudden departure out of Egypt, kept a solemne festivall day, as afterward, wherein they were to doe no servile worke. This being then the first day of the fifty, there are to bee accounted 16. dayes of the first moneth, and 30. of the second; so the first of the third moneth falleth out to bee the 47. and the 50. day was the fourth of the moneth.

4. I cannot here omit the mysticall application of Rupertus, of these three dayes of sanctification and preparation prescribed to the people, which he wil have to signifie, that sanctification of Christ in his death and passion, and buriall, Quam consummavit die tertia: Which he finished upon the third day: of the which sanctification our Saviour speaketh, * when he saith, Fer their sakes doe I sanctifie my selfe, Ioh. 17.

QUEST. XVIII. How the Apostles Pentecost, and the Jewes Pentecost, fell out all upon one day.

Here further it will be enquired, how the Apostles Pentecost, which was 50. dayes from Christs resurrection inclusively, and the Jewes Pentecost which was 50. dayes from the Passeover exclusively, that is, not reckoning the morrow after the Pasch, which was the first solemne day of the feast, according to the law, Levit. 23.10. would fall out together on the same day.

1. Here Rupertus hitteth upon the right answer in generall: that the same day, wherein Christ rose againe, the Jewes brought in their bundle or sheafe to be shaken before the Lord: which bundle of their first fruits, did prefigure Christ, the first fruits of the dead, who also in the Canticles is called fasciculus myrrhae, a bundle of myrrh, Cantic. 1.12. From this day of shaking the sheafe, the Jewes began to count seven weekes complete, which is 49. dayes, and then the next day was the Pentecost, which was the 50. So 50. dayes from the resurrection of Christ (including also that day) came downe the holy Ghost upon the Apostles, by the which the will of God is written in our hearts, as here the law of God was written in tables of stone. Thus far Rupertus proceedeth well.

2. But his mistaking is in this partly touched before: where the law prescribeth that they should begin to account the seven weekes from the morrow of the Sabbath, Levit. 23.10. he understandeth this of the seventh day only, that they were to expect the next Sabbath day after the Pasch, and the morrow after to begin their account of seven weekes: By which meanes a great error would fall out, that if the Passeover fell out upon the first day of the weeke, there would be not onely seven, but eight weekes betweene the Passeover, and Pentecost, which was against the meaning of the law. By the Sabbath therefore in this place, is not precisely meant the Sabbath day, but that solemne day of rest, which was the 15. day of the moneth, which was commanded as strictly to be kept as the Sabbath, without doing any worke therein: and therefore it is better translated, Postridie cessationis: The next day after that solemne rest, then the next day or morrow after the Sabbath. Iun. But yet at this time when our blessed Saviour rose againe, this day of shaking the sheafe, fell out the morrow of the seventh and Sabbath day, but not according to Rupertus rule, but by this occasion: This yeere wherein Christ the true Passeover was sacrificed, the first solemne day was the 15. then followed the Sabbath, which was the 16. day: wherein because they were forbidden to doe any worke, they could not that day put the fickle into the corne, as is prescribed, Deut. 16.4. And therefore in such cases, they put it off, till the next day following the Sabbath.

QUEST. XIX. How the Lord is said here to descend.

Vers. 11. The third day the Lord will come downe. Three wayes this terme of descending is used in Scripture, when mention is made of God, or his Angels: 1. It is attributed unto God improp[er]ly: for he being an infinite essence cannot be contained in any place: as that which is of infinite quantity and magnitude cannot goe from place to place, because it occupieth all places. So neither can God, who is of an infinite and incomprehensible nature, either ascend, or descend. Therefore when God is said to descend, it must not be understood properly, sed quantum ad aliquam demonstrationem effectus in aliquae parte orbis, &c. But in respect of the demonstration of some effect in some part of the world, where God did not manifest himselfe before. Tostat. Descendere Deus dicitur, quando aliquod novum, quod antea non fuerit, in humana creatura operatur: God is said to descend, when hee worketh some new and strange thing in the humane creature, which was not before. Eucherius. As the holy Ghost is said to descend upon Christ, because of that demonstration, and representation in the likenesse of a Dove, which lighted upon Christ: and here the Lord descendeth in a thick cloud. 2. Christ also is said to descend from heaven: secundum idiomatum communionem: because of the unity of his person, and mutuall communicating of the properties of his nature: whereas his Godhead could not properly descend: but it is said so to doe, propter humanam naturam assumptam, in respect of the humane nature, which hee had assumed. Tostat. 3. These two are improp[er] kinde of descending: but Angels may be said properly to descend, because they are finite spirits, and so, although nullum occupent, locum sibi tamen definiunt: though they occupy no place, yet they are defined and limited in a place: so that when they are present in one part of the world, at the same instant they cannot bee in another. Tostatus will have the descending here spoken of to bee of this third kinde, because hee thinketh, that the law was not given by God himselfe, but by an Angell representing Gods person, and speaking in his name: which is his error, that now followeth in the next place to bee discussed.

QUEST. XX. Whether Iehovah Christ Iesus appeared not in the old Testament, but only, or usually the Angels.

TOstatus opinion is, that this was not the Lord himselfe that came downe in this thicke cloud in the mount, but an Angell in the person of God. And he hath beside these positions concerning the apparition of Angels in the old Testament:

1. Not only in this place but in all other, where any act is said to be done by God; we must understand that the Angels did it: Nisi sit talis actus, qui excedit potentiam creatam: Vnlesse it be such an act which exceedeth the power of a creature.

2. The reason why notwithstanding God is said to doe those things, though they were performed by the Angels: is, lest the Hebrewes hearing that the Angels wrought such great workes for them, as in bring[ing] them out of Egypt, in giving them the law, and such like, should have worshipped the Angels as au[th]ors of these benefits. As in like manner the Heathen made them Gods, that had beene meanes to be[stow] some benefit: as Minervae for the invention of divers arts, Ceres in Grecia, for finding out the art of measuring: Saturne in Italy, for teaching of husbandry: Phoebus for soothsaying; Aesculapius for Physicke.

3. Yet sometime the Angels are said to doe those acts, when as either they are but small matters, and not such admirable or great workes as when the Angel appeared to send Hagar home againe to her mistresse, which was no great matter: and when the Angels were sent to destroy Sodome, which was no admirable thing to destroy a City: or when the worke, though it be a great worke, concerne but a private person, and not the whole nation, as when the Angell came to purifie the Prophet *Isay*es lips, Isay 6.

4. Yet sometime God is said to doe those things, which were not in themselves so great, because the persons were but weake, with whom the Lord had to deale, for the strengthning of their faith.

5. Sometime great workes are said to be done by the Angels, but then mention is made also of God in the same place: as in the vision of *Iacob*s ladder, the Angels are said to ascend and descend, but God stood upon the top of the ladder.

6. And though while yet the Hebrewes were weake, and as it were in their nonage, the greater workes done by Angels are ascribed unto God: yet afterward, Cum Hebraicus populus in cognitione Dei firmior factus est: When the Hebrew people were more confirmed in the knowledge of God. Angelus illa magnalia, quæ ad Deum pertinebant, se fecisse dicebat: The Angell is said to doe those things, which appertained unto God, as Iudg. 2. the Angell of the Lord, &c. said, I made you to goe up out of Egypt.

7. But concerning the law, it was given by Angels, as the Apostle sheweth, Galath. 3. they made the thunder, and caused the voices in the mount, they wrought the wonders in Egypt, and brought out the people thence, and conducted them in the wilderness. To this effect Tostat. quaest. 6. & 7.

Contra. All these are untrue and uncertaine positions, as shall be shewed in their order.

1. S. Stephen saith, that the God of glory appeared unto Abraham in Mesopotamia, and bid him come out of his country, Act. 7.2. This was a matter, which exceeded not the power of an Angell, to bid Abraham to goe out of his country: yet was it done by the Lord himselfe, and not by an Angell: for an Angell without blasphemy cannot be said to be the God of glory. Againe, to appeare in the likenesse of a flame of fire in a bush, and the bush not consumed, is not an impossible worke to a created Angell: yet it was God himselfe even Christ the Sonne of God, that so appeared: for he is called the God of Abraham, the God of Izhak, Exod. 3.6. which could bee no Angell. And Moses pronouncing a blessing upon Ioseph, saith, The good will of him that dwelt in the bush, shall come upon the head of Ioseph, Deut. 33. 16. but God only hath the power and authority of blessing: as Iakob also saith concerning Ioseph: By the God of thy father who shall helpe thee, and by the Almighty, who shall blesse thee*, Gen. 44.24. To blesse then belongeth properly, and originally (for ministerially wee deny not, but that both Angels and men may blesse) to him that is able to effect the blessing, but so doth only the Almighty, to whom nothing is impos|sible. But Angels are not omnipotent, or Almighty: It was God therefore, and not an Angell, that appea|red in the bush. Now then by these places given in instance it is evident, that some things said to be done by God in the Scriptures, not exceeding the power of Angels, were so done by the Lord himselfe, and not by the Angels. And so the first position of Tostatus faileth.

2. Neither is that a good reason, why in the rehearsall of the great workes the name of the Angels is concealed, and they are ascribed unto God, lest the Hebrewes might have worshipped the Angels, as their patrones, and authors of those benefits: 1. Because there is no such danger, when as the Angels doe shew themselves to be but the ministers and messengers of God, and speake in the name of God: As Lot could make a difference between the Angels, who were but Gods ministers, as they say, Iehovah hath sent us to destroy the City, Gen. 19.13. and Iehovah himselfe, to whom Lot afterward turneth himselfe, vers. 19. Not so my Lord, &c. whereas speaking before to the Angels, he calleth them Lords in the plurall. 2. Rather by this meanes, if the Angels did the workes, and the Scripture saith God did them: they ignorantly should have worshipped the Angels in Gods stead, knowing none other, but that God himselfe appeared, when it was but his Angell. 3. And beside, where in the same place mention is made both of the Angell of Iehovah, and of Iehovah himselfe: as Exod. 3.22. it is said the Angell of the Lord appeared, who is called Iehovah, vers. 7. If it had not beene the Lord himselfe but an Angell, this would have given them occasion to thinke that the Angell was the Lord.

3. It was Iehovah the Lord Christ, and not a ministring Angell, that appeared to Hagar, Gen. 16. as it is evident, vers. 13. she called the name of Iehovah that spake unto her: and the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah was the Lords worke, wherein notwithstanding hee used the ministry of the Angels: as it is expressly said, Iehovah rained upon Sodome and Gomorrah brimstone and fire from Iehovah, &c. These places therefore are impertinently alleaged. And further wee shall finde in Scripture, that in small workes, and such as concerned particular persons, God is said to have done it, and not the Angels: as it is said, God prepared a worme to smite Ionasgourd, Ion. 4.7. Therefore this observation also of Tostatus is untrue.

4. But this evasion he hath: that if the name of God be used, and not of the Angels in such small and particular workes, it is for the confirming of those that be weake: but they which are weake, because they cannot ascend at the first, or comprehend the majesty and omnipotency of God, had so much the more need by the secondary ministration of Angels, to bee brought unto that high and deepe apprehension of God. And indeed the ministry of Angels serveth especially for the comfort and supporting of the weake, whose faith not serving them immediatly to depend upon God, are the more easily brought to have confidence in him by the subordinate deputation and ministry of Angels. So, when Daniel was in great distresse and perplexity in the lions denne, God sent his Angell to stop the mouth of the lions, and to comfort Daniel, Dan. 6.22. So when Ioseph was doubtfull what to doe concerning Mary, an Angell of the Lord appeared unto him in a dreame, to confirme him, saying, Feare not to take Mary for thy wife, Matth. 1.20.

5. That instance of Iakobs vision of the ladder directly proveth, that it was God that appeared unto Iakob, and not an Angell: 1. Because it is said that Iehovah stood upon it and said: by which name of Iehovah no Angell is called in Scripture. 2. He that speaketh to Iakob, nameth himselfe the Lord God of Abraham. 3. He that speaketh is but one, but the Angels which ascended and descended were many. 4. He saith, The land whereon thou sleepest will I give thee and thy seede: but the earth is only the Lords. 5. Iakob himselfe saith, that Iehovah was in that place, Gen. 28.16.

6. 1. The people were but yet weake, while they were in the wilderness, yet then and there that great worke of leading and keeping the people, and bringing them to the land of Promise, is ascribed to an Angell, which was none other but Christ, the Angell of Gods presence, Exod. 23.20. 2. Yea wee shall finde, that mention is made oftner in the stories of the Patriarkes and first Fathers of Israel, as in the bookes of Genesis, and Exodus, when they were yet (as it were) in their infancy, of the apparition and ministry of Angels, then afterward: for it was fit that they should be confirmed, by such visible and sensible meanes: therefore this reason here alleaged by Tostatus holdeth not. 3. And in that place, whereof instance is given: by Angel is understood some Prophet and man of God, not any of the celestially spirits: because the place is named from whence he came, from Gilgal: and hee is said to ascend or goe up: but Angels descend from heaven: and it is not unusuall in Scripture to call Prophets the Lords Angels, as Hagg. 1.13. and Apocal. 2. and 3. chapter thorowout.

QUEST. XXI. Whether it were Iehovah the Lord Christ, or an Angell that came downe upon mount Sinai.

7. BUt that it was Iehovah himselfe, the Lord Christ that appeared in mount Sinai, and talked with Moses, and gave them the law, it is thus proved: 1. Because he is called Iehovah, which name is never in Scripture given unto Angels. 2. Hee saith, vers. 5. Though all the earth bee mine: but the earth is the Lords, Psal. 24. not the Angels. 3. The Lord here maketh a covenant with his people, vers. 5. But God himselfe, not the Angels, make a covenant with men, to bee his people. And so the Lord saith hee was an husband unto them, Iere. 31.32. but Christ and not the Angels, is the husband of the Church behold the Church is not the spouse of the Angels, but Christs. 4. He which writ the Law in tables of stone, was the same that gave the Law to Moses: but those tables were written by the finger of God, Exod. 31.18. the same finger that writeth in the fleshy tables of mens hearts, Ierem. 31.33. 2. Cor. 3.2. 5. S. Paul saith, it was ordained by Angels, in the hand of a Mediatour, Gal. 3.14. The Angels attended as ministers, and as the Lords instruments were used in those thunders and lightnings. But the Lord himselfe the Mediatour both of the old and new Testament was there present, as the Author of the Law: as Moses saith, The Lord came from Sinai, &c. he came with ten thousand of Saints, and at his right hand a fiery Law for them, Deut. 33.2. 6. He that wrought those wonders in Egypt, and carried the people as upon Eagles wings, was the same that delivered the Law, vers. 4. But Iehovah himselfe did the first: for many of the wonders in Egypt could not be done by any but the Lord, as in converting and changing of one substance into another, as of a rod into a Serpent, of water into bloud, of the dust into lice. And so much Tostatus him|selfe confesseth: Fi•ant talia portenta, quae nullus poterat facere, nisi Deus: Such wondrous things were done, which none could doe but God. So it was Iehovah himselfe that did leade the people thorow the red Sea, and destroyed the Egyptians: as chap. 14.24. Iehovah looked unto the hoast of the Egyptians, out of the fiery and cloudy piller: who is before called the Angell of God, vers. 19. which was the Lord Christ, called the Angell of the covenant, Malach. 3.1. So chap. 15.14. Iehovah brought the waters of the Sea upon them. And further, that Iehovah himselfe conducted the Israelites is evident, Exod. 33.15. My presence shall go with thee. And yet the Lord saith, Exod. 23.20. Behold I send an Angell before thee, to keepe thee in the way: but what Angell this was, is expressed afterward, my name is in him. This great Angell of the covenant, in whom was Gods name and his presence; who else could it be but the Lord Christ, the Iehovah? And that God himselfe appeared unto the Patriarkes and Prophets, and not the Angels onely, it is evident. Numb. 12.8. where the Lord saith, Vnto Moses I will speake mouth to mouth. &c. he shall see the similitude of the Lord: and the Apostle witnesseth, that he (that is, Moses) endured at he which saw him, which is in visible. Heb. 11.27. Not that Moses did see the very glory and substance of God, who is invisible, and whom never man saw, nor can see, 1. Tim. 6.12. but he saw only his backe parts, Exod. 33.14. that is, some part of his glo|ry, as the Lord thought good to reveale, according as Moses was able to apprehend. And that in this place it was Iehovah himselfe that came downe in Mount Sinai, beside these reasons before alleaged, it is the generall opinion of Divines both old and new. Gregor. Nyssen. Praecepit Deus populo per Mose•, ut tam corpore, quam animo mundus fierit: God commanded the people by Moses, that they should be cleane both in body and soule. Hierom. Accessuri ad audienda verba Dei sanctificari iubentur ab ux•ribus: Being to come to heare the words of God, they are bidden to be sanctified, in abstaining from their wives. Cyril. A Deo ad Mo|s• dicitur, vade ad populum, &c. God said to Moses, Goe unto the people. Origen. Audiat, quid praecipit Do|min•, &c. He that will come to heare the word of God, let him heare what the Lord commanded, that they should wash their garments. Rabanus: Dominus Mosi praecepit, ut populum sanctificet: God commanded Mo|ses to sanctifie the people. Rupertus: Docend• erat, quod Deus patrum ipsorum non erat talis, ut Dii Egyptio|rum: They were to be taught, that their God was no such, as the Gods of the Egyptians. Theodoret: Vestim••• lavare à Deo iubentur: They are bidden of God to wash their garments. Ex

Page 251

Lippoman. And many other to the same purpose might be produced, which is not necessary in so cleere a matter: so that this seemeth to be Tostatus private conceit: that it was not the Lord, but an Angell, that came downe in the thicke cloud upon mount Sinai.

QUEST. XXII. Why the people are forbidden to come up into the mountaine.

Vers. 12. THou shalt set markes unto the people: 1. The people are forbidden to goe up to the mountaine, or to come neere the skirts of it, first, reverentia causa, for reverence sake: For if it be not lawfull to thrust in upon Princes uncalled, how much more into the presence of the divine Majesty? Simler. Tostat. 2. To stay their curiosity: not that it is evill to see God: sed malum est ei, qui illum per curiositatem quaerere audet: but it is evill unto him, that seeketh him of curiosity. Rupert. 3. If they had beene admitted to see and gaze, it would have hindred their attention, in hearing of the voice of God, which proceeded out of the middest of the fire. Tostat. 4. The Lord hereby also would make a difference betweene Moses and the rest of the people, to heare him before them: Vt cognoscant pro summo honore ducendum appropinquare Deo: That they should take it for a great honour to draw neere unto God: Procop. 5. And they are forbidden, not only to come up into the mountaine, but to touch the very borders and skirts of it: both because all the mountaine was covered with smoake, and all over there were signes of Gods presence: and beside, if they had beene admitted to come unto the nether parts of the hill, they would have presumed further, and therefore the Lord would cut off all occasion: as before chap. 12. that they should bee sure to eat no unleavened bread for seven dayes together, they are charged not to have it in their houses. Tostat. quaest. 8. 6. Some doe thus allegorize this prohibition of not ascending into the mountaine: Ne quis ultra intelligentiam suam, ad montem sacra scripturae conscendere audeat: That no man beyond his capacity should enterprise to ascend unto the hill of the Scriptures. Gloss. interlinear.

QUEST. XXIII. Why he shall be killed that toucheth the mountaine

Vers. 12. Whosoever toucheth the mount, shall surely dye, &c. 1. Of this terrible precept, causa fit ipse populi status, the state and condition of the people was the cause: who because they were not yet come to the love of God, oportebat ut timore stringerentur: It was meete they should bee constrained by feare. Rupert. 2. And beside, the Lord would make a difference betweene his service,* and the Idolatrous sacrifices which they had seene in Egypt, wherein they used dancing and sporting, eating, drinking, which the people imitated afterward, when they set up their golden Calfe: the Lord therefore hereby would let them understand, that he required another manner of service of his people. Rupert. ibid. 3. It is set downe, that whosoever toucheth the mountaine should dye: either by the hand of God, or of the people: for if any one went neere to touch the mountaine, then the people were to strike him with darts or stones: but if either the Priests, or many of the people approached, then the Lord would destroy them, vers. 24. Tostat.

QUEST. XXIV. Why no hand was to touch him that came neere the mountaine.

Vers. 13. NO hand shall touch it, but hee shall bee stoned, &c. 1. Some expound it thus, that the hand of man shall not need to be upon him: sed intelligitur lapidum ictibus in cum devinitus  necandus: But he is understood to be killed with stones flying downe from God. Hugo de S. Victor. But because the manner is described, he shall be stoned, or striken thorow with darts: and it is uttered passively, not actively, as afterward vers. 24. lest he destroy them: it is better referred to the people, that hee shall be stoned, or striken thorow by them. 2. If hee were neere hand hee should be stoned, if further off, then they should hit him with darts, be it man or beast: Lippoman. 3. They are forbidden with their hands to touch not the mountaine, but it, whatsoever came neere the mountaine, lest they also might by this occasion of apprehending the offender, transgresse themselves in comming neere the mountaine. Tostat. as also, no hand shall touch it: tanquam pollutum & immundum, as a filthy and uncleane thing: Rupert. Ferus: Tanquam execrabile est•: It shalbe as an execrable and accursed thing: Iun. 4. No hand shall touch him, that is, to rescue or deliver him. Vatab. But it is not like, that any durst be so bold, when all the people in the campe was afraid, vers. 16.

QUEST. XXV. Why the beast, that touched the mountaine is commanded to be slaine.

Vers. 13. WHether beast, or man, hee shall not live. 1. The very beast shall be slaine that commeth neere to touch the mountaine. 1. Because, although beasts doe but their kinde, and doe not sinne, yet the thing in it selfe was evill in touching the mountaine: as likewise if a man did lye with a beast, they were both to dye, Levit. 20.15. though the beast therein could not sinne, yet the fact was enor|mous and odious, and to bee punished therefore in the beast. Tostat. 2. Another reason was, that by this meanes, men seeing this severity extended unto bruit beasts, should themselves thereby become more circumspect and carefull, not to transgresse their bounds. Simler. 3. Likewise, the owner of the beast, was therein also punished in the losse of his beast, because he had no greater care to keepe it in. Ferus. 4. Some doe allegorize this edict concerning the killing of the beast,* that toucheth the mountaine: as Gregory. Bestia montem tangit, cum mens irrationabilibus desideriis subdita, &c. The beast toucheth the mountaine, when the minde being subject to unreasonable desires, doth presume to high things. Rupertus. Si is qui bestia/liter vivit, alta divinitatis andeat scrutari: If hee which leadeth a beastly life, presume to search the high things of God, he shall be but further blinded and darkened. Gloss. interlinar. Si quis lapsus in haresim, &c. If any being fallen into heresie or blasphemy, doe abuse the sacred Scriptures, he shall perish eternally. But there is no certainty in these devised allegories, neither will the text warrant them: therefore I will not insist upon them.

QUEST. XXVI. Whether at any time it were lawfull for the people to goe up to the mountaine.

Vers. 13. WHen the horne bloweth long, they shall come up into the mountaine. 1. Some thinke, that af|ter the Lord was gone from the mount, then Moses commanded by the sounding of an horne, to give notice to the people thereof, that the people might then come up into the mountaine. Caje/tan. Simler. But it is rather to be understood of the sound of a trumpet, which the Lord caused to bee heard by the ministry of the Angels. Osiand. Hugo de S. Victor. As vers. 16. mention is made of a sound of a trumpet, which was a signe of Gods presence. 2. The Septuagint and Chaldee reade, When the trumpet shall cease, then the people may goe up: but the word is mashac, which signifieth to protract. When the sound of the trumpet shall be protracted, or blow long, they should goe up: and to what end should the people goe up, when the Lord was gone? it would but have shewed their curiosity, to gaze upon the place, where the Lord shewed himselfe: especially seeing, as Iosephus writeth, it was such an high hill, a• that it did not only, Ascensus hominum, sed aspectus defatigare: Weary not only their going up, but their ve|ry sight. And after the trumpet had sounded, the people were bid to returne into their tents, Deut. 5.3. and so to goe from the hill: therefore not to come up to the hill. Tostat. 3. Iuxius thinketh that this blowing long of the trumpet, did signifie an end of that sacred action, as in the end of songs the use is to conclude with a long and protracted sound; and this he thinketh was done, when the camps removed from before Sinai, Numb. 10. But it was needlesse to give them a signe by the sound of a trumpet then, seeing the cloud removed, and the Lord spake also to Moses to depart from that place: and this was a yeere after: but this thing, which is here spoken of, was by all likelihood presently done. 4. Some thinke that they were not simply forbidden to come up into the mountaine, but that they should not doe it of themselves, they were to expect till they were called, Humanam an daciā compescens premit, &c. So hee doth keepe under humane audacity, and stirreth them up to obedience to the voice of God. Raban. ex Lip/poman. But it is cleare, that the people were absolutely bidden to keepe their bounds, and not to goe up into the mount, vers. 24. 5. Therefore the meaning is, that the people, when they heard the sound of the trumpet, should then come out of their tents, unto the bottome of the hill, so farre as their limits and marks extended, but not beyond. Rupert. Hugo de S. Victor. And this to bee the sense the words following shew, that when the sound of the trumpet was exceeding loud, vers. 16. which is the same mentioned before, vers. 13. when the horne bloweth long, then Moses brought the people forth of the tents to meet the Lord, vers. 17. that the people might heare the Lord talke with Moses, vers. 9. and that this was the ascen|ding unto the mount, ad ejus radicem, non ad cacumen, to the bottome, not to the top, Hugo: it may be gathered, chap. 24. 9. where it is said that Nadab and Abihu, and 70. of the Elders went up, with Moses and Aaron: and yet Moses onely with Ioshua went up to the mountaine, vers. 13. that is, to the top of the hill: the other might ascend to some part of the hill about the bottome, which was higher than the place, where the host was encamped: but the bounds and limits, which were set, they exceeded not. Tostat. quaest. 8. 6. The morall application is this: that as the people came not up to the mount, or toward the mount, till the trumpet began to sound loud: so Ad sacram praedicationis vocem ad superna debet se erigere mens auditorum: so the minde of the auditors must be lifted up to things on high, at the voyce of preaching, Raban. The mysticall interpretation also is this: This loud sound of the trumpet signifieth the loud sound of the Gospell over all the world, whereby wee are called to more full and perfect knowledge of God: Lex non ad montem adducere potest illos, quos informavit, The law cannot bring them to the hill, whom it instructeth, but the trumpet of the Gospell. Procepius. Christ also shall call us by the sound of the trump in the last day, and we shall meet him in the aire, and ascend up unto him, and so ever remaine with him: as the Apostle teacheth, 1 Thess. 4. 17.

QUEST. XXVII. Why Moses is not set downe to have reported all to the people, which was given him in charge.

Vers. 15. AND he said unto the people. Moses received two commandements from God, that he should sanctifie them, and set them marks and bounds with a penaltie of death to them, that went beyond them: but of this latter hee saith nothing; and for the former, he maketh mention, of not com|ming at their wives, which was not mentioned before. But it is not to be thought, that Moses, being so commended for his faithfulness, did either conceale any thing of that which was given him in charge, or adde any thing. But the Scripture useth to avoid needlesse repetitions, not to make mention of the same thing twice: therefore because this is set downe before, in the Lords charge unto Moses, it is not rehearsed againe: but it is evident, vers. 23. that Moses had declared that also unto the people, what danger there was, in passing their bounds. And as here in Moses report to the people somewhat is omitted, which is spoken of in the charge: so at other times some things are reported by Moses, which were given in charge, but not expressed: as chap. 12. 22. that clause of sprinkling the doore-posts with hyssop dipped in the bloud, was not mentioned in the law of the Passeover before prescribed, but onely in Moses relation to the people. Tostat.

QUEST. XXVIII. With what water they washed their cloaths.

Vers. 24. HE sanctified the people, and they washed their cloaths. 1. Moses said to sanctifie the people, because he declared unto them the will and commandement of God, that they should sancti|fie themselves, and so they did accordingly. Tostat. Nihil aliud fecisse legitur, quam monnisse ad munditiam, Moses is not read to have done any thing else, but to have admonished them unto puritie and cleannesse. Caljetan. 2. By the washing of their cloaths, the puritie of their manners is signified: Cyrillus: Lotione in Idumentorum corporis puritatem ostendit: By the washing of the garments, he sheweth the puritie of the bodie: Indumentum enim animae corpus quodam modo est: For the bodie is as it were a garment to the soule. Raban. Vestimenta lavare est opera mundare, To wash the garments, is to cleanse the works: Vestimenta lavare, est conscientiam vera fide imbuere, to wash the garments, is to endue the conscience with faith. Lippom. By the washing of the garments is understood, Cast it as mentis & corporis, The chastitie both of bodie and minde. Gloss. interlin. See more hereof before quest. 15. 3. Some thinke, that they washed their garments with that purifying water, which was made of the ashes of the red Cow, prescribed Numb. 19. But that is not like, for that water was to bee sprinkled against the Tabernacle, which was not yet made: and Eleazar was to take of the blood of the Cow with his finger, &c. But neither Eleazar, nor Aaron his father were yet consecrated to the Priesthood: therefore they washed their garments, with no other than common water at this time. Tostat. quaest. 9. in 19. cap.

QUEST. XXIX. Why they are commanded not to come at their wives.

Vers. 15. ANd come not at your wives, &c. 1. The Latine tanslator readeth, Come not neare your wives: but your is not in the originall, yet it well expresseth the sense: for at no time was it lawfull to come neare unto other mens wives. Lippom. Some thinke, that hereby is meant, that wee should not come neare, Alicui carnali voluptati, vel mundana, Any carnall or worldly pleasure, when we come neare unto God. Gloss. interlin. Indeed by this one particular inhibition of one carnall pleasure, by the like anallogie all other were forbidden: but there is a littell inhibiting also, of companie and societie with their wives. 3. Some give this sense, Conjux hîc sensu intelligitur, &c. The wife is here understood to bee the sense, which is joyned unto our nature, &c. Gregor. Nyssen. ex Lippom. And so we are bidden to lay aside all carnall sensualitie, when we appeare before God. But this is to goe from the letter of the text. 4. Some make it onely a morall precept, that men should abstaine even from lawfull things, when they present themselves before God: as the Apostle requireth the like of the married couple, to abstaine for a time, that they may give themselves to fasting & prayer, 1 Cor. 7. Hieron. Rupert. Galas. but this being a legall injun|ction, contained a further reason than is enforced now, in respect of those times. 5. So that beside the morall equitie, even from lawfull pleasure, which bindeth now also, in the abstinence for a time, from the marriage bed, upon occasion of more fervent and extraordinary prayer: Marbach. there was then also a Legall kind of impuritie and pollution, even in the lawfull use of marriage, which came by the issue of seed, La/vit. 15.18. from which kind of Legall pollutions the people were to be sanctified, and cleansed at this time. Oleaster. 6. But that saying of Lyranus is somewhat harsh: Licet matrimonialis actus sit licitus, tamen annexam habet quandam turpitudinem, &c. Though the act of the matrimonie be lawfull, yet it hath annexed unto it a kind of filthinesse, which is excused by the good things in marriage. But the Apostle speaketh other|wise, That marriage is honourable, &c. and the bed undefiled, Hebr. 13.4. There is then in the undefiled marriage bed, no filthinesse or uncleannesse. But that other assertion of Lyranus is not much to be misli|ked: Habet annexam depressionem mentis, &c. It hath also annexed a certaine depression and abasing of the minde, because of the vehemencie of carnall delight: And therefore they were commanded these three dayes to be sequestred from their wives, that their minds might wholly be weaned from carnall delight, and bee fixed upon God.

Page 254

QUEST. XXX. Why Moses maketh such an ample and full declaration and description of the Lords glorious appearing in mount Sinai.

Vers. 16. AND the third day, &c. there was thunder and lightnings, &c. 1. Moses in many words describeth the coming of the Lord, and his appearing in mount Sinai: Cupiebat enim virpius, quam amplissimis posset verbis, &c. For this godly man desired in the best manner he could, to set forth the magnificence of the coming of the Lord. Ferus. Sometime Moses goeth up, sometime he cometh downe sometime he goeth up alone, and another time Aaron with him: and all this he doth, Vt pararet Domini dignum & acceptabilem populum, &c. To prepare a meete and acceptable people for the Lord Lippom. 2. Beside, this large description also delivereth Moses from all suspicion of deceit and counterfeiting: as though he had fained, as other lawgivers among the Heathen, that he had conference with God: for first this preparation of the people against the third day, then the talking of the Lord with Moses, in the hearing of all the people, which were divers hundred thousands, doth shew the truth of this narration. Lippom. And these prodigious and extraordinarie signes raised upon the suddaine, to cleare Moses: In seren die subito mons tenebris circumdatus, &c. On a suddaine in a cleare morning, the hill was beset round with darknesse, and fire burst forth of the midst thereof. Gregor. Nyssen. As it is observed in the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrha, by the rising of the Sun, and shining upon the earth, when Lot entred into Zoar, Genes. 19.23. that it was a goodly Sun-shine morning, when it rained fire and brimstone upon those Cities.

QUEST. XXXI. Why it pleased the Lord in this terrible and fearefull manner, to appeare, with thunder, and lightning.

Vers. 16. There was thunder and lightning, &c. 1. Foure signes the Lord sheweth of his coming: two were heard, the thunder, and the sound of the trumpet; and two were seene, the lightning, and the thicke or darke cloud: and these appeared in the top of the hill, not all over: for if the cloud had covered all the hill, the people could not have discerned the smoake, which was round about upon the hill. Cajetan. 2. It pleased God in this terrible manner to shew himselfe at the giving of the law, for these reasons: 1. Because the rude world doth onely esteeme of those things, which are done with great shew, and magnificence, the Lord would in this glorious manner appeare, Vt disceret populus cum magni stimare: That the people should learne highly to esteeme of God. 2. Commovet omnia elementa, &c. He moved all the elements, that they might know, that he had power over all: 3. That the ignorant people might know a difference betweene the true God, and the false gods, whom the Heathen, and especially the Egyptians worshipped, that they could doe no such things: 4. Vt populo carnali timorem incuteret, &c. To strike feare and terror into the carnall people: that they which would not be wonne by love, should be constrained with feare: 5. Vt ostenderet se vendicem legis, &c. To shew himselfe a Iudge and revenger of those, which transgressed his law: and in what fearefull manner he would come to judgement, to take account of men, how they had kept his law. Ferus. 3. Chrysostome toucheth another reason: Negligens erat humanum genus & signe; oportet igitur ut corrigeretur istis, & redderetur attentum: Mankind was negligent, and slothfull, and therefore it was meete, that they should bee roused up by this meanes, and made attentive. 4. Another reason, why the Lord did thinke good, thus to shew himselfe in smoake and fire, was this: Quia talis apparitio in nube & igne non habet figuram: Because such an apparition in fire and a cloud, hath no representation: that by this meanes, the people should have no occasion to commit idolatrie. Liran. As the Lord himselfe saith, Take heed to your selves, for yee saw no image in the day, that the Lord spake unto you in Horeb, Deut. 4.15. Tostat. quaest. 11. 5. The morall application is this: The Lord appeared partly in the brightness of fire, partly in the darknesse of a cloud: Quia humiles per claritatem sua ostensionis illuminat, Because he doth illuminate the humble by the brightness of his appearing: Et superbos per caliginem erroris obscurat. And he obscureth the proud by the darknesse of error. Gloss. interlin. Some further make this mysticall application: by the thunder and lightning we may understand God the Father, by the cloud the Sonne, who assumed our humane nature, which shadowed the glorie of his Deitie: by the sound of the trumpet, the holy Ghost, which worketh in the hearts of faithfull people, by the trumpet of the Gospell. Simler.

QUEST. XXXII. Whether this thunder and lightning were naturall.

There was thunder and lightning. 1. These signes were not naturally caused, in respect both of the time and place: for now it was about the middest of Summer, in the beginning of June, the third moneth after the spring, when such meteors use not to be ingendred: and for the place it was in an hot region in Arabia, where the extreme heate doth drie up such exhalations, whereof thunder and lightning doe consist. And beside, the naturall place of these meteors is above in the middle region of the aire, where the aire is very cold: and so the beating of the aire, by an antiperistasis, a concurrence and resistance of contrary qualities procureth such thunder-claps, and flashings: but these signes were shewed below upon the top of the hill, in the lower region of the aire. Tostat. 2. Neither yet doe I thinke with Tostatus, that it was neither verus ignis, nor vera fulgura, true fire, or true lightning, but that they so seemed to be: because then (saith he) the fire and lightning would have burned and consumed those that came neere it. But this is no good reason: for it was no hard matter for the Creator, to abate the ordinarie force of these elements: as the fire consumed not the bush, Exod. 3. neither yet had it any power upon the three children that were put into the fierie fornace, Dan. 3. Therefore it was more than an imaginary fire, or in shew onely: Nihil simplex natura per duplicitem facit: The single and simple truth doth nothing doubly: Lyran 3. Wherefore I rather preferre the resolution of Thomas, that this was, Ignis corporalis, & ideo palpabilis & sensibilis, &c. A corporall fire, palpable and sensible. It was a true fire, yet not naturall,* neither yet without naturall meanes altogether, but the same supernaturally caused: for here was a thicke and darke cloud, such as the thunder and lightning useth to breake out of: but it was extraordinarily raised out of time and place by the power of God.

QUEST. XXXIII. Why the Lord appeared in a thicke and darke cloud.

Vers. 16. And a thicke cloud upon the mount, &c. 1. This appearing of a thicke and darke cloud, was convenient for those times: Congruit nubes in functionem legalem, quae tenebrarum est non lucis: The cloud is agreeable to the function of the law, which is of darknesse, rather than light. Borrh. For all things were folded up in the law in shadowes, as in a cloud, but the revelation of the true light came by Jesus Christ. 2. This also sheweth the infirmitie and weaknesse of man; who cannot see the brightnesse of Gods glorie, who dwelleth in light, that none can attaine unto, 1 Tim. 6. but wee see it as thorow a cloud: as here the Lord appeareth in fire, yet in the middest of smoake, and shining thorow a thicke cloud. Simler. To this purpose also Lyranus saith, that therefore God appeared in a darke cloud, Quia tales apparitiones fiunt communiter secundum eorum dispositiones, quibus fiunt: Because such apparitions commonly are made according to their disposition, to whom they are shewed. Now we have here but a darke and obscure knowledge of divine things: and as the eye of the Owle is to the Sunne light, so is the minde and under|standing of man, in respect of divine things. Sic Lyran. 3. Unto this assertion of Lyranus two exceptions are taken, one by Paulus Burgens. the other by Tostatus: but both of them without any good ground.* First Burgensis thus objecteth, that Lyranus in this note maketh no difference betweene the knowledge of Moses, and of the rest of the people: whereas he appeared unto Moses onely in a cloud, Numb. 12.5. but unto the people in a thicke cloud: because Moses clariorem habuit de divinis notitiam, quàm populus: had a clearer knowledge of divine things, than the people: Burgens. addit. 3. Contra. 1. Howsoever the Lord appeared at other times to Moses, it is no• here the question: Now the Lord appeared alike to all, as well to Moses, as to the rest of the people, in a thicke and darke cloud: which sheweth, that although there is difference of gifts, and illumination among men: yet being compared to God, there is no difference: Moses himselfe here quaked and trembled, as the Apostle observeth, Heb. 12 21. as the rest of the people did. 2. And that other place is not fitly alleaged, for the Lord came downe in the pillar of the cloud at that time, and spake not onely to Moses, but to Aaron, and Miriam also. 4. Tostatus taketh exception, because Lyranus doth not distinguish betweene the apparitions of the old and new Testament: whereas the apparitions in the old were obscure: Apparitiones antem factae in novo sunt clariores, But the aparitions made in the new, are more cleare: As the holy Ghost came downe upon the Apostles, not in fire, with the darknesse of a cloud, but in bright fire like unto cloven tongues. Tostat. quaest. 11. Contra. This is true, which is here alleaged, that the apparitions of the new Testament are clearer, and more full of light, than the visions of the old; neither is it denied by Lyranus: yet it followeth not, but that in respect of the knowledge, which we shall have in the life to come, we see now but darkly, and as in a cloud: And to this purpose he alleageth that saying of the Apostle: Now we see thorow a glasse darkly, but then shall we see face to face: now I know in part, but then shall I know, even as I am knowne, 1 Cor. 13.12. Lyranus an|notation therefore being so evidently grounded upon the Apostles direct words, they had small reason thus to carpe at him.

QUEST. XXXIV. Of the blowing of the trumpet at the giving of the law, what it signifieth.

And the sound of the trumpet exceeding loud. 1. There was not there any such materiall trumpet, as the Jewes imagine, that it was an horne made of the Rammes hornes, which was sacrificed in stead of Izbak▪ Lyran. But such a sound was made by the ministry of Angels, as if it had beene the blowing of a trumpet: Tostat. for, as S. Stephen sheweth, they received the law by ordinance of Angels, Act. 7.53. The Angels attended upon the Lord, as Ministers, when the law was given. Simler. 2. This sounding of the trumpet was a signe of the presence of God, tanquam imperatore praesente, as if a great Emperour were comming, before whom they use to blow trumpets. Chrysost. 3. Sonitus ••ba significat gravitatem praeceptorum,

Page 254

⟨1 page duplicate⟩

Page 255

⟨1 page duplicate⟩

Page 256

&c. * The sound of the trumpet betokened the heavinesse of the commandements, quibus indicebatur bellum homini contra seipsum: by the which warre is proclaimed to man against himselfe: Thomas. 4. As the sounding of this trumpet made a terrible and fearefull noise: Sic lex tumultum excitat in conscientia peccatorum. So the law raiseth a tumult in the conscience of sinners: Lippoman. Tales terrores in conscientia peccatoris lex Dei operatur: Such terrors the law of God stirreth in the conscience of the sinner. Osiand. 5. Hereby also was prefigured the office of the Levites, that sounded afterward with silver trumpets, which also was a figure of the silver sound, which the living trumpets of the Prophets and Apostles should give, in gathering together the faithfull by the preaching of the Gospell; as Isaias was bidden to lift up his voyce like a trumpet, Isai. 58.1. Simler. Herein also is set forth the forme of Christs comming to judgement, when the trump shall blow, and summon all both the living and dead to give account how they have kept this law, which was first given with the sound of a trumpet: of the blowing of this last dolefull and dreadfull trumpet speaketh the Apostle, 1 Cor. 15.52. 1 Thess. 4.16. 6. Oleaster thinketh, that the sounding of this trumpet was a signe of the departing of the Lord from the mount, and of the libertie of the people to come up: but it shewed the contrary, that God was then come downe upon the mount, and therefore Moses bringeth the people out of their tents to meet God, in the next verse. Hereof see more before quest. 26.

QUEST. XXXV. Of the different manner of the delivering the law, and the Gospell.

Vers. 16. AND all the people, that was in the campe, was afraid. 1. By this terrible apparition, which wrought in the people such terror and feare, the nature of the law is expressed, which as it was delivered with feare and trembling, so it worketh terror in the conscience: for divine apparitions are made agreeable to the thing, for the which they are shewed: so the Angels appeared to Abraham in hulmane shape, because they came to tell Abraham that he should have a sonne. When the Israelites were in the fierie fornace of affliction in Egypt, the Lord appeared in a flame of fire in a bush: When Ioshua was to warre against the Cananites, an Angell appeared with a naked sword: so because a law here is given, which should reveale sinne, and the wrath of God against the transgressors thereof, it is delivered with feare and terror. Ferus. 2. Herein then appeareth a manifest difference betweene the Law and the Gospell: 1. In the Law-giver: then the Lord appeared in fire and smoake, and terrible manner: but Christ came lowly and meeke, to preach the Gospell. 2. In the place: the Law was delivered in Sinai, a place of servitude: the Gospell began to be preached in Jerusalem, which was a figure of the new Jerusalem, which is above, which is free, Galath. 4.26. 3. In the Law it selfe, which is a killing letter, threatening curses and damnation to all the disobedient: but spirit and life is given by the faith of the Gospell of Christ. 4. In the people, which received it: they were then rude and ignorant, as children under tutors and governours; they could not see the brightnesse of Moses face, but under a vaile: we now under the Gospell, are as the heire which is come to age: and now the vaile is removed, and we see the glory of the Lord with open face. Simler. 5. Au/gustine therefore well saith: Brevis differentia legis & Evangelii, timor & amor: There is a short difference of the Law and Gospell, feare and love: for Christ did teach the Gospell in great tranquillitie: Incepit sedens dulciter tradere documenta legis novae: He began, being set, to deliver sweetly the precepts of the new law. Tostat. saying, Blessed are the poore in spirit, &c. blessed are the meeke. Ita lex vetus data est cum terroribus: So the old law was given with terrors. Lyranus. 6. Yet we are not so to conceive, as though the Gospell were altogether void of feare, or the Law of comfort: Hic timor Evangelio quoque fuit communis: This feare was also common to the Gospell: as the Apostle sheweth: Whose voyce then shooke the earth, and now hath de/clared, saying, Yet once more will I shake, not the earth onely, but also heaven, Heb. 12.26. Calvin. And againe, If the word spoken by Angels was stedfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompence of reward, how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation? Heb. 2.2. Neither was the law altogether void of comfort: for in that the people are not fraied away by these fearefull signes, but are brought by Moses to meet the Lord: it sheweth, Foedus Dei tam amabile fuisse, quam metuendum: That the covenant of God was as amiable, as it was terrible and fearefull. Calvin. But here is the difference: The law of it selfe, and properly wrought feare and terror, and the Gospell peace: but accidentally also there was comfort in the law, as it was a School-master, to bring us to Christ, and terror in the Gospell, to them which contemned and refused it. 7. Some thinke that in this generall and great feare of the whole campe, yet that Moses feared not, and was therein a type and figure of such as are perfect. Pellican. But the Apostle sheweth the contrary, that even Moses also trembled and quaked, Heb. 12.21. But yet Moses was not afraid, as the people were: Timuit Moses, sed non timore servili, ut populus, &c. Moses feared, but not as the people with a serv/vile feare, but with a filiall, which was nothing else, but a religious reverence and observance. Ferus.

QUEST. XXXVI. What it was that Moses spake, and the Lord answered.

Vers. 19. MOses spake, and God answered. 1. Some thinke, that this which God answered, was the decalogue or ten commandements which follow in the next Chapter, Osiand. But there God is said first to speake, he answered not Moses, when he gave the law. 2. Some thinke that Moses spake, and the Lord answered, Ille interrogando, & Dominus docendo: Moses in asking the Lord, and the Lord in teaching him. Gloss. interlin. But it is not like, that Moses in this great feare, and terrible sight, would first begin to speake unto God. 3. Ferus saith, Quid aliud loquitur pius cum Deo quam orando, confitendo lau/dando? What other thing doth the godly speake with God, than in praying, confessing, praising; and what else doth God answer, than in hearing their prayers? But it is like, that not Moses onely, but Aaron and other of the faithfull so spake, as well as Moses, in praying and confessing unto God: therefore some speciall speech is here signified, that Moses uttered. 4. Some adde further, that God gave authoritie here to Moses in plaine words, that the people might understand. Genevens. But the charge and authoritie given to Moses, was after he was come up to the mount, vers. 24. but this was before. 5. Therefore, though it be not here expressed, what words Moses spake, it is most like they were those words which the Apostle maketh mention of, Heb. 12.21. I feare and quake: and that the Lord answered Moses with comfortable words, animating and encouraging him. Iun. As in like manner, The Lord spake to Elias, in a soft and still voyce, after he had sent before, a terrible wind, earth-quake, and fire, 1 King. 19. 6. This conference then betweene God and Moses, was before he was called up to the mount, contrary to the opinion of Cajetane, and Hugo de S. Victor. who thinke, that this clause is transposed, and that Moses was first called up, and then the Lord had this speech with Moses. But beside that, no transposing of the history is to be admitted in Scripture, but where necessary occasion enforceth it in the preventing of some inconvenience: it is not like that Moses would have uttered such words of feare, as is before shewed out of the Apostle, after the Lord had called him to come up into the mountaine. 7. Beside we refuse their conceit, that thinke this voyce onely to have beene understood of Moses, and not of the people. Pellican. For if Moses were yet below with the people, and not gone up, it is most like, that all the people heard the Lords voyce answering Moses, and therefore it is said he answered by voyce, that is, in an audible voyce & in plaine words. Genevens. And because the Lord had told Moses before, vers. 9. that the people should heare, while the Lord talked with him. And herein the Lord would shew, how gracious Moses was in his fight, with whom he talked, as one friend with another, Exod. 33.11. Ferus.

QUEST. XXXVII. Whether God himselfe, or an Angell spake to Moses in the mount.

And God answered by voyce. 1. Tostatus is of opinion, that God himselfe spake not to Moses, but that this voyce was framed by the ministry of the Angels. Gregorie also before him, seemeth to have held the same: for he maketh but two wayes, whereby God speaketh: Aut per seipsum Dominus loquitur; aut per Angelicam creaturam, God speaketh either by himselfe, or by his creatures the Angels: when hee speaketh himselfe, Sine verbis cor docetur, The heart is taught without words or voyce: As the spirit spake inwardly to Philip, to goe and joyne himselfe to the Eunuches chariot, Act. 8.29. and so the Spirit said to Peter, three men seeke thee. Act. 10.29. But when God speaketh by an Angell, sometime they doe it by words, as when that voyce came from heaven, Ioh. 12.28. I have both glorified it and will glorifie it againe: sometime by things done, and signes; such was the vision of Ezechiel, chap. 1. sometime by words, and signes together: as Adam in Paradise heard both the voyce, and the noise of God walking in the garden: sometime the Angels spake by representations, shewed unto the inward sight: such was the vision of *Iacob*s ladder, Gen. 28. sometime by outward demonstration to the eyes, as when the Angels appeared in humane shape to Abraham, Gen. 18. sometime the Angels speake by the instrument of celestially substances, as when that voyce came out of the cloud in the Baptisme of Christ: This is my beloved Sonne. &c. sometime by terrene creatures, as when the Angell opened the mouth of Balaams Ass to speake: sometime, Per Angelum humanis cordibus loquitur Deus, God speaketh by an Angell to the heart of man: as Zacharie saith, The Lord answered the Angell that talked in me, Zach. 1.13. To this purpose, Gregor. 28. lib. Moral. cap. 2.

2. Contra. To some things here handled by Gregorie, exception will be taken: 1. Though sometime when a voyce is heard from heaven, it is done by the ministry of Angels, as when the Angels have appeared,* as to Hagar, Gen. 16. to Abraham, Gen. 22. yet it followeth not, that alwayes when a voyce is so framed, that it is the worke of an Angell: for have Angels power to make a sound and voyce, without Organes and Instruments, and hath not the Lord, which made the Angels? and shall we tie the Lord so short, as that he shall not speake by voyce and words unto mortall men, but the Angels must be called for, to helpe out the worke? 2. That voyce, which was uttered to Christ, Ioh. 12. was the voyce of God, and not of an Angell: the people that stood by, some said it was a thunder, some that an Angell spake, but they were deceived the one, as well as the other: for Christ prayeth to his Father, Father glorifie thy name, and his Father answereth him. 3. And it is evident, that the voyce which Adam heard in Pradise, was the voyce of God himselfe, for so God saith unto him, Hast thou eaten of the fruit of the tree, whereof I commanded thee thou shouldest not eat? Gen. 3.11. but it was God himselfe that made man, and not an Angell, that gave him that commandement. 4. Neither was it the voyce of an Angell, but of God himselfe, which came from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Sonne: for Christ is the Sonne not of Angels, but of God the Fa|ther. And S. Peter testifieth, that the voyce came from the excellent glorie, 2 Pet. 1.17. 5. And that place is mistaken in Zacharie: where though the Latine interpreter, whom Gregorie followeth, read, qui loquutus est in me, which spake in me: yet it is better translated, which spake to me: Vatab. Iun. For although in the originall the word be (bi) in me: it signifieth as well to, as in, as the preposition (in) is taken in the Latine. And the circumstance of the place sheweth it to be so: for the Angell of Iehovah which spake to Zacharie, was the man that stood among the myrrhe trees, called the Angell of Iehovah that stood among the myrrhe trees, v 10.11. If he were among the myrrhe trees, then was he not in Zacharie to speak within him: and if Angels could speake to the heart, it must needs follow that they know the heart: which is con|trary to the Scriptures, for God onely knoweth the hearts of all men, 1 King. 8.39. And whereas the Lord himselfe speaketh to the heart, herein the ministry of Angels should be superfluous. Further also, if the other reading be admitted, that the Angell spake in the Prophet: it was no created Angell, but the great Angell of Iehovah the Mediatour of the covenant, Christ Jesus, who maketh intercession for his people: as here in this place, this Angell saith unto the Lord: O Lord of hostes, how long wilt thou be unmercifull to Ierusalem? &c. vers. 12. and then it followeth in the next verse: The Lord answered the Angell that talked with me, with good and comfortable words. Beside, that it was the great Angell of Iehovah the Mediatour, the commander of other Angels, it appeareth vers. 12. The other Angels, which were sent abroad into the world, returne their message unto him, They answered the Angell of Iehovah, and said, &c. We have gone thorow the world, &c. This Angell of Iehovah could talke within and to the heart of the Prophet, as in the dayes of his flesh, he could descrie the very inward thoughts and reasoning in the mind, Mark. 2.8.

3. But that God himselfe, Iehovah, Christ, the Mediatour both of the old and new Testament, was the giver of the Law: and that it was he himselfe that talked with Moses, by these reasons it is made plaine: 1. Because he is called Iehovah, vers. 2. Iehovah came downe upon mount Sinai: which is proprium & essentiale nomen Dei, & nunquam ad creaturas transfertur, &c. which is the proper and essentiall name of God, and is never transferred to any creature. Calvin. in 3. ad Galat. Tostatus thinketh otherwise: that an Angell sometime in the old Testament, appearing in the person of God, is not onely called God, but Dominus, Lord also, quaest. 6. in Exod. But herein he is deceived: the Angels indeed are called Elohim, God, which title is sometime given unto men and excellent persons here, as Judges are called Elohim, Gods, Exod. 22.28. And as Dominus,* Lord, is the interpretation of Adonai, so also it is given unto Angels, and unto men: as Abrahams servant calleth him Adonai, his Lord or master, Gen. 24. But as Iehovah is translated Dominus, the Lord, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, as both the Latine and Septuagint interpret: so it is not competible to any, but unto God. The Lord saith, it shall be his name for ever, Exod. 3.15. Neither can it be shewed thorowout the whole bodie of Scripture, that the name Iehovah was ever given unto any, but unto God onely. 2. Moses him|selfe saith, that Iehovah spake unto you out of the middest of the fire, Deut. 4.11. It was the voyce then of God himselfe, Deut. 4.12. Simler. 3. Another reason may be taken from the office of Christ, who was the Mediatour both of the old and new Testament: as the Law is said to bee ordained by Angels in the hand of a Mediatour, Galath. 3.19. which though Beza contend to be understood of Moses, yet the expol|sition of Chrysostome and Calvine upon that place is to bee preferred, which interpret it of Christ: both because of the words following: A Mediatour is not of one, that is, but both of Jewes and Gentiles: But Moses was not the Mediatour of the Gentiles: as also, the title of Mediatour betweene God and man in the new Testament is given onely unto Christ, 1 Tim. 2.5. So Chrysostome: Mediatorem hic appellat Christum, declarans, quod ipse ante legem fuerit, & legem tulerit: He calleth Christ the Mediator, declaring, that he was before the law, and that he gave the law. And Origen thus expoundeth the same place: In fine seculorum homo factus est Iesus Christus, sed ante hunc manifestum •n car•e adventum, mediatour quidem erat ho|minum, sed nondum erat homo: In the end of the world Iesus Christ became man: but before his manifesta|tion in the flesh, he was the mediatour of men, though yet he was not man. Wherefore that is a sound assertion of master Calvine: Nullam abus{que} mundi initio Dei fuisse communicationem cum hominibus &c. That there was not from the beginning of the world any entercourse betweene God & man, but by the intercession of the eter|nall wisdome of God, the Son of God: That as he is now the Mediatour of intercession, & reconciliation; so he was alwayes of instruction and doctrine. And so that saying of Ambrose may conclude this point: Quis tantus esset dux, qui prodesset omnibus nisi ille, qui supra omnes est? quis me supra mundum constituere•, nisi qui major est mundo? Who is so great a Captaine, to profit and do good to all, but he which is above all? who should set me above the world, but he that is greater than the world? Lib. 4. in Luc. Seeing then the morall law was given to profit all people, and not the Jewes onely, and to remaine as a rule of righteousness, as long as God hath his Church upon earth, Moses could not be that mediatour of the law, which was but the Captaine of that one people: but he which is the Prince and Captaine of the whole Church of God forever.

* 4. But that place will be objected, Heb. 2.2. If the word spoken by Angels was stedfast, &c. In which words the Apostle seemeth to affirme that the law was uttered and delivered by the Angels. This place is diversly expounded:

1. Some by Angels understand the Priests, Prophets and other Ministers of the old Testament: as Chrysostome toucheth this exposition, upon the like place, Galath. 3.19. that the law was ordained by An|gels. But this interpretation cannot stand: for the Apostle sheweth afterward, what Angels he speaketh of: He hath not put in subjection unto the Angels the world to come, vers. 5.

2. Some by Angell understand Christ, Simler. But the Apostle speaketh of Angels in the plurall. And the Apostle compareth together the word spoken by Angels, and the word preached by the Lord him|selfe: which comparison will not hold, if the Lord Christ should be understood to be the Angell, by whom the law was spoken.

3. Some thinke that the thunder and lightning and voyce of the trumpet were caused by the ministerie of Angels, but the voyce which delivered the law was from God himselfe. Simler. But the Apostle saith more, that the word was spoken by the Angels.

4. Some applie this text to the whole ministration of the old Testament, and not to the law onely: Quis dubitat per Angelos ministratam fuisse omnem veteris Testamenti dispensationem? Who doubteth but that all the dispensation of the old Testament was ministred by the Angels? Marlorat in 3. Galath. v. 19. and Iunius in his Parallels upon that place, Act. 7.53. saith to this effect, that the Angels were ministri postea sermonis ad populum, non authores legis: that the Angels were ministers of the word afterward to the people, but not authors of the law. But this place being compared with Act. 7.53. and Galath. 3.19. where it is said, that the law was ordained by Angels, it will draw also, the word here said to be spoken by the Angels, to be understood of the law.

5. Iunius hath another exposition: that the law was ordained, inter Angelos, among the Angels: An/not. Galath. 3.19. and in his Parallels he saith, the law was exhibited onely by Christ, inter ordines Angelorum, among the orders of the Angels▪ but the phrase it selfe, spoken by the Angels, giveth more to be understood, than among the Angels.

6. Wherefore, I preferre Chrysostoms exposition, upon that place, Galath. 3.19. Sentit ipsos Angelos subministrasse ferenda legi: He meaneth that the Angels did minister at the giving of the Law: It is one thing for the Angels as Gods deputies, to deliver the Law, another as ministers and instruments. As sometime the Prince may send Commissioners to execute his Edicts, who doe supplie his person and authoritie: sometime he being present in Majestie, may by the mouth of another proclaime his Edict. So at other times the Angels did speake in the name and person of God, as the Angell did call to Abraham, Genes. 22. sometime they did attend as ministring spirits, upon the Majestie of God, as his Criers and Proclaimers. So the law was delivered in mount Sinai, by the authoritie of God himselfe appearing in Majestie, who endited and framed the law; but it might be proclaimed by the Angels, concurring by their ministrie, in the framing of that audible voyce and sound, which was heard.

QUEST. XXXVIII. Why Moses is commanded to charge the people againe.

Vers. 21. GOe downe, charge the people. 1. Though this charge was given before, yet the Lord com|mandeth it to be done againe, Imminente jam hora ad majorem certitudinem, The very houre being now instant for more certaintie. Lyran. For they would the rather take heed, Cum recentius, & in Dei prasentia mandarentur; Being charged afresh, and in the presence of God▪ Tostat. 2. Another reason of re|nuing this charge, was the stubborne nature of the people, who had need often to be admonished: and al|though Moses thought it not needfull againe to charge them, as it appeareth by his answer, and in a man|ner refusall, vers. 23. yet the Lord, Sciebat sibi cum prafractis esse negotium, Knew that he had to deale with such as were stubborne. Calvin. 3. And further, though they had beene straitly charged before, not to ex|ceed their prefixed limits and bounds: yet, they would have adventured, Ipso absente, & mora tamdiu, & curi•s• appetitu victi, In Moses absence, partly not enduring longer delay, partly of a curious desire, to have gone beyond their marks. Galas. 4. As also the charge is iterated in respect of the speciall interdict of the Priests, who might have presumed, being not before specially and in particular named, the charge being given to the people in generall. Simler.

QUEST. XXXIX. What Priests are here understood.

Vers. 21. ANd let the Priests also. 1. Because the order of Priests was not yet instituted, some thinke that is spoken by anticipation, and prevention, that afterward, when the Priests should be ordained and consecrated, they should be sanctified, when they came into the presence of God. Ex Lyran. But it seemeth by the sending downe of Moses, that this charge was presently to be given by Moses, and by the other to be executed. And further it is said, Let the Priests, which come to the Lord, be sanctified: The Lord then speaketh of those Priests, which already had accesse unto God, not of those, which should be assigned afterward. Tostat. 2. Some thinke that by this word, cohanim, which signifieth, as well Princes as Priests, are understood the Tribunes, Officers, and Judges of the people, which were before appointed by the counsell and advice of Iethro. Lippom. Genevens. But their office was to judge the people, and heare their controversies: the office of those Priests, was to have accesse unto the presence of God in offering of sacrifices. 3. Some thinke that the Priests were consecrated now, but that it is set downe afterward. Oleaster. But this were without any necessitie to disturbe, and transpose the order of the storie. 4. There|fore their opinion is most probable, who thinke that these Priests were the first borne, to whom the prerogative of the Priesthood belonged, till it was by Gods appointment settled in the Tribe of Levi: But nei|ther all the first borne in Israel, that were consecrated unto God, were Priests, as Iun. Borrh. For it is not probable in so great a multitude, Singulis domibus proprios fuisse Sacerdotes, That every house had his peculiar and proper Priest. Calvin. Neither were they onely Primogeniti Principum duodecim tribuum, &c. The first borne of the Princes of the twelve Tribes, which offered sacrifice, chap. 24.5. As R. Salomon, Lyrar. For so small a number of Priests sufficed not for the whole multitude. They were then as well Filii primo|geniti aliorum magnorum virorum, The first borne sonnes of other great men, which were the Princes of the families, as the first borne of the Princes of the Tribes. Tostat. quaest. 12. 5. And by drawing neere un|to God, is not here meant, that speciall kind of accesse, to enquire of God, which Moses did onely then, and the high Priest afterward, by his Vrim, and Thummim, but the comming unto God to minister, as the Chalde interpreteth. Tostat. Lippom.

QUEST. XL. Why Moses replieth, as unwilling to goe downe.

Vers. 23. ANd Moses said unto the Lord. 1. Some thinke that Moses thus replied, Quod non videbatur necessarium, ut ista contestatio fierat: As though it seemed not necessarie, that this contestation should be made. Tostat. But it is not to be thought, that Moses would so contradict the Lord, having beene of late in so great feare, that the Lord spake unto him to comfort him. 2. Some say, that Moses thus spake not, as though he tooke this charge to be superfluous, but to shew his faithfulness, that he had care|fully before intimated to the people the will and pleasure of God therein. Simler. But the Lord was not ignorant, what Moses had done, that he needed to make repetition of his service. 3. Some thinke that Moses, Andiendo populo mandatum refricat: That Moses thus answereth, that hee might in hearing of the people, rubbe their memorie, lest they might forget any thing of the charge. Pellican. But Moses was not yet gone downe to the people, and therefore not within their hearing. 4. Rupertus saith, Moses securum Deum reddere voluit divina inharens visioni: That Moses being desirous to continue there still, to see that heavenly vision, would have put the Lord out of doubt for that matter: But this had beene to make him|selfe wiser than God, to give him securitie in that, which the Lord himselfe made question of. 5. But it is most unlike, that Moses should find fault with this charge, as somewhat hard, and that in effect he should say thus, Si non licet eis ascendere, & audire te, quis ergo audiet: If it be not lawfull for them to ascend, and heare thee, who then shall heare thee? Hugo de S. Victor. 6. Moses therefore replieth, not as discontented with this charge, but, seeing that the Lords commandement was so generall, and so strict, that no not the the Priests were exempted, he is therefore desirous to be satisfied, whom it was the Lords pleasure to ad|mit to come up into the mount, and so the Lord presently giveth Moses satisfaction herein, giving •nto him and Aaron onely liberty to come up. Iun.

QUEST. XLI. Why the Lord notwithstanding Moses answer, still chargeth him to go downe.

Vers. 24. AND the Lord said unto him, go get thee downe. 1. Tostatusthinketh, that this replie of the Lord, is a correction of Moses answer; Videbat enim Deus, quod Moses non videbat: For God saw that, which Moses did not see: that is, that it was needfull for him to goe downe, and charge the people againe: but the mentioning of Aaron afterward, whom Moses spake not of before, sheweth that the Lords speech was not a correction, but rather a satisfaction given unto Moses. 2. Cajetane saith, Imperfecta re/sponsio Aaron, & utila meruit non admitti: The imperfect and lame answer of Moses, deserved not to be ad/mitted: for Moses in his answer, neither maketh mention of the Priests, nor of the punishment, both which the Lord had spoken of: But Moses was not refused here of God, he received satisfaction of his doubts. 3. Therefore it appeareth by the Lords answer unto Moses, giving him and Aaron onely libertie to come up, that the Lords intendment was to satisfie Moses in that behalfe, who seemed to make question upon the Lords strait charge, whether any should be admitted to come up at all: and therefore the Lord telleth him, that though the people and Priests were inhibited, yet it should bee lawfull for him and Aaron to come up. Iun. 4. So here two other reasons may be gathered, why Moses is sent downe from the hill: the one that Moses should goe downe, Vt sit unus de populo andiendo legem, To be as one of the people, to heare the law among the rest; and that he should bring up Aaron with him. Cajetan.

QUEST. XLII. Why Aaron is bid to come up with Moses, wherefore he went up, and when.

Vers. 24. COme up, thou and Aaron with thee, &c. 1. This was not that comming up, when Moses went to receive the Lawes of God: for then not onely Aaron, but Nadab and Abihu, and 70. of the Elders went up also, chap. 24. 2. Neither did Moses and Aaron goe up together, when the ten commandements were delivered by voyce: for then Moses was below, and not farre off from the people; for then they could not have spoken to Moses, as they did immediately after the delivering of the Law, chap. 29. 19. 3. Nor yet did Aaron goe up with Moses into the top of the mountaine, into the midst of the darknesse: for thither Moses onely went up, leaving Aaron and Hur behind, to heare the peoples controversies, chap. 24. 14. 4. Therefore Moses and Aaron went up to some place of the mountaine, not to the top, but as it might be to the middle, not far from the people: from which place Moses might heare the people calling unto him. Tostat. 5. The Lord thought it fit to joyne Aaron with Moses, because he was appointed to the Priesthood, that he might be better prepared by those heavenly visions and revelations unto it. Simler.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. One faith, one Church of the beleeving Iewes and Gentiles.

Vers. 6. YOU shall be unto me a Kingdome of Priests. S. Peter applieth this Scripture, which is here uttered by the Lord to the people of Israel, to the faithfull and beleeving Gentiles: Ye as lively stones be made a spirituall house, and holy Priesthood to offer up spirituall sacrifices unto God, acceptable to God by Iesus Christ, 1 Pet. 2.5. Whereby we see, that there is Vna Iudaeorum & Gentium credentium fides, unus Deus, una Ecclesia: One faith of the beleeving Iewes and Gentiles, one God, one Church. Ferus.

2. Doct. The occasions and beginnings of sinne to be prevented.

Vers. 12. GOe not up to the mount, nor touch the border of it. God forbiddeth them so much as to touch the very border and bottome of the mount, that they should have no occasion to goe up. So Eve was forbidden to touch the tree, that shee should not be enticed to eat the fruit thereof, Gen. 3. 3. And the Israelites were charged to have no leaven in their houses, that they might the better abstaine from the eating thereof. So our Saviour forbiddeth the wrath of the heart, and the lust of the eye, lest being tempted by such occasions, men should fall into greater sinnes: It is good therefore to cut off the occasion of sinne, and to set an hedge before, and to make markes and bounds in every action, which wee should not exceed. Oleaster.

3. Doct. The giving of the law a figure of the coming of the holy Ghost.

Vers. 16. The third day there was thunder and lightnings. The giving of the law in mount Sinai, was a lively figure of the coming down of the holy Ghost upon the Apostles. 1. As there the law was given the 50. day after the Passeeover: so, Quinquagesimo die post passionem Domini, datus est spiritus sanctus, The fiftieth day after the passion of our Lord, who is the true Passeeover, the holy Ghost was given. 2. There the law is said to be written with the finger of God, and the Lord saith of the holy Ghost, By the finger of God I cast out devils. 3. They which were with the Apostles, 120. Mosaica aetatis numero constituti: were 120. according to the number of Moses yeares. Isidor. 4. Hic altitudo coenaculi, ibi cacumen montis, &c. There the upper roome, and here the top, or upper part of the hill, doe shew the height and depth of the precepts delivered. 5. Here was thunder, there was the noise of a mightie wind: here fire appeared, and there fierie cloven tongues: here the mountaine trembled, and there the place where they were gathered together, was moved: here was heard the sound of a trumpet, and there they spake with divers tongues. Beda hom. vigil. Pentecost. 6. Yet this difference there was in these two apparitions: Here together with the fire, was seene a thicke and darke cloud, but there bright shining flames of fire, like cloven tongues, shewing the cleare light of the Gospell, in respect of the cloudy darknesse of the Law. Simler. Here onely Moses was suffered to goe up the hill, there all which were present received the holy Ghost: here the people tremble and are afraid, but there they were emboldened by the Spirit, to preach the wonderfull works of God.

Page 261

4. Doct. By the preaching of the Word, we are joynted unto God by faith.

Vers. 17. Moses brought the people out of their tents. So Ministrorum officium est, It is the dutie of Ministers by the preaching of the Gospell, to draw men out of the tents of sin, & to joyne them unto God by faith. Lippom. As the Apostle saith, Faith is by hearing, and hearing by the Word, Rom. 10.17.

5. Doct. Distinction of offices in the Church.

Vers. 24. Come up thou, and Aaron with thee. The people stand below in the campe, but Moses and Aaron ascend up into the mount. This sheweth the distinction of offices, and callings in the Church, betweene the Ministers and the people, that none should take upon them the office of teaching, and delivering the high things of God, but they which are thereunto called: as the Apostle would have every one to abide in the same vocation wherein he was called, 1 Cor. 7.20. Marbach.

5. Places of Controversie.

1. Cont. Angels carrie not up our prayers unto God, as Mediatours.

Vers. 8. And Moses reported the words of the people unto the Lord. Tostatus hereupon inferreth thus, that as Moses carried up the peoples answer unto God, Sic Angeli coram Deo proponunt orationes nostras, So the Angels propound before God, our prayers: quæst. 3. in fine. Contra. 1. This followeth not, for Moses was a messenger betweene God and his people, hee was commanded to propound unto them, what the Lord had said: so when it can be shewed in Scripture, that the Angels have the like charge from God to report our prayers, the argument will follow, else not. 2. If the Angels should returne our prayers and sayings unto God, as they doe the rest of our doings: they do not as mediatours interpose themselves, but onely as reporters returne, as they find in the world: and it is to this end, as Augustine saith, Vt super his Domini voluntatem consulant, That they may know Gods pleasure further therein: in Psal. 67. No doubt they doe observe, who are faithfull, and devout in prayer, and who are otherwise: The devill observed Iob, as the Lord saith, Hast thou not considered my servant Iob, how none is like him in the earth, Iob. 1.8. But he did it with envie; the good Angels were witnesses of his pietie with joy. So the Angels which were sent thorow the world, returne this answer: That all the world sitteth still, and is at rest, Zachar. 1.11. There was no devotion or exercise of godlinesse, but all given to securitie and carelesnesse. In this man|ner Angels may report as mens doings, so their sayings unto God: but this maketh nothing at all for the invocation of Angels, which is by the Romanists hereby intended.

2. Cont. That man hath no free will unto good.

Vers. 5. I yee will heare my voyce indeed, and keepe my covenant, &c. From hence Lippoman would gal|ther, that man hath free will: ad quid enim ita loqueretur, &c. For to what end should hee so speake, if it were not in the peoples power to heare, and keepe the covenant? Contra. 1. If this were in mans power to keepe Gods covenant, which is to observe his law, and obey the commandements; to what end then came our blessed Saviour to performe the law for us, which wee in respect of the weaknesse of our flesh could not doe? 2. Therefore these precepts are propounded in Scripture to these two ends, that thereby mans drowsie nature should be stirred up to labour unto perfection: and that finding himselfe to come farre short of the commandement, he might see his owne weaknesse, and flee for succour unto Christ. And therefore S. Paul saith, that the law is a Shool-master to bring us unto Christ, Gal. 3.24.

3. Cont. No absolute faith or credit to be given unto teachers, but as they agree with Scriptures.

Vers. 9. LOe I come unto thee in a thicke cloud, that the people may heare while I talke with thee. It was Moses credit with the people, that they heard the Lord speaking with him. And Moses desired no further to be beleaved, than he had his warrant from God: Non alio jure fidem in Ecclesia obtinuit, quàm quia Dei mandata pertulit: He by no other right obtained credit in the Church, but because he brought the commandements of God. Calvin. It is therefore great presumption for those which take upon them now to bee the Pastors and Doctors of the Church, to arrogate and assume more unto themselves than Moses did. As the Romanists doe hold, that we ought to receive all the decrees and constitutions of the Church, without any further discussing: We ought to take our faith, and all necessary things of our salvation, at the hands of our superiours: Rhemist. Act. 10. sect. 8. We must beleeve the Church, and trust it in all things, 1 Tim.3. sect. 9. Whereas the Apostles themselves required not their doctrine otherwise to bee received, then as it was consonant to the Scriptures: for the Bereans are commended, for conferring those things which they taught with the Scriptures, Act. 17.11.

4. Cont. Perpetuall abstinence from marriage, not required of Ministers.

Vers. 15. COme not at your wives. Bellarmine out of this text would enforce the single life of the Clergie, because the people, being to appeare before the Lord, are commanded to abstaine from their wives, Lib. 1. de Clericis cap.19. Contra. 1. It followeth not, the people were commanded abstinence for three dayes: Ergo, Ministers all their life should abstaine: or, they had wives and came not at them for three dayes: therefore Ministers must have no wives. 2. The practice of those times was otherwise, for the Priests and Levites were married: if this example pressed not them, it doth not enforce perpetuall single life now. 3. Neither doth the argument follow: because then there was in the use of marriage in the naturall issue a legall pollution, which made them uncleane untill the even, Levit. 15.18. and therefore such abstinence and forbearance was required: but such uncleannesse now is taken away: as in like man|ner, he that touched a dead corse then was uncleane, and yet therein he sinned not: there was then a kind of legall uncleannesse, which was not sinne. Simler. 4. But so much as is morall in this precept bindeth now: that to make our prayers more fervent, as by fasting, so by this kind of abstinence for a time, is fit, & agreeable to the Apostles doctrine, 1 Cor. 7.5. But as it followeth not, it is good to fast sometime, to be more earnest in prayer: therefore we should alwayes fast: so from abstinence from the marriage bed, to conclude perpetuall forbearance, is absurd. Ferus, one of their owne writers, is more equall, who writeth thus: Non est malum matrimonium, sed tamen accessuri ad Deum etiam à licitis temperare debent: Matrimonie is not evill, yet they which come unto God, ought to abstaine even from things lawfull. Which kind of abstinence is by the Apostle required not onely of Ministers, but of all in generall in the foresaid place, 1 Cor. 7.5.

5. Cont. Against the distinction of counsels and precepts.

RVpertus further hath this note upon this text: Ad sanctificationem non satis est fecisse praeceptum, nisi adjicias & facere consilium: To sanctification it is not enough to fulfill the precept, unlesse you adde to performe the counsels also: And in that place he sheweth what a precept is, to abstaine from things unlaw|full, and what a counsell is, abstinere à licitis, to abstaine from things lawfull, Lib. 3. in Exod. cap. 26. Contra. 1. Though the use of the wife were in it selfe lawfull: yet upon this prohibition it was unlawfull: therefore it was no counsell now, but a precept. 2. That distinction of precepts and counsels is not sound, nor consonant with the Scriptures: as they call those precepts, which are commanded of God, and which to leave undone is sinne: The counsels are not enjoined, and to leave them undone is no sinne: but in keeping of them there is greater reward. For whatsoever we doe, or can doe, it is but our dutie to doe, Luk. 17.10. and if we come short in doing those things which are commanded, it is not possible for any to doe more than is required. And seeing our Saviour biddeth us to be perfect, as his heavenly father is perfect, and we are commanded to love the Lord with all our heart, and all our soule: then the counsels, which they call of perfection, if they proceed from the love of God, are commanded also.

6. Morall observations.

1. Observ. We must be as ready to performe, as promise obedience.

Vers. 8. ALL that the Lord hath commanded, will wee doe. The people are ready to promise obedience, and that without any limitation, to all that God commanded: but they soone forgot their promise, and they were afterward as slow to performe, as here they are ready to vow obedience: whereby we learne, Nullius momenti esse subitum affectum, nisi accedat perseverandi constantia: That a sudden affection is of no moment, unlesse constancie in persevering be added. Calvin: to the same purpose Oleaster. As in the parable, the sonne that said to his father when he was bid to worke in his vineyard, and made an|swer hee would not, yet after repented, and went, is commended before him that gave faire words, and said he would, but went not, Matth. 21.29.

2. Observ. Due preparation must goe before the hearing of the word.

Vers. 10. LEt them wash their cloaths. Hereupon Origene thus noteth: Nemo potest audire verbum, nisi sanctificatus, id est, sanctus corpore & mente: None can heare the word of God, unlesse they bee sanctified, that is, holy in minde and bodie. If any come with unwashen garments, that is, unprepared, it will be said unto him, as in the parable, to him that had not his wedding garment: Friend, how camest thou in hither? The word of God is not to be handled with uncleane hands, neither will enter into uncleane hearts. B. Babingt.

3. Observ. Our sanctification is not perfected all at once.

Vers. 10. Sanctifie them to day and to morrow. Non enim una die perficitur sanctificatio, &c. For our sanctification cannot be perfited in one day. We must labour and study for it all the dayes of our life. Ferus. As the Apostle compareth Christians to men set in a race: So run, that ye may obtaine, 2 Cor. 9.24.

It is in vaine for a man to set forward in the beginning of his race, if hee hold not out to the end: so our regeneration is not perfited all at once in the beginning: we must goe on still, untill the Lord have per|fited his worke in us.

4. Observ. Against curiositie in divine things.

Vers. 12. THou shalt set marks unto the people. Docet hic locus, ne in rebus divinis simus curiosi: This place sheweth, that we ought not to be curious in the searching out of divine things. Ferus: and to shew what an odious thing curiositie is in matters forbidden, and that we should be content with that which it pleaseth God to vouchsafe to reveale unto us: B. Babington. As the holy Apostle saith, that no man presume to understand above that, which is meet to understand: but that he understand according to so|brietie, as God hath deal• to every one the measure of faith, Rom. 12.3.

5. Observ. The word of God had need often to be inculcate.

Vers. 21. GOe downe, charge the people. Such is our dulnesse, that we had need to have the word of God often inculcate and beaten upon us: Men are marvellous apt to transgresse, and therefore againe and againe they must bee admonished by Moses. B. Babingt. Therefore the Apostle saith: It grieveth me not to write the same things unto you, and for you it is a sure thing, Philip. 3.1. As here Moses is commanded to iterate and renew the same charge, that the people breake not their bounds.

CHAP. XX.

1. The method and Argument.

T His Chapter setteth forth the promulgation of the morall law, with certaine effects that followed.

1. In the promulgation, first there is the preface, shewing who was the author and proclaimer of the law: God the Lord: what hee spake: all these words, vers. 1. and what the Lord had done for his people, wherefore they should be willing to heare and receive his law: he had brought them out of Egypt, vers. 2.

Secondly, the Commandements follow, which concerne the worship of God in the first table containing foure Commandements: and our dutie toward our neighbours in the six last, to vers. 18. which make the second table.

The first table prescribeth both the internall worship of God, who is to be worshipped, in the first com|mandement, vers. 3. and in what manner, spiritually in the heart & minde, not by any Idolatrie or Imagerie: where the matter of such images and Idols is rehearsed, vers. 4. the abuse forbidden, vers. 5. the reason added, partly from a punishment threatned, vers. 5. partly from mercie promised, vers. 6.

The externall worship of God is prescribed, in the reverent profession of his name, which is not to be taken in vaine: where there is to be considered first the prohibition, then the penaltie, in the third commandement, vers. 7.

And in the keeping of the Sabbath, in the fourth commandement: which consisteth of the constitution thereof by an Antithesis or opposite comparison of the six dayes of labour, vers. 8, 9. then of the prescription, both in what manner, and by what persons the Sabbath must be kept, vers. 10. and the confirmation taken from the example of God himselfe, vers. 12.

The second table, commandeth the mutuall duties to be performed among men, and forbiddeth whatsoever is contrarie thereunto: which are either the sprigges and branches of vices committed, or the very root of corruption it selfe. The sprigges are such as concerne some certaine callings and persons, as in the fifth commandement, which prescribeth the dutie toward our superiours, with a promise of long life annexed, vers. 12. or belong indifferently to all men in generall: and touch either their bodie and life in the sixth commandement, vers. 13. their marriage and wife in the seventh, vers. 14. their goods in the eighth, vers. 15. their name and fame in the ninth, vers. 16. Then followeth the root of all, which is evill concupiscence, in the tenth, vers. 17. which consisteth of a particular enumeration, what things of our neighbours are not to be coveted.

In the second part: the effects that followed are either matters of fact, or matters of precept: of the first are, 1. The feare of the people in standing a farre off, vers. 18. 2. Their request to Moses, that hee would speake unto them, vers. 19. 3. Moses comforting of the people, vers. 20. 4. His drawing neere unto God, vers. 21.

The precepts are three: 1. to make no Image, with the reason thereof, they saw none while God talked with them, vers. 22, 23. 2. What Altar they shall make, either of earth, vers. 24. or unhewn stone, v. 25. 3. They shall make no steps unto the Altar, and why, vers. 26.

2. The divers readings.

Vers. 5. Thou shalt not bow downe unto them. I.G.B.A.P. better than, *thou shalt not worship them. S.L.V. shachah signifieth to how unto: and the construction with the preposition ב lahem, sheweth a Dative case, to them.

* Stronge, jealous. I.A.P.V.L. better, than a jealous God. S.B.G. for the word El here signifieth strong• for otherwise it should be set thus, kanah El, jealous God, not, El kanah, God jealous.

* Vers. 7. Will not hold him guiltlesse, or innocent. B.G.L.P. will not leave him unpunished. V.I. the sense rather than the words: will not hold him cleane, or mundifie him. S. A. nakah signifieth both to cleanse, and hold innocent: but the latter rather here.

* Vers. 10. In it thou shalt not doe any worke. L.B.G.S. in it, is not in the originall: as I.V.A.P. leave it out.

Vers. 17. Thou shalt not utter a false testimonie, &c. I. thou shalt not speake. L. answer V.A. testifie a false testimonie. S.A. beare false witnesse. B.G. ghanah signifieth all these, to speake, to answer, to testifie: the first rather here.

3. The explanation of difficult questions.

QUEST. I. Whether this be a Commandement, I am the Lord.

Vers. 2. I Am the Lord thy God. 1. It is the opinion of the Hebrewes that this should be the first Com|mandement: & they give this reason, because it was necessary that the people should first firmly and stedfastly beleeve, that the Lord, which spake unto them, was that God which brought them out of the land of Egypt, before they could be perswaded to yeeld obedience to his law: as they further shew it by this similitude: Like as a King that should offer lawes and ordinances unto a Province and Countrie to be kept and observed, must first be received and acknowledged for King, before his lawes would finde admittance: So the people were first to beleeve that hee was the God that delivered them, before they could resolve to receive his law. 2. But to this it may be answered: 1. That the people were alreadie per|swaded, and firmly beleaved, that the Lord was their God, which had delivered them from their enemies, and they had promised already to yeeld obedience to all Gods commandements, chap. 19.7. and therefore it was not needfull to give them any speciall commandement to beleeve the Lord to bee their God. Sic Paul. Burgens. addition. 1. 2. But, although this answer giveth satisfaction in respect of the present con|dition of the Israelites, to whom the Lord had approved himselfe already, by many wonderfull works to be their God: and therefore they needed not any speciall commandement in that behalfe: yet seeing the morall law was not given to that age present, or to that nation onely, but to all people in the world, which have not any such preparation or foundation of this first beleefe and perswasion of the true God, by such wonderfull signes and miracles: therefore further it must be added, that even this precept, to beleeve is the true God, & to repose our whole trust in him, is contained even in the first commandement following▪ Thou shalt have no other Gods: for here we are commanded to acknowledge the Lord to bee the onely true God, and so consequently to give him that honour and worship, which belongeth unto him. And so saith Cyprian: Quòd Deus solus colendus sit, &c. That God onely is to be worshipped, is shewed in Deutero|nomie Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God: and likewise in Exodus, Thou shalt have no strange gods before me. De exhortat. Martyrii, cap. 2. 3. But that this is no commandement, it appeareth by this: be|cause here is nothing forbidden or commanded, as in the rest: all the rest of the commandements are ex|pressed by way of commanding: but this by way of affirming, I am the Lord. Tostat. And beside if this were a commandement, there should be more than tenne in all: therefore it is no precept, but, quoddam inductivum ad cetera: a certaine inducement to the commandements following. Tostat. Oportuit ante omnia jus legislatoris sanciri, &c. First of all it was meet that the right and authoritie of the lawgiver should bee established, lest that which hee commanded should bee despised. Calvin. So Origene: Hic sermo nondum mandati est, sed quis est, qui mandat ostendit: This speech is no commandement, but sheweth who is the Commander.

QUEST. II. Of the distinction and difference of the lawes of Moses in generall.

BUt before wee proceed in particular, to entreate of the morall law: first wee must consider of the lawes of Moses in generall, and of the difference of them. 1. The lawes which Moses delivered un|to Israel, were of three sorts, Morall, Judicall, Ceremoniall. The first doe prescribe a perfect rule of righteousness, discerning things that are right and just from the contrarie, both toward God and man, both in externall and internall duties: requiring obedience under the paine of everlasting death. The ceremoniall concerned such rites and services, as belonged to the externall worship of God; prescribed unto that people, both to distinguish them from other nations in the world, and to be signes and symboles unto them, of the spirituall graces of the new Testament, to bee fulfilled by the Messias. The Judicall lawes belonged to their civill state: which were such ordinances, as contained rules of equitie, for the judging and deciding of civill controversies and questions, and decreed punishments for the transgression▪ against both the morall and ceremoniall lawes: So that these Judicalls were the very bond of the other lawes; and kept the people in order and obedience. Vrsinus Catech. 2. These lawes doe thus differ: 1. The Morall are generall, grounded upon the law of nature, so are not the other: 2. They are perpetuall to endure for ever, so doe not the other: 3. The Morals require both externall and internall obedience: the other onely externall. The Morall were the principall, and other lawes were to give place unto them: and they were the end, unto the which the other tended. Vrsin. 3. Yet these three, the Morall, Iudiciall, and Ceremoniall, are not severally, but joyntly handled by Moses: so that among the Morals there are found some Ceremonials: and among the Iudicials, both Morall and Ceremoniall lawes. Lryan.

And the Moral law contained in the ten Commandements, was delivered by the Lords owne voice to the people, the rest they received by Moses from God. Tostat. quest. 1.

QUEST. III. Of the validity of the lawes, Morall, Ceremoniall, Iudiciall, which are abrogated, which are not.

Concerning the validity of these lawes: 1. The Ceremonials are utterly abolished, so that there is now no place for them under the Gospell: neither can they be revived without derogation to the Gospell of Christ: as the Apostle saith; If yee be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing, Galath. 5.2. for when the body is come, the shadowes must be abolished: but the ceremonies were shadowes, the body is Christ, Coloss. 2.17. Their Temple signified the Church of God, their holy place, heaven, their sacrifices the passion of Christ: their expiations, the remission of sinnes: these things then being fully exhibited, and fulfilled in Christ, have now no more place in the Church. Ferus. Againe, the ceremonies served only for that carnall people, which were as children, kept in bondage under the elements and rudiments of the world, Galath. 4.3. But now we are no longer under tutors and governours, the time appointed of the Father being expired, but are set free and redeemed by Christ. Ferus. Another reason of the abolishing of them, is in respect of that people, to whom they were prescribed, as a marke and cognizance to discern them from all other nations: but now this distinction being taken away and the wall of partition being broken downe, both Jew and Gentile being made all one in Christ, that also is abolished, which discerned them from other people: for the causes being changed, for the which the law was made, there must needs follow also an alteration of the law it selfe. Vrsin.

2. The Iudicials are neither abolished, nor yet with such necessity enjoined: the equity of them bindeth, but not the like strict severity: as is shewed before at large, in the generall questions prefixed before the first chapter, whither I referre the Reader.

3. The Morall law remaineth full in force still, and is not abrogated, Quoad obedientiam, in respect of obedience, which thereunto is still required now under the Gospell, Sed quoad maledictionem, but in respect of the curse and malediction, which Christ hath taken away: So that it is most true, which our blessed Saviour saith, he came not to dissolve the law, but to fulfill it, Matth. 5. Hee hath fulfilled it, 1. In his owne person in keeping it: 2. In paying the punishment for us, which was due by the law to the transgressors thereof: 3. In enabling us by his grace to walke in obedience to the law. Vrsin.

QUEST. IV. Of the difference betweene the Morall and Evangelicall law.

But though the Morall law bee now in force, and bind us to obedience, as well as it did the Jewes, yet there is great difference betweene the law and the Gospell: 1. In the knowledge and manifestation thereof: for to the Morall law, wee have some direction by the light of nature: but the knowledge of faith in Christ by the Gospell is revealed by grace. 2. The law teacheth what we should be: by faith and grace in Christ, we are made that which the law prescribeth and the Gospell effecteth in us. 3. The conditions are unlike: the law tieth the promise of eternall life, to the condition of fulfilling the law in our selves: the Gospell to the condition of faith, apprehending the righteousness of Christ. 4. The effects are divers: the law worketh terrour, the Gospell peace and comfort. Vrsin. The law revealeth sinne, the Gospell giveth remission of sinnes. Ferus. So that the one is lex timoris, the law of feare, the other is lex amoris, the law of love: which also hath a threefold difference yet further. 1. Lex timoris facit observantes servos: the law of feare maketh the observers thereof servile, but the law of love maketh them free. 2. The law of feare is not willingly kept, but by constraint; the law of love voluntariò observatur; is willingly observed and kept. 3. The one is hard and heavy, the other easie and light. Tom. opuscul. 8.

QUEST. V. Of the manifold use of the law in the fourefold state of man.

TOuching the use of the Morall law, it is to be considered, according to these foure states of man, as he was in his creation, and state of innocency, in his corrupt and decayed nature, as hee is restored by grace, and as he shall be in the state of glorification. 1. Man in his innocency received two benefits by the knowledge of the law, which was graft in him by creation: that thereby hee was made conformable to the image of God, and so directed, that he should not have swarved from the will of the Creator: and beside, he thereby had assurance, so long as he walked in obedience, of certaine eternity, never to have tasted of death, corruption, or mutability in his state, for he that keepeth the law shall live thereby. Vrsin. 2. In mans corrupt state, the law serveth both to restraints the evill: and therefore the Apostle saith, that the law is not given to a righteous man, but to the lawlesse, and disobedient, 1. Tim. 1.9. as also to discover unto them their sinnes, for by the law commeth the knowledge of sinne, and therefore the Apostle saith, Without the law sinne is dead, Rom. 7.9. that is, it is not knowne to be sinne. Ferus. 3. In man regenerate, the law is a rule of righteousness, and a lanterne to their feet, as David saith. 2. It teacheth the true knowledge of God. 3. It assureth a man that walketh therein of his election, 2. Pet. 1.10. If ye doe these things, yee shall never fall. 4. It sheweth what benefit wee have received by Christ, the renewing of that image, wherein man was first created, Coloss. 3.10. 5. In the state of glorification, the law shall have that use, which it had before mans fall, to shew the conformity in those glorified creatures, in their holy obedience, with the blessed will of their glorious Creator. Vrsin.

QUEST. VI. Why it pleased God now and not before, to give his written law to the world.

IT followeth now to bee considered, why it pleased God to give now his law unto his people, seeing from the beginning of the world there was no written law, but as it was by the law of nature inprinted in their hearts. 1. God did not therefore now first give unto his people the Morall law written, as though he were either mutable, in changing his first determination, or that in processe of time, he had found out a more profitable way, than hee knew before, as some wickedly have objected: Sed quia superfluum fuit hoc fieri, stante adhuc lege natura: But because this was superfluous and needlesse to be done, the law of nature yet standing firme. By the light of nature before the flood, they discerned good from evill, just from unjust, and therefore the old world, that sinned against this law of nature, was justly punished: of this law printed in the heart, the Apostle speaketh, They shew the effect of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing them witnesse, and their thoughts accusing one another, or excusing, Rom. 2.15. Now then, when this law of nature began more and more to bee obscured, and iniquity to abound, the Lord thought it needfull to give unto the people a written law. Lippom. Ex collation. Patrum. 2. Another cause of giving the law was, Ne sibi homines aliquid defuisse quererentur, scriptum est in tabulis, quod in cordibus non legebant: Lest that men should complaine that somewhat was wanting, that was written in tables, which was not written in the hearts, August. in Psal. 57.

Therefore to take away all excuse, and pretext of ignorance, the Lord gave his written law. 3. Another end of giving the law, was to prepare and make a way for the Gospel: Vt te ad faciendum legem de tuo vires non habere monstraret, &c. To shew that thou hast not strength of thy selfe to doe the law, and so being poore and beggerly, shouldest flee unto grace: Augustine likewise in Psal. 118. 4. Further, the law was given as a supply of the weakenesse, and ignorance of man: that whereas there was no certaine rule before, to know what was good, what was evill, but men according to their blind fancies and carnall imaginations, placed happinesse, some in one thing, some in another: the law was to correct their erroneous opinions, and to teach one constant and sure rule of truth and vertue. And further, such was their error, that though in civill and politike matters, the wise among the Heathen, by the light of nature, and experience attained to some perfection, yet they were utterly ignorant of the true knowledge and worship of God, which is set forth in the law. Tostat. quest. 1. 5. Further, because the law of nature was more and more obscured, the Lord would have his law written in tables of stone, that it might ever be kept and remembred, and be no more drowned in oblivion. Ferus. And though those tables of stone, wherein the law was written, are not now to be found, yet the copy of the same law is extant in the Scriptures, there to be seene and read, which shall continue to the end of the world. 6. Lastly, The Lord in giving this law to this people, therein sheweth his love to his people, committing unto them the greatest treasure in the world: as Moses saith, What nation is so great, that hath ordinances and lawes so righteous, as all this Law which I set before you this day? Deut. 4.8.

QUEST. VII. How the Lord spake all these words, and why.

Vers. 1. GOd spake all these words, saying. 1. Some thinke that God is said to speake, whereas it was an Angell, in respect of the opinion of the people, that thought Moses spake with God. Paul. Burgens. But it is before shewed, chap. 19. quest. 40 that it was God himselfe that spake these words, who nameth himselfe Jehovah, vers. 2. which name is not given to any Angell: yet this word also is said to have beene spoken by Angels, Hebr. 2.2. because God did therein use the ministry of the Angels, in framing of that audible voice, which was heard: So that the Angels speake not now, as in the person of God, as his messengers, as at other times, but here they attended only as Ministers: Longe aliter hic loquitur, quàm ad patres adhuc locutus est: the Lord speaketh farre otherwise here, than hee spake hitherto to the Fathers. Ferus. But to them hee spake by the ministry of Angels. This question also is well decided by Cajetane: You will aske (saith he) how God is said to speake, Cùm ista locutis fieres per Angelum, &c. Seeing this speech was framed by an Angell. The answer is ready, Quia ipse Dominus loquebatur in Angelo ad populum, &c. Because the Lord himselfe spake in the Angell to the people, not as the King speaketh by his Embassador, or Interpreter, Sed ut presens mens in Angelo, & formans verba hujus sermonis, magis quam Angelus: But as present in the Angell, and so framing the words of his speech, rather than the Angell. So Cajetane. So that God spake as the Author and enditer, the Angell spake as the tongue or pen-man of God.

2. The Hebrewes have this opinion, that this was that great Angell, of such eminency, Vt citra essentiam Divinam, Angelus faciei nominetur; that setting the Divine essence aside, he is called the Angell of Gods presence, Isay 63.9. Paul. Burgens. addition. 1. Nay this Angell of Gods presence, that heard them, when they cried in their troubles, and saved them, as there the Prophet saith, was none other than Jehovah himselfe, the Lord Christ, as S. Paul expoundeth, 1. Cor. 10.9. Let us not tempt Christ, as some of them tempted him, and were destroyed of Serpents. And in this Angell was the very divine essence of God, as the Lord saith, Exod. 23.21. My name is in him.

3. Burgeus. Reason to prove, that it was an Angell, and not God himselfe that spake, because he saith in the third Commandement, Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vaine, in the third person, not in the first, as, Thou shalt not take my name in vaine, and so likewise in the fourth Commandement: Which sheweth (saith hee) that it was an Angell that spake, and not

God: This reason is of small force, and may easily be answered. 1. The Lord useth the third person, because, although now the Lord as present in Majesty, spake by voice: yet this law was to bee delivered afterward, written in tables of stone, which being a perpetuall monument unto the people, of the Lords will, was more fitly expressed in the third person: because the Lord would no more in like manner as now, deliver the law with his owne mouth. 2. Beside, in the first and second Commandement, the Lord useth the first person, Thou shalt have no other Gods before mee, and I am the Lord thy God, a jealous God. 3. And further, it is observed to be an Helbraisme, and an usuall phrase in Scripture, that the Lord speaketh of himselfe, Tanquam de aliquo tertio: As of some third person, as chap. 19.11. The Lord himselfe saith to Moses, The third day will the Lord come downe. Lippom.

4. This further was admirable, that all the whole host of Israel containing so many hundred thousand, did at once heare and understand the voice, wherein God spake unto them, as Moses witnesseth, Deut. 4.10. Jehovah spake unto you out of the middest of the fire, and you heard the voice of the words. I remember, that Chrysostome in a certaine homily, did gesse there were about 100. thousand, that were then present to heare him: but in the campe of Israel, there being 600000. men of warre above twenty, beside the young and old, women and strangers, which might well make five times so many, toward 30. hundred thousand, as Tostatus and others conjecture; it was a wonderfull and strange thing, that one voice should be heard of them all: as Iosephus saith, Omnes audiebant vocem sublimi descendentem, ut nemo non intelligeret: All heard the voice that came downe from above, so that there was none, which did not understand: and as Cajetan saith, Proportionata erat, tam propinquis, quàm distantibus auditoribus: The voice was so proportioned, that all heard, both neere, and further off. And therefore it is called, A great voice, Deut. 5.22.

5. And where it is said, All these words, the meaning is, the ten Commandements only, to the 18. verse, of this twenty chapter: for all the Judicials and Ceremonials following, were not uttered by the voice of the trumpet, but delivered to Moses. Tostat. And these words were spoken in this order here set downe: and as they were afterward graven in the two tables of stone: Moses doth not set them downe altogether after the same manner, Deut. 5. which hee doth as an interpreter and expounder of the law. Iun.

QUEST. VIII. Why it pleased God himselfe to speake to his people, in the giving of the law.

NOW it pleased God himselfe, to pronounce this law in the hearing of the people, for these reasons: 1. To win the more authority unto his Commandements, that they should not contemne and despise them afterward. Ferus. As Moses afterward rendreth this reason, vers. 2. That his feare may bee before you, that you sinne not. Burgens. 2. That they might afterward give more credit unto Moses, the Lord speakling unto him in the hearing of the people: So the Lord himselfe saith, Loe I come unto thee in a thicke cloud, that the people may heare whiles I talke with thee, and that they may beleieve thee for ever, chap. 19.9. 3. That the people might know, that the Lord was their Lawgiver: that he and none other did prescribe them Lawes; and that to him, and none other they should yeeld obedience. 4. The people hereby had experience of Gods mercy, that vouchsafed to speake unto mortall men: as they themselves confesse: Wee have seene this day, that God talketh with man, and he liveth, Deut. 5.24. Burgens.

QUEST. IX. Of the division of the Morall law.

NOW the Morall law is first divided according to the subject and matter into two tables: the first comprehending those precepts, which concerne the worship of God, in the foure first Commandements: the second, those which command the duties to our neighbour. This division is warranted by our blessed Saviour, Matth. 22.37. dividing the law into two generall or great Commandements: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, &c. This is the first, and the great Commandement, and the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thy selfe. Simler. And the reason of this division is: that by this order in setting our duty toward God, before our duty toward our neighbour, the greatnesse and eminencie of the one over the other should be manifest, according to the Apostles rule: It is better to obey God, than man, Act. 4.19. And therefore our blessed Saviour calleth the first the great Commandement. Vrsin. Iosephus then is deceived, who putteth five Commandements to the first table, making the fift Commandement, of honouring the parents, one of them. But beside the former reason, that the precepts onely commanding our duty toward God, belong to the first table, S. Paul convinceth him: who calleth the fift Commandement, the first with promise, Ephes. 6.2. meaning the first of the second table: but in Iosephus opinion it should be the last of the first table. Simler. Another reason of this division of the tables, in setting the precepts first, which prescribe our duty toward God, is, to teach us, that no morall or civill duties, as of justice, chastity, sobriety are pleasing unto God, if they do not proceed from faith, and from an heart settled aright in the true worship of God. And therefore those glorious outward workes among the Hea|then, of justice, fortitude, temperance, were not true vertues before God, because they proceeded not from the knowledge and feare of God.

2. Another division of the law is into the severall particular parts, whereof it consisteth, that is, ten Commandements: therefore called ten words, Exod.34.28. and Deut. 4.13. which are so many, not because God delighteth in that number, but because of the summe and argument of the things therein contained, which are necessarily drawne to so many heads: nothing being either omitted, or superfluously added. Vrsin.

3. The law further, in respect of the matter of the particular precepts, is divided thus: that generally in the morall law is contained the worship of God, and the same, either immediate, or mediate. The immediate which directly concerneth God, is either internall, both, who is to be worshipped, prescribed in the first Commandement: and after what manner, with spirituall worship, in the second: or externall, which is either private, in not prophaning Gods name, precept 3. or publike, in the sanctifying of the Sabbath, precept 4. The mediate service of God, which indirectly is referred to him, but directly and properly concerneth our neighbour, is likewise either externall, which consisteth either in speci•ll offices, as of the mutuall duties betweene superiours and inferiours, precept 5. or generall toward all sorts of men: as in the preserving of our neighbours life, precept 6. of his chastity, precept 7. of his goods, precept 8. of the truth precept 9. The internall, is in the rectifying our very desires and inward affections toward our neighbours, precept 10. Vrsin. Which subdivision is very apt and fit: sa•ing that hee maketh all the law but one great Commandement, the worship of God, whereas our Saviour divideth it into two: which di|vision of necessity must be received.

Some concurring with Vrsinus in the subdivision of the first table, doe otherwise distribute the second, in this manner: it commandeth either speciall duties of some certaine callings in the 5. or generall in the rest, and that either in respect of our neighbour in the 6, 7, 8, 9. or of God, who knoweth the heart, and so the very inward concupiscence is forbidden in the 10. So Pelacherus, Pelargus.

Iunius in his Analysis somewhat differeth: the first table he subdivideth thus: that it prescribeth first the worship of God, who is to be worshipped, in the first, and after what manner, in the second. 2. The profession of this worship, in the third. 3. The meanes belonging to the worship of God, in the sanctifying of the Sabbath, and the religious exercises thereof. The second table he likewise divideth thus: into speciall duties, in the 5. common duties, in the 6, 7, 8, 9. and into the roote and spring of all, the concupiscence of the heart, in the 10.

Now of all these divisions, I have made choice to follow Vrsinus, and Pelatherus in the first, and Iunius in the second table: as is set downe before in the method and argument of the chapter.

QUEST. X. Whether foure Commandements, or three only belong to the first table.

IT followeth, as we have seene the division of the whole law, and of the number of the precepts in generall, so to consider of the number of the particular commandements to be assigned unto each table. The opinion of the Romanists is, that there are but three Commandements to the first table, putting the two first into one, and seven to the second, dividing the last, Thou shalt not covet, into two. So Tostat. quaest. 2. Ferus. with others: and of this opinion is Augustine, quaest. 71. in Exod.

Some other doe make five Commandements in each table, as Iosephus lib. 3. de Antiquit. cap. 6. But this opinion is confuted before. And beside, Iosephus reason is nothing: for he thinketh, that the two tables, being written both within and without, that two Commandements and an halfe were written of a side: for the foure first Commandements will take up more roome and space in writing, than all the six of the second table.

This opinion is ascribed to Hesychius in his Commentary upon Leviticus: that rejecting the fourth Commandement of the Sabbath, yet he maketh foure in the first table, and six in the second: but if the fourth Commandement be excepted, there will bee but nine in all: for these Commandements, as they were delivered here by the Lord himselfe, are called the ten words, Exod. 32. 28.

The common and received opinion is, that foure Commandements, teaching our duty toward God, are to be referred to the first table, and six to the last. So Origen. hom. 8. in Exod. Nazianzen in Carmin. Chrys. hom. 49. in Matth. Oper. imperfect. Zonaras, tom. 1. Hieron. in cap. 6. ad Ephes. And Ambrose upon the same place. Sulpitius Severus lib. 1. histor. sacra. Ex Simler. Vrsin. Procopius also holdeth this precept, Thou shalt make to thy selfe no graven image, to be the second. So also Rupertus lib. 3. cap. 32.

Now the reasons to strengthen this opinion against the first, which the Romanists follow, are these: 1. Because those precepts which differ in sense and matter, are divers, and not one: such are the first, Thou shalt have no other Gods. &c. and the second, Thou shalt make no graven image: for one may offend in the first, as they which worship the Sunne and Moone, and yet make no graven image: and some may transgresse in the second, and not in the first, as the Romanists themselves, which worship graven images, and yet we will not thinke so hardly of them, that professedly they would make other Gods. So then the matter of these two Commandements being divers, as the first shewing, who, and none other is to be worshipped, the second in what manner; they must be two precepts, and not one. 2. The distinction which Moses maketh is to be observed: the last Commandement of not coveting the neighbours house and wife, are joynd in one verse, as shewing but one Commandement: but these two are severed in two verses, which sheweth a division and distinction of the precepts; the matter also differing: for otherwise in the fourth Commandement there are divers verses but the agreement in the matter sheweth that they all belong un|to one precept. 3. The last Commandement, which they divide into two, shall be proved afterward, when we come to that place, to be but one whole and entire Commandement: and this one reason shall suffice in this place, because Moses repeating this last precept, Deut. 5.21. doth put in the first place, Thou shalt we covet thy neighbours wife, which is here placed in the second: so that if they were not all one Commande|ment, it would be uncertaine, which should goe before the other.

As for the reasons of the contrary opinion, they are of no value: Augustine would have but three pre|cepts in the first table, to expresse the Trinity: but the beleefe of the Trinity is commanded in the first precept directly, and therefore need not bee insinuated in the number: Another reason is, because man oweth three things unto God, fidelitatem, reverentiam, cultum: fidelity, reverence, worship. Lyra•. As though worship also includeth not reverence. Ferus maketh other three: the first precept requireth us to worship God in heart, the second to confesse him with the mouth; the third to acknowledge him in our workes. All this being acknowledged, that this must bee yeelded unto God: yet another pre|cept must of necessity goe before, as the foundation of the rest, that wee must acknowledge but one onely true God.

QUEST. XI. Whether all Morall precepts, as of loving of God, and our neighbour be reduced to the Decalogue.

NExT followeth to bee considered, whether all Morall duties, may bee reduced unto these ten Com|mandements. 1. It will be objected, that they are not, because there is no mention made in the De|calogue, of the love of God and our neighbour: therefore all Morall precepts are not thither referred. To this 1. Thomas answereth, that these precepts are written in the heart by the law of nature, that God, and our neighbour are to bee loved: and therefore they needed not to bee given in precept. Contra. By the same reason then, they needed not to be mentioned in Scripture at all, if they were so manifest by the law of nature: yea the grounds of all the Morall precepts, are printed in our nature, and yet the Lord thought it necessary to write them in his law. 2. Burgensis answereth thus, that like as in speculative artes and sciences, they use to proceed from knowne and manifest conclusions and principles, to those which are more obscure: So the Lord propoundeth his law, in the easiest and plainest precepts, as in the second Commandement, It is easier to abstaine from idolatry, than from other kindes of superstition: and in the sixth, a man will abhor murder, which cannot so soone decline all other wrongs and injuries: These pre|cepts of loving God above all, and our neighbour as our selfe, because they were hard and difficult, the Lord would not propound them at the first to a rude and ignorant people; but reserved them till another time, when the people were growne more able and strong: as in that 40. yeere in the wilderness; then Moses beginneth to explaine this law, and exhorteth them to feare and serve God. Sic Burgensis. addit. 1. ad cap. 20.

Contra. 1. But this is cleane contrary, for generall precepts are more easily conceived, and condescen|ded unto, than particular: Aske an Idolater if hee love God, hee will not deny it: The Romanists, that worship Images, would thinke great scorne to bee asked that question, whether they love God: So an adulterer, an usurer, an extortioner, in generall will confesse that they love their neighbour, yet doe erre in the particular. 2. Neither did Moses deferre these generall precepts so long: for in this chapter, vers. 20. he speaketh of the feare of God: and chap. 23.25. of serving of God, 3. Burgensis hath another answer, that in the first Commandement, (which is indeed the second) Non praetermisit facere mentionem de dilectione Dei: Hee omitted not to make mention of the love of God: as vers. 6. Showing mercy unto thousands in them that love mee, &c. Contra.

But this is no part of the precept: it is a promise made affirmatively and positively to those that love God: it is not set downe by way of bidding, and commanding, Thou shalt love God. 4. Wherefore I preferre here the answer of Tostatus, that these two generall precepts, though they are not put in these very words among the precepts, Thou shalt love God above all, and thy neighbour as thy selfe, yet they are reduced unto them: Non ut conclusiones ad principia, &c. not as conclusions are reduced to their principles and premisses, but as principles are referred to the conclusions, for these two are as two knowne principles: Ex quibus inferuntur particulatim omnia praeceptae decalogi, out of the which are inferred in particular, all the precepts of the Decalogue. Tostat. quest. 33. for a man can performe none of the foure first Commandements, but he must needs love God: he cannot take him to be the only God, abhorre idolatry, reverence his name, keepe his Sabbathes, if the love of God bee not in him: Neither can one observe the precepts of the second Table, as not to kill, steale, beare false witnesse, unlesse he love his neighbour. Therefore to these two, as the heads and grounds of the rest, doth our Saviour reduce all the Commandements, Matth. 22.37, 38.

QUEST. XII. Of generall rules to be observed in expounding the Commandements.

NOW further, there are certaine generall rules, which must be observed in the exposition and interpretation of the law.

1. The Decalogue must be understood, according to the more ample and full declaration thereof, set forth in the rest of the Scriptures, in the writings of the Prophets and Apostles: as who are understood by the name of parents in the fifth, how many wayes one may be said to kill, &c. Vrsin. Pelarg.

2. The Decalogue must be taken to comprehend, as well internall, as externall duties, as our Saviour expoundeth, Matth. 5. Vrsin.

3. The end and scope of the precept, must be considered, if we will aright understand: as wherefore gra|ven Images are forbidden to be made, not to the end to worship them: and in the like.

4. The precepts of the second Table must give place to the precepts of the first, if the Commandements of the one and other, be compared in the same degree: as it were better not to honour our parents, than to dishonour God. But the great breaches of the second Table must not give way to the least in the first: as we must not suffer our brother to perish, rather than upon the Sabbath to breake the rest, to fetch him out of some pit, or present danger. Vrsin.

5. Every negative includeth an affirmative, and on the contrary, as thou shalt worship no other Gods; therefore it followeth, thou shalt worship the true God: thou shalt not kill, or take away thy brothers life; therefore thou art commanded to preserve it. So the affirmative is, thou shalt honour thy parents, the negative is included, thou shalt not dishonour them. Vrsin. Simler.

6. Where one kinde is forbidden by a Synecdoche, the rest of that sort also are prohibited: as in adul|tery, is comprehended all unlawfull lust, in murther, all unjust vexations and wrongs: So the generall in|cludeth the particular, one kinde draweth with it another: in the effects, we must understand the causes, in the relative, the correlative. Vrsin. Simler: as Augustine saith in the 7. precept, Thou shalt not steale: A parte totum intelligi voluit, He would have understood the whole by the part, quaest. 71. in Exod.

7. Augustine also hath another rule: Vbi honoratio exprimitur; veluti masculinus, &c. Where the more honourable party is expressed, as the male, let the women also understand, that the precept concerneth her: As in the eight Commandement, the man is forbidden to play the adulterer, for the Hebrew word is put in the Masculine; but the woman also is included: she must not be an adulteresse. Augustine ibid.

QUEST. XIII. Why the Commandements are propounded negatively.

MOST of the Commandements are propounded negatively, for these reasons: 1. Because negatives in forbidding evill to be done are more generall: for it is never lawfull to doe evill: but in doing of good, time, person, and place must be considered. 2. Because the first worke of true repentance in us, is to depart from evill, and therefore the Commandements are expressed with a negative, that wee should first there begin. Iun. in Analys. 3. The law is thus commanded by way of prohibition, specially to bridle and restraints the evill, for the Apostle saith, The law is not given to a righteous man, but to the lawlesse, and disobedient, 1. Tim. 1.9. As first, the husbandman will seek to pluck up the weeds in his garden, before he will set good plants. Rupert. lib.3. in Exod. cap. 31. 4. Praeceptum veniens invenit nos peccatores: The Com/mandement comming, found us sinners: therefore the Lord in giving the law, respected the present state of the people, as he found them, and frameth his law accordingly, in forbidding of sinne. Ferus. 5. Because a negative is more vehement, and urgeth more, and leaveth no evasion: as in the first Commandement, Thou shalt have no other Gods: If it had beene propounded affirmatively, thou shalt worship one God, the Sama|ritanes might have kept this precept, and yet they worshipped other Gods beside. Ferus.

QUEST. XIV. Of the speciall manner of accenting and writing, observed in the Decalogue, more than in any part of the Scripture beside.

HERE it shall not be amisse, briefly to touch that singular observation of learned Iunius, concerning the manner of writing, accenting, and pronouncing the Decalogue, which is peculiar unto this Scripture, more than to any other beside: for whereas ordinarily, every word hath but one accent in the originall: Every word in the Decalogue, and the preface thereunto, from verse 2. to verse 18. the 7.12. and 17. verses only excepted, have a double accent, one serving for the accenting and prolation of the word, the other shewing the conjunction and coherence of the matter: As to give hereof an example in the second verse: the first word anochi hath in the last syllable, above the head the accent tiphra, and under, munach: Iehovah, the second word hath only munach, under the last syllable, but it serveth instead of two, zakeph above, and tiphra, below: the third word, hath, atnach below, and zakeph the lesse above: the fourth, hath darga, beneath, and makkaph on the side: The fifth hath in the third syllable, thebir, and kadmah. The sixth hath kadmah above, and merca beneath: the seventh hath tipher beneath, and geresh above: the eighth hath beneath merca, and munach: the last word in the verse, hath rebiah above, and silluk beneath: And the like may be observed in all the other verses; saving the three before excepted, the 7.12.17. The reason thereof is this, because these three verses have no dependance of the other: but the 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. containning the two first Commandements, have some similitude and coherence together: So have the 9, 10, 11. which all belong to the fourth Commandement: likewise, the 13, 14, 15, 16. containing the 6, 7, 8, 9. Commandements, which all concerne the generall duties, to be performed to all sorts of men: whereas the 5. Commandement in the 12. verse prescribeth speciall duties toward our superiours. Iunius in Analys.

QUEST. XV. Why this preamble is set before, I am Iehovah thy God.

Vers. 2. I Am Iehovah thy God. 1. This is the preface or preamble to the Commandements, as is before shewed, quest. 1. which sheweth both what right the Lord had to injoyne lawes unto his people, and why they were bound to obey: it consisteth of three arguments, taken, from the Majesty of God, hee is Iehovah: from the grace of the covenant, thy God: and from the benefit of their deliverance out of Egypt. Iun. 2. Iehovah is a name taken from his essence: signifying that hee hath his being of himselfe, and that all things have their being from him. Elohim is a word shewing his power and omnipotencie, that as this name being sometime given unto Angels, and great men in earth, sheweth a kinde of competent power according to their nature and place: so being given unto God, it insinuateth his absolute and unlimited power in heaven and in earth. Simler. 3. These two titles given unto God: Iehovah, Elohim, the one signifieth his nature, Iehovah, the other his excellence, Elohim, God. But Tostatus will have, God to signifie his nature, and Iehovah his excellency: but he is deceived herein, because he followeth the Latine text, which translateth Iehovah, Dominus, Lord: whereas Iehovah doth not betoken his Lordship, and dominion, but his eternall essence and being: in which sense hee calleth himselfe Eheje, I am, Exod. 3.14. Then like as men are described by two names, one of their nature, the other of their dignity; as when we say, Iacobus Rex: King Iames: the one sheweth his naturall state and condition, the other his dignity: So the Lord here doth give himselfe two names, one expressing his nature, the other his prerogative and excellency. And in that he is called God, it is more than if any other attribute, as just, wise, mercifull, nay if all his attributes were given him together: for all these are comprehended in the name God: Sunt aliquid de perfectionibus latentibus in illo pelago infiniti, &c. For all these titles and epithites, are but a part of those perfections, which lye hid in this great Sea, imported by the name, God. Tostat. qu. 2. 4. Hee is Deus per creationem, God by right of creation as well of the Israelites, as of all other people in the world: but Tuus per specialem appropriationem: Thy God by speciall appropriation. Lryan. He was their speciall God, both because, Deus specialiter accepit hanc gentem ad se: had specially taken this nation to himselfe: and for that, specialiter ipsi susceperunt cum Deum colendum: they specially tooke him to be their God to worsh^p. Tostat. quaest. 2.

Page 271

QUEST. XVI. Why their deliverance out of Egypt is here mentioned.

Vers. 2. OVt of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondmen. 1. Oleaster taketh it literally, that the Israelites, in Egypt, were put into houses with slaves and bondmen, and not with free men. But the Israelites did inhabite together, and were not alwayes as slaves kept in prison: therefore Egypt it selfe is by a metaphor compared unto a prison house, or house of bondmen: for as they used their captives and slaves by day to grinde in their mills, Exodus 11.5. as the Philistims served Sampson, Iudg. 16.21. and in the night shut them up in dungeons, and prisons, chap. 12.29. So the Israelites thorowout all Egypt had beene kept in miserable bondage, chap. 1.11. So that all Egypt was as a prison house, or house of bondmen unto them. Iun. 2. This their deliverance out of Egypt was worthy to be remembred: First, because they were delivered from so cruell bondage: in which respect it is called, the iron furnace of Egypt, Deut. 4.20. Secondly, because such a great multitude were partakers of it. Thirdly, it was lately done, and yet fresh in their memories, and therefore it ought to move them the more. Tostat. quaest. 2. Beside, in this their deliverance the Lord shewed his great love to his people, and his great power in doing such wonderfull workes in Egypt for their cause, as were never seene in the world before. Simler. 3. God maketh mention of this deliverance out of Egypt, because it was lately performed: for the Lord useth especially to remember those benefits which were neerest and new, rather than those which were remotest and furthest off. As in Abrahams time, he was called the most high God, Creator or possessor of heaven and earth, Gen. 14.19. Afterward, when he had revealed himselfe to the Fathers, he is named the God of Abraham, Izhak, and Iacob, Gen. 28.13. Then after the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt, the Lord calleth himselfe by that. In the time of the Prophets, and after, when Israel was redeemed out of the captivity of Babylon, the Lord stileth himselfe by memoriall of that benefit, as the Prophet Jeremy saith, Behold the day is come, saith the Lord, that it shall be no more said, the Lord liveth, which brought the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt: but the Lord liveth that brought the children of Israel out of the land of the North, Jerem. 16.14, 15. And after our Saviour Christ was come, the Redeemer of mankinde, then the Lord is called the Father of our Lord Iesus Christ. Lippom. 4. This reason taken from their corporall redemption, though it concerneth not us: yet we are more strongly bound to obedience, by our spirituall redemption purchased by our Lord and Saviour Christ Iesus: as Origene excellently noteth; Ergo dicitur & tibi qui per Iesum Christum existi de Aegypto, & de domo servitutis •eductus es; non erunt tibi dii alieni praeter me: Therefore it is said unto thee, which through Iesus Christ art come out of Egypt, and <◇> brought out of the house of bondage; thou shalt not have other Gods beside me.

OF THE TEN COMMANDEMENTS IN PARTICULAR.

Of the first Commandement.

1. Questions upon the first Commandement.

QUEST. I. Whether it is better read strange Gods, or other Gods.

1. Thou shalt have no strange Gods. 1. Oleaster thinketh it better here to expound ach •rim, other: as it is taken, Iob 31.10. Let other men bow downe upon her: and then the meaning is this, that we should not acknowledge any other God beside the Lord that made heaven and earth. But seeing the word acherim, signifieth also strange: it is so better translated strange Gods; because there are no other Gods beside the Lord: and in other places, in stead of acherim, another word is used, hanechar, strange: as Sa/muel saith, Put away strange Gods from among you, 1. Sam. 7.3. 2. The Scripture here speaketh < in non-Latin alphabet >, according to mens opinion, not that there were indeed any Gods beside the Lord, but because they were so reputed and taken in the world. Iun. 3. So they are called Gods, because they counted them so, which wor|shipped them: and strange, quia non sunt illi, qui coli debebant: because they are not such, as ought to be wor|shipped. Tostat. quaest. 3. 4. The words in the originall are: strange Gods shall not be to thee: which the Latine translateth, non habebis, thou shalt not have: which also is our English phrase: which signifieth, that we must make no account or estimation of any other God, beside the Lord: Neminem estimabis Deum, &c. Thou shalt esteeme none to be God, but the Lord that created heaven and earth. Rupert. Habetur Deus mente: We have God, and none other in our minde, when wee acknowledge no God beside him: in our affection, when our love is toward him: in our will, when we obey him. Marbach.

QUEST. II. Why they are called strange Gods.

Strange Gods. 1. Some thinke they are called strange Gods, qui à Deo vero impediunt, because they doe hinder, alienate and estrange us from obeying and serving of the true God. Pellican. And therefore R. Salomon thinketh that all kind of idolatry is here forbidden, whether it be with image, or without image, because it estrangeth from God. But all imagery and idolatry is forbidden in the next Commandement. 2. Some thinke they are called strange Gods, because they are, alieni à rerum natura: strange and not to be found in the nature of things: as when they make images of compounded and mixed shapes: as they pictured Iuppiter Ammon in Egypt with a mans body, and a Rammes head: there being no such thing in nature: Tostat. Lyrar. But this is too strict, and but one particular branch of idolatry: and the speciall prohibition of all kinde of graven images followeth afterward. 3. Therefore they are called strange, both because they were worshipped among strange people: Oleaster: as Iunius well translateth, Gen. 35.2. Put away (saith Iakob) deos alieni (populi) the gods of strange people: which word (people) must bee supplied: for Elohim, Gods, is in the plurall, and hanechar, strange, in the singular, and so cannot agree as the substantive, and adjective. As in respect of the strange people that worshipped them, they are called strange Gods: so also in regard of that which was worshipped; because they are not that, which ought to bee worshipped, they are called strange. Tostat. as before qu. 1.

QUEST. III. Whether any kinde of externall idolatry be forbidden in the first Commandement.

Whereas then there are two kindes of idolatry, one internall and spirituall in the mind, another externall in the adoration of some Image or Idoll: 1. Some thinke that all kinde of idolatry both internall and externall is here forbidden: as R. Salomon cited before: but then the next prohibition, Thou shalt make thee no graven image, should be superfluous. 2. Some make this distinction of idolatry: there is one kinde, Cum professione colitur alius Deus: When professedly another God is worshipped: and this is the most grosse idolatry, and properly belongeth to this Commandement. There is another, when another God is not professedly worshipped: but the true God, after a false manner, which is forbidden in the second Commandement. Vrsiu. But the same matter or subject must belong unto the same precept: and all manner of Idols whatsoever, or similitudes of any thing made to worship, are in generall words forbidden in the second precept. 3. Therefore I preferre here their opinion, which thinke that the spirituall and internall worship of God is properly commanded here, and the contrary forbidden. Here such idolatry is forbidden, which was committed without any images or Idols: as Varro testifieth how that the Romanes worshipped the goddess Vesta without any image: only they set fire in the Temple of Vesta: for they held Vesta to be the fire. Tostat. So also Procopius saith, that the first Commandement concerneth such invisible powers: quas divinis honoribus nullis positis idolis prosequuntur: which they prosecuted with divine honour, without any Idols. Hereunto subscribeth Calvin: Nec dubium est, quin istis verbis comprehendatur interior Dei cultus, &c. There is no doubt, but the internall worship of God is comprehended in these words, seeing this precept differeth from the next, wherein externall idolatry is forbidden.

QUEST. IV. Of the meaning of these words, Before me.

Vers. 3. BEfore my face. 1. Some doe understand it, as though the Lord should say, you shall preferre no Gods before me: make them superiours unto me, or set them above me: for so the preposition ghal signifieth, super, above. But this were to give way unto their superstition, which received other inferiour Gods besides the Lord: whereas the Lord commandeth none to be acknowledged at all for God, beside himselfe. 2. Cajetane thus understandeth, super facies: upon my face; tanquam tegens facies Dei, as covering the face of God. For when any of Gods divine properties, or attributes, as of wisdom, justice, providence are given unto any other, the Lords face is as it were covered, and his goodnesse obscured. But this may seeme to any man to be too curious. 3. Some interpret thus: against my face, that is, in despite of me, to provoke mine indignation: as if the wife should commit adultery, inspectante marite, while her husband looketh on: Piscat. But this sense onely sheweth the indignity, and injury committed against God herein, it comprehendeth not all. 4. Oleaster saith, mecum, with mee, that is, in my Temple: but it was not lawfull for them, no not in their hearts, nor privatly to acknowledge any other God. 5. The best reading therefore is, before me, that is, in my presence: neither publicly, nor in the heart, for wheresoever it be, there is the presence and face of God. Iun. The Chaldee and Septuagint reade, praeter me: beside mee, in the same sense: but they doe not expresse the word in the originall. And further, this sense is indulged, that whereas they had now received the Lord to be their God, and he had manifested himselfe among them, they could not, now as in the sight of God, admit of any other. The case of the Gentiles was otherwise: for though they worshipped other Gods, yet it was not coram facie Dei, quae illis fuit incognita; before the face of God, which to them was unknowne, Calvin. And thus much in effect is declared afterward, vers. 23. Thou shalt not make with me Gods of gold, &c. Si me in Deum habetis, non potestis habere alium: If you will have me for your God, you cannot have another, QUEST. V. What reasons ought chiefly to move us to acknowledge the Lord only to be our God.

HEre may be added the reasons, which ought to move us to acknowledge the Lord Creator of heaven and earth to be our God: 1. The first is taken from his dignity and excellency, and great glory, which is due unto him. The Lord himselfe saith, Isai. 42.8. My glory will I not give unto another. This honour therefore is of right due, peculiar and proper unto God, to be acknowledged to be the only Lord: there|fore they rob God of his honour, that worship any other God. 2. The second reason is from the great be|nefits, which we have received of the Lord: hee hath created us, and redeemed us, and given us all things needfull for our bodies and soules. 3. Because in baptisme wee have vowed obedience and service unto God, and to become his servants, and to renounce all other Gods whatsoever. 4. The Lord hath froed and redeemed us from the miserable thraldome of sinne and Satan, which was more grievous than the capti|vity of Egypt and Babylon: and hath called us to his service, whose yoke is easie, and his burthen light. This is the fourth reason: Ex dominii diabolici gravitate: From the heavinesse of the Devils thraldome. 5. The fift is, ex pramii sui muneris immensitate, from the infinite greatnesse of his reward, who hath not promised unto us an earthly Canaan, a land flowing with milke and honey, as to the Israelites, but the everlasting kingdome of heaven. Ex Thoma 2.2. quaest. 122. ar. 2. ad. 3.

2. Doctrines observed out of the first Commandement.

1. Doct. Of the particular contents of the first Commandement.

THE contents of this Commandement, which prescribeth the true worship and acknowledgement of God, and forbiddeth the contrary, are by Moses himselfe, the best Interpreter of the law, reduced to these three heads: To love the Lord thy God, with all thy heart, with all thy soule, with all thy might, Deut. 6.5. Monte, affectu, viribus, with our minde, our affection, our strength: In every one of these three shall be briefly shewed, the duties, which are commanded, and the vices forbidden.

First, in the minde and understanding, is commanded here the true confession and acknowledgement in our hearts of the only God: as our Saviour saith, This is life eternall, that they know thee to be the only very God, and whom thou hast sent Iesus Christ, Ioh. 17.3.

Against this duty, the offences and transgressions are these:

1. Ignorance of God, which is of two sorts: either simple ignorance, such as was that of the disciples of Ephesus, that did not know whether there were any holy Ghost or no, Act. 19.2. or affected and wilfull ignorance, as Psal. 14.1. The foole hath said in his heart, there is no God: Such an one was Pharaoh, who said, I know not the Lord: Such are all Atheists, as wicked Diagor••, and Theodorus, that denied there was any God: and Protagoras. with the Machiavellians, and Cotta in Cicero, with the Academikes, which were doubtfull, whether there were any God, or no.

2. They also offend here, which erroneously bring in other Gods: As 1. Some doe worship Devils, as the Apostle saith, That the things which the Gentiles sacrificed, they sacrificed to Devils, 1. Cor. 10.20. Of this sort are all Conjures, Witches, Sorcerers, that make any compact or contract with the Devill. 2. Some among the Heathen worshipped the Sunne, Moone and Starres: As Ierem. 44. the Idolatrous women in Israel, imitating the Gentiles, worshipped the Queene of heaven, as they called the Moone. 3. Some wor|shipped the elements, as the Persians the fire, the Egyptians the water. 4. Some adored men, as Gods, under the names of Iupiter, Mars, Mercury: And the Papists have set up their Saints, whom they invoke, and make their prayers unto: and so rob God of his honour, imparting the glory of the Creator, to the creature. 5. Some have worshipped unreasonable creatures: As the Egyptians a Calfe, an Oxe, Vultures, Crocodiles, the Syrians and Phenicians a Fish: the Persians a Dragon. 6. They which erre concerning the Trinity, whereof see in the end of the 3. doctrine following.

Secondly, God must have our whole heart, and entire affection: as 1. Our love. 2. Feare, and reverence. 3. Affiance, and trust. 4. Thankfulnesse.

1. God is to be loved above all: as our blessed Saviour saith, He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me, Matth. 10.35. Contrary unto this affection of love, are, 1. The naturall enmity of the flesh by nature, against God: as the Apostle saith, The wisdom of the flesh is enmity against God, Rom. 8.6. 2. Selfe love, 2. Tim. 3.2. and the love of earthly things. Vrsi•.

2. We must feare God above all, Deut. 6.13. Thou shalt feare the Lord thy God, and serve him. As we are to love God, because of his mercy, goodnes, and bountifulnesse: so we feare him for his justice and power in punishing of sinne: And this feare bringeth forth reverence, worship, serving and adoring of God: as the Lord saith by the Prophet, If I be a father, where is mine honour? If I bee a master, where is my feare? Malach. 1.6. God therefore is to be honoured as our father, and to be feared as our Lord. Contrary hereunto, is: 1. Carnall security, and casting off the feare of God: as it is in the Psal. 10.11. He saith in his heart, God hath forgotten, he hideth away his face, and will never see. 2. Prophanesse, and irreverence in the presence of God, as in Euthus•, that fell asleepe while Paul preached, Act. 20. 3. Hypocrisie, when men draw neere with their lips, but their heart is farre from God. Simler. 4. Servile feare,* which differeth from true filiall feare▪ in these three respects. 1. In the beginning and cause thereof: the Filiall feare proceedeth from the love of God, whom the children of God are afraid to offend, because he is so gracious and mercifull a Father unto them: but the Servile feare ariseth, from the consideration of the justice and wrath of God.

Page 274

2. In the object they differ: the Filiall feare worketh upon sinne it selfe: the Servile, upon the punishment of sinne. 3. In the fruits and effects: the Filiall feare is joyned with assurance and confidence: the Servile with despaire. Vrsin. 4. As these vices are in the defect, so curiosity is in the other extreme of excesse, when presumptuously any attempteth to search and pry into the secrets of God. Simler.

3. Affiance and confidence followeth, which relieth upon the wisdom, power, and constancy of God, which is accompanied with faith and beliefe, 2. Chron. 20.20. Put your trust in the Lord your God, and yee shall be assured, beleve his Prophets, and ye shall prosper. A fruit and effect of this confidence is prayer: How can they call on him, upon whom they have not beleaved? Rom. 10.14.

Contrary hereunto, are, 1. Incredulity, and want of faith: as Christ comming into his countrey, marvelled at their unbeliefe, Mark. 6.6. 2. Doubtfulnesse, as in Peter, when he would have come to Christ walk|ing upon the water: to whom our blessed Saviour saith, O thou of little faith, wherefore diddest thou doubt? Matth. 14.13. 3. Diffidence and distrust, as in the Courtier, who said, Though God would make windowes in heaven, this thing cannot come to passe, 2. King. 7.2. 4. Despaire, as in Cain, Genes. 4. and in Iudas, that hanged himselfe. 5. Confidence in man, in riches, strength, wisdom, or in any thing but God.

4. Thankfulnesse for benefits received, is also a part of Gods worship, as the Prophet David saith, Psal. 116.12. What shall I render unto the Lord, for all his benefits toward me? This thankfulnesse and acknowledgement of Gods bounty, bringeth forth these two singular effects: First, Humility, that none ascribe ought to himselfe, or his owne worthinesse, but all unto Gods mercy: as Daniel saith, Vnto us ap|pertaineth shame, &c. but compassion is with the Lord, Dan. 9.9. Secondly, Patience in adversity, to be thank|full as well for adverse things, as prosperous, as Iob saith to his wife: Shall wee receive good at the hands of God, and shall we not receive evill? Iob. 2.10.

Contrary hereunto, are: 1. Forgetfulnesse of Gods benefits and Ingratitude, as in Nabal, that considered not who had endued him with riches. 2. Pride, and vaine glory, as in the Pharisie, that stood upon his workes, Luk. 18. as also the Romanists doe, the Pharisies of this age. 3. Impatience, and murmuring against God: as in that wicked messenger, sent from the King, to take off Elisha his head; who said, Behold this evill commeth of the Lord, should I attend on the Lord any longer?

Thirdly, with all our strength we must love God, in the acts and workes of our life, referring all to his glory, Matth. 5.16. Contrary whereunto, is the dishonouring of God by our life, and causing the same thereby to be evill spoken of, as the Apostle chargeth the Jewes, Rom. 2.24.

2. Doct. Of the unity of the Godhead.

NOW out of this first Commandement: Thou shalt have no other Gods before mee, that excellent doctrine is inferred and concluded, concerning the unity of the Godhead: And further, the Scripture elsewhere doth plentifully beare witnesse hereunto, as Deut. 6.4. Heare O Israel, the Lord our God is Lord only: likewise, Isay 44.6. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, I am the first, and I am the last, and beside me, there is no God. Beside the evident testimony of Scripture, Damascen doth thus shew the unity of the Godhead, by demonstration of reason, against those which beleieve not Scripture: 1. Deus perfectus est, &c. God is perfect: Si multos asserimus deos, in multis differentiam contemplari oportet: If we affirme many gods, in many we must needs find a difference: Si autem differentia in eis, ubi perfectio? But if there be a difference among them, where is perfection? For if there be difference in respect of wisdom, goodnesse, vertue, à perfecto deficit, there is a failing in perfection: if there be no difference, but an identitie, there must also needs bee an unitie, in the Godhead. 2. Deus incircumscriptus est, God is incircumscribable, he cannot be circumscribed, defined, or limited to a place: Quomodo, si multi diversi{que} sunt, incircumscripti erunt? &c. But if they bee many and divers, how can they bee incircumscribable? For wheresoever is one, there cannot bee another. 3. Differentia contrarietatem inducit &c. Difference bringeth contrariety, and repugnance: if then the world were governed by many, how can it be, but it should be corrupted, and dissolved? Attenta in his ipsis gubernantibus pugna: considering the strife betweene these governours. To this purpose Damascen lib. 1. de fid. orthodox. cap. 5, 6, 7.

Bernard also thus setteth forth the unity of the Godhead: God is one, but not as the Sunne or Moone is one, because there is not another: But he is Vnus sibi, idem est semper & uno modo: But he is one to him|selfe, the same alwayes, and after the same manner; so is not the Sunne and Moone: Clamat uter{que} se non esse unum sibi, ille motibus, esta defectibus suis: Both of them proclaime, that they are not one and the same with themselves, the one by his motions, the other by the waine, and changes: So Bernard lib. 5. de considerat.

But against the unity of the Godhead, it will be thus objected out of the 82. Psal. vers. 6. I said yee are Gods, and ye are children of the most high. Origen thus answereth, he calleth them, Deos, tanquam à Deo de|itos, &c. Gods, but made Gods by God: Ver• Deus, unus est Deus, caeteris, qui ab ipso creati sunt, contulit nomen istud, non natura, sed gratia: The true God is but one God, unto the rest, which were created, not nature, but grace hath given this name: Origen. in mandat. primum.

That place also of the Apostle will be objected, 1. Cor. 8.5. Though there be that are called Gods, whether in heaven, or in earth, as there be many Gods and many lords, &c.

* To this Cyrillus maketh this answer: Nuda appellatione honorantur; alterius ab ipso existens naturae, &c. They are so called only in name, being of another and divers nature from God, &c. that is, they are so called of those that ignorantly worship them: the Gentiles tearme their Idols Gods, which are none: therefore it followeth in the same place of the Apostle, Yet unto us, there is but one God. Howsoever the Heathen being blinded, have imagined to themselves divers Gods: yet the people of God, to whom the Lord revealeth the truth, acknowledge but one God. Cyril also in the same place, thus answereth touching the other place: Nunquid igitur, qui honorati sumus, ut vocemur Deo, propterea naturae nostrae mensuram ignorabimus? Shall we therefore, which have received this honour to be called Gods, be ignorant of the measure and condition of our nature?

Page 275

3. Doctrin. That the beliefe in the Trinity is commanded in the first precept.

AS this Commandement enjoineth us to beleieve the unity of the Godhead, so therein also is implied a Trinity of persons, the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost, who as one God, are of us to be worshipped: for thus it may be concluded out of this precept. Jehovah the only God, is to be worshipped; but nor the Father onely, but the Sonne, and the holy Ghost are of us to be worshipped: Ergo, the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost are that one God. Simler. So our Saviour saith, Yee beleieve in God, beleieve also in mee, Ioh. 14.1. Christ the Sonne of God, is God, because he is to be beleaved upon. And againe, This is life eternall, that they know thee to be the only very God, and whom thou hast sent Iesus Christ, Ioh. 17.3. God the Father then, and Christ his Sonne, are the only very God.

And that the Sonne of God is to be worshipped with the Father, the Prophet David sheweth, Psal. 2. 11, 12. Serve Iehovah in feare, &c. Kisse the Sonne lest he be angry. In the former verse, whom hee calleth Sonne here, he nameth Jehovah. So wee reade in the words of the Prophet Agur, Prov 30.4. Who hath established all the ends of the world, what is his name, and what is his Sonnes name, if thou canst tell?

Further, that the Spirit of God, is also one God with the Father and Sonne, to be worshipped and glorified, beside plentiful evidence out of the new Testament, which shall not need to be inserted here, because we are in hand with the law of the old Testament; sufficient testimony may be taken from the law, and Prophets: as Gen. 1.1. The Spirit of God moved upon the waters: But God only created the world. So likewise the renovation of the heart, is onely the worke of God, because it is a new creation: as David saith, Create in me a new heart, Psal. 50.10. but this is also the worke of the Spirit: Take not thine holy Spirit from me: ibid. vers. 11. Likewise it is only Gods worke to teach us his will, and to bring us to life eternall: but this is wrought by the Spirit, Psal. 143.10. Teach mee to doe thy will, for thou art my God, let thy good Spirit lead me unto the land of righteousness.

Ambrose very fitly proveth the Spirit to be God, by that place, Iudg. 14.5. where it is said, That the Spirit of the Lord came upon Sampson: But Iud. 16.20. after his lockes were polled, it is also said: Hee knew not that the Lord was departed from him: Hee which came upon him before was the same, that departed from him now; there called the Spirit of the Lord, and here the Lord and Jehovah: therefore the holy Spirit is Lord and Jehovah. Ambros. lib. 2. de Spirit. cap. 2.

Damascen doth thus excellently prove the Trinity by this demonstration: Vnus Deus, non sine Verb est: God being but one, is never without the Word; but this Word hee hath in himselfe begotten of his owne substance, not like unto our word, which hath no substance, but vanisheth in the aire, because the condition of our nature is temporall: But like as our word proceeding from the mind, ne{que} per totum menti idem est, &c. is neither the same with the mind, nor yet altogether divers from it: So is the Sonne unto the Father, which is his Word, the same in substance, but divers in subsistence: Oportet autem & Verbum Spiritum habere: nam & verbum nostrum nequaquam spiritus est expers: But the Word also must have a Spirit, for neither is our word without a spirit: but here is the difference, our spirit is not of the same substance with us, but the drawing in of the aire, for wee are of a compound nature: but the Spirit of the Word, is of the same substance with the Word. To this effect Damascen lib. 1. de fide orthodox. cap. 6.7.

And in the same place he useth another demonstration: Impossible est Deum destitutum esse nativae fecunditatis. &c. It is impossible that God should bee destitute of naturall fecundity: The Lord therefore must needs beget, Sed ex propri substantia generat, but he begetteth out of his owne substance, and that from all eternity: for if the Sonne had not beene from the beginning coexistent with him, of whom hee was begotten, we shall bring in a change of his substance: Nam cum non esset Pater, postea factus est Pater, for so, when he was yet no Father, he afterward should become a Father, &c. Damascen ibid.

Thus out of the first Commandement, both the unity of the Godhead, and the Trinity is concluded: as Bernard thus elegantly inferreth: Quid sibi vult iste, ut ita loquar ine numero numerus? si tria. quomodo non numerus? si unum, ubi numerus? What meaneth this number without a number? if there be three, how can there be but a number? if one, where is the number? But here I have what I may number, and what I may not number: there is one substance, and three persons, &c. Bernard. lib. de considera.

Thus by the unity of nature the error of the Gentiles is abolished, and by the joyning of the Word and the Spirit to the Father, the Jewish opinion is overthrowne: Et ex utraque secta nobis accedit utilitas, ex Iudaica opinione naturae unitas, ex Gentilitia sola personarum discretio: So by either sect wee receive some profit, by the Jewes opinion the unity of nature, by the Gentiles, the discerning and difference of the persons only. Damasc. ibid.

Transgressors then of this Commandement concerning the unity of the Deity, and Trinity of the persons, are 1. They which affirme and hold one God, but deny the three persons: as the Montanists,* and Marcellians in times past, and the Turkes and Jewes now. 2. They which hold not the distinction of three persons only, but the division also of substance, as the Tritheists. The Arrians and Eunomians are of the same sect qui filium Deum confitentur, sed conditum asseverant: which confesse the Sonne to bee God, but yet affirme him to be made: So they bring in another God, contrary to this precept, Thou shalt have no other Gods, &c. Theodoret. 3. They which brought in a quaternian of persons, as Anastasius the Emperour, and the Apollinarians. 4. They also which affirme the three persons to be but three names given unto God in Scripture: and therefore they say that the Father became man, and suffered for us: which are therefore called Patripassians.

1. Confut. That justifying faith is not contained or commanded in the law.

1. BUt although to beleve in the Trinity be commanded in the first precept, to adore and worship the Father, Sonne and holy Ghost, as the only God: yet it followeth not that justifying faith, which properly belongeth to the Gospell, whereby we apprehend Christ and his merits, should be containd and included in the law: therefore we mislike that assertion of Bellarmino, concurring therein with other Romanists, That the Gospell differeth from the law, as a perfect thing from an imperfect: and that the Gospell is contained and included in the law, as the tree in the seed. Bellarmino. de justif. lib. 4. cap. 4. Some Protestants also come somewhat neere this opinion: as Marbachius saith, that they offend against this precept, Qui Christi cognitione carent, quae cognitio, non alia re, quàm fide in Christum constet: Which want the knowledge of Christ, which knowledge consisteth in nothing else, than in faith in Christ. Marbach. Commentar. in hunc locum. Against this opinion, that faith in Christ is not commanded in the Morall law, the reasons follow afterward, but first the question must further be explained.

* 1. First then we are to distinguish of faith: which is of foure kindes or sorts: 1. There is fides initialis, or fundamentalis, the faith of beginnings, or the fundamentall faith: whereof the Apostle speaketh, Hebr. 11.6. That he which commeth unto God, must beleve that God is, &c. And this kinde of faith toward God, the Apostle referreth to the doctrine of beginnings, Heb. 6. 1. This faith apprehendeth onely the being and essence of God: to know him to be the only Lord. 2. There is another faith, called fides miraculorum, the faith of miracles, touched by the Apostle, 1. Cor. 13.2. If I had all faith, so that I could remove mountaines. 3. There is fides historica, an historicall faith, which beleeveth all things to bee true, that are written in the Scriptures: * in which sense, S^r James saith, The Devils beleve and tremble, they beleeve there is a God, and that all is true which the Scripture speaketh of God, of his justice, power, punishing of sinners, rewarding of the righteous. 4. There is beside these a justifying faith, whereof S^r Paul maketh mention; In that I now live in the flesh, I live by faith in the Sonne of God, who hath loved me, and given himselfe for me, Galath. 2.20. This faith is the life of the soule, whereby hee which beleeveth is able in particular to apply unto himselfe the merits of Christs death. Now this is the difference betweene these foure kindes of faith: the first apprehendeth the essence and being of God: the second, the faith of miracles, his power: the third, which is the historicall faith, his truth: the fourth, namely the justifying faith, his mercie. The three first, to beleve God to be, to beleve him to bee omnipotent, to beleve him to be just and true, are included in the first precept, Thou shalt have no other Gods, &c. but not the last: wherein is the error of the Romanists, that make all these kindes of faith the same in substance, differing only in property: which if it were true, then it were possible for them that have the one faith, to have the other, and so Devils also, which in some sort doe beleve, should also be capable of justifying faith. But this matter, that all these kindes of faith are not the same in substance, nor of like nature with the justifying faith, * is shewed elsewhere, whither I referre the Reader.

2. Further, we are to distinguish of the law: for it is taken sometime more largely, either for all the Scriptures of the old Testament: as Luk 16.17. It is more easie that heaven and earth should passe away, than that one title of the law should fall. So Ioh. 15.25. It is written in their law, they have hated mee without a cause: which testimony is found in the Psalmes, Psal. 35.19. or else the law is taken for all the bookes of Moses: and so the Law and Prophets are named together. Matth. 7.12. This is the Law and the Prophets. But the law is sometime taken more strictly for the Morall law, whereof the Apostle speaketh, Rom. 7. I knew not sinne but by the law: and so S^r Paul opposeth the law of workes, to the law of faith, Rom. 3.27. Now as the law is taken generally, either for all the old Scriptures written by the Prophets, or for the writings of Moses, it cannot be denied, but that faith in Jesus Christ, is in this sense both contained and commanded in the law: for of Christ the Lord spake by the mouth of his Prophets, Luk. 1.70. And Moses wrote of Christ: as our Saviour saith, Had yee beleaved Moses, yee would have beleaved me: for Moses wrote of mee, Ioh. 5.45. But as the law is taken strictly for the Morall law, the law of workes, which containeth only the ten words or Commandements, so we deny this justifying faith to bee com|manded in the law.

3. Indirectly, or by way of consequent it will not bee denied, but that this faith also is implied in the law: because we are bound by the law to beleve the Scriptures, and the whole word of God: for this is a part of Gods worship, to beleve his word to be true: and so some define faith: Est certa persuasio, qua assentimur omni verbo Dei nobis tradita: It is a certaine perswasion, whereby wee give assent to all the word of God. Vrsin. And so by this precept wee are bound to receive all the promises and doctrines con|cerning Christ delivered in the old and new Testament. But directly as a part and branch, and so a worke of the law, * wee deny justifying faith to be in this precept, or any other, prescribed or commanded. The reasons are these:

1. The Morall law and the Gospell differ in the very nature and substance: for the one is naturally imprinted in the heart of man, the other is revealed and wrought by grace. The first the Apostle testifieth, where he saith: The Gentiles which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, Rom. 2.14.

Page 277

The other also is witnessed by the same Apostle, Rom. 2.24. We are justified freely by his grace. The argulment then may be framed thus: The morall law is graft in the heart of man by nature: but faith in Christ is not by nature, but by grace above nature: for if it were naturall, all men should have faith, which the Apostle denieth, 2. Thessal. 3.2. Faith then in Christ belongeth not to the law. Therefore it is strange, that Bellarmino confessing in another place, that praecepta decalogi sunt explicationes juris natura: that the pre|cepts of the decalogue are the explications of the law of nature, Lib. 2. de Imaginib. Sanctor. cap. 7. could not inferre hereupon, that the precepts of faith and of the Gospell are no explications of the law of nature, and therefore have no dependance of the morall law. Ambrose useth this very argument: Nemo sub lege fidem constituat, lex enim intra mensuram, ultra mensuram gratia: Let no man place faith in the law: for the law is within the measure (and compasse of nature) but grace is beyond measure. Ambros. in 12. Luc.

2. The effects of the law of works, and the law of faith are divers: for the one worketh feare, the other love and peace, as the Apostle saith: Ye have not received the spirit of bondage to feare againe, but yee have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we crie Abba Father, Rom. 8.17. Again the Apostle saith, The letter killeth, the Spirit giveth life, 2 Cor. 2.6. Thus then the argument standeth: the same thing cannot bee the instrument of contrary things, of life and death, peace and terror, love and feare: for a Fountaine cannot make both salt water and sweet, Iam. 3.12. But the law is the minister of death, of feare and terror: Ergo, not of life and peace, and so consequently not of the faith of the Gospell, which bringeth all these.

3. The same thing doth not both make the wound, and give a plaister to heale it. The law doth shew us our sinne, faith by grace in Christ healeth it: the law reviveth sinne: Without the law sinne is dead, Rom. 7.8. but we are dead to sinne, and alive to God in Iesus Christ our Lord, Rom. 6.11. The same cannot make us both to die unto sinne, and revive sinne: the law doth the one, therefore not the other. So Augustine saith: Ad hoc data est lex, ut vulnera ostenderet peccatorum, qua gratiae benedictione sanaret: Therefore was the law given, that it should shew the wounds of our sinnes, which it should heale by the benediction of grace. August. de poenitent. medic.

4. The Preachers, publishers, and givers of the law and Gospell are divers: The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Iesus Christ, Ioh. 1.17. But if justifying faith were commanded in the law, then grace also should come by the ministrie of Moses, that gave the law. This is Bernards reason, who further inferreth thus: Venit proinde gratia plenus & veritate Dominus noster, &c. Therefore Christ our Lord came full of grace and truth; that what could not bee done by the law, might bee fulfilled by grace. Sermon par. 28.

5. The qualities and conditions of the law and the Gospell are divers, the law promiseth life to him that worketh: Moses thus describeth the righteousness of the law, That the man which doth these things, shall live thereby, Rom. 10.5. But the Gospell requireth not the condition of working, but beleeving, to him that worketh not, but beleeveeth in him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness, Rom. 4.5. If then faith were commanded in the law, to beleeve, should also be a worke of the law: then the Apostles conclusion were in vaine: I conclude that a man is justified by faith, without the works of the law. But if faith be excluded out of the works of the law, then it is not commanded or contained in the law, for then it should be a worke of the law.

2. Further, the invocation of Angels and Saints, which is commonly practised, and stifly maintained in the Church of Rome, is another apparent transgression of this first commandment: because they give a speciall part of the divine worship, which consisteth in prayer, and invocation, unto the creature. First we will see and examine the arguments, produced by the Romanists, in defence of this superstition, and then by other reasons out of the Scriptures convince and confute them.

The Romanists Arguments answered, brought in defence of the invocation of Saints.

1. The Saints doe pray for us: therefore we may and ought to pray them. The antecedent or first part, that the Saints doe pray for us, they would prove by these places of Scripture: Exod. 32.13. Moses thus saith in his prayer, Remember Abraham, Izhak and Iakob thy servants, &c. Ierem. 15.1. Though Moses and Samuel stood before me, yet could not my affection be toward this people. Baruch. 3.4. O Lord God almightie, heare now the prayer of the dead Israelites. 2 Macchab. 14.15. And Onias spake and said, This is a lover of the brethren, who prayeth much for the people, to wit, Ieremias the Prophet of the Lord.

Answ. 1. As for the testimonies cited out of Baruch, and the booke of Macchabees, they prove nothing, because they are no books of Canonically Scripture. 2. The other testimonies are impertinently alleaged: for in the first Moses maketh no mention of the prayers, which Abraham, Izhak and Iakob should make for the people, but of the covenant which the Lord made with them. In the other, of an hypotheticall and conditionall proposition, they make a categorical and absolute affirmation: The text is, If Moses and Samuel stood: they inferre, that Moses and Samuel did stand. Simler. But it may better be answered: that if these were alive among the people to stand before the Lord for them in prayer, &c. as see the like, Ezech. 14.14. Though these three men, Noah, Daniel and Iob were among them, they should deliver but their owne soules by their righteousness. 3. The Saints doe pray unto God by their generall wishes and desires, as wishing that the Kingdome of God were accomplished▪ as Revel. 6.10. The soules under the Altar crie with a loud voyce, saying, How long Lord, &c. doest thou not judge and avenge our blood. But our particular necessities they are ignorant of, and so doe not make particular requests for us: therefore the argument followeth not; they pray by their generall desires for the Church: Ergo, they pray for us in particular. 4. Seeing that the Romanists doe hold, that the Patriarks and Fathers of the old Testament, were in Limbo, which they make a member or part of hell: they doe contradict themselves, in making them mediators and intercessors in heaven.

2. Argum. The Angels, they say, know our affaires and pray for us: As Zachar. 1.12. The Angell of Iehovah answered and said, O Lord of hosts how long wilt thou bee unmercifull to Ierusalem? &c. Therefore it is lawfull to pray to the Angels.

Answ. 1. That the Angels doe report our affaires unto God, and so may make relation of our prayers and words also, as of our other gests and acts unto God as the Lords messengers and ministers, we will not denie: but that they make any particular requests for men, the Scripture no where speaketh, and we are not bound to beleve: the relation of our prayers unto God is one thing, and mediation and intercession is another. 2. That Angell of Iehovah, which prayed for Jerusalem, was the Lord Christ, who maketh intercession for his Church: unto whom the rest of the Angels returne their message, vers. 11. who is al|so called Iehovah, vers. 20. 3. Neither doth it follow, if it could bee proved out of Scripture, that the Angels prayed fo• us, that we are to pray to them: because they are not alwayes present to heare us: and we are forbidden in Scripture to worship them, Revel. 22.9. and therefore to pray unto them, which is a part of divine worship.

3. Argum. The Saints that are living doe one pray for another, much more the Saints being dead, because their charitie is more perfect: and seeing there is a communion of Saints, as of the living▪ so al|so of the dead, which communion being not in faith and hope, whereof there is no more use with them, that are at rest, it remaineth it is in charitie: As therefore we may request the living to pray for us, so we may pray the dead also, to entreate for us.

Answer. 1. The argument followeth not, for the Saints alive doe one know anothers necessitie, so do not the Saints departed this life: Isay 63.16. Abraham is ignorant of us, and Israel knoweth not us: and they might as well inferre thus; The Saints alive doe one instruct and teach another, Ergo, much more the Saints departed. 2. Their charitie is scene, in that they doe in generall long to have us joynd with them in that blessed estate, though in particular, because they know not our wants, they cannot wish our supplie. 3. And though it be granted that this communion is in charitie, this proveth no particular inter|cession made by them for us: but as we in generall give thanks in earth, for their peaceable departure, and deliverance from the miseri•s of this life: So they in generall desire, that we may be partakers of the same blessed rest with them. 4. Wee request the living to pray for us, because they are present with us, but the dead are absent, and heare us not: it may as well be inferred from hence, that we may also consult with the dead, and aske counsell of them: which is directly forbidden, Deut. 18.11.

4. Argum. Absolom could not bee admitted to his fathers presence, till Ioab had mediated for him, and Bethshaba Salomons mother, entreated for Adoniah: So it is necessarie to have mediators to come unto God.

Answer. 1. We have also one sufficient Mediator Christ Jesus, who is able sufficiently to reconcile us unto God. 2. Though many mediators are used in Princes Courts: because either the Prince is ignorant of our affaires, or his affection estranged: yet it is not so with God, who knoweth all things, and the love of Christ toward us exceedeth the love of all other inferiour mediators which men can seeke unto. 3. The example of Bethshaba, is unfitly alleaged, for shee obtained not her suite.

5. Argum. Invocation of Saints is warranted by the Scripture: 1. Gen. 48.16. Iacob saith concerning Iosephs two sonnes: Let my name be named upon them. 2. Iob 5.1. Eliphaz saith to Iob, Call now, if any will answer thee, and to which of the Saints wilt thou turne thee? 3. Praise the Lord in his Saints, Psal. 150.1. 4. Eze•h. 22.30. I sought for a man among them, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before ◇◇ , &c. but I found none.

Answer. 1. Iacob meaneth by that phrase, that they should be called by his name, and counted as his children, as the same phrase is used, Isai. 4.1. seven women shall take hold of one man, and say, &c. Let thy name be called upon us: who will say, that they prayed to their husband? they desire to be called by his name. 2. Though that had beene Eliphaz meaning, that Iob should have made some of the Saints departed, his patrones: yet because Iobs friends maintained an evill cause, and afterward are reprov'd of God for it, all that they say, is not to be justified: but that is not Eliphaz meaning; he speaketh of the Saints and righteous living, to see if Iob could finde among any of them a patron to defend his cause. 3. The place in the Psalm is to be read, Praise God in his Holinesse. Iun. Or in his Sanct^{ari}. Vatab. Neither doth it follow, because God is praised in his Saints, therefore wee are to pray to Saints: as it followeth in the next words, Praise him in the firmament: will they have also the firmament prayed unto. 4. That place in Ezechiel, is understood of men living, not of the dead.

6. Argum. The honour given unto the Saints, redoundeth unto Christ, as he saith, Matth. 25.45. In as much as yee did it, unto one of the least of those, ye did it unto me.

Answ. Our Saviour speaketh of his members living here upon earth, to whom we are to extend our charitie, not of the dead: and of such honour, as is due unto the Saints, not of that which is due unto God, for to give that to any creature, were not to honour, but dishonour God.

7. Argum. Many miracles have beene done, at the tombes and sepulchers of the dead, where prayers are made: therefore God is well pleased, that they should be prayed unto.

Answer. 1. The argument followeth not: so by the touching of Elishaes bones, one that was dead was restored to life: this was to confirme their doctrine and propheticall calling. 2. Many of those miracles are fained, and small credit is to be given unto them. 3. Some of them were wrought by the operation of Satan to deceive: as the Lord warneth his people to take heed of such false Prophets which shew signes, Deut. 13. And S. Paul saith, That Antichrist shall come by the power of Satan, &c. in lying wonders. Among the Gentiles, such miracles and wonders also were wrought. This may suffice for an answer to their reasons. Our arguments follow.

Reasons out of Scripture, disproving the invocation of Saints.

1. There is neither precept nor example extant in Scripture, to warrant the invocation of Saints, the Scripture sendeth us to God: Call upon me in the day of trouble and our Saviour teacheth us to pray to his Father, Our Father. In matters of doctrine, an argument drawne negatively from the Scriptures, doth conclude strongly.

2. The Saints know not our affaires: Abraham is ignorant of us, Isai. 63.16. they are not present to heare us, they are at peace, their soules rest under the Altar, Revelat. 6. they do not know our hearts, therefore they are not to be prayed unto: all these things are requisite in them, to whom we should offer our prayers. But they say, that the Saints in the divine essence, as in a glasse doe behold our affaires. Contra. Whether doe they behold all, or what it pleaseth God to shew them? not the first, for they know not the time of the comming of Christ to judgement: if the second, then God must first be prayed unto, to reveale our affaires unto them: were it not then much better for us to goe the next way unto God?

3. S. Iohn saith, We have an Advocate with the Father, Iesus Christ the righteous, 1 Ioh. 2.8. We need then no other Advocates: for we have greater cause to doubt of the love and inclination of the Saints toward us, than of the love of Christ.

4. Christ biddeth us aske in his name, and promiseth we shall receive, Ioh. 16.24. Then are prayers made to others superfluous: seeing by Christ we are promised to obtaine our requests.

5. There is none other name under heaven, (than Christs) whereby wee must be saved: If we have sal|vation in Christ, then all other good things: It is the Apostles reason: If God gave his Sonne for us, How shall he not with him give us all things also? Rom. 8.32.

6. This invocation of the Saints, maketh a way for superstition and Idolatrie, for so the Heathen did invoke the name of the dead, and place them in the number of the gods, erect Temples and Altars, and consecrate festivall dayes unto them.

7. God onely is to be worshipped; invocation is a part of the divine worship; therefore to bee yeel|ded unto God. They would shift us off here, with a distinction of religious adoration: one which is in the highest degree, and so proper unto God, another inferiour, which may bee yeelded to Angels and Saints.

Contra. In that adoration, which they yeeld unto Saints, they doe the same things, which they offer unto God: as in consecrating of Altars, Temples, Holydayes unto them: and they doe attribute unto them omnipresence, and omniscience, to know all things, and to be every where present, in a manner as they ascribe these things to God. Ex Simler.

Morall Observations upon the first Commandement.

1. Observ. The neglect of the honour and worship of God the cause of calamities in the world.

THis first precept, which commandeth the worship of God, teacheth what is the cause why the Lord punisheth the world with famine, warre, unseasonable weather, scarcitie of the fruits of the earth: even because his worship is neglected, as the Lord saith by his Prophet: Because of my house, that is wast, and you runne every man to his owne house: therefore the heaven over you stayed it selfe from dew, and the earth stayed her fruit, Hag. 1.9. Cyprian to the same purpose thus elegantly writeth: Queris quòd nunc tibi minùs uberes fontes, &c. Thou complainest, that now adayes the fountaines are not so flowing, nor the aire so wholesome, nor the raine so plentifull, nor the earth so fruitfull, &c. Tu enim Deo servis, per quem tibi cuncta deserviunt? tu famularis illi, cujus nutu tibi cuncta famulantur? For doest thou serve God, by whose meanes all things serve thee? Doest thou wait on him, by whose becke all things waite on thee? Cyprian, contra Demetrian. Whereby we are admonished, that when such calamities and judgements are in the world, we should returne to our dutie, and set up the worship of God, and give him the praise: then will hee in mercie returne unto us, as hee saith by his Prophet: Build this house, and I will bee favourable in it, Hag. 1.8.

2. Observ. Not to trust in riches.

AGaine, this precept reproveth them, which put their trust or confidence in any thing beside the Lord: as they doe which put confidence in man, or repose their trust in riches: And therefore the Apostle doubteth not to call the covetous man, an Idolater, Ephes. 5.5. because hee thinketh his life standeth in the abundane of riches: David therefore exhorteth rich men, If riches increase, set not your heart upon them, Psal. 62.11.

3. Observ. Against those that run unto Witches and Soothsayers.

FURther, as in this Commandement, witchcraft and all kinde of sorcerie is forbidden, so also is it a wicked and abominable thing to seeke unto Witches, and Soothsayers, which is condemned by the Prophet Isay 8.19. When they shall say unto you, enquire at them, that have a spirit of divination, and of the Soothsayers, &c. should not a people enquire after their God? from the living to the dead? For herein foolish people offend two wayes, in forsaking God, and running unto such meanes, which cannot helpe them: as the Prophet Ieremie saith, My people have committed two evils, they have forsaken me the fountaine of li/ving waters, to digge them pits, even broken pits, that can hold no water, Ierem. 2.13. So Ahaziah King of Israel sending to Baalzebub for recoverie of his hurt, found therein no helpe; and beside, he shewed his infidelitie, in not seeking unto the God of Israel, 2 King. 1.16.

Vpon the second Commandement.

I. Questions discussed.

QUEST. I. What a graven Image is.

4. THou shalt make thee no graven Image, neither any similitude, &c. 1. Some in stead of sculptile graven, read, an Idoll, and they make this difference betweene an Idoll, and an Image or similitude: An Idoll is a representation of a thing that is not, neither hath any being in the world: as if one should make the Image of a mans bodie, with the head of a dog, or a bodie with two faces: such a shape, Quam o•lus non vidit, sed animus sibi fingit, which the eye hath not seene, but the minde imagineth, they say is an Idoll: a similitude or Image is of such things, as are seene in the world: and to this purpose they alleage that saying of the Apostle, 1 Cor. 8.4. We know, that an Image is nothing in the world. Gloss. ordin. ex Origen. Con/tra. But this place of the Apostle is not rightly applied: for there the Apostle speaketh in generall of all the Idols of the Heathen, of what shape or fashion soever, that they were a• nothing in the world, that is, vaine things, which mens superstitions fancies had devised: which saying of the Apostle, is agreeable to that of Samuel, where the Prophet exhorteth the people to serve the Lord, And not to turne backe after vaine things, which cannot profit you, nor deliver you, 1 Sam. 12.21. And further, the word pesel here used, signifieth any thing that is graven, of pasal to grave. Oleaster. 2. This then is the difference betweene these two words, pesel, a graven Image, and temunah, a similitude or likenesse: the first is a picture proportioned and fashioned out of stone, wood or mettle, and so carved, and graven: a similitude is an Image Picta in plani•superficiebus ex solis coloribus facta, painted in plaine tables, onely made of colours: and these similitudes, though they be evill, yet Non tantum nocent sicut statuæ, doe not so much hurt, as the other resemblances, because these come nearer to •he nature of things living, and so may more easily deceive. Tostat. quast. 3. So also Lyrar. 3. Some Hebrewes thinke, that temunah signifieth any similitude, either of things visible, or invisible: but Oleaster thinketh, tha• the representation of things visible, is rather understood by this word, as Deut. 4.15. it is said, Yee saw no ◇◇ in the day that the Lord spake unto you: the first opinion is more probable, because the invisible spirits, as Angels use to be pictured, as well as visible things.

QUEST. II. What things a similitude must not be made of, to worship.

THat are in heaven above, &c. 1. By this are forbidden first the worshipping of the celestiaall bodies, as the Sunne, * Moone, and the Starres, as is more at large shewed, Deut. 4.19. for the Gentiles worshipped these: whose corruption the Israelites followed: as the Idolatrous Kings of Judah did dedicate houses to the Sunne, 2 King. 23.11. and the superstitious women did offer incense to the Moone, whom they call the Queene of heaven, Ierem44.18. They were not then to make any similitude of these celestiaall bodies, to worship them. Beside, the fowles of the aire are comprehended under those things that are in heaven: as it is explained Deut. 4.17. Or the liknesse of any feathered fowle, that flieth in the aire: for the Gentiles al|so worshipped fowles and birds; as the Eagle which they consecrated to Iupiter; the Dove to Venus, the Peacocke to Iuno, the Raven to Phoebus, the Bat to Minerva: Tostat. quæst. 4. 2. Neither were they to make any likenesse of beasts of the earth to worship them: * for divers of the Heathen did adore the terrestri|all creatures: as the Egyptians made Apis, which was a pide Bull, their god: they also worshipped a Ramme: for so they pictured Libycus Ammon with a Rammes head: and generally the Egyptians wor|shipped all those cattell, which the Hebrewes used to sacrifice unto God, as it appeareth Exod. 8.26. 3. They are forbidden also to make the likenes of any thing in the waters, as fish, or other creeping things, as it is further explained, Deut* 4.18. For the blind Gentiles did worship fishes: for although at the beginning, when Idolatrie was first taken up among the Heathen, they at the first fell not to this grossenesse: because in those first ages, navigation was not so common, and so they had not any great experience of the waters, and fish: yet afterward, the fondnesse of the Heathen brought them also into this foolish vaine, to worship fishes: as the two fishes they made one of the signes in the Zodiak, because Venus and Cupid, two of their gods, when they fled away from Tipheus the giant, did take upon them, as their Poets faine, the shape of two fishes: likewise, they set the Delphine as a signe among the starres, in memorie of Ari•n the Musitians deliverance,  who being cast into the Sea by the mariners that robbed him of his riches, was carried by a Delphine, being allured by his musicke, safe to the land. Ex Tostat. quaest. 4. 4. The waters are said to be under the earth, not in respect onely of the higher parts of the earth, or because it descendeth into the concavities, and hollow places of the earth, cum tamen sit supra terram, being yet of it selfe situate above the earth, as Tostatus: but rather, as Cajetane thinketh, Situs aquarum est terra habitabili inferior, the situation of the waters is indeed lower than the habitable earth: as it is said to be founded upon the seas, Psal. 24.2.

QUEST. III. Of the difference betweene bowing downe and serving.

Vers. 5. Thou shalt not bow downe to them, neither serve them, &c. 1. Cajetane referreth both these unto the externall act of worship, as in bowing the knee, uncovering the head and such like, and offering of sacrifice: which he understandeth under the name of service: Omnis enim oblatio sub servitutis nomine comprehenditur: For all kinde ob oblations are comprehended under the name of service. The internall act of adoration hee would have contained in the former precept, Thou shalt have no other gods, &c. To the same purpose Tostat. quaest. 4. But this being a divers commandement from the former, it forbiddeth all kinde of worship of Idols, both externall and internall: Idolatrie is the proper transgression of this precept, and therefore therein is absolutely and generally condemned. 2. Their opinion then is rather to bee received, that doe thus distinguish these two: the first word shacah, to bow downe, signifieth that outward worship, which is done by the bodie, or the members thereof: the other word ghabad, betokeneth to serve: and it importeth such, service, as the servant yeeldeth to his master. Oleat. which is in the minde. So also Pr•copius: Cultus proficiscitur ex animo, adoratio fit specie quadam cultus: Worship proceedeth from the minde, adoration is in outward shew. He that worshipped Idols, doth also adore them, that is, outwardly: but he that adoreth, or boweth himselfe unto them, that is, by externall gesture, doth not alwayes worship. As a man may be constrained by torment to give outward adoration to Idols, which in his minde he knoweth to be nothing. So it is forbidden, ut nec affectu colas, nec specie adores, that neither thou worship them in affection, nor adore them in shew: Gloss. ordinar. Nec excusatur Marcellinus Papa, qui tamore impulsus exteriori actu obtulit illis thura: Neither is Pope Marcellinus excused, who being compelled by feare, did in externall act offer incense unto them. Cajetane.

QUEST. IV. In what sense the Lord is called a jealous God.

Vers. 5. I Am the Lord thy God, strong, jealous. 1. Origene sheweth well how the Lord is jealous of his people: Zelans dicitur Dominus, quia animum sibi mancipatum non patitur demonibus admisceri: The Lord is said to be jealous, because he will not suffer the soule addicted to his service, to have any societie with devils. Like as a man is jealous over his wife, but that shee may keepe her selfe onely to his love, but for other women hee careth not: So the Lord was jealous over his people: but as for the Gentiles, hee suffered them to continue in Idolatrie, he was not jealous over them. The jealousie therefore of the Lord proceedeth from his love: but if his people, whom he is jealous of, shall commit spirituall fornication still, then the Lord threatneth to cast them off, and to be no more jealous of them: as the Lord saith by his Prophet, *My jealousie shall depart from me, and I will cease, and be no more angrie, Ezeck. 16.42. Zelus itaque charitatem declarat: The zeale therefore of God sheweth his love. Theodoret. 2. Zelare dicitur Deus cum creaturam, quam non vult perire, castigat: God is said to be jealous of his creature, which he doth chastise and correct, that it perish not. Augustin. 3. The Manichees tooke exception to this, that the Lord calleth himselfe a jealous God: which they tooke to be an affection unmeet for God: and so they would deprave the author of the old Testament. To whom Augustine maketh this answer: That like as the wrath of God, non est perturbatio mentis, sed potentia vindicandi: is no perturbation of minde, but his power of revenging: *sic zelum Dei non cruciaum animi, &c. So the zeale of God we understand, not to be a vexation of the minde, such as the husband is tormented with against the wife, or the wife against the husband, sed tranquillissimam sincerissemam{que} justitiam▪ but Gods most sincere and calme justice, &c. And further he excellently sheweth the cause, why the Spirit of God in Scripture useth such termes of God, quae apud homines in vitio poni solent, which among men are taken in the worse part, ut inde admonerentur, &c. that men thereby should be admonished, that even when they speake, as they thinke, with honour of God, they speake not worthily of the divine Majestie: cui honorificum potius silentium, quàm ulla vox humana competeret: to whom honourable silence better agreeth, than any speech of man. 4. Iulian the Apostata also here thus objected: whereas the Lord is said to bee a jealous God; either hee suffered Idols to bee worshipped in the world, then is not Idolatrie to be condemned: or if they were worshipped against his will, then is he not omnipotent.

Answ. 1. A man is jealous of his owne wife onely, and not of another woman: therefore because God had no care of the Gentiles, as of his owne people that were espoused unto him, he is not said to be jealous of them. 2. Hee suffered them to walke after their owne lusts: not because hee could not have hindred them; but the wise Creator permitteth the reasonable creature to follow the instinct of their nature: yet calling some by grace whom he pleaseth, and punishing the rest for abusing the light of nature, who therefore were left inexcusable, because knowing God by the creatures, they yet did not glorifie him as God: as the Apostle sheweth, Rom. 1.21.

QUEST. V. Of the titles which the Lord here giveth himselfe, and wherefore.

I Am the Lord thy God, strong, jealous, &c. The Lord giveth unto himselfe here foure severall titles, the more to inforce this commination following: 1. He calleth himselfe their God, because he had taken them into his speciall protection, and had bestowed many benefits upon them, therefore they ought to love him more than any other. Tostat. 2. He is a strong God, potest se veluno nutu vindicare, which can revenge himselfe at his becke. Lippom. And he is strong, as well to effect his promises to the obedient, as to punish the disobedient. Vrsin. 3 Zelotes est nolens habere consortium in amando: He is jealous, he can abide no partner, in that which he loveth. Tostat. And this as well signifieth his indignation, qua commovetur suis contumeliis, whereby he is moved for the contumelies that are offered unto him. Vatabl. as the love of God toward them: for jealousie ariseth, ex amore ejus, qui laditur propter turpitudinem, &c. from the love of him that is hurt, because of some uncleannesse committed, &c. Vrsin. 4. Lastly, in saying, visiting the iniquitie: he sheweth his severitie: in tantum non connivet ad impietatem, &c. he is so farre from winking at impietie, that hee punisheth it even in the posterity of the wicked, and their sonnes and nephewes. Lippom.

QUEST. 6. Of the generall commination and promise annexed.

Visiting the iniquitie, &c. 1. Some take this to be a speciall perswasion added to this commandement, Quia inter omnia praecepta nullum majus est, quam hoc: Because there is none among all the precepts greater than this. The generall motive was set before, because he brought them out of the land of Egypt. Tostat. 2. But I approve rather their opinion, which take this commination and promise to appertaine unto all the commandements: but to be joynd to this, because it is fundamentum caeterorum, the foundation of the rest. Vrsin. Huic mandato tanquam principali ex quo alia oriuntur; addidit Dominus minas, &c. To this com|mandement as the principall, out of the which the other take their beginning, the Lord added threatnings, and promises, &c. Lippom. And this is confirmed by the words here following, vers. 6. to them that love me, and keepe my commandements: the Lord maketh mention of keeping his commandements, not of one, but of all. 3. It might have pleased God simply to have propounded his commandements: but he both adjoyneth promises to stirre up our dulnesse, and threatnings to terrifie the perverse and froward: which promises are rendred, not as the deserved reward of our obedience: for it is of mercie: as the Lord saith, shewing mercie unto thousands: otherwise we doe no more than our dutie, and therefore deserve nothing. Simler.

QUEST. VII. How it standeth with Gods justice to punish the children for the fathers sinnes.

The iniquitie of the fathers upon the children, &c. 1. Theodoret upon this place hath this singular opinion by himselfe: Quod nudaē literae insistere impium sit, &c. That it is evill to insist here upon the bare let|ter, seeing the law saith, The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, nor the children for the fathers, but every man shall be put to death for his owne sinne, Deut. 24.16. And he addeth further: Majores apud Deum sunt comminationes, quā poenae, &c. That God useth greater threatnings, than punishments: as every one that was not circumcised at the eight day is threatned to be cut off: and yet many in the desert were uncircumcised at that age, whom Ioshua circumcised in Gilgal: and so here he thinketh that this is threat|ned onely to terrifie parents from sinning. So Theodoret.

Contra. 1. But this were to give great libertie to offenders, to thinke that God onely threatneth for terror: it might be inferred as well, that God doth but dallie also with his promises, as with his threat|nings: which were impious to thinke. 2. If God doe not alwayes punish as hee threatneth, it doth not argue any revocation of his judgements, but his mercifull forbearing to call men unto repentance. 3. That commination against the neglect of circumcision is not denounced against the infant, whose fault it was not, if he were not circumcised the eight day, but against them that did not see it performed on their in|fant, as appeareth by the example of Moses, Exod. 4. punished for the neglect of circumcision. And so accordingly all they, which deferred the circumcision of their children in the wilderness, their carkase fell there.

2. Origene maketh this allegoricall exposition: The father that sinneth he maketh the Devill: Pater peccati diabolus est: The devill is the father of sinne: all they are his children which doe his works: Diabolus ergo, dum hic mundus stat, non recipit sua peccata, &c. The devill, while this world standeth, doth not receive punishment for his sinnes: redduntur infilios, i. in eos quos genuit per peccatum: but upon his children, whom he hath begotten by sinne, are their sinnes rendred: for men, while they are in the flesh, are corrected of God, &c. Contra. But that this is a forced, and farre fetcht exposition, the other opposite part mani|festeth, of the Lords shewing mercie unto thousands: but the devils expect no mercie. And againe, seeing this commination is specially made to terrifie wicked parents; it can no wayes concerne the Devill, to whom the law was not given, but unto men.

3. Hugo de S. Victor: giveth this reason, why children are punished for the sinnes of their fathers: because they are, Sicut aliquod membrum ipsorum, quia in ipsis malefactoribus quo dammodo erant seminaliter & peccabant: They are as a part of them, because they were in seed in the malefactors themselves, and so in a manner sinned in them. Contra. But the Prophet saith, the same soule that sinneth shall die: the children being but yet in the loynes of their fathers, as the tree in the seed, had no soules, therefore then could they not sinne.

4. Some doe reconcile this law, and that other Deut. 24. where it is said, that the fathers shall not be put to death for the children, nor the children for the fathers, after this manner: that there a rule is given for the proceedings in civill judgement, that one shall not suffer for another: but this is understood of Gods judgement, before whom all are held as guiltie, and who prescribeth no law to himselfe. Acacius. Contra. But this solution is not sufficient: for Ezechiel, which saith, the same soule that sinneth shall die, speaketh also of the judgements of God, which should not be inflicted upon the children for the fathers. Ex Simler.

Page 283

5. Cajetane giveth this solution: Although God in the law command, that the sonnes should not bee put to death for the sinnes of the fathers: Ipsa tamen qui creator, conservator & Dominus est unicuique nemini facit injuriam, &c. Yet he that is the Creator, preserver, and Lord of every mans life, doth no man wrong, if he temporally chastise the sonnes, &c. His reason dependeth upon Gods right, and power, which hee hath over every mans life, that as he gave it, so he doth no wrong to take it away at his pleasure. Contra. But the Lord saith by the Prophet, Ezech. 18.32. I desire not the death of him that dieth. Now if there were no other cause why the Lord should punish the children of the wicked, in taking away their life, but the will and pleasure of God, the Lord should seeme to desire the death of men: contrary to that saying of the Prophet.

6. Procopius giveth this exposition: that God threatneth to punish the posteritie of the wicked, ut parentes à peccandi licentia retraheret: to withdraw the fathers from sinning: parentes non tam dolent sua morte, quàm liberorum, prasertim si his fuerint authores mortis: Fathers doe not so much grieve for their owne death, as for the death of their sonnes, especially if they were the cause of it. Contra. This is true, that the punishment of the children redoundeth to the parents: but this is not all, that by this meanes the fathers should bee drawne to repentance: for although their children be neere them, yet they are neerer to themselves, and their owne punishment would much more move them.

7. There remaine two most usuall expositions: the first is, that temporally sonnes may be chastned for their fathers, but not eternally: for aeternaliter quilibet punitur pro malo, quod egit, &c. For eternally every one shall be punished for the evill, which he doth himselfe. Tostat. quaest. 5. So also Thomas: Si loquimur de poena, qua habet rationem medecina, &c. If we speake of that punishment, which is by way of medicine, we may be punished for another. Such are all temporall and bodily corrections, they are medicinall, and tend to the good of the soule: and the sonne, quantum ad animam non est res patris: in respect of his soule is not any thing of his father, but in respect of his body. Sic Thom. 1.2. quaest. 87. artic. 8.

Contra. Although this exposition be sound and true, yet it doth not fully take away the doubt moved before: 1. For the Prophet Ezechiel also speaketh of temporall punishment, namely of captivitie, which the sonne should not beare for the father. 2. And this place is rather understood of eternall punishment, than temporall, which the sinne of Idolatrie deserveth. Simler. 3. And the phrase here used, visiting the iniquitie of the fathers upon the children, sheweth that the Lord speaketh rather of penall judgements, which should bee inflicted upon the sonnes of the wicked, than of medicinall corrections. 4. And Augustine furth[er] urgeth this reason: that if it bee understood of temporall chastisement, as of captivitie, then non solum odio haebentibus, sed diligentibus se redderet peccata, &c. God should not onely render the sinnes to those that hate him, but to those that love him; for Daniel, and the three children, and Ezechiel with other righteous men, went into captivitie. Sic Augustin. qu aest. 14. qu aest. veter. & novum Testament.

8. There remaineth the second common and received sense of these words, which most of the fathers thus understand, that the Lord will visite the iniquitie of the fathers upon the children, if they also continue in the wicked race, and follow the evill example of their fathers: as Hierome; Ideo iniquitates eorum portaverunt, quia imitatores eorum in nequitia extiterunt, Therefore they doe beare the iniquitie of their fathers, because they did imitate them in their wickednesse. Hieron. in oration. Ierem.

Some agreeing in generall with the rest, that it is to be expounded of the wicked children of wicked parents: yet doe understand it of originall sinne, which is properly called the sinne of the fathers, because they received it from them, which is punished in unregenerate children of the wicked, but is pardoned in those that are regenerate. To this purpose Gregor. lib. 15. Moral. cap. 22. Contra. But originall sinne is extended further than to the third and fourth generation, which are here mentioned: therefore it is not like, the Lord meaneth that sinne. Ex Simler.

